If thou stand excommunicate, and curse’d? [more,
K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person
And tell me how you would bestow yourself.
Yours,
This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and link’d together
With all religious strength of sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words,
Was deep-swear’d faith, peace, amenity, true love,
Between our kingdoms, and our royal selves;
And even before this truce, but new before,
No longer than we well could wash our hands,
To clap this royal bargain up of peace,
Heaven knows, they were besmear’d and overstain’d
With slaughter’d pencil; where revenge did paint
The fearful difference of incensed kings;
And shall these hands, so lately purg’d of blood,
So newly join’d in love, so strong in *both,

Unyoke this seizer, and this kind † regret?
Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven,
Make such unconstant children of ourselves,
As now again to snatch our palm from palm;
Unswer faith sworn; and on the marriage bed
Of smiling peace to make a bloody host,
And make a riot on the gentle bow;
Of true sincerity? O! holy sir,
My reverend father, let it not be so:
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some gentle order, and then we shall be bless’d
To do your pleasure, and continue friends.
Pand. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England’s love.
Therefore, to arms! be champion of our church,
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
A mother’s curse, on her revolting son.
France, thou may’st hold a serpent by the tongue,
A ²-caged lion by the mortal paw,
A fisting tiger safer by the tooth,
Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.
K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.
Pand. So mak’st thou faith an enemy to faith;
And, like a civil war, set’st oath to oath,
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O! let thy vow
First made to heaven, first to be heaven perform’d;
That is, to be the champion of our church.
What since thou swor’st is sworn against thyself,
And may not be performed by thyself:
For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is ² but amiss when it is truly done;
And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it.
The better act of purposes missetook
Is to mistake again: though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby grows direct,
And falsehood falsehood to be the cools cool;
Within the scorched veins of one new burn’d.
It is religion that doth make vows kept,
But thou hast sworn against religion.
[swearest,
By what thou swearest, against the thing thou
And mak’st an oath the surety for thy truth,
Against an oath: the truth, thou art unsure
To swear, swears only not to be forsworn;
Else, what a mockery should it be to swear?
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;
And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.
Therefore, thy later vows, against thy first,
Is in thyself rebellion to thyself;
And better conquest never canst thou make,
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against these giddy loose suggestions:
Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou voueshafe them; but, if not, then know,
The peril of our curses ⁴lights on thee,
So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off,
But in despair die under their black weight.
Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!
Bast. Wilt not be?
Will not a calf’s-skin stop that mouth of thine?
Lev. Father, to arms!
Blanch. Upon thy wedding day?
Against the blood that thou hast married?
What! shall our feast be kept with slaughter’d men?
Shall braying trumpets, and loud shrillish drums,
Clamors of hell, be ⁵measures to our pomp?
O husband, hear me!—ah, lack! how new
Is husband in my mouth!—even for that name,
Which till this time my tongue did not pronounce,
Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms ⁶of Knocling.
Against mine uncle.

KING JOHN. ACT III.

Const. O! upon my knee, [Kneeling. Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee, Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom Fore-thought by heaven. [may Blanch. Now shall I see thy love. What motive Be stronger with thee than the name of wife? Const. That which upholdeth him that thee upholdeth, His honor. O! thine honor, Lewis, thine honor. Lou. I muse, your majesty doth seem so cold, When such profound respects do pull you on. Pand. I will denounce a curse upon his head. K. Phi. Thou shalt not need.—England, I'll fall from thee.

Const. O, fair return of banish’d majesty! Eli. O, foul revolt of French inconstancy! K. John. France, thou shalt me this hour within this hour. Bast. Old Time the clock-setter, that bald sexton Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue. [Time, Blanch. The sun’s o’ercast with blood: fair day, Which is the side that I must go withal? [sadly! I am with both: each army hath a hand, And in their rage, I having hold of both, They whirl austerly, and dismember me. Husband, I cannot pray that thou mayst win; Uncle, I needs must pray that thou mayst lose; Father, I may not wish the fortune thine; Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive: Whoever wins, on that side I shall lose: Assured loss, before the match be play’d. Lou. Life, with me: with me thy fortune lies. Blanch. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies. [er.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance togeth- [Exit Bastard.

France, I am burn’d up with inflaming wrath; A rage, whose heat hath this condition, That nothing can alloy, nothing but blood, The blood, and dearest-valued blood of France. K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire. Look to thyself: thou art in jeopardy. K. John. No more than he that threatens.—To arms let’s life! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Plains near Angiers. Alarums; Excursions. Enter the Bastard with Austria’s Head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous Some fiery devil hovers in the sky, [hot; And pours down mischief. Austria’s head, he there, While Philip breathes.

Enter King John, Arthur, and Hubert.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy.—Philip, make My mother is assailed in our tent, [up: And ta’en, I fear.

Bast. My lord, I rescued her; Her highness is in safety, fear you not: But on, my liege; for very little pains Will bring this labor to an happy end. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Alarums; Excursions; Retreat. Enter King John, Elinor, Arthur, the Bastard, Hubert, and Lords.

K. John. So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind, So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad: [To Elinor.

[back, Bast. Bell, book, and candle shall not drive me When gold and silver beckes me to come on. I leave your highness.—Grandam, I will pray (If ever I remember to be holy,) For your fair safety: so I kiss your hand. Eli. Farewell, gentle cousin. K. John. Coz, farewell. [Exit Bastard. Eli. Come hither, little kinsman; kark, a word. [She talks apart with Arthur.

K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O! my gentle Hu- We owe thee much: within this wall of flesh, [bent, There is a soul counts thee her creditor, And with advantage means to play thy love: And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished. Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,— But I will fit it with some better time. By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed To say what good respect I have of thee. Hub. I am much bounden to thy majesty. [yet; K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so But thou shalt have: and creep time ne’er so slow, Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good. I had a thing to say,—but let it go. The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day, Attended with the pleasures of the world, Is all too wanton, and too full of gambols, To give me audience:—if the midnight bell Did, with his iron tongue and benzen mouth, Sound on into the drowsy 6ear of night: If this same were a churchyard where we stand, And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs; Or if that surly spirit, melancholy, Had bak’d thy blood, and made it heavy, thick, (Which, else, runs 4tingling up and down the veins. Making that idiot, laughter, keep men’s eyes, And in their cheeks to idle merriment, A passion hateful to my purposes,) Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes, Hear me without thine ears, and make reply Without a tongue, using 4conceit alone, Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words, Then, in despite of 4the broad watchful day, I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts. But ah! I will not:—yet I love thee well; And, by my troth, I think, thou lov’st me well. Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake, Though that my death were adjured to my act, By heaven, I would do it. K. John. Do not know, thou wouldst? Good Hubert! Hubert—Hubert, throw thine eye On yond’ young boy: I’ll tell thee what, my friend, He is a very serpent in my way; And wheresoe’er this foot of mine doth tread, He lies before me. Dost thou understand me? Thou art his keeper.

Hub. And I’ll keep him so, That he shall not offend thy majesty.
SCENE IV.—The Same. The French King’s Tent.

Enter King Philip, Lewis, Pandolph, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood, A whole armado of 1 convented sail Is scatter’d, and disjoint’d from fellowship. Pand. Courage and comfort! all shall yet go well. K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so Arse we not beaten? Is not the Angiers lost? [ill? Arthur ta’en prisoner? divers dear friends slain? Enter Constance.

Look, who comes here? a grave unto a soul; Holding th’ eternal spirit, against her will, In the vile prison of afflicted breath.— I pray thee, lady, go away with me. Const. Lo now; now see the issue of your peace! K. Phi. Patience, good lady: comfort, gentle Constance.

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress, But that which ends all counsel, true redress, Death, death.—O, amiable lovely death! Thou odious器稳 stench! sound rottenness! No, no, I will not, having breath to cry.— O! that my tongue were in the mourner’s mouth, Then with 3 what passion would I shake the world, And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy, Which cannot hear a lady’s feeble voice, Which scorns a 4 widow’s invocation. Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow. Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so. I am not mad; this is the hand that kills me! My name is Constance; I was Geoffrey’s wife; Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost! I am not mad—I would to heaven, I were,

For then, ’tis like I should forget myself: O, if I could, what grief should I forget!— French some philosophy to make me mad, And thou shalt be canoniz’d, cardinal; For, being not mad, but sensible of grief, My reasonable part produces reason; How I may be deliver’d of these woes, And teaches me to kill or hang myself: If I were mad, I should forget my son, Or madly think a babe of clouts were he. I am not mad: too well, too well I feel The different plague of each calamity, To K. Phi. Bind up those tresses. Of what love I in the fair multitude of those her hairs! Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen, Even to that drop ten thousand wise friends Do glue themselves in sociable grief; Like true, insuperable, faithful 5 lovers, Sticking together in calamity.

Const. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Const. Yes, that I will; and wherefore will I do it? I tore them from their bonds, and cried aloud, “O, that these hands could so redeem my son, As they have given these hairs their liberty!” But now, I envy at their liberty, And will again commit them to their bonds, Because my poor child is a prisoner, And, father cardinal, I have heard you say, That we shall see and know our friends in heaven: If that be true, I shall see my boy again; For, since the birth of Cain, the first male child, To him that did but yesterday surprise, There was not such a gracious creature born. But now will canker sorrow eat my bud, And chase the native beauty from his cheek, And he will look as hollow as a ghost, As dim and meagre as an auge’s fit, And so he’ll die; and, rising so again, When I shall meet him in the court of heaven I shall not know him: therefore never, never Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.

Const. He talks to me, that never had a son.

K. Phi. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.

Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent child, Lives in his bed, walks up and down with me; Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words, 6 Remembers me of all his gracious parts, Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form: Then, have I reason not to be fond of grief. Fare you well: had you such a loss as I, I could give better comfort than you do.— I will not keep this form upon my head,

K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I’ll follow her. [Exit.

Lew. There’s nothing in this world can make me Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale, [joy: vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man; And bitter shame hath spoilt this sweet world’s taste, That it yields nought, but shame and bitterness.

SCENE I.—Northampton. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Hubert and two Attendants.

Hub. Hear me those iron hot; and, look thou
Within the

Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth,
And bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Fast to the chair: be heedful. Hence, and watch.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples: fear not you: look to [Exit Attendants.

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter Arthur.

Arth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.

Arth. As little prince (having so great a title
To be more prince,) as may be.—You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me!

Methinks, no body should be sad but I:
Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my good christendom,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be merry as the day is long;
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practices more harm to me:
He is afraid of me, and of him.
Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son?
No, indeed, is't not; and I would to heaven,
I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. [Aside.] If I talk to him, with his innocent prate
He will awake my mercy, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sudden, and dispatch.

Arth. Are you sick, Hubert! you look pale to-day.
In sooth, I would you were a little sick;
That I might sit all night, and watch with you:
I warrant, I love you more than you do me.

Hub. [Aside.] His words do take possession of my bosom.

Read here, young Arthur. [Shewing a paper.]

[Aside.] How now, foolish rheum!

Turning dispipeous torture out of door?
I must be brief; lest resolution drop
Out at mine eyes in tender womanish tears.
—Can you not read it? is it not fair with me?
Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect.
Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,
I knelt my handkerchief about your brows,
(The best I had, a princess wrought it me,) And I did never ask it you again:
And with my hand at midnight held your head,
And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time,
Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your grief?
Or, What good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still,
And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;
But at your sick service had a prince.
Nay you may think my love was crafty love,
And call it cunning: do, an if you will.
If heaven be pleas'd that you will use me ill,
Why, then you must:—Will you put out mine eyes?
These eyes, that never mind, nor never shall
So much as frown on you?
Hub.
I have sworn to do it,
And with hot irons must I burn them out.
Arth.
Ali! none but in this iron age would do it.
The iron of itself, though heat red-hot,
Approaching near these eyes would drink my tears,
And quench this fiery indignation,
Even in the matter of mine innocence:
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.
Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?
An if an angel should have come to me,
And told me Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believ'd him; no tongue but Hu-snatch at his master that doth in terce him on.

All things that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack
That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron, extend,
Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.
Hub. Well, see to live: I will not touch thine eyes
For all the treasure that thine uncle o' eyes:
Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, boy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.
Arth. O! now you look like Hubert: all this while
You were disguised.
Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spicus with false reports;
And, pretty child, sleep doubtless, and secure,
That Hubert for the wealth of all the world
Will not offend thee.
Arth.
O heaven!—I thank you, Hubert.
Hub. Silence! no more. Go closely in with me;
Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Exeunt.
SEcene II.—The Same. A Room of State in
The Palace.
Enter King John, crowned; PEMBROKE, SALIS-

BURY, and other Lords. The King takes his State.
K. John. Heres once again we sit, once again
crown'd,
And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.
Pem. This once again, but that your highness pleas'd,
Was once superfluous: you were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ever pleased oft;
The faiths of men no'ner stained with revolt;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land,
With any long'd-for change, or better state.
Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard a title that was rich before,
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful, and ridiculous excesses
Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told,
And in the last repeating troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.
Sal. In this, the antique and well-nated face
Of plain old form is much disfigured;
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about,
Startles and frights consideration,
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.
Pem. When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness;
And, oftentimes excusing of a fault
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse:
As patches, set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the fault,
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.
Sal. To this effect, before you were new-crown'd,
We breath'd our counsel; but it pleas'd your high-
To overbear it, and we are all well-pleas'd;
ness
Since all and every part of what we would,
Doth make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation
I have possess'd you with, and think them strong;
And more, more strong, I thus begging my fear;
I shall induce you with meaner time, but ask
What you would have reform'd that is not well,
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pem. Then I, as one that am the tongue of these,
To sound the purposes of all their hearts,
Both for myself and them, but, chief of all,
You ask for that which my hand and they Bend their best studies, heartily request
Th' enfranchisement of Arthur; whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent.

To break into this dangerous argument:
If what in rest you have, in right you hold,
Why should your fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up
Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise?

That the time's enemies may not have this
To grace occasions, let it be our suit,
That you have bid us ask his liberty;
Which for our goods we do no further ask,
Than whereupon our weal, on yours depending,
Counts it your wealth he have his liberty.

K. John. Let it be so: I do commit his youth

Enter Hubert.

To your direction.—Hubert, what news with you?

[Hubert talks apart with the King.

Pem. This is the man should do the bloody deed:
He show'd his warrant to a friend of mine.
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye: that close aspect of his
Doth show the mood of a much-troubled breast;
And I do fearfully believe 'tis done,
What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sal. The color of the king doth come and go,
Between his purpose and his conscience,
Like herald's trick two dreadful battles set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.
Pem. And when it breaks, I fear, will issue thence
The foul corruption of a child's sweet death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand,—
God help me, and my will to its being live,
The suit which you demand is gone and dead:
He tells us, Arthur is deceas'd to-night.
Sal. Indeed, we fear'd his sickness was past cure.

Pem. And we heard how near his death he was,
Before the child himself felt he was sick.
This must be answer'd, either here, or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on Think you, his death has promised the
Have I commandment on the pulse of life?
Sal. It is apparent foul play; and 'tis shame,
That greatness should so grossly offer it.

So thrive it in your game; and so farewell.

Pem. Stay yet, lord Salisbury, I'll go with thee,
And find th' inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forced grave.
That blood which 'twas the breath of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold: bad world the while.
This must not be thus borne: this will break out
To all our sorrows, and to age long, I doubt.

[Exeunt Lords.

K. John. They burn in indignation: I repent:
There is no sure foundation set on blood,
No certain life achiev'd by others' death.

The other four in wondrous motion.

_K._ Five moons?

_Hub._

Old men, and beldames, in the streets,
Do prophesy upon it dangerously.
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths,
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear;
And he that speaks, doth grip the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears, makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw asmith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tutor's news;
Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet)
Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were embattailed and rank'd in Kent.
Another lean, unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

_K._ Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urg'st thou so oft young Arthur's death?
Thy hand hath murder'd him: I had a mighty cause
To wish his death, but thou hast none to kill him.

_Hub._ Had none, my lord! why, did you not provoke me?

_K._ It is the curse of kings, to be attended
By slaves, that take their humors for a warrant
To break ! into the bloody house of life;
And, on the winking of authority,
To understand a law; to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frowns
More upon humor than advis'd respect.

_Hub._ Here is your hand and seal for what I did.

_K._ O! when the last account 'twixt heaven
And earth
Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness the neonatation of ill deeds;
How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds,
Makes ill deeds done! Had'st not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
*Quoted," I. 6, noted; marked.

This murder had not come into my mind;
But, taking note of thy abhor'd aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villainy,
Apt, liable to be employ'd in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death;
And thou, to be endeared to a king,
Made it no conscience to destroy a prince.

_Hub._ My lord,—

[made a pause,

_K._ John. Had'st thou but shook thy head, or
When I spoke darkly what I purposed;
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face,
Or bid me tell my tale in express words, [off,
Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break
And those thy fears might have wrougt fears in me:
But thou didst understand me by my signs,
And didst in signs again parley with a sign;
Yes, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
And consequently thy rude hand to act
The deed which both our tongues held vile to man.
Out of my sight, and never see me more!
My nobles have me; and my state is brav'd,
Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers:
Nay, in the body of this fleshly land,
This kingdom, this confined blood and breath,
Hostility and civil tumult reigns
Between my conscience, and my cousin's death.

_Hub._ Arm you against your other enemies,
I'll make a peace between your soul and you.
Young Arthur is alive: this hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.
Within this bosom never enter'd yet
The dreadful motion of a murderous thought,
And you have slander'd nature in my form;
Which, however rude exterior, is Yet the cover of a fairer mind,
Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

Throw this report on their incensed rage,
And make them tame to their obedience.
Forgive the comment that my passion made
Upon that feature; for my rage was blind,
And foul imaginary eyes of blood,
Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
O! answer not; but to my closet bring
The angry lords, with all expedient haste:
I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same, Before the Castle.

_Enter Arth._

_A._ The walls is high; and yet will I leaup down.—
Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not—
There's few, or none, do know me; if they did,
This ship-boy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite.
Yet am I afraid I yet am sure of it.
If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I'll find a thousand steps to get away:
As good to die and go, as die and stay. [Leaps down.
O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones.—
Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones.

[Dies.

_Enter Pembroke, Salisbury, and Bigot._

_Sal._ Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund's
It is our affair, and we must embrace.

[Entry.

This gentle offer of the perilous time.

_Pem._ Who brought that letter from the cardinal!

_Sal._ The count Melun, a noble lord of France;
Whose private missive of the Dauphin's love,
Is much more general than these lines import.

_Big._ To-morrow morning let us meet him then.

_Sal._ Or, rather then set forward; for 'twill be
Two long days' journey, lords, or 4 o'er we meet.

_Enter the Bastard._

_Bast._ Once more to-day well met, distrimper'd lords.
The king by me requests your presence straight,

*Expedient's;" 4 o'er; 4 o'er; or ever; before.—
*Distimper'd," I. o, discontented; out of humor.
Sal. The King hath dispose'd himself of us: We will not line his sin-besainted cloak With our pure honors, nor attend the foot That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks. Return, and tell him so: we know the worst. Bast. Whate'er you think, good words, I think, were best. Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, a reason now. Bast. But there is little reason in your grief; Therefore, twere reason you had manners now. Pen. Sir, sir, impatience hath his privilege. Bast. 'Tis true; to hurt his master, no man else. Sal. This is the prison. What is he lies here? [Seeing Arthur.]

Pem. Of death! made proud with pure and princely beauty, The earth had not a hole to hide this deed. Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done, Doth lay it open to urge on revenge. Big. Or when he doom'd this beauty to a grave, Found it too precious-princely for a grave. [held, Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you been Or have you read, or heard? or could you think? Or do you almost think, although you see, That you could do see? could you think, without this object, From such another? This is the very top, The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest, Of murder's arms: this is the bloodiest shame, The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke, That ever wail'dy wrath, or staning rage, Presented to the tears of soft remorse. Pem. All murders past do stand excus'd in this; And this, so sole, so unmatchable, Shall give a holiness, a purity, To the yet unbegotten sin of times; And prove a deadly bloodsh'd but a jest, Exemplified by this heinous spectacle. Bast. It is a damned and bloody work; The graceless action of a heavy hand, If that it be the work of any hand. Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?— We had a kind of light, what would ensue: It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand; The practice, and the purpose, of the king: From whose obedience I forbid my soul, Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life, And breathing to his breathless excellence The incense of a vow, a holy vow, Never to taste the pleasures of the world, Never to be infected with delight, Nor conversant with ease and idleness, Till I have act a glory to this head, By giving it the worship of revenge. Pem. Big. Our souls religiously confirm thy words. Enter Hubert. Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you. Arthur doth live: the king hath sent for you. Sal. O! he is bold, and blushes not at death. Avast, thou hateful villain! get thee gone. Hub. I am no villain. Sal. Must I rob the law? [Drawing his sword. Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again. Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin. Hub. Stand back, lord Salisbury; stand back, I by heaven, I think, my sword's as sharp as yours. [say: I would not have you, lord, forget yourself, Nor tempt the danger of my true defence; Let I, by marking; but your rage, forget Your worth, your greatness, and nobility. [man? Big. Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave a noble-

Hub. Not for my life; but yet I dare defend My innocent life against an emperor. Sal. Thou art a murderer. Hub. Do not prove me so; Yet, I am none. Whose tongue so'er speaks false, Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly lies. Pemb. Cut him to pieces. Bast. Keep the peace, I say. Stand by, or I shall gall you, Fulkbridge. Bast. Thou wert better gall the devil, Salisbury: If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot, Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me shame, I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime, Or I'll so maul you and your toast-iron, That you shall think the devil is come from hell. Big. What wilt thou do, renowned Faulcon- Second a villain, and a murderer. [bridge? Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none. Big. Who kill'd this prince? [Pointing to Arthur. Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well: I honor'd him, I lov'd him; and will weep My date of life out for his sweet life's loss. Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes, For villainy is not without such a them: And lie, long traded in, it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Away, with me, all you whose souls abhor The uncleanly savors of a slaughter-house. For I am sti'd with this smell of sin. Big. Away, Toward Bury: to the Dauphin there! Pemb. There, tell the king, he may inquire us out. [Exit Lords. Bast. Here's a good world!—knew you of this Beyond the infinite and boundless reach [fair work? Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death, Art thou damn'd, Hubert. Hub. Do but hear me, sir. Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what; Thou art damn'd as black—say, nothing is so black; Thou art more deep damn'd than prince Lucifer: There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child. Hub. Upon my soul,— Bast. If thou didst but consent To this most cruel act, do but despair; And if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread Thy spider twisted from her web Will serve to strangle thee; a rope will be a beam To hang thee on; or would'st thou drown thyself, Put but a little water in a spoon, And it shall be as all the ocean, Enough to stifle such a villain up. I do suspect thee very grievously. Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath, Which was embosomed in this beauteous clay, Let hell want pains enough to torture me, I left him well. Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms.— I am an ax, methinks; and lose my way Among the thorns and dangers of this world. [Hubert takes up Arthur.

How easy dost thou take all England up! From forth this morsel of dead royalty, The life, the right, and truth of all this realm Is fled to heaven; and England now is left To tug and scramble, and to part by the teeth The unawed interest of proud swelling state.
Now for the bare-pick'd bome of majesty
Doth dogged war bridle his angry crest,
And smaragth in the gentle eyes of peace:
Now powers from home, and contents at home,
Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits,
As doth a raven on a sick-fallen beast,
The imminent decay of wrested pomp.
Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture can Hold out this tempest.—Bear away that child,
And follow me with speed: 'Tis to the king:
A thousand businesses are brief in hand,
And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.
[Exit: Hubert bearing out Arthur's body.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King John, Randolph with the crown, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory.

K. John. From this my hand, as holding of the pope,
Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the French;
And from his hollowness use all your power
To stop their marches, 'tis we are inflam'd.
Our discontented counties do revolt,
Our people quarrel with obedience,
Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul,
To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.
This inundation of mistempered humor
Rests by you only to be qualified:
Then pause not; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be minister'd,
Or overthrow incurable ensues.

Rand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convert,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your bustling hunt.
On this Ascension-day, remember well,
Upon your oath of service to the Pope,
Go I to make the French lay down their arms. [Exit.

K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the Say that before Ascension-day at noon, [prophet
My crown I should give off? Even so I have,
I did suppose it should be on constraint;
But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds
But Dover castle: London hath receiv'd,
Out, like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers.
Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

K. John. Would not my lords return to me again,
After they heard young Arthur was alive? [streets;
Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the An empty casket, where the jewel of life.
By some damn'd hand was rob'd and ta'en away.
K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live.
Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew.
But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad?
Be great in act, as you have been in thought;
Let not the world see fear, and blank distrust,
And follow unacquainted colors here?
What, here?—O nation, that thou could'st remove!
That Neptune's arms, who o'clock thee about,
Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself,
And grasp thee unto a pagan shore;
What is the arm without the arm that combate?
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to spend it so unneighborly?

Lew. A noble temper dost thou show in this;
And great affections wresting in thy bosom
Do make an earthquake of nobility.
Of what a noble combat hast thou fought,
Besides some complaisance, and a brave respect!
Let me write off this honorable dowry,
That silvery dot progress on thy cheeks.
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inaudition;
But this effusion of such manifest drops,
This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Sturtles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vault top of heaven.
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors,
Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury,
And with a great heart leave away this storm:
Commend these waters to those baby eyes,
That never saw the giant-world enrag'd;
Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,
Fall by a warm blood, of mirth, of gossiping.
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep
Into the purse of rich prosperity,
As Lewis himself:—so, nobles, shall you all,
That knight your sinews to the strength of mine.

Enter Pandolph, attended.
And even there, methinks, an angel spake:
Look, where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the land of heaven,
And on our actions set the name of right
With holy breath.

Pand. Hail, noble prince of France.
The next is this:—king John hath reconcil'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church,
The great metropolis and see of Rome:
Therefore, thy threat'ning colors now wind up,
And tame the savage spirit of wild war,
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It only lie gently at the feet of peace,
And be no further harmful than in show.

Lew. Your grace shall pardon me; I will not back:
I am too high-born to be prope'd,
To be a secondary at control,
Or useful serving man, and instrument,
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
Between this chastis'd kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire.
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart,
And come ye now to tell me, John hath made His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I, by the honor of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And now it is half-conquer'd must I back,
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne,
What men provided, what munition sent,
To underprop this action? ist not I,
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such as on my claim are liable,
Sweet in this business, and maintain this war?
Have I not generated these islanders round
Vive le roy! as I have thank'd their towns?
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match, play'd for a crown,
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?
No, on my soul, it never shall be said.

Pand. You look but on the outside of this work.
Lew. Outside or inside, I will not return
Till more attempt so much be glorified,
As to my ample hope was promised
Before I drew this gallant head of war,
And could these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown,
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.—

Trumpet sounds.

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the Bastard, attended.

Best. According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience: I am sent to speak.—
My holy lord of Milan, from the king,
I come, to learn how you have dealt for him;
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The Dauphin is too willful-opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties:
He flatly says, he'll not lay down his arms.

Best. By all the blood that ever fiery breath'd,
The youth says well.—Now, hear our English king,
For thus his royalty doth speak in me.
He is prepar'd; and reason, too, he should:
This apish and unmannerly approach,
This larness'd masque, and unavised revel,
This unheard sauciness 2 of boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dervish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
That hand, which had the strength, even at your door,
To cudgel you, and make you 'take the hatch;
To dive like buckets in concealed wells;
To erouch in litter of your stable planks;
To lie like pawns lock'd up in chests and trunks;
To hug with swine; to seek sweet safety out
In var'd prison, and to throw the lead and shake
Even at the crowing of your nation's cock,
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman:
Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
No! Know, the gallant monarch is in arms;
And like an eagle o'er his 2 aery towers,
To souse annoyance that comes near his nest.—
And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts,
You bloody Neroes, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England, blush for shame:
For your own ladies, and pale-visag'd maides,
Like Amazons come tripping after drums;
Their thimbles into armed gauntlets chang'd,
Their needl's to lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination.

Lew. There's nothing brave, and turn thy face in
We grant thou canst outsold us. Fare thee well;
We hold our time too precicous to be spent
With such a 2 braboller.

1 "Bank'd," i. e., passed along the banks of the river.
2 "Drew," i. e., assembled; draw out of the field.
3 "To outlook," i. e., to face down; to bear down by a show of magnanimity.—Take the hatch," i. e., heap over the hatch.
4 "Aery," i.e., cry; nest.—"Thy brave," i.e., thy boast.
5 "Braboller," i. e., clamorous, quarrelsome fellow.

---

"Clipeth," i.e., embraced. — "Between complication, and a brave respect," i.e., between the necessity of a reform in your man's way, and the respect or love I felt for his country. — "And even there," i.e., in what I have now said, "an angel spake." — For "Look," &c.—Appropriated.—In.
SCENE V.  KING JOHN.

Pend.  Give me leave to speak.
Bast. No, I will speak.
Lew.  We will attend to neither.—
   Strike up the drums! and let the tongue of war
   Plead for our interest, and our being here. [Exit; for Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry
And so shall you, being beaten. Do but start
An echo with the clamor of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready brac'd,
That shall reverberate all as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand
(Not trusting to this halting legate here, Whom he hath us'd rather for sport than need)
Is warlike John; and in his forefront sits
A haro-ribb'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.
Lew.  Strike up our drums to find this danger out.
Bast.  And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt.  [Euzent.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Field of Battle.

Alarms.  Enter King John and Hubert.
K. John.  How goes the day with us?  O! tell me:
Hub.  Badly, I fear.  How fares thy majesty?
K. John.  This fever, that hath troubled me so long,
Lies heavy on me: O! my heart is sick.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess.  My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulconbridge,
Desires your majesty to leave the field,
And send him word by me which way you go.
K. John.  Tell him, toward Swinstead, to the abbey there.
Mess.  Be of good comfort; for the great supply
That was expected by the Dauphin here,
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin sands:
This news was brought to Richard but even now.
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.
K. John.  Ah me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news.
Set on toward Swinstead; to my litter straight:
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint.  [Euzent.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Another Part of the Same.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, Bigot, and Others.

Sal.  I did not think the king so sturd' with friends.
Pem.  Up once again: put spirit in the French:
If they miscarry, we miscarry too.
Sal.  That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In spite of spine, alone upholds the day.  [field.
Pem.  They say, king John sore sick hath left the Enter Melun wounded, and led by Soldiers.

Mel.  Lead me to the revolts of England here.
Sal.  When we were happy we had other names.
Pem.  It is the count Melun.
Sal.  For our interest, and our Wounded to death.

Mel.  Fly, noble English; you are bought and Untread the road-way of rebellion,  [*sold:]
And welcome home again discarded faith.
Seek out king John, and fall before his feet;
For if the French be lords of this loud day,
He means to repose the pains you take,
By cutting off your heads.  Thus hath he sworn,
And I with him, and many more with me,

SCENE V.—The Same. The French Camp.

Enter Lewis and his Train.

Lew.  The sun of heaven, methought, was lost to
But stay'd, and made the western welkin blush, [set.
When English measur'd backward their own ground,
In faint retire.  O! bravely came we off,
When with a volley of our needless shot,
After such bloody toil we bid good night,
And wound our tattering colors clearly up,
Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess.  Where is my prince, the Dauphin?
Lew.  Here.—What news?

Mess.  The count Melun is slain: the English lords,
By his persuasion, are again fallen off;
And your supplies which you wished so long,
Are cast away, and sunk, on Goodwin sands.

Lew.  Ah, foul shrewd news!—Beshrew thy very
I did not think to be so sad to-night,  [*heart!]
As this hath made me.—Who was he, that said,
King John did fly an hour or two before
The stumbling night did part our weary powers?
I say: Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

* Dissolveth.—  * Our rankness," i. e., our wonton wildness.—  * Innovation.—  * Bad.
SCENE VI.—An open Place in the Neighborhood of Swinestead-Abbey.

Enter the Bastard and Hubert, severally.

Bast. A friend.—What art thou? [or I shoot.
Hub. Of the part of England.
Hub. What's that to thee? Why may I not I do—
Of thine affairs, as well as thine of mine?
Bast. Hubert, I think.
Hub. Thou hast a b perfect thought:
I will, upon all hazards, well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well.
Who art thou?
Bast. Who thou wilt: and, if thou please, Thou mayst befriend me much, as to think
I come one way of the Plantagenets. [night.
Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou, and eyeless
Have done me shame.—Brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from thy tongue
Should escape the true acquaintance of mine ear.
Bast. Come, come; *sans compliment, what news abroad?
Hub. Why, here walk I, in the black brow of night,
To find you out.
Bast. Brief, then; and what's the news?
Hub. O! my sweet air, news fitting to the night,
Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible.
Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news:
I am no woman; I'll not swoon at it.
Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk:
I left him almost speechless, and broke out
To acquaint you with this evil, that you might
The better arm you to the sudden time,
Than if you had at *leisure known of this.
Bast. How did he take it? who did taste to him?
Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain,
Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king
Yethinks, and, peradventure, may recover. [ry
Bast. Whom didst thou leave to tend his majesty?
Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all come
And brought prince Henry in their company; [back,
At whose request the king hath pardon'd them,
And they are all about his majesty.
Bast. Withhold that indignant, mighty heaven,
And tempt us not to bear above our power.
I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide:
These Lincoln washes have devoured them:
Myself well-mounted hardly have escap'd.
Away, before: conduct me to the king;
I doubt, he will be dead or ere I come. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Orchard of Swinestead-Abbey.

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bigot.

P. Hen. It is too late: the life of all his blood
Is touch'd corporally; and his pure brain
(Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-house)
Doth, by the idle comments that it makes,
Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pem. His highness yet doth speak; and holds
That being brought into the open air,
It would allay the burning quality
Of that fell poison which assuillet him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.—
Dost he still rage? [Exeunt Bigot.
Pem. He is more patient
Than when you left him: even now he sung.

P. Hen. O, vanity of sickness! fierce extremes
In their continuance will not feel themselves.
Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts,
Leaves them unsniffed: and his siege is now
Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds
With many legions of strange fantasies,
Which, in their thronging and press to that last hold,
Confound themselves. 'Tis strange that death should
I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan, [sing,
Whom chants a dolorous hymn to his own death,
And from the organ-pipe of frailty sings
His soul and body to their lasting rest.
Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are born
To set a form upon that *indigest,
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

Re-enter Bigot and Attendants: King John brought in a Chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow
It would not out at windows, nor at doors. [room:
There is so hot a summer in my bosom,
That all my bowels crumble up to dust:
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment, and against this fire
Do I shrink up.

P. Hen. How fares your majesty?
K. John. Poison'd,—ill-fare!—dead, forsook, cast
And none of you will bid the winter come, [off,
To thrust his icy fingers in my now;
Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course
Through my burn'd bosom; nor entreat the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold.—I do not ask you much:
I beg cold comfort; and you are so *strait,
And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. There, that were some virtue in my
That might relieve you! [tears,
K. John. The salt in them is hot.—
Within me is a hell; and there the poison
Is, as a fiend, confound'd to tyrannize
On unreprovable condemned blood.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. O! I am scalded with my violent motion,
And spile of speed to see your majesty.
K. John. O, Prompt! thou art come to set mine
The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd; [eye,
And all the shrouds, whereby my life should sail,
Are turn'd to one thread, one little hair:
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered,
And then all this thou seest is but a clod,
And *model of confounded royalty.
Bast. The Dauphin is preparing bitherward,
Where, heaven he knows, how we shall answer him;
For, in a night, the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the washes, all unwarily,
Devoured by the unexpected flood. [King John dies.
Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.

My liege! my lord!—but now a king, now thus.

P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay?
Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind,

* Keep good quarter,” i. e., keep at your posts,—b "Perfect,” i. e., well-informed.—c Without.—c* At leisure,” i. e., after some delay.
To do the office for thee of revenge,
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.
Now, now, you stars, that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powers? Show now your mended
And instantly return with me again,
To push destruction, and perpetual shame,
Out of the weak door of our faluting land.
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought:
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems you know not, then, so much as we.
The cardinal Pandulph is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honor and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well sinew'd to our own defence.

Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath despatch'd
To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the cardinal:
With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will post
To consummate this business happily.

Bast. Let it be so.—And you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spair'd,
Shall wait upon your father's funeral.

P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be inter'd;
For so he will'd it.

Bast. Thither shall it then.
And happily may your sweet self put on
The lineal state and glory of the land:
To whom, with all submission, on my knee,
I do bequeath my faithful services,
And true subjection everlastingly.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore.

P. Hen. I have a kind soul, that would give you
And knows not how to do it, but with tears.

Bast. O! let us pay the time but needful woe,
Since it hath been before hand with our griefs.—
This England never did, nor never shall,
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these, her princes, are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms, [true,
And we shall shock them. Nought shall make us
If England to itself do rest but true.

[Exeunt.]
THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING RICHARD II.

Dramatis Personae.

King Richard the Second.
Edmund of Langley, Duke of York.
Henry Bolingbroke, Duke of Hereford.
Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk.
Duke of Surrey.
Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Northumberland.
Henry Percy, his Son.
Lords, Heralds, Officers, Soldiers, Gardeners, Keeper, Messenger, Groom, and other Attendants.

Act III.—Scene 4.

ACT I.

Enter King Richard, attended; John of Gaunt, and other Nobles, with him.

K. Rich. Old John of Gaunt, time-honor'd Lancaster,
Hast thou, according to thy oath and band, Brought hither Henry Hereford, thy bold son, Here to make good the boisterous late appeal, Which then our leisure would not let us hear, Against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have, my liege. [him.

K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded If he appeal the duke on ancient malice, Or worthyly, as a good subject should,

On some ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that ar-On some apparent danger seen in him, [gunnet, Aim'd at your highness; no inveterate malice. K. Rich. Then call them to our presence: face to face, And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear Th' accuser, and th' accused, freely speak.-[Exit some Attendants.

High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire, In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire. Re enter Attendants with Bolingbroke and Norfolk.

Boling. Full many years of happy days befall My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege! Nor. Each day still better other's happiness; Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap, Add an immortal title to your crown! [us,

K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one but flatters
As well appeareth by the cause you come; namely, to appeal each other of high treason. Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object against the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray? Boling. First, heaven be the record to my speech! In the devotion of a subject’s love, Tendering the precious safety of my prince, And free from wrath or misbegotten hate, Come I appellant to this princely presence.—

Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee, and mark my greeting well; for what I speak, my body shall make good upon this earth, Or I will shine mine soul answer it in thee. Thou art a traitor, and a miscreant; Too good to be so, and too bad to live, Since the more fair and crystal is the sky, The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly. Once more, the more to aggravate the note, With a foul traitor’s name steel I thy throat; And wish, (so please my sovereign) ere I move, What my tongue speaks, my right-drawn sword may prove.

Nor. Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal. ‘Tis not the trial of a woman’s war, The bitter clamour of two eager tongues, Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain: The blood is hot that must be cool’d for this; Ye cannot judge of such a trial to my blood, As to be hush’d, and nought at all to say. First, the very reverence of your highness curbs me From giving reins and spurs to my free speech, Which else would post, until it had return’d

These terms of treason doubled down his throat. Setting aside his high blood’s royalty, And terming him be no knight on my liege, I do defy him, and I spit at him; Call him a slanderous coward, and a villain: Which to maintain I would allow him odds, And meet him, were I tied to run a foot Event to the frozen ridges of the Alps, Or any other ground inhabitable Where ever Englishman durst set his foot.

Mean time, let this defend my loyalty:— By all my hopes, most falsely doth he lie, [gage, Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my Disclaiming here the kindred of the king; And lay aside my high blood’s royalty, Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except: If guilty drunk have left thee so much strength, And turn thy tongue for thy high blood’s sport, By that and all the rites of knighthood else, Will I make good against thee, arm to arm, What I have spoken, or thou canst worse devise.

Nor. I take it up; and, by that sword I swear, Which gently bid my knighthood on my shoulder, I shall answer thee in any fair degree, Or chivalrous design of knighthood trial; And when I turn to, if thou art not light, If I be traitor, or unjustly fight! [Charge? K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray’s It must be great, that can honour it so Much as of a thought of ill in him. [true— Boling. Look, what I speak, my life shall prove it That Mowbray hath receiv’d eight thousand nobles, In an account for kindred of his highest soldiers, The which he hath detain’d for duell’s employments, Like a false traitor, and injuries villain. Besides, I say, and will in battle prove, Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge That ever was survey’d by English eye, That all the treasons, for these eighteen years Complotted and contrived in this land, Fretch from false Mowbray their first head and spring. Farther, I say, and farther will maintain Upon his bad life to make all this good, That he did plot the duke of Gloster’s death; Suggest his soon-believing adversaries, And, consequently, like a traitor coward, Shun’d out his innocent soul through streams of blood Which blood, look like saving Alba’s woes, Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth, To me for justice, and rough chastisement; And, by the glorious worth of my descent, This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!— Thomas of Norfolk, what say’st thou to this? Nor. O! let my sovereign turn away his face, And bid his ears a little while be deaf, Till I have told this slander of his blood, How God, and good men, hate so foul a liar.

K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes, and ears: Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom’s heir, As he is but my father’s brother’s son, Now by my sceptre’s arm I make a void; Such neighbour near to our royal blood Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize The unstooping firmness of my uplifted soul. He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou: Free speech and fearless, I to thee allow. Nor. Then, Bolingbroke, so low as to thy heart, Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest. Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais, Disburse’d I duly to his highness’ soldiers: The other part reserv’d I by consent; For that my sovereign liege was in my debt, Upon remainder of a clear account, Since last I went to France to fetch his queen. Now, swallow down that lie.—For Gloster’s death, I slew him not; but to mine own disgrace, Neglected my sworn duty in that case;— For you, my noble lord of Lancaster, The honorable father to my foe, Once did I lay an ambush for your life, A trespass that doth vex my grieved soul; But, ere I last receiv’d the sacrament, I did confess it, and exactly b’g’d Your graciousness my pardon, I would have had it. This is my fault: as for the rest appeal’d, It issues from the rancor of a villain, A recreant and most degenerate traitor; Which in myself I boldly will defend, And interchangeably hurl down my gage Upon this overweening traitor’s foot, To prove myself a loyal gentleman, Even in the best blood chamber’d in his bosom. In haste whereof, most heartily I pray Your highness to assign our trial day. [me. K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentleman, be hold’ry Let’s purge this choler without letting blood: This we prescribe, though no physician; Deep malice makes too deep incision. Our doctors say this is no month to bleed. Good uncle, let this end where it be begun; We’ll call the duke of Norfolk, you your son. Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my age— Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk’s gage.

*That is, ‘the cause you come on.’—Impeach. "Too good to be so," i.e., ‘too good or great a traitor and miscreant to be set so as thou fearest here.’—My right-drawn sword, i.e., my sword drawn in a right or just cause.—Unharmable.—Possess.—Knavish; wicked.
K. Rich. And, Norfolk, throw down his Gaunt. When, Harry! when?
Obedience bids, I should not bid again. [No strop.
K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down; we bid there is
Nor. Myself I throw, dread sovereign, at thy foot.
My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have.
I am disgrac'd, impaich'd, and baffled here;
I pack'd to the soul with slander's worm'd spear;
The which no balm can cure, but his heart-blood.
Which breath'd this poison.
K. Rich. Rage must be withstood.
Give me his gage:—lions make 6 leopards tame.

Nor. Yea; but not change his spots: take but my shame,
And I resign my gage. My dear, dear lord,
The purest treasure mortal times afford
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded lown, or painted clay.
A jewel in a ten times bard'd-up chest
Is a bold spirit in a loyal breast.
Mine honor is my life; both grew in one:
Take honor from me, and my life is done.
Thus, when my liege, mine honor I try me:
In that I live, and for that will I die. [Begin.
K. Rich. Cousin, throw down your gage: do you
Boling. O! God defend my soul from such deep sin.
Shall I seem crest-fall'n in my father's sight?
Or with pale beggar-fear impeach my height
Before this outwiter'd dastard! Ere my tongue
Shall wound mine honor with such feeble wrong,
Or from so base a path, my teeth shall tear
The slavish motive of recanting fear,
And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbor, even in Mowbray's face.

[Exit Gaunt.
K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command:
Which since we cannot do to make you friends.
Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
At Coventry, upon Saint Lambert's day.
There shall your swords and lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your settled hate:
Since we cannot 'tStone you, we shall see
Justice 4 design the victor's chivalry.—
Lord Marshal, command our officers at arms
Be ready to direct these home-alarms.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster's Palace.

Enter Gaunt, and Duchess of Gloster.

Gaunt. Alas! the part I had in Gloster's blood
Doth more solicit me, than thy exchaims,
To stir against the butchers of his life:
But since correction lieth in those hands,
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven;
Who when 'tis seen the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain hot vengeance on offenders heads.

Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire?
Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Weep not their plights of his sacred blood,
Or seven fair branches springing from one root:
Some of those seven are dried by nature's course,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut;
But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloster,
One phial full of Edward's sacred blood,
One flourishing branch of his most royal root,
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt;
In that'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By ev'y hand, and murder's bloody axe.
Ah! Gaunt, his blood was thine: that bed, that womb,
That metal, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee,
Made him a man; and though thou liest, and breath'st,
Yet art thou slain in him. Thou dost consent
In some large measure to thy father's death,
In that thou seest thy witch'd disease,
Who was the model of thy father's life.
Call it not patience, Gaunt; it is despair:
In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou show'st the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee.
That which in mean men we entitle patience,
Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.
What shall I say? to safeguard thine own life,
The best way is to venge my Gloster's death.

Gaunt. God's is the quarrel; for God's substitute,
His deputy anointed in his sight,
Hath caus'd his death; the which, if wrongfully,
Let heaven revenge, for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister.

Duch. Where is the messenger? may I complain myself?

Gaunt. To God, the widow's champion and defence.

Duch. Why then, I will.—Farewell, farewell, old
Thou go'st to Coventry, there to behold
Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight.
O! sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear,
That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast;
Or if misfortune miss the first career,
Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom,
That they may break his foaming courser's back,
And throw the rider headlong in the lists,
A caitiff 4 recreant to my cousin Hereford.
Farewell, old Gaunt: thy sometime brother's wife
With her companion grief must end her life.

Gaunt. Sister, farewell: I must to Coventry.
As much good stay with thee, as go with me!

Duch. Yet one word more.—Grief boundeth where it falls,
Not with the empty hollowness, but weight:
I take my leave before I have begun,
For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done.
Commend me to my brother, Edmund York.
Lo! this is all:—nay, yet depart not so;
Though this be all, do not so quickly go;
I shall remember more. Bid him:—
What?—
With all good speed at 6 Plasyh visit me.
Alack! and what shall good old York there see,
But empty lodgings and unfurnished walls,
Unpeopled offices, untroudden stones?
And what hear there for welcome, but my groans?
Therefore commend me; let him not come there,
To seek out sorrow that dwells everywhere.
Desolate, 5 desperate, will I hence, and die:
The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Gosford Green, near Coventry.

Lists set out, and a Throne. Herald, &c., attending.

Enter the Lord Marshal, and Aumerle.

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?
Ann. Yea, at all points, and longs to enter in.
Mar. The duke of Norfolk, sprightly and bold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.

KING RICHARD II.

Scene III.

Arm. Why then, the champions are prepar'd, and
For nothing but his majesty's approach. [stay

Flourish. Enter King Richard, who takes his seat on his Throne; Gaunt, Bushy, Bagot, Greenes, and others, who take their places. A Trumpet is sounded, and answered by another Trumpet with Then enter Norfolk in armor, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion
The cause of his arrival here in arms:
Ask him his name; and orderly proceed
To swear him in the justice of his cause. [art,
Mar. In God's name, and the king's, say who thou
And why thou com'st thus knightly clad in arms:
Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel.
Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
As so defend thee heaven, and thy valor! [folk;
Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Nor.-
Who hence come engaged by my oath,
(Which, God know, a knightly gild violate!) Both to defend my loyalty and truth,
To God, my king, and my succeeding issue,
Against the duke of Hereford that affrays me;
And, by the grace of God and this mine arm,
To prove him, in defending of myself,
A traitor to my God, my king, and me:
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Trumpets sound. Enter Bolingbroke, in armor, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms,
Both who he is, and why he cometh hither
Thus platted in habiliments of war;
And whereby, according to our law,
Depose him in the justice of his cause. [thither,
Mar. What is thy name, and wherefore com'st thou
Before King Richard in his royal lists?
Against whom com'st thou? and what is thy quarrel?
Speak like a true knight; so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Am I, who ready here do stand in arms,
To prove by God's grace, and my body's valor,
In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous,
To God of heaven, king Richard, and to me;
And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Mar. On pain of death no person be so bold,
Or daring hardy, as to touch the lists;
Except the marshal, and such others
Appointed to direct those fair designs. [hand,
Boling. Lord marshall, let me kiss my sovereign's
And bow my knee before his majesty:
For Mowbray and myself are like two men
That vow a long and weary pilgrimage;
Then let us take a ceremonious leave,
And loving farewell of our several friends. [new
Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your high-
And craves to kiss your hand, and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend, and fold him in our Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right, [arms
So be thy fortune in this royal fight.
Farewell, my blood; which if to-day thou shed,
Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Boling. O! let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be go'd with Mowbray's spear.
As confident as is the falcon's flight.
Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.
My loving lord, I take my leave of you;
Of you, my noble cousin, lord Aumerle;
Not sick, although I have to do with death,
But lusty, young, and cheerily drawing breath.
Lo! as at English feasts, so I regret
The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet:
O thou, [To Gaunt.] the earthly author of my Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate, [blood,]
Both with a two-fold vigor lift me up
To reach at victory above my head,
Add proof unto mine armor with thy prayers;
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,
That it may enter Mowbray's warm wool coat,
And furnish new the name of John of Gaunt,
Even in the happy favor of his son. [ous!
Gaunt. God in thy good cause make thee prosper.
Be swift like lightning in the execution;
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy.
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocence, and Saint George to the

Nor. However God, or fortune, cast my lot,
There lives or dies, true to king Richard's throne,
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman.
Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontro'd enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soul doth utterly-rate
This feast of battle with mine adversary.
Most mighty liege, and my companion peers,
Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:
As gentle and as jovial, as to jest,
Go I to fight. Truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I espy
Virtue and gallant courage in thine eye.
Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

Boling. Strong as a tower in hope, I cry, amen.
Mar. Go bear this lance [To an Officer.] to Thomas, duke of Norfolk.

1 Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself,
On pain to be found false and recreant,
To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,
A traitor to his God, his king, and him;
And dares him to set forward to the fight.

2 Her. Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
On pain to be found false and recreant,
Both to defend himself, and to approve
Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,
To God, his sovereign, and to him, diplayal;
Courageously, and with a free desire,
Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound, trumpets; and set forward, combat-

A Charge sounded.

K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their spears,
And both return back to their chairs again.
Withdraw with us; and let the trumpets sound,
While we return these dukes what we decree.

Draw near, [To the Combatants.] and list, what with our council we have done.
For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd
With that dear blood which it hath b fostered;
And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect
Of civil wounds plough'd up with neighbors' swords;

* Yielding.—Brighten.—Helmet.—^ To jest,^ I a, to *b Nurled.

For the eagle-winged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,
With rapturous envy, set on you
To make your peace, which in our country's cradle
Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep;
Which so round'd up with bolsterous tumult'd drums,
With harsh resounding trumpet's dreadful bray,
And grating shock of wraithful iron arms,
Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,
And make us wade even in our kindred's blood:
Therefore, we banish you our territories:
You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of life,
Till twice round'd up with the enchain'd fields,
Shall not regret our fair dominions
But tread the stranger paths of banishment. [be, Boiling. You will be done. This must my comfort
That sun that warms you here shall shine on me;
And those golden beams, to you here lent,
Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.
K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,
Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:
The fly-slow hours shall not determine
The dateless limit of thy dear exile.
The hopeless word of—never to return
Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.
Nor. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege,
And all unlook'd for from your highness' mouth:
A dearer merit, not so deep a main
As what is cast forth in the common air,
Have I deserved at your highness' hands.
The language I have learn'd these forty years,
My native English, now I must forego;
And now my tongue's use is to me no more,
Than an unstrung'd viol, or a harp;
Or like a cunning instrument cas'd up,
Determined in his purpose,
That knows no touch to tune the harmony.
Within my mouth you have cajol'd my tongue,
Doubly * portculis'd, with my teeth and lips;
And dull, unfailing, barren ignorance
Is made my jailor to attend on me.
I am too old to fawn upon a nurse,
Too far in years to be a pupil now;
Which is thy own will, or my helpless death,
Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?
K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionate:
After our sentence plainings come too late.
Nor. Then, thus I turn me from my country's light,
To dwell in solemn shades of endless night. [Retiring.
K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with Lay on our royal sword your banish'd hands; [thee,
Swear by the duty that ye owe to God,
(Our part therein we banish with ourselves)
To keep the oath that we administer:
You never shall (so help you truth and God!) Embrace each other's love in banishment;
Nor never look upon each other's face;
Nor never write, regret, nor reconcile
This lowering tempest of your heart-hated hate;
Nor never by advised purpose meet,
To plot, contrive, or compleat any ill,
'Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.
Boiling. I swear.
Nor. And I, to keep all this.
[They kiss the king's sword.
K. Rich. Norfolk, so fare, as to mine enemy.
Thus by this time, had the king permitted us,
One of our souls had wander'd in the air,
Banish'd this frail sepulchre of our flesh,
As now our flesh is banish'd from this land:
Confess thy treasons, ere thou fly the realm;
Since thou hast far to go, bear not along
The clogging burden of a guilty soul.
Nor. No, Bolingbroke: If ever I were traitor,
My name be blotted from the book of life,
And I from heaven banish'd, as from hence.
But what thou art, God, thou, and I do know;
And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.—
Farewell, my liege,—Now no way can I stay:
Save back to England, all the world's my way. [Exit
K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
I see thy griev'd heart: thy sad apparel
Hath from the number of his banish'd years
Pluck'd from four away.—[To Bolingbroke] Six frozen winters spent,
Return with welcome home from banishment.
Boiling. How long a time lies in one little word!
Four lagging winters and four wanton springs,
End in a word: such is the breath of kings.
Gaunt. I thank my liege, that in regard of me
He shortens four years of my son's exile;
But little vantage shall I reap thereby,
For, ere the six years, that he hath to spend,
Can change their moons, and bring their times about,
My oil-dried lamp, and time-bewasted light,
Shall be extinct with age and endless night:
My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
And my eye (a lamp) must let me see this life. [live.
K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst
Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow; [give:
And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow.
Thou canst help time to farrow me with age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage:
Thy past years are current with his; for my death,
But dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.
K. Rich. Thy son is banish'd; upon good advices,
Whe reto thy tongue a party-verdict gave:
Why at our justice seem'st thou, then, to lower?
Gaunt. Things sweet to taste prove in digestion
You urg'd me as a judge; but I had rather, [sour.
You would have bid me argue like a father.
O! had I been a stranger, not my kinsman,
To smooth his fault I should have been more mild:
A partial slander sought I to avoid,
And in the sentence my own life destroy'd.
Alas! I look'd when some of you should say,
I was too strict to make mine own away;
But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue,
Against my will to do myself this wrong.
Gaunt. Six years we banish him, and he shall go.
[Flourish. Exeunt King Richard, and Train.
Amn. Cousin, farewell: what presence must not
From where do you remain, let paper show. [know,
Mar. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride,
As far as land will let me, by your side. [words,
Gaunt. Of to what purpose dost thou bide thy
That thou art not no greeting to thine friends?
Boiling. I have too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal
To breathe that abundant dolor of the heart.
Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time.
Boiling. Joy absent, grief is present for that time.
Gaunt. What is six winters, I they are quickly gone.
Boiling. To men in joy; but grief makes one

SCENE I. — The Same. A Room in the King’s Castle.

Enter King Richard, Bagot, and Green, at one door; Aumerle at another.

K. Rich. We did observe. — Cousin Aumerle, How far brought you high Hereford on his way? Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so, But to the next highway, and there I left him. K. Rich. And, say, what store of paring teeth were shed? Aum. ’Faith, none for me; except the northeast Which then blew bitterly against our faces, [wind, Awak’d the sleeping rhuem, and so by chance Did grace our hollow parting with a tear. [with him? K. Rich. What said our cousin, when you parted Aum. Farewell: and, for my heart disdain’d I my tongue Should so profane the word, that taught me craft To counteract oppression of such grief, That words seem’d buried in my sorrow’s grave. a Marry, would the word “farewell” have lengthen’d And added years to his short banishment, [hours He should have had a volume of farewells; But, since it would not, he had none of me. K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but ’tis doubt, When time shall call him home from banishment, Whether our kinsman come to see his friends. Ourself, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green, Observe’d his courtship to the common people: How he did seem to live into their hearts, With humble and familiar courtesy: What reverence he did throw away on slaves; Wooing poor craftsmen with the craft of smiles, And patient underbearing of his fortune, As to were to banish their affects with him. Off goes his bonnet to an oyster wench; A brace of draymen bid God speed him well, And had the tribute of his supple knee, With — “Thinks, my countrymen, my loving As were our England in reverence his, [friends? — And he our subjects’ next degree in hope. Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these thoughts. Now for the people, which stand out in Ireland, ’Expedient munificence must be made, my liege, Ere farther leisure yield them farther means, For their advantage, and your highness’ loss. K. Rich. We will ourself in person to this war: And, e for our coffers with too great a court, And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light, We are enforce’d to form our royal realm; The revenue whereof shall furnish us For our affairs in hand. If that come short, Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters: Whereto, when they shall know what men are rich, They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold, And send them after to supply our wants, For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter Bushy.

Bushy, what news? [lord, Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my Suddenly taken, and hath sent post-haste, To entreat his majesty to visit him. K. Rich. Where lies he now? Bushy. At Ely-house, my liege. K. Rich. Now put it, God, in his physician’s mind, To help him to his grave immediately! The lining of his coffers shall make coats To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. — Come, gentlemen, let’s all go visit him: Pray God, we may make haste, and come too late! [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. — London. An Apartment in Ely-house. GAUNT on a Couch; the Duke of York, and Others, standing by him. Gaunt. Will the king come, that I may breathe In wholesome counsel to his undisposed youth. [my last York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your For all in vain comes counsel to his ear. [vain; Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent In for they breathe truth that breathe their words in He that no more 4 may say is listen’d more, [pain.

4 Undergoing. — a Affections. — b Expeditions. — c Because.
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat, that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is my strict fast, I mean my children's looks;
And therein fasting hast thou made me gaunt.

Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Gaunt. No; misery makes sport to mock itself:

Since thou dost seek to kill my soul and me,
I must have name, grown a king, to flatter thee. [live?
K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that Gaunt. No, no; men living flatter those that die.

K. Rich. Thou, now a-dying, say'st—thou flatter'st me.

Gaunt. O! no; thou diest, though I the sicker be.

K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill.

Gaunt. Now, He that made me knows I see thee ill;
I'll in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill,
Thy death's bed is no lesser than the land,
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick;
And thou, too careless patient as thou art,
Commit'st thy pointed body to the care
Of those physicians that first wounded thee.
A thousand flatt'rous sit within thy crown,
Who compass is no bigger than thy head,
And yet, incaged in so small a verge,
The waste is no whit lesser than thy land.
O! had thy grandsire, with a prophet's eye,
Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons,
From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame,
Deposing thee before thou wert possess'd,
Which art possess'd now to depose thyself.
Why, cousin, wert thou regent of this world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease;
But for thy world enjoying but this land,
Is it not more than shame to shame it so?
Landlord of England art thou now, not king:
Thy *state of law is bondslave to the law,
And thou—

K. Rich. A lunatic lean-witted fool,

Pressing on an ague's privilege,
Dar'st with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheek, chasing the royal blood
With fury from his native residence.
Now, by my seat's right royal majesty,
Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son,
This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head,
Should run thy head from thy unrevenged shoulders.
Gaunt. Of spare me not, my brother Edward's son,
For that I was his father Edward's son:
That blood already, like the pelican,
 Hast thou tapp'd out, and drunkenly carous'd.
My brother Gloster, plain well-meaning soul,
Whom fair beal in heaven 'mongst happy souls,
May be a precedent and witness good;
That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood.
Join with the present sickness that I have,
And thy unkindness be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too-long withered flower.
Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee:
These words hereafter let thy tormentors be.—
Convey me to my bed, then to my grave:
Love they to live, that love and honor have.

[Exit, borne out by his Attendants.]

K. Rich. And let them die, that age and sullens have,
For both hast thou, and both become the grave.

SCENE I.

KING RICHARD II.

York. I do beseech your majesty, impute his words To wayward sickness and age in him: He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear As Harry, duke of Hereford, were he here. [so his: K. Rich. Right, you say true; as Hereford's love; As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

North. Nay, nothing; all is said.

His tongue is now a stringless instrument: Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent. [Be York the next that must bankrupt so! Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe. K. Rich. The riper fruit first falls, and so doth he: His time is spent; our pilgrimage must be. So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars. We must supplant those rough rag-headed kerns, Which live like venom, where no venom else, But only they, hath privilege to live: And for these great affairs do ask some charge, Towards our assistance do we seize to us The plate, coin, revenues, and movables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd. York. How long shall I be patient? Ah! how long Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong! Not Glover's death, nor Hereford's banishment, Not Gaunt's rebellions, nor England's private wrongs, Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke About his marriage, nor my own disgrace, Have ever made me sour my patient cheek, Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face. I am the last of noble Edward's sons, Of whom thy father, prince of Wales, was first: In war he never let his head go bare; In peace was never gentle lamb more mild, Than was that young and princely gentleman. His face thou hast, for even so look'd he, Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours; But when herown'd, it was against the French, And not against his friends: his noble hand Did win what he did spend, and spent not that Which his triumphant father's hand had won: His hands were guilty of no kindred blood, But bloody with the enemies of his kin. O, Richard! York is too far gone with grief, Or else he never would compare between. K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter? York. Pardon me, if you please; if not, I plea'd Not to be pardon'd, am content withal. Seek you to seize, and grieve into your hands, The royalties and rights of banished' Hereford? Is not Gaunt dead, and doth not Hereford live? Was not Gaunt just, and is not Harry true? Did not the one deserve to have an heir? Is not his heir a well-deserving son? To inherit Hereford's rights away, and take from time His charters and his customary rights; Let not to-morrow, then, enuee to-day; Be not thyself; for how art thou a king, But by fair sequence and succession? Now, afore God (God forbid, I say true!) If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights, Can't the letters patents that he hath By his attorneys-general to me His livery, and deny his offer'd holmage, You pluck a thousand dangers on your head, You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,

My liege, farewell: What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell; But by bad courses may be understood, That their events can never fall out good. [Exit. K. Rich. Go. Buskly, to the earl of Wiltshire, Bid him repair to us to Ely-house: [straight: To see this business. To-morrow next We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trust: And we create, in absence of ourselves, Our uncle York lord governor of England, For he is just, and always lov'd us well.— Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part; Be merry, for our time of stay is short. [Flourish.

Exeunt KING, QUEEN, BUSKY, AMERLE, GREEN, and BAGOT.

North. Well, lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead. Ross. And living too, for now his son is duke. Willo. Barely in title, not in revenues. North. Richly in both, if justice had her right. Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence.

Ern't be diaburden'd with a fib'lar tongue. North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him ne'er speak more,

That speaks thy words again to do thee harm! Willo. Tends that thou dost speak, to the duke of If it be so, out with it boldly, may I? [Hereford? Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him. Ross. Wars have not wasted it, for warr'd he hath But basely yielded upon compromise, [not, That which his noble ancestors achiv'd with blows: More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars. Ross. The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm. Willo. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man. [him. North. Reproach, and dissolution, hangeth over Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars, His burdensome taxation notwithstanding; But by the robbing of the banished duke. North. His noble kinsman: most degenerate king! But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing, Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm: We see the wind sit sore upon our sails, And yet we strike not, but securely perish. Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer; And unavow'd is the danger now, For suffering so the causes of our wreck. [death, North. Not so: even through the hollow eyes of

KING RICHARD II.

ACT II.

I spy life peering; but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is. [eusa.
Willo. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost.
Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
Thy words are but our thoughts: therefore, be bold.
North. Then thus.—I have from Port le Blanc, a
In Brittany, receive'd intelligence,
That Harry duke of Hereford, Reginald lord Cobham,
That late broke from the duke of Exeter,
His brother, archbishop late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, sir John Ramston, [Quoint,
Sir John Norbery, sir Robert Waterton, and Francis
All these well furnish'd by the duke of Bretagne,
With eight tail ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedition,
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:
Perhaps, they had ere this, but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If, then, we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
"Imp out our drooping country's broken wing,
Redeem from breaking pawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our scepter's gift,
And make high majesty look like itself,
Away with me in post to Ravenspur:
But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay and be secret, and myself will go.
Ross. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to them that Willo. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. An Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Queen, Bushy, and Bagot.

Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:
You promis'd, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.
Queen. To please the king, I did; to please myself,
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save biding farwell to so sweet a guest.
As my sweet Richard. Yet, again, methinks,
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me; and my inward soul
With nothing trembles: at some thing it grieves,
More than with parting from my lord, the king.
Bush. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,
Which show like grief itself, but are not so:
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives, which, rightly gaz'd upon,
Show nothing but confusion: ey'd awry,
Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Find's a shade of grief more than himself to wall;
Which, back'd on as it is, is nought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, thrice gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not: more's
Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye, [not seen;
Which for things true weeps things imaginary.
Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: however it be,
I cannot but be sad; so heavy
As, though 2unthinking on no thought I think,
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.
Queen. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so,
For nothing hath begot my something 3woe;
Or something hath the nothing that I 4guess:
'Tis in reversion that I do possess,
But what it is, that is not yet known, what
I cannot name: 'tis nameless woe, I wot.

Enter Green.

Green. God save your majesty:—and well met,
Gentlemen,—
I hope, the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland.
Queen. Why hop'st thou so? 'tis better hope he is,
For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope;
Then, wherefore dost thou hope, he is not shipp'd?
Green. That he, our hope, might have retir'd his And driven into despair an enemy's hope, [power,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land.
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd
At Ravenspur.

Queen. Now, God in heaven forbid!
Green. Ah! madam, 'tis too true: and 5what is worse,
Percy, the lord Northumberland, his son young Henry
The lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Wiltoughby,
With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.
Bushy. Why have you not proclain'd Northumber-
And all the rest of the revolted faction, traitors?
Green. We have: whereupon the earl of Worcester
Hath broken his staff, resign'd his stewardship,
And all the houseold servants fled with him to Bolingbroke.
Queen. So Green, thou art the midwife to my woe,
And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir:
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I, a gawping new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.
Bushy. Despair not, madam.
Queen. Who shall hinder me?
I will despair, and be at enmity.
With ceasing hope: he is a fatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter the Duke of York, 6part-armed.

Green. Here comes the duke of York.
Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck.
O! full of careful business are his looks.—
Uncle, for God's sake, speak comfortable words.
York. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts:
Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives but crosses, care, and grief.
Your husband, he is gone to save far off,
Where others come to make him lose at home:
Here am I left to underprop his land,
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself.
Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.
York. He was?—Why, so:—go all which way it will.—
The nobles they are fled, the commons cold,
And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.—
Sirrah, get thee to Flashy, to my sister Gloster;
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound.
Hold; take my ring.
SCENE III.  KING RICHARD II.

Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:—
To-day, as I came by, I called there;—
York. What is’t, knave?
Serv. An hour before I came the duchess died.
York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes
Comes rushing on this woeful land at once!
I know not what to do;—I would to God,
(So my entruth had not provok’d him to it)
The king had sev’r’d off his head with my brother’s.—
What! are there no post dispatch’d for Ireland!—
How shall we do for money for these wars!—
Come, sister,—cousin, I would say; pray, pardon me.—
Go, fellow, [To the Servant.] get thee home; provide some carts,
And bring away the armor that is there.—

[Exit Servant.]

Gentlemen, will you go muster men?
If I know how, or which way, to order these affairs,
Thus disorderly thrust into my hands,
Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen:—
Th’ one is my sovereign, whom both my oath
And duty bids defend; th’ other again,
But I shall grieve you to report the rest.
The king hath sev’r’d off my head with my brother’s—
What! are there no post dispatch’d for Ireland!—
How shall we do for money for these wars!—
Come, sister,—cousin, I would say: pray, pardon me.—

[Exit Servant York and Queen.

Busby. The wind sits fair for news to go for Ireland;
But none returns. For us to levy power, [and, Proportional to the enemy,]
Is all impossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in love
Is near the hate of those love not the king.

Bagot. And that’s the waverers’ commons; for Their love
Lies in their purses, and whose empties them,
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

Busby. Wherein the king stands generally condemn’d.

Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we,
Because we ever have been near the king. [castle:]
Green. Well, I’ll for refuge straight to Bristol.
The earl of Ulster is already there.

Busby. Thither will I with you; for little office
Will the hateful commons perform for us,
Except like curs to tear us all to pieces.
Will you go along with us?

Bagot. No; I will to Ireland to his majesty.

 Farewell: if heart’s presages be not vain,
We three here part, that ne’er shall meet again.

Busby. That’s as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

Green. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes
Is numbering sands, and drinking oceans dry:
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.

Farewell at once; for once, for all, and ever.

Busby. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Wilds in Glosstershire.

Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now?

North. Believe me, noble lord, I am a stranger here in Glosstershire.

Those high wild hills, and rough uneven ways,
Draw our carriages, and make them wearisome;
And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar,
Making the hard way sweet and delectable.

But, I bethank me, what a weary way
From Ravenspurge to Cotswold will be found
In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company,
Which, I protest, hath very much beguil’d
The tidiness and pleasantness of the gravel;
But theirs is sweeten’d with the hope to have
The present benefit which I possess;—
And hope to b joy is little less in joy,
Than hope enjoy’d: by this the weary lords
Shall make their way seem short, as mine hath been
By sight of what I have, your company.

Boling. Of much less value is my company,
Than your good words. But who comes here?

Enter Harry Percy.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy,
Sent from my brother Worcester, whencesoever.—

Harry, how fares your uncle!—
Percy. I have thought, my lord, to have learn’d his health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the queen? [court,
Percy. No, my good lord: he hath forsook the Broken his staff of office, and dispers’d
The household of the king.

North. What was his reason?

Percy. He was not so resolv’d, when last we spake
Together. [cur.
Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed trait-
But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurge,
To offer service to the duke of Hereford;
And sent me over by Berkley, to discover
What power the duke of York had levied there;
Then, with directions to repair to Ravenspurge.

North. Have you forgot the duke of Hereford, boy?

Percy. No, my good lord; for that is not forgot,
Which ne’er I did remember; to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. [duke.

North. Then learn to know him now: this is the Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service,
Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young;
Which elder days shall ripen, to perform
To more approved service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy; and be sure,
I count myself in nothing else so happy,
As in a soul remembering my good friends;
And as my fortune ripens with thy love,
It shall be still thy true love’s recompense:
My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it.

North. How far is it from Berkley? And what stir
Keeps good old York there, with his men of war?

Percy. There stands the castle, by yond’st tuft of trees,

Mann’d with three hundred men, as I have heard;
And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and Sey-

North. Lose else of name, and noble estimate. [mour;

Enter Ross and Willoughby.

North. Here come the lords of Ross and Wil-looughby,

Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste.

Boling. Welcome, my lords. I wot, your love
A banish’d tritor: all my treasury [pursues
Is but yet unfelt thanks, which, more enrich’d,
Shall be your love and labor’s recompense. [lord.

Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble

Wilt. And far surmounts our labor to attain it.

* DeLoyalty; treachery.

"To joy," i.e., to rejoice.
KING.
The more thanks, th' exchequer of the poor; Which, till my infant fortune comes to years, Stands for my bounty. But who comes here?

Enter Berkley.

North. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess. Berk. My lord of Hereford, my message is to you. Boling. My lord, my answer is—[to] 3 Lancaster, And I am come to seek that name in England; And I must find that title in your tongue, Before I make reply to aught you say. [ing, Berkeley.

Berk. Mistake me not, my lord: 'tis not my mean- To race one title of your honor out. To you, my lord, I come, what lord you will, From the most gracious reign of this land, The duke of York, to know what pricks you on To take advantage of the absent 4 time, And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by you: Here comes his grace in person.—My noble uncle. [Kneels. York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy Whose duty is deceitable and false. [knee, Boling. My gracious uncle— [me no uncle: York. Tut, tut! Grace me no grace, nor uncle I am no traitor's uncle; and that word 4 grace,' In an ungracious mouth, is but profane. Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs Dar'd once to touch a dust of England's ground? But then, more why,—why have they dar'd to march So many miles upon her peaceful bosom, Frighting her pale-face'd villages with war, And ostentation of despoothing arms? Come then, that because right is hence? Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind, And in my loyal bosom lies his power. Were I but now the lord of such hot youth, As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself, Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men, From forth the ranks of many thousand French, O! then, how quickly should this arm of mine, Now priser to the palsy, chastise thee, And minister correction to thy fault! Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault: On what condition stands it, and wherein? York. Even in condition of the worst degree; In gross rebellion, and detested treason: Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come Before the expiration of thy time, In braving arms against thy sovereign. [ford; Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Here- But as I come, I come for Lancaster. And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace, Look on my wrongs with an 4 indifferent eye: You are my father, for, methinks, in you I see old Gaunt alive: O! then, my father, Will you permit that I shall stand condemn'd A wandering vagabond, my rights and royalties Pluck'd from my arms performe, and given away To upstart unbrithes? Wherefore was I born? If that my cousin king be king of England, It must be granted I am duke of Lancaster. You have a son, Annerlee, my noble kinsman; Had you first died, and he been trowd down, He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father, To rouse his 4 wrongers, chase them to the bay.

*That is, 'Your message, you say, is to my lord of Hereford: my answer is, it is to the Duke of Lancaster.'—"The absence of the time of the king's absence."—"indifferent, i.e., impartial.

I am denied to sue my 4 livery here, And yet my letters patent give me leave: My father's goods are all distrain'd, and sold; And these, and all, are all amiss employ'd. What would you have me do? I am a subject, And challenge law: attorneys are denied me, And therefore personally I lay my claim To my inheritance of free descent. [Abused. North. The noble duke hath been too much Ross. It stands your grace 4 upon to do him right. Wills. Base men by his entailments are made good. York. My lords of England, let me tell you this: I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs, And labord all I could to do him right; But in this kind to come; in braving arms, Be his own carver, and cut out his way, To find out right with wrong,—it may not be: And you, that do abet him in this kind, Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all. North. The noble duke hath sworn, his coming is But for his own; and for the right of that, We all have strongly sworn to give him aid, And let him ne'er see joy that breaks that oath. York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms. I cannot mend it, I must needs confess, Because my power is weak, and all ill left; But it I could, by him that gave me life, I would attach you all, and make you stoop Unto the sovereign mercy of the king: But, since I cannot, be it known unto you, I do remain as neuter. So, 4 farewell! Unless you please to enter in the castle, And there, my lords, repose you for this night. Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept: But we must win your grace, to go with us To Bristol castle; there, if need be, I shall By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices, The caterpillars of the commonwealth, Which I have sworn to weed and pluck away. York. It may be, I will go with you;—but yet I'll pause, For I am loath to break our country's laws. Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are: Things past redress are now with me past care. [Excit.

SCENE IV.—A Camp in Wales.

Enter Salisbury, and a Welsh Captain.

Cap. My lord of Salisbury, we have stay'd ten And hardly kept our countrymen together, [days. And yet we hear no tidings from the king; Therefore, we will disperse ourselves. Farewell. Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welsh- The king reproves all his confidence in thee. [man: Cap. 'Tis thought, the king is dead: we will not The bay-trees in our country are all wither'd, [stay. And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven; The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth, And these look'd prophetic whisper fearful change: Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap, The one in fear to lose what they enjoy, The other to enjoy by rage and war: These signs forerun the death or fall of kings. Farewell: our countrymen are gone and fled, As well assur'd Richard, their king, is dead. [Exit. Salisbury. Ah, Richard! with the eyes of heavy mind, I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
SCENE II.

KING RICHARD II.

Fall to the base earth from the firmament.
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest:
Thy friends are fled to wait upon thy foes,
And crossly to thy good fortune goes. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Bolingbroke's Camp at Bristol.

Enter Bolingbroke, York, Northumberland, Percy, Willoughby, Ross: Bushy and Green, prisoners.

Boling. Bring forth these men.—
[Bushy and Green stand forward.
Bushy, and Green, I will not vex your souls,
Since presently your souls must part your bodies,
With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 'twere no charity, yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here in the view of men
I will unfold some causes of your deaths.
You have misled a prince, a royal king,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappied and disgraced:—
You have, in manner, with your sinful hours,
Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him,
Broke the possession of a royal bed,
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears, drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.
Myself, a prince by fortune of my birth,
Near to the king in blood, and near in love,
Till you did make him misinterpret me,
Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries,
And made my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment,
Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
Dispar'd my parks, and fell'd my forest woods,
From mine own windows torn my household coat,
Raz'd out my impress, leaving me no sign,
Save men's opinions, and my living blood,
To show the world I am a gentleman.
This and much more, much more than twice all this,
Condemns you to the death.—See them deliver'd
To execution, and the hand of death. [Exeunt.

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, farewell, [me, Green. My comfort is, that heaven will take our
And plague injustice with the pains of hell. [souls,
Boling. My lord Northumberland, see them dispersed.

[Execut Northumberland and Others, with Bushy and Green.

Uncle, you say the queen is at your house;
For God's sake, fairly let her beentreated:
Tell her I send to her my kind commendations;
Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.
York. A gentleman of mine I have dispatch'd
With letters of your love to her at large. [Away,
Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle.—Come, my lords,
To fight with Glendower and his complices:
Awhile to work, and after holiday. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Coast of Wales. A Castle in view.

K. Rich. Barklyough castle call they this at hand?

* Clean, l. e. quite; completely.—"Dispersed," l. e. destroyed.— Device; motto.— "Commendations.
To-day, to-day, unhappy day too late,
O'er throws thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state;
For all the Weis men, hearing thou wert dead,
Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispers'd, I'c told;
Aum. Comfort, my liege! why looks your grace so pale?

K. Rich. But now, the blood of twenty thousand
Did triumph in my face, and they are fled;
And till so much blood thither come again,
Have I not reason to look pale and dead?
All souls that will be safe, fly from my side.
For time hath set a blot upon my pride.
Aum. Comfort, my liege! remember who you are.
K. Rich. I had forgot myself. Am I not king?
Awake, thou coward majesty! than sleepest,
Is not the king's name twenty thousand names?
Arm, arm, my name! a puny subject strikes
At thy great glory.—Look not to the ground,
Ye favorites of a king: are we not high?
High be our thoughts. I know, my uncle York
Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who comes here!

Enter Scroop.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my Than can my care-ten'd tongue deliver him. [liege, K. Rich. Mine car is open, and my heart pre-
The worst is worldly loss thou canst unfold. [par'd:
Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 'twas my care;
And what loss is it to be rid of care?
Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?
Greater he shall not be: if he serve God, We shall serve him too, and be his fellow so.
Revolt our subjects? that we cannot mend;
They break their faith to God, as well as us.
Cry wo, destruction, ruin, loss, decay.
The worst is death, and death will have his day.
Scroop. Glad am I, that your highness is so arm'd
To bear the tidings of calamity.
Like an unseasonable stormy day,
Which makes the silver riversown their shores,
As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears:
So high above his limits swells the rage
Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land
With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.
White-beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalp.
Against thy majesty; and boys, with women's voices,
Strive to speak big, and a clasp their feeble joints
In stiff unwieldy armor against thy crown:
Thy very beadsman learn to bend their bows
Of a double-fatal yew against thy state;
Yea, distaff-women manage rusty 'bills
Against thy sent: both young and old rebel,
And all goes worse than I have power to tell. [ill.
K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale so
Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?
What is become of Bushy? where is Green?
That they have let the dangerous enemy
Measure our confines with such peaceful steps.
If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it
I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.
Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord.
K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn'd without re-
Dog, easily won to fawn on any man! [heart
Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my Three Judases, each one three worse than Judas!
Would they make peace? terrible hell make war
Upon their spotted souls for this offence!

* Ye? is called double-fatal because of the poisonous quality of its leaves.—* Battle-axes.

Scroop. Sweet love, I see, changing his property,
Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate.
Again incurse their souls; their peace is made
With heads and not with hands: those whom you curse
Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound,
And lie full low, 'gainst the hollow ground.
Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire, dead?
Scroop. Yes, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.
And this is the duke, my father, with his power?

[ speaks. K. Rich. No matter where. Of comfort no man
Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
Let's choose executors, and talk of wills:
And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deceased bodies to the ground?
Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,
And nothing can we call our own but death,
And that small 3model of the barren earth,
Which serves as post and cover to our bones.
For God's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
And tell sad stories of the death of kings:
How he was never depomp'd, some sin in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd,
Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd,
All murder'd;—for within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps death his court, and there the antic sits,
Scoffing his state and grinning at his pomp;
Allowing him a breath, a little scene,
To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
Infusing him with self and vain conceit,
As if this flesh, which walks about our life,
Were brass impregnable; and, honor'd thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little pin
Bores through his castle wall, and—farewell king!
Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
With solemn reverence: throw away respect,
"Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty,
For you have but mistook me all this while:
I live with bread like you, feel want,
Taste grief, need friends: subjected thus,
How can you say to me—I am a king?

Bishop. My lord, wise men never sit and wail their
But presently prevent the ways to wall.
To feel the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
Given, in your weakness, strength unto your foe,
And so your follies fight against yourself.
Fear, and be slain; no worse can come to fight:
And fight and die is death destroying death;
Where fearing dying pays death servile breath.
Aum. My father hath a power, enquire of him,
And learn to make a body of a limb.
K. Rich. Thou chuff'lt me well.—Froud Boling-broke, I come
To change blows with thee for our day of doom.
This aque-fit of fear is over-blown:
An easy task it is, to win our own.
Say, Sroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.
Sroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky
The state and inclination of the day:
So may you by my dull and heavy eye,
My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.
I play the torturer, by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken.

* Barlow. - 4 Pattern; portion. - 5 Tradition, I. c., traditional practices; customary homage. - 6 Force. — By little and little.
Your uncle York is join'd with Bolingbroke;
And all your northern castles yielded up,
And all your southern gentlemen in arms
Upon his party.

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.—
Beseech thee, cousin, [To Aumerle.] which didst lead me forth
Of that sweet way I was in to despair!
What say you now? What comfort have we now?
By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more.
Go to Flint castle: there I'll pine away;
A king, worse a slave, shall kingly be.
That power I have, discharge; and let them go
To *ear the land that hath some hope to grow,
For I have none.—Let no man speak again
To alter this, for counsel is but vain.
Ann. My liege, one word.

K. Rich. Does he me double wrong,
That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
Discharge my followers: let them hence away,
From Richard's sight to Bolingbroke's fair day.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Wales. A Plain before Flint Castle.
Enter, with Drum and Colors, Bolingbroke and Forces; York, Northumberland, and Others.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn,
The Welshmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed
With some few private friends upon this coast.

North. The news is very fair and good, my lord:
Richard, not far from hence, hath bid his head.
York. It would beseem the lord Northumberland,
To say, king Richard:—Alack, the heavy day,
When such a sacred king should hide his head!

North. Your grace mistakes me; only to be brief,
Left I his title out.

York. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head, your whole head's length.

Boling. Mistake not, uncle, farther than you [should.
York. Take not, good cousin, farther than you
Lest you mistake: the heavens are o'er our heads.

Boling. I know it, uncle; and oppose not myself
Against their will.—But who comes here?

Enter Percy.

Welcome, Harry. What, will not this castle yield?

Percy. The castle royalty is man's, my lord,
Against thy entrance.

Boling. Royally?
Why, it contains no king.

Percy. Yes, my good lord,
It doth contain a king: king Richard lies
Within the limits of your line and stone;
And with him are the lord Aumerle, lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman
Of holy reverence, who, I cannot learn.

North. Of belike it is the bishop of Carlisle.

Boling. Noble lord, [To North.
Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle;
Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parle
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver.

Henry Bolingbroke
On both his knees doth kiss king Richard's hand,
And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart,
To his most royal person; hither come

Even at his feet to lay my arms and power,
Provided that, my banishment repeal'd,
And lands restor'd again, be freely granted.
If not, I'll use th' advantage of my power,
And let the summer's dust with sharp'd blood,
Rain'd from the wounds of thousand'd Englandmen:
The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fresh green lap of fair king Richard's land,
My stooping duty tenderly shall show.
Go; signify as much, while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.
Let's march without the noise of braying drum,
That from the castle's tatter'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perus'd.
Methinks, king Richard and myself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thundering shock
At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven.
Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding wind:
The rage be his, while on the earth I rain
My waters; on the earth, and not on him.—
March on, and mark king Richard how he looks.

A parley sound'd, and answered by a Trumpet within. Flourish. Enter on the walls King Richard, the Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, Scroop, and Salisbury.

Boling. See, see, king Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun
From out the fiery portal of the east,
When he perceives the envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory, and to stain the track
Of his bright passage to the occident.

York. Yet looks he like a king: behold, his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth
Controlling majesty. Alack, alack, for woe,
That any storm should stain so fair a show!

K. Rich. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood
[To Northumberland.
To watch the faithful bending of thy knee,
Because we thought ourselves thy lawful king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
If we be not, show us the hand of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship;
For well we know, no hand of blood and bone
Can grip the sacred handle of our sceptre,
Unless by profound, stately, or vast
And though you think that all, as you have done,
Have torn their souls by turning them from us,
And we are barren and bereft of friends,
Yet know, my master, God omnipotent,
Is muttering in his clouds on our behalf
Arms of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot,
That lift your vassal hands against my head,
And threat the glory of my precious crown.
Tell Bolingbroke, for yond, methinks, he stands,
That every stride he makes upon my land
Is dangerous treason. He is come to ope
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for lives in peace,
Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons
Shall ill become the flower of England's face,
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation, and bedew
Her pasture's grass with faithful English blood.

North. The king of heaven forbid, our lord the Should so with civil and uncivil arms

*a. "To ear," i. e., to till; to plough.

b. "To ope the purple testament of bleeding war," i. e., to ascertain what fortune war will assign him. c. "The flower of England's face," i. e., England's flowery face.
KING RICHARD II.

ACT III.

KING may't and, Sorrow [Exeunt God your I'll of that some]

And, 'A as a gentleman, I credit him. [returns.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say,—thus the king
His noble cousin is right welcome hither
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction.

With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commends.—

[NORTHUMBERLAND retires to BOLINGBROKE.

We do debate ourself, cousin, [To Aumerle.] do
To look so poorly, and to speak so fair! [we not,
Shall we call back Northumberland and send
Defiance to the traitor, and so die? [words,
Aum. No, my good lord: let's fight with gentle
Till time lend friends and friends their helpful
swords. [of mine,

K. Rich. O God! O God! that e'er this tongue
That laid the sentence of dread bastishment.
On yond' proud man, should take it off again
With words of a 'sooth. O! that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name,
Or that I could forget what I have been,
Or not remember what I must be now.

Swell'at thou, proud heart?
I'll give thee scope to bent, [Unbounting.
Since foes have scope to heat both thee and me.

Aum. Northumberland comes back from Bolingbrooke.

[K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must he
The king shall do it. Must he be depos'd?
The king shall be contented. Must he lose
The name of king? o' God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an alms-man's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood,
My sceptre for a palmer's walking staff,
My subjects for a pair of carved saints,
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little grave, an obscure grave:
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common 'trade, where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head;
For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live,
And, buried once, why not upon my head?—
Aumerle, thou weep'st; my tender-hearted cousin!—
We'll make foul weather with desipred tears;
Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a deark in this revolting land:
Or shall we play the wantons with our woe,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
As thus;—to drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid, there lies
Two kinsmen digg'd their graves with weeping eyes.

Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see
I talk but idly, and you mock at me.—
Most mighty prince, my lord Northumberland,
What says king Bolingbroke? will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a 'leg, and Bolingbroke says ay.

North. My lord, in the base *court he doth attend
To speak with you: may't please you to come down?
K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glistening
Wanting the manage of unruly jades. [Phanton,
[NORTH. retires again to BOLING.

In the base court? Base court, where kings grow base,
To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace.

In the base court? Come down, down, court! down,
king!

For night-owls shriek, where mourning larks should sing. [Excurs, from above.

Boling. What says his majesty?
North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Make him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King Richard, and his Attendants, below.

Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.
My gracious lord,—

[Kneeling.

K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee,
To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
I me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up: your heart is up, I know,
Thus high at least, although your knee be low.

Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.
K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all.
Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love. [have,
K. Rich. Well you dese're:—they well deserve to That know the strongest and surest way to get—cousin,

Uncle, give me your hand: say, dry your eyes;
Tears show their love, but want their remedies.

Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.

What you will have I'll give, and willing too,
For do we must what force will have us do.—
SET on towards London,—Cousin, is it so?

Boling. Yes, my good lord.

K. Rich. Then, I must not say no.

[Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter the Queen, and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this
To drive away the heavy thought of care? [garden,

1 Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls. [rubs.

Queen. Twill make me think the world is full of
And that my fortune runs against the bias.

1 Lady. Madam, we'll dance.

Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.

1 Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.

Queen. Of sorrow, or of joy?

1 Lady. Of either, madam.

Queen. Of neither, girl;

For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy;
For what I have I need not to repeat,
And what I want it's but to complain.

4 A leg," i.e., a bow.—The base court was the lower court of the castle.—Footsilly.—s Profit.
SCENE I.

1 Lady. Madam, I'll sing.
Queen. 'Tis well that thou hast cause;
But thou should'st please me better, would'st thou weep.
1 Lady. May I weep, madam, would it do you good.
Queen. And I could sing, would weeping do me
And never borrow any tear of thee.
[good,
But stay, here come the gardeners:
Let's step into the shade of these trees.
My wretchedness unto a row of pins,
They'll talk of state; for every one doth so
Against a change. Woe is forerun with woe.
[Queen and Ladies retire.

Enter a Gardener and two Servants.

Gard. Go, bind thou up yon' danging apricocks,
Which, like unruly children, make their sire
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight:
Give some supportance to the bending twigs.
Go thou, and like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of too-fast-growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:
All must be even in our government.
Thus ye may, that is, you may, use the same degree of care,
To see the meanest fruit-tree, the smallest weed is cut;
The weedy soil's from wholesome flowers.
I Serv. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,
Keep law, and form, and due proportion,
Showing, as in a model, our firm estate,
When our sea-wall'd garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers chok'd up,
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillers?
Gard. Hold thy peace.
He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring,
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:
The woods that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,
That seem'd in eating him to hold him up,
Are pich'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke;
I mean, the earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.
I Serv. What! are they dead?
Gard. They are;
And Bolingbroke
Hath seiz'd the wasteful king.
What pity is it,
That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his hand,
As we this garden.
At the time of year
When the wood begins to put on its robes,
To set out every species of flower and plant,
With too much riches it confound itself:
Had he done so to great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste
Their fruits of duty.
The superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself hav'd borne the crown,
Which waste and idle hours have quite thrown down.
I Serv. What! think you, then, the king shall be depos'd?
Gard. Depress'd he is already; and depos'd,
'Tis * doubt, he will be: letters came last night
To a dear friend of the good duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.
Queen. Of! I am press'd to death, through want
Of speaking.
[Coming forward.
Thou, old Adam's likeness, set to dress this garden,
How dares thy harsh, rude tongue sound this un-
pleasing news?
What Eve, what serpent hath suggested thee
To make a second fall of cursed man?

*Woe is forerun with woe," I. e., woe is a harbinger to woe.—Sprouts; twigs.
A pale," I. e., an enclosure.
*Knots were corresponding garden patches or beds.
*"Tis doubt," I. e., double doubt; there is little doubt,—An allusion to the ancient punishment of pressing to death, inflicted upon prisoners refusing to plead.

Why dost thou say king Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall?  Say, where, when, and how,
Cam'st thou by these ill tidings? speak, thou wretch.
Gard. Perchance, madam: little joy have I,
To breathe these news, yet what I say is true.
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bolingbroke: their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides himself, are all the England strong,
And with that odds he weighs king Richard down.
Post you to London, and you'll find it so;
I speak no more than every one doth know.
Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassage belong to me,
And am I last that knows it?  Of! thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go
To meet at London London's king in woe.—
What! was I born to this, that my sad look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?—
Gardener, for telling me these news of woe,
Pray God, the plaudit thou gav'st may never grow.
[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

Gard. Poor queen! so that thy story be so
I would my skill were subject to thy curse.
[worse,
Here did she fill a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace;
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—London. Westminster Hall.
The Lords spiritual on the right side of the Throne;
The Lords temporal on the left; the Commons below.

Enter Bolingbroke, Aumerle, Surrey, Northumberland, Percy, Fitzwater, another Lord,
The Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster,
And Attendants.

Boling. Call forth Bagot.

—Enter Bagot, guarded.

Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind,
What thou dost know of noble Gloucester's death;
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his time-end.
Bagot. Then, set before my face the lord Aumerle.
Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.
Bagot. My lord Aumerle, I know thy daring tongue
Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd.
In that dead time when Gloucester's death was plotted,
I heard you say,—"'Tis not my own of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court,
As far as Calais, to mine uncle's head."
Amongst much other talk, that very time,
I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
The offer of an hundred thousand crowns,
Than Bolingbroke's return to England;
Adding withal, how bleak this land would be
In this your cousin's death.
Aum.
Princes, and noble lords,
What answer shall I make to this base man?
Shall I so much dishonor my fair *stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement?
Either I must, or have mine honor soild
With the attender of his slanderous lips.

* Drop,—Unlimely,—"My fair stars," I. e., the superior stars that presided at my birth.
Only the inferior stars, according to Pliny, were supposed to be predominant at the birth of persons in the lower ranks of life.
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell: I say, thou liest,
And will maintain what thou hast said is false
In thy heart-blood, though being all too base
To stain the temper of my knightly sword.
Boling. Bogus, for heaven: thou shalt not take it up.
Aum. Excepting one, I would be the best
In all this presence, that hath mov'd me so.
Fitz. If that thy valor stand on *sympathy,
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine,
By that fair sun which shows me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
Thou wast cast of noble Gloucestery's death.
Fitz. There's no true man that tvnest it twenty times.
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.
Aum. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that day.
Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.
Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.
Perrey. Aumerle, thou liest; his honor is as true
In this appeal, as thou art all unjust;
And, that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing. Seize it if thou dar'st.
Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe!
Lord. I task the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle;
My heart is thee on with full as my life;
As may be hol'd in thy treacherous rear
From sun to sun. There is my honor's pawn:
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.
[all.
Aum. Who *sets me else? by heaven, I'll throw
I have a thousand spirits in one breast,
To answer twenty thousand such as you.
Surrey. My lord Fitzwater, I do remember well
The other time Aumerle and you met.
Fitz. 'Tis very true: you were in presence then;
And you can witness with me this is true. [true.
Surrey. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is Fitz. Surrey, thou liest.
Surrey. Dishonorable boy!
That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,
That his sword shall render vent and revenge, Till thou, the lie-giver, and that lie to lie In earth as quiet as thy father's skull, In proof whereof, there is my honor's pawn:
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.
Fitz. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse.
If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live, I dare meet Surrey in a *wilderness,
And spit upon him, whilst I say he lies, And lies, and lies. There is my bond of faith,
To tie thee to my strong correction.
As I intend to thrive in this new *world,
Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal:
Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say,
That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men To receive the noble duke at Cahens.
Aum. Some honest Christian traitor with a gage.
That Norfolk lies, here do I throw down this,
If he may be repeal'd to try his honor.
Boling. These differences shall all rest under gage,
Till Norfolk be repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be,
And, though mine enemy, restor'd again
To all his lands and signories. When he's return'd, Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial.
Bishop. That honorable day shall never be seen.

On sympathy," i.e., on equality of blood and rank—
"From sun to sun," i.e., from sunrise to sunset—
"Who *sets me else?" i.e., Who else offers me the pledge of battle?—
"In a wilderness," i.e., where no help can be had against him—"in this new world," i.e., where I have just commenced my career.

Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought
For Jesus Christ in glorious Christian field,
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross
Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens;
And toil'd with works of war, retir'd himself
To Italy, and there, at Venice, gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colors he had fought so long.
Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?
Bishop. As surely as I live, my lord. [the boom Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to
Of good old Abraham—*Lords apppellants,
You may rest assured all rest at peace.
Till we assign to you your days of trial.

Enter York, attended.
York. Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee,
From plume-pluck'd Richard, who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields
To the possession of thy royal hand.
Ascend his throne, descending now from him,
And long live Henry, of that name the fourth!
Boling. In God's name I'll ascend the royal throne.
Bishop. Marry, God forbide!—
Worst in this royal presence may I speak,
Yet best becoming me to speak the truth.
Would God, that any in this noble presence Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard: then, true noble souls should Learn him forswear from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here that is not Richard's subject?
Thieves are not judg'd but they are by hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure of God's majesty, His captain, steward, deputy elect,
Anointed, crow'd, planted on ear
Be judg'd by subject and inferior breath,
And he not present! O! *forswear it, God,
That, in a Christian climate, souls reclin'd
Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed!
I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stir'd up by God thus boldly for his king.
My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's wool:
And if you crown him, let me prophesy.
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act:
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound;
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny,
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead men's skulls.
O! if you rise this house against this house,
It will the woefullest division prove,
That ever fell upon this cursed earth.
Prevent, resist it, let it not be so,
Least child, child's children, cry against you—woe!
Norfolk will have you argued, sir; and, for your Of capital reason we arrest you here. —[pains,
My lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial.
May it please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit.
Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may surrender: so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.
York. I will be his *conductor. [Exit.
York. Boling. Lords, you that here are under our arrest,
Procure your sureties for your days of answer.—
Little are we beholding to your love. [To the Bishop.
*And look for little at your helping hands.
SCENE I.

KING RICHARD II.

Re-enter York, with King Richard, and Officers bearing the Crown, &c.

K. Rich. Ahack! why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I have yet learnt
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my limbs:
Give sorrow leave awhile to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometimes cry, All hail! to me?
So Judas did to Christ; but he, in twelve, [none.
Found truth in all, but one: I, in twelve thousand,
God save the king!—Will no man say, amen?
Am I both priest and clerk? well then, amen.
God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me.—
To do what service am I sent for hither?
York. To do that office of thine own good will,
Which tried majesty did make thee offer;
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Hany Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. Give me the crown.—Here, cousin, seize the crown;—[Crown brought.
Here, cousin, on this side my hand, and on that side,
Now is this golden crown like a deep well, [yours.
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air.
The water down, unseen, and full of water:
That bucket down, and full of tears, am I,
Drinking my grief, whilst you mount up on high.

Boling. I thought you had been willing to resign.
K. Rich. My crown, I am; but still my griefs are
You may my glories and my state dispose, [mine.
But not my griefs: still am I king of those.

Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. Rich. Your cares set up do not pluck my cares
My care is loss of care, by old care done;
Your care is gain of care, by new care won;
The cares I give, I have, though given away;
They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boling. Are youcontented to resign the crown?
K. Rich. Ay, no; but, for I must nothing be;
Therefore no no, for I resign to thee.
Now mark me how I will undo myself.—
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
The pride of kingliness from out my heart:
With mine own tears I wash away my balm,
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,
With mine own breath release all duties, rites:
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manors, rents, revenues, I forego;
My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny:
God pardon all oaths that are broke to me!
God keep all vows unbrokethat swear to thee!
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing giv'n,
And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all achieve'd!
Long may'st thou live in Richard's sent to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit!
God save king Henry, unking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days!—
What more remains?

North. No more, but that you read
[Offering a paper.
These accusations, and these grievous crimes,
Committed by your person, and your followers,
Against the state and profit of this land;
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthily depô'd.

K. Rich. Must I do so? and most I rotav out
My weav'd up folly? Garter Northumberland,
If thy offences were upon record,
Would it not shame thee, in so fair a troop,
To read a lecture of them? If thou would'st,
There should'st thou find one heinous article,
Containing the deposing of a king,
And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,
Mark'd with a fossil, damn'd in the look of heaven.—
Nay, all of you, the stand andlook upon me,
Whilst that my wretchedness doth butt myself,
Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands,
Showing an outward pity; yet you Pilates
Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,
And water cannot wash away your sin.

North. My lord, dispatch: read o'er these arts.
K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see;
And yet salt water blinds them not so much,
But they can see a sort of traitors here.
Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
I find myself a traitor with the rest;
For I have given here my soul's consent,
To undock the pompous body of a king;
Made glory base, and sovereignty a slave,
Proud majesty a subject; state a peasant.

North. My lord,—

K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou hast taught, insulting
Nor no man's lord: I have no name, no title,
No, not that name was given me at the font,
But 'tis usurp'd.—Ahack, the heavy day!
That I have worn so many winters out,
And know not now what name to call myself.
O! that I were a mockery king of snow,
Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
To melt myself away in water drops!—
Good king,—great king,—and yet not greatly good,
And if my name be sterling yet in England,
Let it command a mirror litter straight,
That it may show me what a face I have,
Since it is bankrupt of his majesty.

Boling. Go some of you, and fetch a looking-glass.

Exit on Attendant.

North. Read o'er this paper, while the glass doth come.

K. Rich. Fiend! thou torment'st me ere I come
Boling. Urge it no more, my lord Northumberland.

North. The commons will not then be satisfied.

K. Rich. They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough,
When I do see the very book indeed,
Where all my sins are writ, and that's—myself.

Re-enter Attendant with a Glass.

Give me the glass, and therein will I read.—
No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds?—O, flattering glass!
Like to my followers in prosperity,
Thou dost too smile me. Was this face the face,
That every day under his household roof
Did keep ten thousand men? Was this the face,
That like the sun did make beholders wink?
Was this the face, that fae'd so many fannies,
And was at last out-face'd by Bolingbroke?
A brittle glory shineth in this face:
As brittle as the glory is the face.

For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.

Mark, silent king, the moral of this:—

"If thou would'st," l. c., if thou would'st read a list of thy own deeds,—"Sort," l. c., et company.—"Thy Majesty is a traitor."—He is used for his.
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.

Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd The shadow of your face.

K. Rich. Say that again.

The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see:—
'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of lament
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
That swells with silence in the torn soul's;
There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king,
For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st
Me cause to wall, but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then begone and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?

Boling. Name it, fair cousin.

K. Rich. Fair cousin! I am greater than a king;
For, when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects; being now a subject,
I have a king here to my flatterer.
Being so great, I have no need to beg.

Boling. Yet ask.

K. Rich. And shall I have it?

Boling. You shall.

K. Rich. Why then give me leave to go.

Boling. Whither?

K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your Boling. Go, some of you; convey him to the K. Rich. O, good! Convey?—Conveyors are you.

That rise thus nicely by a true king's fall.

[Exeunt K. Richard, and Guard.

Boling. On Wednesday next we solemnly set
Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves. [down

Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.
Bishop. The souls to come: the children yet un-
Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn. [born
Aum. You holy clergymen, is there no plot
To rid the realm of this pernicious blot? [herein,
Abbot. My lord, before I freely speak my mind
You shall not only take the sacrament
To bury mine intents, but also to reflect
Whatever I shall happen to devise.
I see your brows are full of discontent,
Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears:
Come home with me to supper; I will lay
A plot, shall show us all a merry day. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter Queen, and Attendants.

Queen. This way the king will come: this is the
To Julius Caesar's ill-erected tower,
Way To whose flat bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke.
Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.

Enter King Richard, and Guard.

But soft, but see, or rather do not see,
My fair rose wither: yet look up, behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true-love tears.—
Ah! thou, the model where old Troy did stand;

—A "Conveyor," i.e., jugglers; thieves.—b "Ill-erected," i.e., erected for evil purposes.—"The model where old Troy did stand," i.e., the likeness of that cheerless waste where proud Troy once stood.

Thou map of honor; thou king Richard's tomb,
And not king Richard; thou most beauteous "inn,
Why should hard-favor'd grief he lodg'd in thee,
When triumph is become an alchymist guest? [so.
K. Rich. Join with grief; fair woman, do not
To make my end too sudden: let my soul,
To think our former state a happy dream;
From which awak'd, the truth of what we are Shows us but this. I am sworn 'brother, sweet,
To grim necessity; and he and I
Will keep a league till death. He thee to France,
And cloister thee in some religious house:
Our heir and lives must stand a new-advent crown,
Which our profane hours here have stricken down.

Queen. What! is my Richard both in shape and mind
Transform'd and weaken'd? Hath 't this Bolingbroke
Depos'd thine intellect? hath he been in thy heart?
The lion, dying, thrusteth forth his paw,
And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage
To be o'errower'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like,
Take thy correction mildly? kiss the rod,
And fawn on rage with base humility,
Which art a lion, and a king of beasts? [beasts,
K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed; if nought but I had been still a happy king of men.
Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France:
Think I am dead; and that even here thou talk'st,
As from a death-bed, my last living leave.
In winter's tedious nights sit by the fire
With good old folks, and let them tell thee tales
Of woeful ages long ago &c.
And, ere thou bid good night, to quit thy grief,
Tell thou the lamentable tale of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.
For why, the senseless brands will sympathize
The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
And in compassion weep the fire out;
And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter Northumberland, attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is chang'd:
You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.—
And, madam, there is order ta'en for you:
With all swift speed you must away to France.
K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder, where-withal
The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,
The time shall not be many hours of age
More than it is, ere foul sin gathering head
Shall break into corruption. Thou shalt think,
Though he divide the realm, and give thee half,
It is too little, helping him to all:
And he shall think, that thou, which know'st the way
To plant with righteous fings, wilt know again,
Being ne'er so little urg'd, another way
To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne.
The love of wicked friends converts to fear;
That fear to hate; and hate turns one, or both,
To worthy danger and deserved death.
North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.
Take leave, and part; for you must part forthwith.
K. Rich. Durst divine, wherefore?—Bad men, ye violate
A twofold marriage; 'twixt my crown and me;
And then, betwixt me and my married wife.
Let me unkiss the oath 'twixt thee and me;—

—2 "They embrace."

And yet not so, for with a kiss I was made.—
Part us, Northumberland: I toward the north,
Where shivering cold and sickness pine the clime;
My wife to France: from whence, set forth in pomp,
She came adorned therewith a sweet May.

Seat back like Hallowmas, or shortest day.

Queen. And must we be divided? must we part?

K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

Queen. Banish us both, and send the king with me.

North. That were some love, but little policy.

Queen. Then whither he goes, thither let me go.

K. Rich. So twain, together weeping, make one woe.
When thou art gone for me in France, I'll thee here.

Better far off, than near, being ne'er the nearer.

Go; count thy way with sighs, I mine with groans.

Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans.

[They kiss.

Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good To take on me to keep, and kill thy heart. [part.

[They kiss again.

So, now I have mine own again, before That I may strive to kill it with a gown. [They:

K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond de-
Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke of York’s Palace.

Enter York, and the Duchess.

Duch. My lord, you told me, you would tell the
When weep ing made you break the story off, [rest.
Of our two cousins coming into London.

York. Where did I leave?

Duch. At that sad stop, my lord,
Where rude misgivings ’em hands, from windows’ tops,
Throw dust and rubbish on king Richard’s head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seem’d to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course,
While all tongues cried—God save thee, Bolingbroke!!

You would have thought the very windows spake,
So many greedy looks of young and old
Through casements darted their desiring eyes
Upon his visage; and that all the walls
With painted imagery had said at once,—

Jesus preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!”

Whilst he, from one side to the other turning,
Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed’s neck,
Bespake them thus,—”I thank you, countrymen!”
And thus still doing, thus he pass’d along. [whilst.

Duch. Alas, poor Richard! where rode he the York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men,
After a well-garn’d actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious.
Even so, or with much more contempt, men’s eyes
Did scowl on gentle Richard: no man cried, God save him;

No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home;
But dust was thrown upon his sacred head,
Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,
His face still combating with tears and smiles,
The bodes of his grief and patience.

That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel’d

The hearts of men, they must perfervce have melted,
And barbarism itself have pried him.

But Heaven hath a hand in these events,
To whose high will we bound our calm contents.
To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,
Whose state and honor I for aye allow.

Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

York. Aumerle that was;

But that is lost for being Richard’s friend.

And, manor, you must call him ’Roundal now.

I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king.

Enter Aumerle.

Duch. Welcome, my son. Who are the violets now,
That strew the green lap of the new-come spring?

Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not;

God knows, I had as lief be none, as one.

[Time.

York. Well, hear you well in this new spring of Lest you be crop’d before you come to prime.

What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs?

Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.

York. You will be there, I know.

Aum. If God prevent it not, I purpose so.

York. What seal is that, that hangs without thy belt?

Yea, look at thou pale? let me then see the writing.

York. No matter, then, who sees it;

I will be satisfied, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech your grace to pardon me.

It is a matter of small consequence,

Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.

I fear, I fear,—

Duch. What should you fear?

’Tis nothing but some bond ’he’s enter’d into

For gay apparel! ’gainst the triumph day.

York. Bound to himself! what doth he with a

That he is bound to? Wife, thou art a fool.

Boy, let me see the writing. [show it.

Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me: I may not York. I will be satisfied: let me see it, I say.

[Snatches it and reads.

Treason! foul treason!—villain! traitor! slave!

Duch. What is the matter, my lord? [horse.

York. Ho! who is within there! Saddle my

God for his mercy! what treachery is here!

Duch. Why, what is it, my lord?

York. Give me my boots, I say: saddle my horse.

Now by mine honor, by my life, my troth,
I will appeach the villain.

Duch. What is the matter?

York. Peace, foolish woman. [Aumerle
Duch. I will not peace.—What is the matter, Aum. Good mother, be content: it is no more Than my poor life must answer.

Duch. Thy life answer? York. Bring me my boots! I will unto the king.

Enter Servant with boots.

Duch. Strike him, Aumerle.—Poor boy, thou art amaz’d.—

Hence, villain! never more come in my sight.—

[Exit Servant.

York. Give me my boots, I say.

Duch. Why, York, what wilt thou do?

Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own?

Have we more sons, or are we like to have?

Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,

* Aumerle was soon after deprived of his dukedom, but allowed to retain the earldom of Rutland. The seals of deeds were formerly impressed on slips of parchment appended to them.
And wilt thou pluck my hair son from mine age,
And rob me of a happy mother's name?
Is he not like thee? is he not thine own?
York. Thou fond, mad woman,
Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy?
A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,
And interchangeably set down their hands,
To kill the king at Oxford.

Duch. He shall be none;
We'll keep him here: then, what is that to him?
York. Away, fond woman! were he twenty times
My son, I would approach him.

Duch. Howst thou ground'd for him,
As he were done, thou wouldst be more pitiful,
But now I know thy mind: thou dost suspect,
That I have been diabolic to thy bed,
And that he is a bastard, not thy son.
Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind:
He is as like thee as a man may be,
Not like to me, nor any of my kin,
And yet I love him.

York. Make way, unruly woman. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Windsor. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Bolingbroke as King; Percy, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell me of my unthrifty son?
'Tis full three months, since I did see him last:
If any plague hung over us, 'tis he.
I would to God, my lords, he might be found.
Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,
For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions;
Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers;
While he, young wanton, and effeminat boy,
Takes on the point of honor to support
So dissolute, [princes,

Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the
And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford.

Boling. And what said the gallant?

Percy. His answer was,—he would unto the stews;
And from the common'st creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favor; and with that
He would unhor the hardest challenger.

Boling. As dissolute, as desperate: yet through both
I see some sparks of better hope, which elder days
May happily bring forth. But who comes here?

Enter Aumerle, in great haste.

Aum. Where is the king?

Boling. What means our cousin, that he stays and So wildly?

Aum. God save your grace. I do beseech your
To have some conference with your grace alone.

Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.—[Exeunt Percy and Lords.

What is the matter with our cousin now?

Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth,
Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.

Boling. Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If on the first, how heinous e'er it be,
To win thy after love I pardon thee.

Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the key,
That no man enter till my tale be done.

Boling. Have thy desire. [Aumerle locks the door.
York. [Within.] My liege, beware! look to thyself:
Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe. [Drawing.

Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand: thou hast no
And cause to fear.

King: York. [Within.] Open the door, secure, fool hardly Shall I for love speak treason to thy face?
Open the door, or I will break it open.

[Bolingbroke opens the door, and locks it again.

Enter York.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak;
Recover breath: tell us how near is danger,
That we may arm us to encounter it.

York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know
The treason that my haste forbids me show.

Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise past.—
I do repent me; read not my name there:
My heart is not confederate with my hand.
York. It was, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.—
I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king;
Fear, and not love, beget'st his penitence.
Forgo to pity him, lest thy pity prove
A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

Boling. O, heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy!—
O, loyal father of a treacherous son!
Thou such, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream through muddy passages
Hath held his current, and deld't himself?
Thy overflow of good converts to bad;
And thy abundant goodness shall enclose
This deadly blot in thy digressing son.

York. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd,
And he shall spend mine honor with his shame,
As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.
Mine honor lives when his dishonor dies,
Or my shamed life in his dishonor lies:
Thou hast set me in his life; giving him breath,
The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

Duch. [Within.] What ho! my liege! for God's sake let me in.

Duch. [Within.] What shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this Duck. A woman, and thine aunt, great king; 'tis I.

Speak with me, pity me, open the door:
A beggar begs, that never begg'd before.
Boling. Our scene is alter'd, from a serious thing,
And now chang'd to "The Beggar and the King."—
My dangerous cousin, let your mother in:
I know, she's come to pray for your soul sin.
York. If thou do pardon, whatsoever pray,
More sins for this forgiveness prosper may.
This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rest sound;
This, let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Duchess.

Duch. O king! believe not this hard-hearted man:
Love, loving not itself, none other can.
[Here:] York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make Shall thy old dogs once more a traitor rear?

Duch. Sweet York, be patient. Hear me, gentle liege.

Aum. Not yet, I thee beseech;
For ever will I walk upon my knees,
And never see day that the happy sees,
Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy,
By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy
Unto my mother's prayers, I bend my knee.

YORK. Against them both, my true joints bended be.

Kneel. Ill may'st thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!

Duck. Pleads he in earnest? look upon his face:
To his eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;
Nor comes from his mouth, ours from our breast:
He prays but faintly, and would be denied;
Pray with my heart, and soul, and all besides:
His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
Our kcentshall kneel till to the ground they grow;
His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
Of true zeal and deep integrity.
Our prayers do out-pray his; then, let them have
That mercy which true prayers ought to have.
Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duck. Nay, do not say—stand up;
But, pardon first, and afterwards, stand up.
And if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say—pardon, king; let pity teach thee how:
The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
No word like pardon, for kings' mouths so meet.
York. Speak it in French, king: say, "Pardonnez-

Duck. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?
Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,
That set'st the word itself against the word!
Speak, pardon, as 'tis current in our land;
The choppong French we do not understand.
Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there,
Or in thy pitious heart plant thine ear,
That hearing how our plaints and prayers do piece,
Pity may move thee pardon to relieve.
Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duck. I do not sue to stand:
Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.
Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.
Duck. O, happy vantage of a kneeling knee!
Yet do I sick for fear: speak, speak of peace,
Twice saying pardon doth not pardon twain,
But makes one pardon strong.
Boling. I pardon him with all my heart.
Duck. A god on earth thou art. [Rises.
Boling. But for our trusty [brother-in-law, and the
With all the rest of that consorted crew, [abbot,
Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.—
Good music, help to ordre several powers
To Oxford, or where else these traitors be:
They shall not live within this world, I swear,
But I will have them; so I once know where.
Uncle, farewell,—and cousin mine, adieu:
Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.
Duck. Come, my old son; I pray God make thee new.

Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Enter Sir PIERCE OF EXTON, and a Servant.

Exton. Dilst thou not mark the king, what words he spake?

"Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?"
Was it not so?

Serv. Those were his very words.

Exton. "Have I no friend? quoth he: he spake
And 'twas together, did he not? [It twice,
Serv. He did.

Exton. And, speaking it, he 'wisthly look'd on me;
As who should say,—I would thou wert the man

That would divorce this terror from my heart;
Meaning the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go:
I am the king's friend, and will frid his foe. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Pomfret. The Dungeon of the Castle.
Enter King RICHARD.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare
This prison, where I live, unto the world:
For, though the king of this world be not
And, here is no creature but myself,
I cannot do it: yet I'll hammer't out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;
My soul, the father: and these two begot
A generation of still-breding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world;
In hurriers like the people of this world,
For no thought is countenanced. The better sort,
As thoughts of things divine, are interniz'd
With scruples, and do set the word itself
Against the word:
As thus,—"Come, little ones;" and then again,—
"It is as hard to come, as for a camel
To thread the postern of a "small needle's eye."
Thoughts tending to content flatter themselves,
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves.
Nor shall not be the like silly beggars,
Who, sitting in the stocks, refute their shame
That many have, and others must sit there:
And in this thought they had a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortune on the back
Of such as have before endur'd the like.
Thus play I, in one person, many people,
And none contented: sometimes am I king;
Then, treason maketh me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am: then, crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king:
Then, am I king'd again; and, by and by,
Think that I am unkind'd by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing. But what'ye, I am,
Nor I, nor any man, but man is,
With nothing shall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
With being in the world's music and air? [Music.
Ha, ha! keep time,—How sou sweet music is,
When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
So is it in the music of men's lives:
And here have I the dainties of ear,
To check time broke in a disorder'd string,
But for the concord of my state and time,
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me;
For now hath time made me his numbering clock:
My thoughts are minutes, and with sigils they jar,
Their watches on unto mine eyes the outward watch,
Where to my finger, like a dial's point,
Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.
Now, 'tis too late, that tells what hour it is,
Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: so sighs, and tears, and groans,
Show minutes, times, and hours; but my time
Runs postng on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While I stand foiling here, his 'Jack o' the clock.'
This music mads me: let it sound no more,
For though it hath hoope madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad.
Yet, blessing on his heart that gives it me!
For 'tis a sign of love, and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!

K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The cheapest of us is ten greats too dear.
What art thou? and how comest thou hither,
Where no man never comes, but that sad dog
That brings me food to make misfortune live?

Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
When thou wert king; who, travelling towards York,
With much ado, at length have gotten leave
To look upon my sometime royal master's face.
O! how it yern'd my heart, when I beheld
In London streets that coronation day,
When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!
That horse that thou so often hast bestrid,
That horse that I so carefully have dress'd! [friend,
K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle
How went he under him?

Groom. So proud, as if he had disdain'd the ground.
K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!
That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;
This hand hath made him proud with chapping him.
Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down,
(Since pride must have a fall) and break the neck
Of that proud man that did usurp his back?
Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be aw'd by man,
Was born to bear? I was not made a horse;
And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spur-gaull'd and tir'd by Jaunching Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper, with a Dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place: here is no longer stay.

[To the Groom.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.
Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say.

Keep. My lord, wilt please you to fall to?
K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do.
Keep. My lord, I dare not: Sir Pierce of Exton,
Who lately came from the king, commands the contrary.
[Thee! K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.

[Strikes the Keeper.

Keep. Help, help, help!

Enter Sir Pierce of Exton, and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault?
Villain, thine own hand yields thy death's instrument.

[Snatching a weapon, and killing one.
Go thou and fill another room to hush
[He kills another: Exton strikes him down.
That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
That stagger's thus my person.—Exton, thy fierce hand [land.
Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own
Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high,
Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die.

Exton. As full of valor, as of royal blood:
Both have I split: O, would the deed were good!
For now the devil, that told me I did well,
Says that this deed is chronicled in hell.
This dead king to the living king I'll bear.—
Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.
[Execut with the bodies.

SCENE VI.—Windsor. An Apartment in the Castle.

Flourish. Enter Bolingbroke, and York with Lords and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear
Is, that the rebels have consum'd with fire
Our town of Glastonbury;
But whether they be ta'en, or slain, we hear not.

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome, my lord. What is the news with you? North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happiness.
The next news is,—I have to London sent press:
The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:
The manner of their taking may appear
At large discoursed in this paper here.

[Presenting a Paper.

Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains,
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter Fitzwater.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London
The heads of Bourne, and Sir Benedict Seely,
Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,
That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;
Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy, with the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of Westminster,
With clogs of conscience, and sour melancholy, [ster,
Hath yielded up his body to the grave;
But here is Carlisle living, to abide
The king's doom, and sentence of his pride.

Boling. A Bishop of Carlisle, this shall be your doom:

Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life; no
So, as thou livest in peace, die free from strife;
For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High sparks of honor in thee have I seen.

Enter Exton, with Attendants bearing a Coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present
Thy buried fear: herein all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bordeaux, by me bither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast
A deed of slander with thy fatal hand
[wright
Upon my head, and all this famous land.

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,
Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead,
I hate the murderer, love him murdered.

The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labor,
But neither my good word, nor princely favor:
With Cain go wander through the shade of night,
And never show thy head by day nor light.

Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,
That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow:
Come, mourn with me for that I do lament,
And put on sullen black. *Incontinent
I shall make a voyage to the Holy land,
To wash this blood off from my guilty hand.
March sadly after: grace my mourning here,
In weeping after this untimely bier.
[Execut.

* Enjoy.—Immediately.

Sir Richard Vernon.
Sir John Falstaff.

Archibald, Earl of Douglas.
Owen Glendower.

Lords, Officers, Sheriff, Vintner, Chamberlain, Drawers, Carriers, Travellers, and Attendants.

SCENE, England.

ACT I.

Enter King Henry, Westmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Others.

K. Hen. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commenc'd in stronds afar remote.
No more the thirsty entrance of this soil
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces; these opposed eyes,
Which, like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
All of one nature, of one substance bred,
Did lately meet in the intestine shock

And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now, in mutual, well-beseeming ranks,
March all one way, and be no more oppos'd
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,
Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross,
We are impressed, and engag'd to fight,
Forthwith a power of English shall we levy,
Whose arms were moulded in their mother's womb
To chase these pagans, in these holy fields,
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet,
Which fourteen hundred years ago were nail'd
For our advantage on the bitter cross,
But this our purpose is a twelve-month old,
And bootless 'tis to tell you we will go:
Therefore we meet not now.—Then, let me hear

*Strands; shores. *“Entrance,” i.e., surface.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.

ACT I.

Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
What ye stern night our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear enterprise.

West. My liege, this haste was hot in question,
And many limits of the charge set down
But ye stern night; when, all at once, there came
A post from Wales laden with heavy news;
Whose worst was, that the noble Mortimer
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welchman taken,
A thousand of his people butchered;
Upon whose dear corpse there was such misuse,
Such beauty, shameless transformation,
By those Welchwomen done, as may not be Without much shame re-told or spoken of. [broil

K. Hen. It seems, then, that the tidings of this Brake off our business for the Holy Land. [lord;

West. This, match'd with other, did, my gracious
For more uneaven and unumevento news
Came from the north, and thus it did import.
On Holy-rood's day, the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy, and brave Archibald,
That ever-valiant and approved Scot,
At Holmedon met;
Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour,
As by discharge of their artillery,
And their much of the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And pride of their contention did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.

K. Hen. Here is a dear, a true-industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil
Beside that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And his smooth't face and welcome news.
The earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood, did sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains: of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake earl of Fife, and eldest son;
To beaten Douglass, and the earl of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and 1 the bold Menteith;
And is not this an honourable spoil?
A gallant prize? Is't cousin, is it not?

West. Faith, 'tis a conquest for a prince to boast

K. Hen. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me sin,
In envy that my lord Northumberland
Should be the father to so blest a son:
A son, who is the theme of honor's tongue;
Amongst a grove the very straightest plant;
Who is sweet fortune's minion, and her pride:
Whilst I, looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonor stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O! that it could be prov'd,
That some night-tripping fairy had chang'd
In credulous clothes our children where they lay,
And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet:
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. [coz,
But let him from my thoughts.—What think you,
Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,
Which he in this adventure hath surpris'd,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have none but Mordake earl of Fife.

West. This is his uncle's teaching; this is War-
Malevolent to you in all aspects;
[cozeter,
Which makes him 1 prune himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.

K. Hen. But I have sent for him to answer this;
And for this cause awhile we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.

Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor; so inform the lords;
But come yourself with speed to us again,
For more is to be said, and to be done,
Than out of danger can be uttered.

West. I will, my liege.

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Apartment in the Palace.

Enter Henry, Prince of Wales, and Falstaff.

Fal. Now, Hal; what time of day is it, lad?

P. Hen. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast gotten to demand that truly, which thou wouldst true know. What a devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flamecolor'd taffeta, I see no reason why thou should'st be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed you come near me, now, Hal; for we both talk yesternight; go by the moon and the seven stars, and not by Pharus,—be, "that wandering knight so fair." And, I pr'ythee, sweet wagg, when thou art king,—as, God save thy grace,—majesty,
I should say, for grace thou wilt have none,—

P. Hen. What, none?

Fal. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

P. Hen. Then, the last then?—e'en roundly, roundly.

Fal. Merry, then, sweet wagg, when thou art king, let not us, that are squires of the night's body, be called thieves of the day's beauty: let us be Dianna's foresters, gentlemen of the shade, misions of the moon; and let men say, we be men of good government, being governed as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose counte-

P. Hen. Thou say'st well, and it holds well, too; for the fortune of us, that are the moon's men, deth cobb and flow like the sea, being governed as the sea is, by the moon. As for proof now: a purse of gold most resolutely snatch'd on Monday night, and most absolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with drinking,—lay by; and spent with crying,—spring in; now, in as low an ebb as the best of the ladder, and, by and by, in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows.

Fal. By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench?

P. Hen. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle. And is not a buff jerkin a most sweet robe of dughter?—Yea?

Fal. How now, how now, mad wag? what, in thy quips, and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

P. Hen. Why, what a box have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

Fal. Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning many a time and oft.

1""Then out of anger can be uttered," i. e., more than anger will suffer me now to say.—That is, "Let not us, who adorn the night, be called a disgrace to the day."—"Lay by," i. e., be still.—"Bring in," i. e., bring in more wine.——
"The 14th" i. e., 14th of Oct. as cocklin, was worn by sheriffs' officers: it was called a "robe of durance," in respect to its durability.
SCENE II.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.

P. Hen. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?
Fal. No: I'll give thee thy due; thou hast paid all there.

P. Hen. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and, where it would not, I have used my credit.

Fal. Yea, and so used it, 1 that it is here apparent that thou art heir apparent.—But, I pr'ythee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king, and resolution thus faddled, as thou wilt the rusty cuch of old father antic, the law? Do not thou, when thou art a king, hang a thief.

P. Hen. No: thou shalt.
Fal. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge.

P. Hen. Thou judgest false already: I mean, thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman.

Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humor, as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

P. Hen. For obtaining of suits?
Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits, whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. "Sblood, I am as melancholy a gib betch as a darning woman.

P. Hen. Or an old lion; or a lover's lute.
Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bag-pipe.

P. Hen. What sayest thou to a 'hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?

Fal. Thou has the most unsavory similes; and art, indeed, the most comparative, rascalst, sweet young prince. Hal, I pr'ythee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God, thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought. An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir; but I marked him not; and yet he talked very wisely; but I regarded him not, and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too.

P. Hen. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.

Fal. O! thou hast damnable iteration, and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal:—God forgive thee for it. Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an I do not, I am a villain: I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom.

P. Hen. Where shall we take a pursu-tomorrow, Jack?
Fal. Zounds! where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one: I do but call Hal, villain, and blaffe me.

P. Hen. I see a good amendment of thee in: from praying, to purse-taking.

Enter POINS, at a distance.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal: 'tis no sin for a man to labor in his vocation. Poins:—Now shall we know if Godshall have set a match,—O! if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain, that ever cried, Stand! to a 'true man.

P. Hen. Good morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal.—What says monsieur Remorse? What says Sir John Sack-and-Sugar? Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last, for a cup of Madeira, and a cold capon's leg?

P. Hen. Sir John stands to his word: the devil shall have his bargain, for he was never yet a breaker of promises; he will give the devil his due.

Poins. Then, art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

P. Hen. Else he had been damned for conversing the devil.

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Godshall. There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I haveHvisoers for you all, you have horses for yourselves. Godshall lies to-night in Rochester; I have bespoke supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap: we may do it as secure as sleep. If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home, and be hanged.

Fal. Hear ye, Yedward: if I tarry at home, and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Poins. You will, chaps?
Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou canst not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.

P. Hen. Well then, once in my days I'll be a madcap.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

P. Hen. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.

P. Hen. I care not.

Poins. Sir John, I pr'ythee, leave the prince and me alone: I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure, that he shall go.

Fal. Well, God give thee the spirit of persuasion, and him the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may (for recreation sake) prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Fairwell: you shall find me in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. Farewell thou latter spring! Farewell, 1 All-hallowen summer! [Exit Falstaff.

Poins. Now, my good sweet honest lord, ride with us to-morrow: I have a jest to execute, that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Godshall, shall rob those men that we have already way-hid: yourself and I will not be there; and when they have the hoary, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head off from my shoulders.

P. Hen. How shall we part with them in setting forth?

Poins. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, where-in it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves, which they shall have no sooner achieved; but we'll set upon them.

P. Hen. Yea, but 'tis like, that they will know us, by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see; I'll tie them in the wood: our visors we will change,

After we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of backram for the nonce, to inmask our noted outward garments.

P. Hen. Yea, but I doubt they will be too hard for us.

Pois. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he'll fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be,
that it comprehends lies that this same fat rogue will tell us, when we meet at supper: how thirty at least he fought with: what warts, what blows, what extremities he endured; and in the reproof of this lies the jest.

P. Hen. Well, I'll go with thee: provide us all thing necessary, and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap, there I'll sup. Farewell.

Pois. Farewell, my lord. [Exit Pois.

P. Hen. I know you all, and will awhile uphold
The unyok'd humor of your idleness:
Yet herein will I imitate the sun,
Who doth permit the base contingent clouds
to smoother up his beauty from the world,
That when he please again to be himself,
Beard tainted, he may be more wonder'd at,
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists
Of vapors, that did seem to strangle him.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wish'd for come,
And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.
So, when this loose behavior I throw off,
And pay the debt I never promised,
By how much better than my word I am,
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes;
And, like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
I'll so offend, to make offence a skill,
Re redeeming time, when men think least I will. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. Another Apartment in the Palace.

Enter King HENRY, NORTHUMBERL YT, WORCESTER,
HOTSPUR, Sir Walter Blunt, and Others.

K. Hen. My blood hath been too cold and tem-
Unapt to stir at these indignities, [privately,
And you have found me; for, accordingly,
You treads upon my patience: but, be sure,
I will from henceforth rather be myself,
Mighty, and to be feared, than my condition,
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
And therefore lost that title of respect,
Which the proud soul ne'er pays but to the proud.
Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves
The scourge of greatness to be used on it;
And that same greatness, too, which our own hands
Have help to make so portly.

North. My good lord,— [do see
Danger and disobedience in thine eye.
O, sir! your presence is too bold and peremptory,
And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier of a servant brow.

You have good leave to leave us: when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.
[Exit Worcester.

You were about to speak. [To North.

North. Yea, my good lord. Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,
Which Harry Percy, here, at Holmedon took,
Were, as he says, not with such strength denied
As is deliver'd to your majesty:
Either envy, therefore, or misprision
Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.
Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners;
But, I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord, neat, trimly dress'd,
Fresh as a bridgemoor; and his chin, new reap'd,
Show'd like a stubble-hand at harvest-home:
He was perfum'd like a milliner,
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet-box, which ever and anon
He gave his nose, and took't away again;
Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in 'sniff;'—and still he smil'd, and talk'd;
And, as the soldiers more dead bodies lay,
He call'd them untruth'd knives, unmanfully,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me; among the rest, demanded
My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf.
I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold,
To be so prate'd with a popinjay,
Out of my grief and my impatience,
Answer'd negligently, I know not what,
He should, or he should not; for he made me mad,
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman,
Of guns, and drums, and wounds, God save the mark!
And tell'd me the sovereign lying on earth
Was parcell'd for an inward bruise;
And that it was great pity, so it was,
This villainous salt-petre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly; and, but for these vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.
This mad, unjusted boy, that of his, my lord,
I answer'd indirectly, as I said;
And, I beseech you, let not his report
Come current for an accusation,
Betwixt my love and your high majesty.

Blunt. The circumstance considered, good my lord,
Whate'er Lord Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest re-told,
May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.

K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners,
But with proviso, and exception,
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, i.e., the foolish Mortimer;
Who, on my soul, hath wilfully betray'd
The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against that great magician, dam'd Glenover,
Whose daughter, as we hear, that carl of March
Hath lately married. Shall our coffers, then,
Be emptied to redeem a traitor home!
Shall we buy treason, and Indent with foes,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whom I once shall ask for one penny cost,
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Hot.
Revolted Mortimer!
He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
But by the chance of war: to prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In noble crosstake, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;
[drink,
Who then, so affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crest head in the hollow bank
Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.
Never did base and rotten policy
Color her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly:
Then, let him be not shudder'd with revolt.
[him:
K. Hen.
Thou dost belibe him, Percy, thou dost belibe
He never did encounter with Glendower.
I tell thee,
He durst as well have met the devil alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art thou not ashamed?  But, sirrah, henceforth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer.
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. Gentleman of Shrewsbury,
We license your departure with your son.
Send us your prisoners; or you'll hear of it.

Exeunt King Henry, Blunt, and Train.

Hot.
And if the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them.—I will after straight,
And tell him so; for I will ease my heart,
As well I make a hazard of my head.
[Offers to go.
North.
What! drunk with chol'ry? stay, and pause
Here comes your uncle.

Re-enter Worcester.

Hot.
Speak of Mortimer!
'Rounds! I will speak of him; and let my soul
Want mercy, if I do not join with him:
Yea, on his part, I'll empty all these veins,
And shed my dear blood drop by drop 't the dust,
But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high 't the air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke.

North.
Brother, [To Worcester] the king hath made your nephew mad.

Wor.
Who struck this heat up after I was gone?
Hot.
He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners;
And when I urg'd the ransom once again
Of my wife's brother, then his cheek look'd pale,
And on my face he turn'd an eye of death,
Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.
Wor.
I cannot blame him.  Was he not prochain'd,
By Richard, that dead is, the next of blood?
North.
He was: I heard the proclamation:
And then it was when the unhappy king
(Whose wrongs in us God pardon!) did set forth
Upon his Irish expedition;
From whence he intercepted did return
To be depos'd and shortly murdered.

Wor.
And for whose death, we in the world's wide
Live scandaliz'd, and feoully spoken of.

Hot.
But, soft! I pray you, did king Richard, then,
Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer
Heir to the crown?

North.
He did: myself did hear it.

Hot.
Nay, then, I cannot blame his cousin king,
That wish'd him on the barren mountains starve.
But shall it be, that you, that set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man,
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murder's subornation, to be crown'd,
That you a world of curses undergo,
Being the agents, or base second means,
The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?—
O! pardon me, that I descend so low,
To show the line, and the predicament,
Wherein you range under this subtle king,
Shall it for shame be spoken in these days,
Or fill up chronicles in time to come,
That men of your nobility and power,
Did gage them both in an unjust behalf,
(As both of you, God pardon it! have done)
To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke?
And shall it, in more shame, be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and blushed off,
By him, for whom these shameys ye underwent?
No! yet time serves, wherein you may redeem
Your tarnish'd honors, and restore yourselves
Into the good thoughts of the world again,
Revenge the jeering, and disdain'd contempt,
Of this proud king; who studies day and night
To answer all the debt he owes to you,
Even with the speedy payment of your deaths.
Therefore, I say,—

Wor.
Peace, cousin! say no more.
And now I will unclasp a secret book,
And to your quick-conceiving discontent
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and adventurous spirit,
As do to o'er-walk a current, rooting lead,
On the unsteadfast footing of a snaive.
Hot.
If he fall in, good night!--or sink or swim,
Send danger from the east unto the west,
So honor cross it, from the north to south,
And let them grapple:—O! the blood more stirs,
To rouse a lion, than to start a hare.

North.
Imagination of some great exploit
Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

Hot.
By heaven, methinks, it was an easy leap,
To pluck bright honor from the pale-fac'd moon;
Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom-line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drowned honor by the locks,
So he that doth redeem her thence might wear
Without corvial all her dignities,
But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship!
Wor.
He apprehends a world of figures here,
But not the form of what he should attend.—
Good cousin, give me audience for a while.

Hot.
I cry you mercy.

Wor.
Those same noble Scots,
That are your prisoners,—

Hot.
I'll keep them all.
By God, he shall not have a Scot of them:
No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not.
I'll keep them, by this hand.

Indent," i. e., sign an indenture or compact.—"Confounded," i. e., lost.—*"Changeling hardiment," i. e., in mutual bravery; in reciprocals acts of valor.—*Curled.
You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes.
Those prisonners you shall keep.

Nay, I will; that's flat.
He said he would not ransom Mortimer;
Forbad my tongue to speak of Mortimer;
But I will find him when he lies asleep,
And in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer!
Nay, I'll have a starving shall be taught to speak
Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him,
To keep his anger still in motion.

Hear you, cousin, a word.

All studys here I solely a defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke:
And that same sword and buckler prince of Wales,
But that I think his father loves him not,
And would be glad he met with some mischance,
I would have him poison'd with a pot of ale.

Fear well, cousin, I'll talk to you,
When you are better temper'd to attend.

North. Why, what a wisp and stagnant impotent foul
Art thou to break into this woman's mood,
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own!

Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scour'd with rods,
Netted, and stung with pismires, when I hear
Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.
In Richard's time,—what do ye call the place?
A plague upon it—is it in Gloucestershire?
'Twas where the mad-cap duke his uncle kept,
His uncle York,—where I first bow'd my knee
Unto this king of smilies, this Bolingbroke, [purg.
Shold! when you, and he came back from Ravens-
North. At Berkley castle.

Hot. You say true.

Why, what a candid dealt of courtesy
This favouring greyhound then did proffer me!
Look,—"when his infant fortune came to age,"
And,—"gente Harry Percy," and,—"kind cousin,
O, the devil take such cozeners!—God forgive me!—
Good uncle, tell your tale: I have done,
Nay, If you have not, to 't again,
We'll stay your leisure.

Hot. I have done, 't faith.

Then once more to your Scottish prisonners.
Deliver them up without their ranson straight,
And make the Douglas' son your only mean
For powers in Scotland; which, for divers reasons
Which I shall send you written, be assur'd,
Will easily be granted you.—My lord,

To Northumberland.

Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd,
Shall secretly into the bosom creep
Of that same noble prelate, well belov'd,
The archbishop.

Hot. Of York, is it not?

Wor. True; who bears hard
His brother's death at Bristol, the lord Scroop.
I speak not this in estimation,
As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set down;
And only stays but to behold the face
Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it:
Upon my life, it will do wondrous well.

North. Before the game's aboof, thou still let's slip.

Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot.

And then the power of Scotland, and of York,
To join with Mortimer, ha?

Wor. And so they shall.

Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well marr'd.

Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed,
To save our heads by raising of a head;
For, bear ourselves as even as we can,
The king will always think him in our debt,
And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,
Till he hath found a time to pay us home:
And so ere long how he doth begin
To make us strangers to his looks of love.

Hot. He does, he does: we'll be reveng'd on him.

Wor. Cousin, farewell.—No farther go in this,
Than I by letters shall direct your course.
When time is ripe, (which will be suddenly)
I'll steal to Glendower, and lord Mortimer;
Where you, and Douglas, and our powers at once,
As I will fashion it, shall happily meet,
To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,
Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewell, good brother: we shall thrive,
Hot. Uncle, adieu.—O! let the hours be short,
Till fields, and bowls, and groans applaud our sport.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter a Carrier, with a Lantern in his hand.

1 Car. Heigh ho! An't not be four by the day,
I'll be hanged: Charles's wain is over the new chimney,
And yet our horse not packed. What, ostler! Out. [Within.] Anon, anon.

Car. Pr'ythee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all 'css.

Enter another Carrier.

Car. Pans and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bota; this house is turned upside down since Robin ostler died.

1 Car. Poor fellow! I the never joyed since the price of oats rose: it was the death of him.

2 Car. I think, this be the most villainous house in all London road for fles: I am sung like a tetch.

1 Car. Like a tetch? by the mass, there is ne'er a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

2 Car. Why, they will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in the chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a louch.

1 Car. What, ostler! come away and be hanged; come away.

2 Car. I have a gammon of bacon, and two inches of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing-cross.

1 Car. 'Odsbody! the turkeys in my pannier are quite starved.—What, ostler! A plague on thee! hast thou never a eye in thy head? I must not hear! An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to break the pate of thee, I am a very villain.—Come, and be hanged;—last no faith in thee?

Enter Gadsby.

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock? 1 Car. I think it be two o'clock.

Footnotes:
1 A bow, 2 i. e. a body of forces. 3 Charles' wain is the constellation of the Great Bear. 4 Cut is the name of a horse. 5 Measure. 6 Moist. 7 The louch is a small fish supposed to breed fleas. — 8 "Raze," from the Spanish raiz, signifies a root: hence the term raw-ginger, or root-ginger.
SCENE II.—The Road by Gadshill.

Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.
1 Cor. Nay, soft, I pray ye: I know a trick worth two of that, faith.
Gads. I pr'ythee, lend me thine.
2 Cor. Ay, when I canst tell?—Lend me thy lantern, quoth a—marry, I'll see thee hanged first.
Gads. Sirrah, carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?
2 Cor. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee.—Come, neighbor Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen: they will along with company, for they have great charge.
[Ecuest Carriers.]
Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!
Cham. [Within.] At hand, quoth a pick-purse.
Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain; for thou variest more from picking of purses, than giving direction doth from laboring: thou lay'st the plot how.

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, master Gadshill. It holds current, that I told you yesternight: there's a franklin in the wild of Kent, hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company, last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter: they will away presently.
Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with saint Nicholas' clerks, I'll give thee this neck.
Cham. No, I'll none of it: I pr'ythee, keep that for the hangman; for, I know, thou worship'st saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.
Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if thou dost talk of men of truth; or, if I hang, old sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he's no starving. Tut! there are other Trojans that thou dreamest not of, the which, for sport sake, are content to do the profession some grace, that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am joined with no foot land-rakers, no long-staff, sixpenny strikers: none of these mad, mustachio-plumed, mal-m Warner and barber's sons: but with nobility and 1-singularity; burgomasters, and great 2-ones—yes, such as can hold in; such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray: and yet I lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or, rather, not pray to her, but pray on her, when they ride up and down on her, and make her their float.
Cham. What! the commonwealth their boots! will she hold out water in foul way?
Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquored her. We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.
Cham. Nay, by my faith, I think you are more beholdling to the night, than to fern-seed, for your walking invisible.
Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share in our purchase, as I am a true man.
Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.
Gads. Go to; homo is a common name to all men. Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave.

* * * * *

SCENE II.—The Road by Gadshill.

Enter Prince Henry, and Poin: Bardolph and Petro, at some distance.

Poin. Come, shelter, shelter: I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gutted velvet. P. Hen. Stand close.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Where's your Poin? Hal.
P. Hen. He is walked up to the top of the hill: I'll go seek him.
[Pretexts to seek Poin.
Fal. I am assured to rob in that thief's company; the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squire further afoot I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I 'scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two-and-twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else: I have drunk medicines.
Poin!—Hal!—a plague upon you both!—Bardolph!—Petro!—I'll rob a foot further! I'd not be so good a deed as drink, to turn true man, and leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is three score and ten miles afoot with me, and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough. A plague upon't, when thieves cannot be true to one another! [They strike.] Whew!—A plague upon you all!—and in my horse, you rogues: give me my horse, and be hanged.

P. Hen. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down: lay thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou causest hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down! 'Shood! I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again, for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to celt me thus?

P. Hen. Thou liest: thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

Fal. I pr'ythee, good prince Hal, help me to my horse; good king's son.

P. Hen. Out, you rogue! shall I be your ostler?

Fal. Go, hang thyself in thine own heir-apparent garters! If I be taken, I'll peach for this. As I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison: when a jest is so forward, and afoot too,—I hate it.

Enter Gadshill.

Gads. Stand.

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poin. O! 'tis our setter: I know his voice.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. What news?

Gads. Case ye, case ye; on with your visors: there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, you rogue: 'tis going to the king's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged.

P. Hen. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poin and I will walk lower: if they ’scape from your encounter, then they light on us.

Peto. But how many be there of them?

Gadz. Some eight, or ten.

Fal. Zounds! will they not rob us?

P. Hen. What, a coward, sir John Paunch?

Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but yet no coward, Hal.

P. Hen. Well, we leave that to the proof.

Poons. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge; when thou needest him, there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

P. Hen. Ned, [Aside to Poons.] where are our disguises?

Poins. Here, hard by; stand close.

[Exeunt P. Henry and Poins.]

Fal. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I: every man to his business.

Enter Travellers.

1 Trav. Come, neighbor: the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we’ll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

Thieves. Stand!”

1 Trav. Jesus bless us!

Thieves. Strike; down with them; cut the villains’ throats. Ah, whorson caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth: down with them; fleece them.

1 Trav. O! we are undone, both we and ours, for ever.

Fal. Hang ye, gorbellied knives. Are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs? I would, your store were here. Oh, bacons, oh! What! ye knaves, young men must live. You are grand-jurors are ye? We’ll jure ye, i’ faith.

[Exeunt Fal. &c. driving the Travellers out.]

Re-enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. The thieves have bound the two true men. Now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close; I hear them coming.

Re-enter Thieves.

Fal. Come, my masters; let us share, and then to horse before day. And the prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there’s no equity stirring: there’s no more value in that Poins, than in a wild duck.

P. Hen. Your money. [Rushing out upon them.]

Poins. Villains.

[As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them. They all run away, and Falstaff, after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the booty behind them.]

[Horace.]

P. Hen. Got with much ease. Now merrily to The thieves are scatter’d, and possessed with fear So strongly, that they dare not meet each other; Each takes his fellow for an officer.

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, And lards the lean earth as he walks along; Won’t not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. How the rogue roars!”

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Warkworth. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Hotspur, reading a Letter.

—which to mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.”—He could be contented,—why is he not then? In respect of the love he bears our house—he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. “The purpose you undertake, is dangerous;”—Why, that’s certain: ‘tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink; but I tell you, my lord Fred, one of this kind of danger, we’ll pack this flower, safer. “The purpose you undertake, is dangerous;” the friends you have named, uncertain; the time itself unsorted, and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.’—Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly kind, and you lie. What a lackbrain is this! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this? Why, my lord of York commends the plot, and the general course of the action. ‘Zounds! and I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady’s fan. Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, besides, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month, and are they not, some of them, set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this! an infidel! Ha! you shall see now, in very sincerity of heart and cold heart, will he to the king, and lay open all our proceedings. O! I could divide myself, and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honorable an action. Hang him! let him tell the king; we are prepared. I will set forward to-night.

Enter Lady Percy.

How now, Kate? I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O, my good lord! why are you thus alone? For what offence have I this fortnight been A banish’d woman from my Harry’s bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what is’t that takes from thee Thy stomack, pleasure, and thy golden sleep? Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth, And start so often when thou sit’st alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks, And given my treasures, and my rights of thee, To thick-ey’d musings, and curs’d melancholy? In thy faint slumber’s by thee have watch’d, And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars; Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed; Cry, “Courage!—to the field!” And thou hast Of sallies, &c. retirals; of tents, tents, talk’d Of palisadoes, &c. frontiers, parapets; Of badlakes, of cannon, culverin; Of prisoners’ ransom, and of soldiers shain, And all the’ occurrences of a heady fight. Thy spirit with thee hath been so at war, And this hath so bestirr’d thee in thy sleep, That heads of sweat have stood upon thy brow, Like bubbles on a late disturbed stream: And in thy face strange motions have appear’d, Such as we see when men restrain their breath On some great sudden ight. O! what portents are Some serious business hath my lord in hand, [these? And I must know, else be he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho! is Gilliams with the packet gone?

Enter Servant.

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago. [sherrif]

Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the Scene IV.

First Part of King Henry IV.

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.
Hot. What horse! a roan, a crop-ear, is it not? Serv. It is, my lord.
Hot. That roan shall be my horse. Well, I will back him straight: O, esperance! Bill Butler lead him forth into the park. [Exit Servant.]

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Serv. To esperance! the motto of the Percy family. — To line, I. 6, to strong-lengen. — Puppets. — Puppets; dolls.

Jack, like Falstaff; but a Corinthian, a lad of mettle, a good boy, (by the Lord, so they call me) and when Christian king of England, I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call drinking deep, dying scarce; and when you breathe in your watering, they cry hem! and bid you play it off. — To conclude, I am so good a prudent in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost each honor, that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar, chipped even now into my hand by an under-skinner; one that never spake other English in his life, than,—"Eight shillings and sixpence," and,—"You are welcome!" with this shrill addition,—"Anon, anon, sir! Scree a pint of bastard in the Half-moon," or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my pannier drawer to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling—Francis! that his tale to me may be nothing but—anon. Step aside, and I'll show thee a precedent.

Pois. Francis!
P. Hen. Thou art perfect.
Pois. Francis! [Exit Poins.]

Enter Francis.

Pois. [Within.] Francis! Fran. Anon, anon, sir.
P. Hen. Five years! by't thy lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy indenture, and to show it a fair pair of heels, and run from it?

Fran. O lord, sir! I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find it in my heart.
Pois. [Within.] Francis! Fran. Fran. Anon, anon, sir.
P. Hen. How old art thou, Francis? Fran. Let me see,—about Michaelmas next I shall be—
Pois. [Within.] Francis! Pois. Anon, sir,—Pray you, stay a little, my lord.
P. Hen. Nay, but look you, Francis. For the sugar thou gavest me,—I was a pennyworth, was't not?

Fran. O lord, sir! I would it had been two.
P. Hen. I will give thee for it a thousand pound: ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.
Pois. [Within.] Francis! Fran. Anon, anon. P. Hen. Anon, Francis? No, Francis; but tomorrow, Francis; or, Francis, on Thursday; or, indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis,— Fran. My lord?

P. Hen. Will thou rob this beather-jerkin, crystal-button, knot-pated, agate-ring, puck-stocking, eardis-garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch,—

Fran. O lord, sir, who do ye mean?

*a "A Corinthian," I. e., a debauchee.— "Breathe in your watering." I. e., take breath when you are drinking.—Pupper,— The prince intends to ask the drawer whether he will rob his master, whom he denotes by these contemptuous epithets.—"Knot-pated," I. e., shorn-pated; cropped.—"Puck-stockings" were dark-colored stockings. —*Caddis was a kind of forest or warped lace.
P. Hen. Why then, your brown bastard is your only drink: for, look you, Francis, your white canvas doublet will sully. In Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.

Fra. What, sir? Poius. [Within.] Francis! P. Hen. Away, you rogue! Dost thou hear them call me?

[Here they both call him; the drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.]

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What! stand'st thou still, and hear' st such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit Fran.] My lord, old sir John, with half a dozen more, are at the door: shall I let them in?

P. Hen. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vintner.] Poius!

Re-enter Poius.

Poius. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door. Shall we be merry?

Poins. Nay, every a trifle, my lad. But hark ye; what cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the issue?

P. Hen. I am now of all humors, that have show'd themselves humors, since the old days of Goodman Adam to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight. [Re-enter Francis, with Wine.] What's o'clock, Francis?

Fra. Anon, anon, sir. [Exit.]

P. Hen. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is—up-stairs, and down-stairs; his eloquence, the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the North; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife,—"Fie upon this quiet life! I want work." "O my sweet Harry," say she, "how many hast thou killed to-day?" "Give me my house a drench," says he, and answers, "Some fourteen," an hour after; "a trifle, a trifle,"—I pr'ythee, call in Falstaff: I'll play Percy, and that damned brown shall play dame Mortimer's husband's wife, Rivo!" says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter Falstaff, Gadshill, Bardolph, and Peto.

Poius. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?

Fal. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a venality too! marry, and amen!—Give me a cup of sack, boy.—Ere I lead this life long, I'll swear neither-stocks, and mend them, and foot them too. A plague of all cowards!—Give me a cup of sack, rogue.—Is there no virtue extinct? [He drinks.]

P. Hen. Didst thou never see Titian kiss a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titian, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun! if thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's 4d wine in this sack too: there is nothing but roguery to be found in villainous men: yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it; a villainous coward.—Go thy ways, old Jack: die when thou wilt, if mankind, good mankind, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There live not three good men unhanged in England, and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing. A plague of all cowards, I say still.

P. Hen. How now, wool-sack! what matter you? Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath, and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You prince of Wales?

P. Hen. Why, you whoreson round man, what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that! and Poins there?

Poius. Zounds! ye fat paunch, an ye call me coward, I'll stab thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward; but I would give a thousand pound, I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders; you care not who sees your back. Call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me.—Give me a cup of sack: I am a rogue, if I drink to-day.

Fal. By Jove, O Villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drink'st last.

Fal. All's one for that. [He drinks.] A plague of all cowards, still say I.

P. Hen. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter? there be four of us here have taken a thousand pound this day morning.

P. Hen. Where is it, Jack! where is it?

Fal. Where is it? taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us.

P. Hen. What a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scaped by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet; four through the hose; my buckler knocked like a hand-saw! cce signum. [Draining it.] I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards!—Let them speak: if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains, and the sons of darkness.

P. Hen. Speak, sirs: how was it?

Bard. We four set upon some dozen,—

Fal. Sixteen, at least, my lord.

Bard. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebew Jew.

Bard. As we were sharing, some six or seven fresh men set upon us,—

Fal. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

P. Hen. What! fought ye with them all?

Fal. All! I know not what ye call all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish; if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then am I no two-legged creature.

P. Hen. Pray God, you have not murdered some of them.

Fal. Nay, that's past praying for: I have peppered two of them: two, I am sure, I have paid; two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal,—if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward,—here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me,

P. Hen. What four? thou saidst but two even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

Poius. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly trust at me. I made me no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus.

P. Hen. Seven! why, there were but four even now.

Fal. In buckram.

Poi.n.s. Ay, four, in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven, by these hills, or I am a villain else.

P. Hen. Prythee, let him alone: we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. Hen. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the listening to. These nine in buckram, that I told thee of,—

P. Hen. So, two more already.

Fal. Theirawl points being broken,—

Poi.n.s. Down fell their hose.

Fal. Began to give me ground; but I followed me close, came in, foot and hand, and with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid.

P. Hen. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two.

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal green, came at my back, and let drive at me;—for it was so dark, Hal, that thou could'st not see thy hand.

P. Hen. These lies are like the father that begets them; gross as a mountain; open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts, thou knotty-pated fool, thou whorson, obscene, greasy sallow-kneeh, What! art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

P. Hen. Why, how could'st thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou could'st not see thy hand? come, tell us thy reason: what sayest thou to this?

Poi.n.s. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What upon compulsion? No; were I at the #strappedo, or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! if reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

P. Hen. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin: this sanguine coward, this bed-pressure, this horse-back-breaker, this hungry bill of flesh;—

Fal. Away, you starveling, you elfskin, you dried neats-tongue, bull's pizzle, you stock-fish,—O, for breath to utter what is like thee!—you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing-tuck;—

P. Hen. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again; and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Poi.n.s. Mark, Jack.

P. Hen. We two saw you four set on four: you bound them, and were masters of their wealth. — Mark now, how plain a tale shall you put down.— Then did we two set on you, and, with a word, out-face'd you from your prize, and have it: yea, and can show it you here in the house.—And, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimly, with as quick dexterity, and retired for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard bull-call. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and then say, it was in fight! What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out, to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Poi.n.s. Come, let's hear, Jack: what trick hast thou now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye, as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters: was it for me to kill the heir apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou knaveest, I am as valiant as Hercules; but beware instinct: the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter; I was a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life: I, for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money.—Hostess, clap to the doors: watch to-night, pray to-morrow.— Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What! shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

P. Hen. Content;—and the argument shall be, thy running away.

Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou loveth me.

Enter Hostess.

Host. O Jesus! My lord the prince,—

P. Hen. How now, my lady the hostess! what say'st thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door would speak with you: he says, he comes from your father.

P. Hen. Give him as much as will make him a Royal man, and send him back again to my mother.

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight? Shall I give him his answer?

P. Hen. Prythee, do, Jack.

Fal. 'Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit. ]

P. Hen. Now, sir; by thy lady, thou saidst fair;—so didst thou, Peto;—so didst thou, Bardolph: you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince, no;—fie!

Bard. 'Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

P. Hen. 'Faith, tell me now in earnest: how came Falstaff's sword so hacked!

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger, and said, he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear grass, to make them bleed; and then to beslobber our garments with it, and to swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven years before: I began to take his monstrous devices.

P. Hen. O villain! thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the tmaner, and ever since thou hast blushed extempore. Thou hast fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou ran' st away: what instinct hast thou for it?

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?

P. Hen. I do.

Bard. What think you they portend?

P. Hen. Hot livers and cold 3 purses.

Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter Falstaff.

Here comes lean Jack; here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of tbonwest! How long is't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee?

Fal. My own knee? when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-sing: a plague

*Poi.n.s were tagged laces for fastening the garments, as well as the sharp ends of weapons. —Kendal green took its name from Kendal, in Westmoreland, formerly celebrated for its cloth manufacture.—A keek is a round lump of fat.

Falstaff's device was a dreadfull punishment inflicted on soldiers and criminals.

*The noble and royal were two coins, the former valued at 6s. 8d., the latter at 10s. —'With the manner,' i.e., in the fact. —The fire in Bardolph's face. —That is, drunkenness and poverty. —Bombast is cotton for stuffings.
of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder.

There's villainy in the news abroad: here was a
John Ravy from your father: you must to the court in the morning.

That same mad fellow of the north, Percy; and he of Wales, that gave Amnon the bastinado, and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook.—what, a plague, call you him!—

Petr. O! Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen, of the same; and his son-in-law, Owen; and old Northumberland; and that spightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular.

P. Hen. He that rides at high speed, and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have it hit.

P. Hen. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him;
he will not run.

P. Hen. Why, what a rascal art thou, then, to praise him so for running?

Fal. O' horseback, ye cuckold! but, afoot, he will not budgel a foot.

P. Hen. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Moulake, and a thousand blue-caps more.

Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's heard is turned white with the news: you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackarel.

P. Hen. Why then, it is like, if there come a hot

June, and this civil buffeting hold, we shall buy mainland heads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundred.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like,

we shall have good trading that way.—But, tell me,

Hal, art thou not horribly afraid? thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? doth not thy blood thrill at it?

P. Hen. Not a whit, faith: I lack some of thy instruct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly child to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me,

practise an answer.

P. Hen. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I content.—This chair shall be my 4 stage, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful bald crown!

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved:—Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in king Cambyse's vein.

P. Hen. Well, here is my leg.

Fal. And here is my speech.—Stand aside, nobility.

Host. O, Jesu! This is excellent sport, faith.

Fal. Weep not, sweet queen, for tricking tears are vain.

Host. O, the father! how he holds his countenance.

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my Stuart
queen,

For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

P. Hen. O, Jesu! he doth it as like one of these harlotry players as ever I see.

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot! peace, goodTicklebrain!—Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompained: for though the camomile, the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows, 1 so youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears.

That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chieflly, a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish langing of thy neither lip, that doth warn me.
If, then, thou be son to my body, here lies the point—why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at!

Shall the blessed son of heaven prove a rascal,

and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked.

Shall the sun of England prove a thief, and take purse? a question to be asked.

There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch;

this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile:
so doth the company thou keepest; for, Harry, I see virtue in his books. If then the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me, now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month?

P. Hen. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely,

so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker, or a poulterer's

here.

P. Hen. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And here I stand.—Judge, my masters.

P. Hen. Now, Harry! whence come you?

Host. From noble Lords, from England.

P. Hen. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

Fal. 'Sblood, my lord, they are false.—Nay, I'll tickle thee for a young prince, i' faith.

P. Hen. Swearest thou, ungracious boy! henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old man: a tun of man is thy companion.

Why dost thou converse with that

2 hulk of humors, that bolting-butch of beastliness, that swoln parcel of dropsies, that huge bombard

of sack, that stuffed clowk-bag of guts, that rosted

Manningtree-ox with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that grey iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in year.

Wherein is that hulk of sack, to taste sack and drink it? wherein meat and cleanly,

but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning, in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? wherein in villainous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

1 Tickle-brain" was the name of a strong liquor.—2 A.

michet, i. e. a grunt-boy.—3 A rabbit-sucker, i. e. a rascal person.—4 The bolting-butch is a ussel shrew that separates flour from bran.—5 The bombard was a large leathern vessel to hold beer.—At "Manningtree," in Essex, on the occasion of fairs, a large ox was roasted whole.

Fal. I would your grace would take me with you; whom means your grace?

P. Hen. That villainous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I knew.

P. Hen. I know thou dost.

Fal. But to say, I know more harm in him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he is old, the more the pity; his white hairs do witness it, and, what he is, saving your reverence, a whoremaster, I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know, is damned: if to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved. No, my good lord: banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins; but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, villain Jack Falstaff, and, therefore more valiant, being, as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company: banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Hen. I do, I will.

[Execut. Hostess, Francis, and Bardolph.

Re-enter Bardolph, running.

Bard. O! my lord, my lord! the sheriff, with a most monstrous watch, is at the door.

Fal. Out, you rogue! play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

[Re-enter Hostess.

Host. O I am Calm! my lord, my lord!—

P. Hen. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddlestick. What's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house. Shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? I never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.

P. Hen. And thou a natural coward, without instinct.

Fal. I deny your major. If you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up. I hope I shall as soon be strangled with a halter as another.

P. Hen. Go, hide thee behind the bawds;—the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face, and a good conscience.

Fal. Both which I have had; but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

[Execut all but the Prince and Peto.

P. Hen. Call in the sheriff.

Enter Sheriff and Carrier.

Now, master sheriff, what's your will with me?
Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry Hath follow'd certain men unto this house.

P. Hen. What men?

Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious lord;
A gross fat man.

Car. As fat as butter.

P. Hen. The man, I do assure you, is not here,
For I myself at this time have employ'd him.
And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee,
That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time,
Send him to answer thee, or answer there,
For any thing he shall be charg'd withal:
And so, let me entreat you, leave the house.

Sher. I will, my lord. There are these gentlemen
Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.

P. Hen. It may be so: if he have rob'd these
He shall be answerable; and so, farewell.

[men,
Sher. Good night, my noble lord.

P. Hen. I think it is good morrow, is it not?
Sher. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock.

[Execut, Sheriff and Carrier.

P. Hen. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's. Go, call him forth.

Peto. Falstaff—hat asleep behind the arras, and snoting like a horse.

P. Hen. Hark, how hard he fetches breath.
Search his pockets. [Peto searches.] What hast thou found?

Peto. Nothing but papers, my lord.

P. Hen. Let's see what they be: read them.

Peto. [Reads.] Item: A capon.

2s. 2d. Item, a sauce.

4d. Item, sack, two gullions.

5s. 8d. Item, anchoieves, and sack after supper.

2s. 6d. Item, bread.

ob.

P. Hen. O monstrous! but one half-pennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack!—What there is else, keep close; we'll read it at more advantage. There let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning: we must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honorable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and, I know, his death will be a march of twelve-score. The money shall be paid back again with advantage. Be with me betimes in the morning; and so good morrow, Peto.

Peto. Good morrow, good my lord.

[Execut.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Bangor. A Room in the Archdeacon's House.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and Glendower.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer, and cousin Glendower, will you sit down?—And, uncle Worcester.—A plague upon it! I have forgot my book.

Glen. No, here it is.

SIT. Cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur;
For by that name as oft as Lancaster
Doth speak of you,
His check looks pale, and with a rising sigh
He wishes you in heaven.

Hot. And you in hell, as oft as he hears Owen
Glendower spoke of.

Glen. I cannot blame him: at my nativity,
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
Of burning cressets; and at my birth,
The frame and huge foundation of the earth
Shall'd like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done at the same season,
If your mother's cat had but kitten'd, though
Yourself had never been born.

Glen. I say, the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say the earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you it shook.

Tremble.

Glen. The heavens were all on fire; the earth did
Hot. O! then the earth shook to see the heavens
And not in fear of your nativity.

[on fire,
Dissolved nature oftentimes breaks forth

* St. Paul's Cathedral. — a Beginning; commencement.

Cressets were lights set upon beacons, and also upon poles, which were carried in processions.
In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth
Is with a kind of cholick pinch’d and vex’d
By the imprisoning of unruly wind.
Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving,
Shakes the old baldeme earth, and *tumbles down
Steeple’s, and moss-grown towers. At your birth,
Our grandum earth, having this distemperature,
In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many men
I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave
To tell you once again,—that at my birth,
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes;
The great van under the moon, and the herds
Were strangely chamorous * in the frighted fields.
These signs have mark’d me extraordinary,
And all the courses of my life do show,
I am not in the roll of common men.
Where is he living,—clipp’d in with the sea
That chidst the banks of England, Scotland, Wales,—
Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me?
And bring him out, that is but woman’s son,
Can trace me in the tedious ways of art,
And held me pace in deep experiments.
Hot. I think, there is no man speaks better Welsh.
I’ll to dinner. [mad.

Mort. Pence, cousin Percy! you will make him
Glend. I can call spirits from the vastly deep.
Hot. Why, there’s no man can do so for can:
But will they come, when you do call for them?
Glend. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command the devil.
Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil,
By telling truth: tell truth, and shame the devil.
If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither,
And I’ll be sworn, I have power to shame him hence.
Or while thou live, tell truth, and shame the devil.
Mort. Come, come; no more of this unpardonable chat.
[head
Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made
Against my power: thrice from the banks of Wye,
And sandy-bottom’d Severn, Iave I sent him
b Roadless home, and weather-beaten back.
Hot. Home without boots and in foul weather too!
How *scap’d he agues, in the devil’s name?
Glend. Come, here’s the map: shall we divide
According to our three-fold order tn’en? [our right
Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it
Into three limits, very equally.
England, from Trent and Severn, * hitherto,
By south and east is to my part assigned:—
All westward, Wales, beyond the Severn shore,
And all the fertile land within that bound,
To Owen Glendower:—and, dear coz, to you
The remnant northward, lying off from Trent.
And our indentures * tripartition are drawn
Which being sealed interchangeably,
(A business that this night may execute)
To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I,
And my good lord of Worcester, will set forth,
To meet your father, and the Scottish * power,
As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury.
My father Glendower is not ready yet,
Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days.—
Within that space you may have drawn together
[To Glendower.

Your tenants, friends, and neighboring gentlemen.
Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords;
And in my conduct shall your ladies come:
From whom you now must steal, and take no leave;
For there will be a world of water alack,
Upon the parting of your wives and you.
[Here, Hot. Methinks, my noble, north from Burton
In quantity equals not one of yours.
See, how this river comes me *cranking in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land.
A huge half-moon, a monstrous *candle out,
I’ll have the current in this place damn’d up,
And here the *smag and silver Trent shall run,
In a new channel, fair and evenly:
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. [doth.
Glend. Not wind! it shall; it must: you see, it
Mort. Yea, but mark, how he bears his course,
And runs me up
With like advantage on the other side;
*Golden the opposed continent, as much
As on the other side it takes from you.
[here
Hot. Yea, but a little charge will trench him
And on this north side win this cape of land;
And then he runs all straight and evenly.
Hot. I’ll have it so: a little charge will do it.
Glend. I will not have it alter’d.

Hot. No, nor shall you not.
Hot. Who shall say me nay?
Glend. Why, that will I.
Hot. Let me not understand you then:
Speak it in Welsh.

Glend. I can speak English, lord, as well as you,
For I was train’d up in the English court;
Where, being but young, I framed to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful * ornament;
A virtue that was never seen in you.
Hot. I’ll mark, and I’m glad of it with all my heart.
I had rather be a kitten, and cry mew,
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers:
I had rather hear a brazen *can’tick turn’d,
Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree;
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry.
’Tis like the forc’d gait of a shuffling nag.
Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn’d.
Hot. I do not care.[friend;
I’ll give thrice so much land to any well-deserving
But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I’ll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.
Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?
Glend. The moon shines fair, you may away by night;
I’ll haste the *writer, and withal, ’I’ll break
With your young wives of your departure hence.
I am afraid my daughter will run mad,
So much she doteth on her Mortimer.
Hot. I cannot choose: sometime he angers me
With telling me of the *moldwarp and the ant,
Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies;
And of a dragon, and a finless fish,
A clip-wing’d griffin, and a moulten raven,
A couching lion, and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skimpie-skamble stuff
As puts me from my faith. I tell you what,—
He held me, last night, at the *least nine hours,
In reckoning up the several devil’s names,
That were his lackeys: I cried, “Humph,” and “well,” “go to,”
But mark’d him not a word. O! he’s as tedious

*Part.—Bending, windimg.—Corner.—Fine; spruce.
*Grotesque.—Carved or painted ornaments, e. g., the ornamental verse.—Claddhistick turned, &c. in a thud.—“The writer of the articles.—The moldwarp (German, nothharf) is the mole.
As a tied horse, a railing wife;
Worse than a smoky house: I had rather live
With cheese and a gourd-host in a windmill, far,
Than feed on ʌcates, and have him talk to me,
In any summer-house in Christendom.

Mort. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman;
Exceedingly well read, and profited
In strange ʌconcealments; valiant as a lion,
And wondrous affable, and as bountiful
As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
He holds your temper in a high respect,
And curbs himself even of his natural scope,
When you do cross his humor: 'faith, he does.
I warrant you, that man is not alive,
Might so have tempted him as you have done,
Without the taste of danger and reproof;
But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.

Wor. In faith, my willful lord, you are to blame.
And since your coming hither have done enough
To put him quite beside his patience.
You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault:
Though sometimes it show greatness, courage, blood,
And that's the dearest grace it renders you,
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, harshness, ʌopinion, and disdain:
The least of which, haunting a nobleman,
Loseth men's hearts, and leaves behind a stain
Upon the beauty of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation. [speed.

Hot. Well, I am school'd: good manners be your Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Re-enter Glendower, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly spite that angers me;
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.

Glend. My daughter weeps; she will not part with She'll be a soldier too; she'll to the wars.

Mort. Good father, tell her, that she,
And my aunt Shall follow in your ʌconduct speedily.

[perc.

Glend. Speaks to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.

Glend. She's desperate here.
A peevish self-willed harlotry, and one
That no persuasion can do good upon.

[She speaks to Mortimer in Welsh.

Mort. I understand thy looks: that pretty Welsh
Which thou pour'st down from these ʌwelling ʌheavy
I am too perfect in; and, but for shame, [en,
In such a parley would I answer thee.

[She speaks again.

I understand thy kisses, and thou mine,
And that's a feeling disputation;
But I will never be a truant, love,
Till I have learnt thy language; for thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a fair queen in summer's bower,
With ravishing ʌdivision, to her ʌinte.

[mad.

Glend. Nay, if thou melt, then will she e'en run

[She speaks again.

Mort. 0! I am ignorance itself in this.

Glend. She bids you on the wanton ʌbrushes lay you down,
And rest your gently head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,
And on your eye-brows crown the god of sleep,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness;
Making such difference ʌtwixt wake and sleep,
As is the difference betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heavenly-harnessed team
Begins his golden progress in the east.

Mort. With all my heart I'll sit, and hear her sing;
By that time will our ʌbook, I think, be drawn.

Glend. Do so;
And those musicians that shall play to you
Hang in the air a thousand tongues from hence;
And straight they shall be here. Sit, and attend.

Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down:
come, quick, quick; that I may lay my head in thy lap.

Lady P. Go, ye giddy goose. [The Music plays.

Hot. Now I perceive, the devil understands Welsh;
And 'tis no marvel, he is so humorous.

By'r lady, he's a good musician.

Lady P. Then, should you be nothing but musical,
For you are altogether governed by humors.
Lies still ye tight, and hear the lady sing
In Welsh.

Hot. I had rather hear, lady, my ʌbrach, bow in Irish.

Lady P. Would'st thou have thy head broken?

Hot. No.

Lady P. Then be still.

Hot. Neither; 'tis a woman's ʌfault.

Lady P. Now, God help thee!

Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.

Lady P. What's that?

Hot. Peace! she sings.

[A Welsh Song by Lady M.

Hot. Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

Lady P. Not nay, in good sooth.

Hot. Not yours, in good sooth! 'Heart! You
Swear like ʌto a coffin-maker's wife.
Not ʌyours, in good sooth; and, as true as I live;
As God shall mend me; and, as sure as day;
And giv'st such succent surety for thy oaths,
As if thou never walk'dst farther than ʌFinsbury.

Swear me, Kate, like a lady as thou art,
A good-mouth-filling oath; and leave in sooth,
And such ʌprotest of pepper-ginger-bread,
To ʌvelvet-guards, and Sunday-citizens.

Come, sing.

Lady P. I will not sing.

Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn 'tailor, or be red-breast teacher. An the indentures be drawn, I'll Away within these two hours; and so come in when ye will.

[Exit. ʌVisit.

Glend. Come ʌon, lord Mortimer; you are as slow,
As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.
By this our book is drawn: ʌwe'll seal, and part
To horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Prince of Wales, and Lords.

K. Hen. Lords, give us leave. The Prince of Wales and I,
[hand,
Must have some private conference; but be near
For we shall presently have need of you.—

[Exeunt Lords.

I know not whether God will have it so,
For some displeasing ʌservice I have done,
That, in his secret doom, out of my blood
He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;
But thou dost, in thy passages of life,
Make me believe, that thou art only mark'd
For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven,
To punish my misreadings. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate, and low desires, [tempts,
Such poor, such bare, such low, such mean \\at-
Such base, such vile, and render'd such aspect
As thou art match'd withal, and granted to,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood,
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

P. Hen. So please your majesty, I would, I could Quit all offences with as clear excuse,
As well as, I am doubleless, I can purge
Myself of many I am charg'd withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg,
As, in reproof of many tales devil'sd,
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear
By smiling b pick-thanks and base newsmongers,
I may, for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath faulty wander'd, and irregular,
For passion on my true submission. [Harry,
K. Hen. God forgive thou hast then is Percy let me wonder,
At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied;
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court, and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the soul of every man
Prophetically doth fore-think thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So state and cheap to vulgar company,
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had I still his loyal to possession,
And left me in remissless banishment,
A fellow of no mark, nor like-dilead.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir,
But like a comet I was wonder'd at;
That men would tell their children, "This is he!"
Others would say, — "Where? which is Bolinglike?"
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crown'd king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh, and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Ne'er seen but wonder'd at; and so my state,
Seldom, but sumptuous, show'd like a feast,
And won by rareness such solemnity.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rush \\a(bivin wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burn'd; \\discarded state;
Mingled his royalty with carping fools;
Had his great name profus'd with their scorns;
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push
Of every hearseless vain \\comparative:
Grew a companion to the common streets.
E'encond'd himself to popularity:
That, being daily swallow'd by men's eyes,
They suffer'd with honey; and began
To loathe the taste of sweetness, wherever a little More than a little is by much too much.

So, when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sum-like majesty,
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes;
But rather draw'd, and hung their eye's-bids down,
Sleep in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries,
Being with his presence glutt'd, gorg'd, and full.
And in that very line, Harry, stand'st thou;
For thou hast lost thy princely privilege,
With vile participation: not an eye
But is a-wearry of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;
Which now dost that I would not have it do,
Make blind sense with foolish tenderness.

P. Hen. I shall hereafter, my thrice-glorious lord,
Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world,
As thou art to this hour, was Richard then,
When I from France set foot at Ravenspurg;
And so, as I wish then is Percy let me wonder
Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
Which art my near'st; and dearest enemy?
Thou that art like enough, through vassal fear,
Base inclination, and the start of spleen,
To fight against me under Percy's pay,
To dog his heels, and court thy at his browns,
To show how much thou art degenerate.

P. Hen. Do not think so; thou shall not find it so:
And God forgive them, that so much have way'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!
I will redeem all this on Percy's head,
And in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you that I am your son;
When I will wear a garland all of blood,
And stain my favor in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it.
And that shall be the day, where'er it lights,
That this same child of honor and renown,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
And your unthought-for Harry chance to meet.
For every honor sitting on his livin,
Would they were multitudes; and on my head

Scene III.

First Part of King Henry IV.

My shames redounded! for the time will come,
That I shall make this northern youth exchange
His glorious deeds for my indignities.
Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every story up.
Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
This, in the name of God, I promise here:
The which, if he be pleas'd I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty, may salve
The long-grown wounds of my intemperate:
If not, the end of life cancels all bands;
And I will try a hundred and one thousand deaths,
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.
K. Hen. A hundred thousand rebels die in this!
Thou shalt have charge, and sovereign trust herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.
Blunt. So is the business that I come to speak of.
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word,
That Douglas, and the English rebels met,
The eleventh of this month, at Shrewsbury.
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
It promises he keep on every hand,
As ever offer'd fool play in a state.
K. Hen. The earl of Westmoreland set forth to-day,
With him his son, lord John of Lancaster;
For this advertisement is five days old.—
On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set forward;
On Thursday we ourselves will march:
Our meeting is Bridgnorth; and, Harry, you
Shall march through Glosstershire; by which account,
Our business valued, some twelve days hence
Our general forces at Bridgnorth shall meet.
Our hands are full of business: let's away;
Advantage feeds 4 him fat, while men delay. [Exeunt.

Scene III.—Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown: I am wither'd like an old apple-John. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some likings; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I'll win thousands of brown deaths. Ah, I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of; I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse. The inside of a church! Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it.—Come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; swore little; dined not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house not above once in a quarter—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed three or four times; lived well, and in good compass; and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass; out of all reasonable compass, sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life. Thou art our admiral, thou bearest the lantern not in the poof—but's in the nose of thee: thou art the knight of the burning lamp.

Bard. Why, sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No; I'll be sworn, I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's head, or a memento morti: I never see thy face, but I think upon hellfire, and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face: my oath should be, By this fire, that God's angel: but thou art altogether given over, and well, indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness.
When thou ran'st up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money! Of thou art a perpetual triumph, an ever-lastening bonfire-light. Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the sack that thou hast drunk me, would have bought me lights as good cheap, at the dearest chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that saltwater of yours with fire any time this two and thirty years:
God reward me for it!

Bard. 'sBlood! I would my face were in your belly.

Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burned.

Enter Hostess.

How now, dame Partlet the 4 hen? have you inquired yet who picked my pocket?

Host. Why, sir John, what do you think, sir John?
Do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the title of a haire was never lost in my house before.

Fal. You lie, hostess: Bardolph was shaved, and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn, my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman; go.

Host. Who'll I? No. I defy thee: God's light!
I was never called so in mine own house before.

Fal. Go to; I know you well enough.

Host. No, sir John; you do not know me, sir
John: I know you, sir John; you owe me money, sir John, and now you pick a quarrell to beguile me of it. I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowlass, filthy dowlass: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shilling an ell. You owe money here besides, sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it: let him pay.

Host. He? alas! he is poor; he hath nothing.

Fal. How should he? Do you not know him?
What call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks. I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a younger of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's, worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesus! I have heard the prince tell him,
I know not how oft, that that ring was copper.

Fal. How! the prince is a 6 Jack, a sneak-cup;
'sBlood! an he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so.

that will keep two years.—Liking," i. e., condition; plight of body.
Enter Prince Henry and Poins, marching. Falstaff meets the Prince, playing on his truncheon, like a fife.

Fal. How now, lad! is the wind in that door? Is faith! must we all march?

P. Hen. Nay, two and two, Newgate-fashion.

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, mistress Quickly? How does thy husband? I love him well: he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, I hear me.

Fal. Prythee let her alone, and list to me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, Jack?

Fal. The other night I fell asleep, here, behind the arras, and had my pocket picked: this house is turned bawdy-house; they pick pockets.

P. Hen. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal ring of my grandfather's.

Host. A trifle; some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord: and I said I heard your grace say so: and, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is, and said, he would cudgel you.

P. Hen. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in you else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune; nor no more truth in thee, than in a drawn a fox; and for womanhood, maid b Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing, go.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing!

Fal. What thing? why, a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am nothing to thank God on, I would thou should'st know it: I am an honest man's wife; and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a knave to any other.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

Fal. Why? she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so: thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave thou!

P. Hen. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day, you c ought him a thousand pound.

P. Hen. Sirrah! do I owe you a thousand pound?

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal! a million: thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, sir John, you said so.

Fal. Ye; if he said my ring was copper.

P. Hen. I say, 'tis copper: darst thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare; but as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. Hen. And why not, as the lion.

Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion. Dost thou think I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God, my girdle break!

a A "drawn fox" is a "hunted fox", or one drawn from his cover. b "Maid Marian" was a man dressed like a woman; a character in the ancient Morris-dance. c Owed.
Such a attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world.
By God, I cannot flatter: I b'fear.
The tongues of soothers; but a braver place
In my heart's love hath no man than yourself.
Nay, task me to your word; approve me, lord.
Doug. Thou art the king of honor:
No man so potent breathes upon the ground,
But I will 'be hear'd.

Hot.

Enter a Messenger, with Letters.

What letters hast thou there!—I can but thank you.
Mess. The three letters come from your father.
Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?
Mess. He cannot come, my lord: he's grievous sick.
Hot. 'Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick,
In such a justling time? Who leads his h'power?
Under whose government come they along?
Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord.
Wor. I pr'ythee, tell me, doth he keep his bed?
Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth;
And at the time of my departure thence,
He was much fear'd by his physicians.
Wor. I would the state of time had first been,
Ere he by sickness had been visited:
His health was never better worth than now.
[Infect

Hot. Sick now! drop on now! this sickness doth
The very life-blood of our enterprise:
'Tis catching hither, even to our smell.
He writes me here,—that inward sickness—
And that his friends by deputation could not
So soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet,
To lay so dangerous and dear a trust
On any soul c'remove'd, but on his own.
Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,
That with our small conjunction we should on,
To see how fortune is dispos'd to us;
For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,
Because the king is certainly c'possess'd
Of all our purposes. What say you to it?
Wor. Your father's sickness is a maum to us.
Hot. A perilous gash, a very limh lopp'd off:—
And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want
Seems more than we shall find it were it good,
To set the exact wealth of all our states.
All at one cast? to set so rich a c'main
On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?
It were not good; for therein should we read
The very bottom and the soul of hope,
The very c'list, the very utmost bound
Of all our fortunes.

Doug.

'Faith, and so we should,
Where now remains a sweet reveracion:
We know may boldly spend upon the hope
Of what is to come in:
A comfort of retirement lives in this.
Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,
If that the devil and mischance look big
Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.
Wor. But, yet, I would your father had been here.
The quality and c'hair of our attempt
Brooks no division: it will be thought
By some, that know not why he is away,
That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike
Of our proceeds, kept the earl from hence.

---

And think, how such an apprehension
May turn the tide of fearful fiction
And breed a kind of question in our cause:
For, well you know, we of the c'offering side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement,
And stop all sight-holes, every loop from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us.
This absence of your father's c'draws a curtain,
That shows the ignorant a kind of fear
Before not dreamt of.

Hot. You strain too far.
I, rather, of his absence make this use:—
It lends a lustre, and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprise,
Than if the earl were here: for men must think,
If we, without his help, can make a head
To push against the kingdom, with his help,
We should o'ertake it toppy-tarry down.
Yet all goes well; yet all our joints are whole.
Doug. As heart can think: there is not such a word
Spoke of in Scotland as this term of fear.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.
Ver. Pray God my news be worth a welcome, lord.
The earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherwards; with him, prince John.
Hot. No harm: what more?
Ver. And further, I have learn'd,
The king himself in person is set forth,
Or hitherwards c'indenteth speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation.
Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
The nimble-footed mad-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that c'dazzled the world aside,
And bid it pass?
Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms,
All plumed like c'eagles, that wing the wind,
Bated, like eagles having lately bath'd;
Glittering in golden coats, like images,
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer;
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,
His c'cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,
And vanqu't with such case into his seat,
As if an angel drop'd down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And c'witch the world with noble horsemanship.
Hot. No more, no more: worse than the sun in March,
This praise too nourish aug'ne. Let them come;
They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-cy'd maid of smoky war,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them:
The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit,
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire,
To hear this rich c'reprisal is so ugh,
And yet not ours.—Come, let me taste my horse,
Who is to bear me like a thundershutt,
Against the bosom of the prince of Wales:
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet, and ne'er part, till one drop down a core,—
O, that Glendower were come!
Ver.

There is more news:
I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.
Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy: I thought your honor had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. 'Faith, sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there and you too; but my powers are there already. The king, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must away all night.

Fal. Tut, never fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

P. Hen. I think, to steal cream indeed; for thy thrust hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack; whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. Hen. I did never see such skillful rascals.

Fal. Tut, tut! good enough to toss; food for powder, powder for powder; they'll fill a pit, as well as better: touch, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggarly.

Fal. 'Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they had that: and for their bareness, I am sure, they never learned that of me.

P. Hen. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs, bare. But, sirrah, make haste: Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king encamped?

West. He is, sir John: I fear we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well,

To the latter end of a fray, and the beginning of a Fits a dull fighter, and a keen guest.

SCENE III.—The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be.

Dou. You give him, then, advantage.

Ver. Not a whit.

Hot. His is certain, ours is doubtful.

Wor. Good cousin, be advis'd: stir not to-night.

Ver. Do not, my lord.

Dou. You do not counsel well. You speak it out of fear, and a cold heart.

Ver. True, my lord, for no slander, Douglash by my life, And I dare well maintain it with my life, If well-respected honor bid me on, I hold as little counsel with weak fear, As you, my lord, or any Scot that lives: Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle, Which of us fears.

Dou. Yea, or to-night.

Ver. Content.

Hot. To-night, say I.

Ver. Come, come, it may not be. I wonder much, Being men of such great leading as you are, That you foresee not what impediments Drag back our expedition: certain horse Of our uncle Vernon's are not yet come up: Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day; And now their pride and mettle is apace, Their courage with hard labor tame and dull, That not a horse is half the half himself.

Hot. So are the horses of the enemy, In general, journey-bated, and brought low; The better part of ours are full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours: For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

[The Trumpet sounds a parley.

"To toss," i.e., to toss upon a pike.—"Leading," i.e., experience in the conduct of armies.
Scene IV.

Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king,
If you vouchsafe me hearing and respect.

Hot. Welcome, sir Walter Blunt; and would to God
You were of our determination!
Some of us love you well; and even those some
Ever your great deserving, and good name,
Because you are not of our quality,
But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And God defend but still I should stand so,
So long as out of limit and true rule,
You stand against unbounded majesty.
But, to my charge.—The king hath sent to know
The nature of your 1's aye; a whereupon
You adjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land
Andacious cruelty? If that the king
Have any way your good deserts forgot,
Which he confesseth to be manifold,
He bids you name your griefs, and with all speed,
You shall have your desires with interest,
And pardon absolute for yourselves and these,
Herein misled by your suggestion.

Hot. The king is kind; and, well we know, the king
Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.
My father, 1 with my uncle, and myself,
Did give him that same royalty he wears;
And when he was not six-and-twenty strong,
Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,
A poor unmindful outlaw sneaking home,
My father gave him welcome to the shore:
And, when he heard him swear, and vow to God,
He came but to be duke of Lancaster,
To sue his livery, and beg his peace,
With tears of innocence, and terms of zeal,
My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,
Sware him assistance, and perform'd it too.
Now, when the lords and barons of the realm
Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,
The more and less came in with cap and knee;
Met him in boroughs, cities, villages,
Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,
Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths,
Given him their heirs, and what you'd him,
Even at the heels, in golden multitudes.
He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Steps a little higher than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
Upon the naked shore at Ravenspur; and
Now, forsworn, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees,
That lie too heavy on the commonwealth;
Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for:
Proceeded farther; cut me off the heads
Of all the favorites, that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here;
When he was personal in the Irish war.

Blunt. Tut! I came not to hear this.

Hot. In short time after he depos'd the king;
And, in the neck of that, task'd the whole state;
To make that worse, sullev'd his kinsman March
(Who is, if every officer were well plac'd,

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The King’s Camp near Shrewsbury.

K. Hen. How bloodily the sun begins to peer Above yond* bursky hill: the day looks pale
At his distemperate.

P. Hen. The southern wind
Both play the trumpet to his purposes;
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretels a tempest, and a blustering day.

K. Hen. Then, with the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.—

[Trumpet sounds.

Enter Worcester and Vernon.

How now, my lord of Worcester! ’tis not well,
That you and I should meet upon such terms
As now we meet. You have deceiv’d our trust,
And made us b’doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel:
This is not well, my lord; this is not well.
What say you to it? will you again unknit
This churlish knot of all-shoarred war,
And move in that obedient orb again,
Where you did give a fair and natural light,
And be no more an exhal’d meteor,
A prodigy of fear, and a portent
Of breach’d mischief to the unborn times?

Vor. Hear me, my liege:
For mine own part, I could be well content
To entertain the lag-end of my life
With quiet hours; for, I do protest,
I have not sought the day of this dislike.

K. Hen. You have not sought it! I say, how comes it then?

P. Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

P. Hen. Peace, *chewet, peace!

Vor. It pleads your majesty, to turn your looks
Of favor, from myself, and all our house;
And yet I must remember you, my lord,
We were the first and dearest of your friends.
For you my staff of office did I break
In Richard’s time; and posted day and night
To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
When yet you were in place, and in account,
Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
It was myself, my brother, and his son,
That brought you home, and boldly did outrage
The dangers of the time. You swore to us,
And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,
That you did nothing purpose ’gainst the state,
Nor claim no farther than your new-fall’n right,
The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster.
To this we swore our aid; but, in short space,
It rain’d down fortune showering on your head,
And such a flood of greatness fell on you,
What with our help, what with the absent king,
What with the injuries of a wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the gracious winds that held the king
So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
That all in England did repute him dead:
And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
You took occasion to be quickly woo’d
To gripe the general sway into your hand;
Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster,
And, being fed by us, you us’d so

As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo’s bird,
Useth the sparrow, did oppress our nest,
Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk,
That even our love dust not come near your sight,
For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
We were enforce’d, for safety sake, to fly
Out of your sight, and raise this present head:
Whereby we stand opposed by such means
As you yourself have forg’d against yourself,
By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and true deeds,
Sworn to us in your younger enterprize.

K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articulate,
Proclaim’d at market-crosses, read in churches,
To face the garment of rebellion
With some fine color, that may please the eye
Of sickle changelings, and poor discontentments,
And, which go, and rub the elbow, at the news
Of humbly innovation:

And never yet did insurrection want
Such water-colors to impart his cause;
Nor moody heggars, starving for a time
Of pelmell havoc and confusion.

P. Hen. In both our armies, there is many a soul
Shall pay full dearly for this enterprize,
If once they join in it well. Tell your nephew,
The prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy: by my hopes,
This present enterprize set off his head,
I do not think, a braver gentleman,
More active-valiant, or more valiant-young,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive
To grapple with this latter new with noble deeds.
For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a tavern been to chivalry,
And so, I hear, he doth account me too;
Yet this before my father’s majesty:
I am content, that he shall take the odds
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight. [Thee.

K. Hen. And, prince of Wales, so dare we venture
Albeit considerations infinite
Do make against it.—No, good Worcester, no,
We love our people well; even those we love,
That are mislead upon your cousin’s part;
And, will they take the offer of our grace,
Both him and they, and our love, then, shall Shall be my friend again, and I’ll be his.
So tell your cousin, and bring me word
What he will do; but if he will not yield,
Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
And they shall do their office. So, be gone.
We will not now be troubled with reply:
We offer fair, take it advisedly.

P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life.
The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
Are confident against the world in arms. [Charge.

K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his
For, on their answer, will we set on them;
And God befriend us as our case is just!

[Exeunt King, Blunt, and Prince John.

Fal. Hal, if thou bring me down in the battle, and bestride me, so; ’tis a point of friendship.

P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship.
Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well.

P. Hen. Why, thou owest God a death. [Exit.

Fal. ’Tis not due yet: I would be loath to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, 'tis no matter; honor pricks me on. Yea, but how if honor prick me off when I come on? how then? Can honor set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honor hath no skill in such subtle things. What is honor? A word. What is in that word, honor? What is 'tis honor? Air. A trim reckoning!—Who hath it? He that died 'O Wednesday. Doth he feel it? No. Doth he hear it? No. Is it insensible, then? Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living? No. Why? Destruction will not suffer it:—therefore, I'll none of it: honor is a mere 4 scutchcomb, and so ends my catechism. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Rebel Camp. Enter Worcester and Vernon.

Wor. O, no! my nephew must not know, sir Rich.—The liberal kind offer of the king. [ard, Ver. Twice we best, he did.

Wor. Then are we all undone. It is not possible, it cannot be, The king should keep his word in loving us; He will suspect us still, and find a time To punish this offence in other faults: Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes; For treason is but trusted like the fox, Who, never so tame, so cherish'd, and lock'd up, Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Look how we can, or sad or merrily, Interpretation will misquote our looks; And we shall feed like oxen at a stall, The better cherish'd, still the nearer death. My nephew's trespass may be well forgot, It hath the excuse of youth, and heat of blood; And an adopted name of privilege, A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen. All his offences live upon my head, And on his father's: we did train him on; And, his corruption being ta'en from us, We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all. Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know In any case the offer of the king. Ver. Deliver what you will, I say, 'tis so. Here comes your cousin.

Enter Hotspur and Douglas; Officers and Soldiers, behind.

Hot. My uncle is return'd:—Deliver up My lord of Worcester.—Uncle, what news? Wor. The king will bid you battle presently. Doug. Defy him by the lord of Worcester. Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so. Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly. [Exit Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king. Hot. Did you beg any? God forbid! Wor. I told him gently of our grievances, Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus: By now forsaking that he is forsworn: He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge With haughty arms this hateful name in us. [Re-enter Douglas.

Doug. Arm, gentle men! to arms! for I have A brave defiance in king Henry's teeth, [thrown And Worcester, that was engag'd, did hear it, Which cannot choose but quickly bring him on. Wor. The prince of Wales stepp'd forth before the king.

And, nephew, challenged you to single fight. Hot. O! would the quarrel lay upon our heads; And that no man might draw short breath to-day, But I, and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me, How should he's 5 tasking? seem'd it in contempt? Ver. No, by my soul! I never in my life Did hear a man profess so much modesty, Unless a brother should a brother dare To gentle exercise and proof of arms. He gave you all the duties of a man, Trim'md up your praises with a princes tongue, Spoke your deserving as a chronicle, Making you ever better than his praise, By still dispraising praise, valued with you; And, which became him like a prince indeed, He made a blushing 6 cital of himself; And child his truant youth with such a grace, As if he master'd 7 then a double spirit, Of teaching, and of learning, instantly. There did he pause: but let me tell the world, If he outlive the envy of this day, England did never lose so sweet a hope, So much misconstrued in his wantonness. Hot. Cousin, I think thou art enamored Upon his follies: never did I hear Of any prince so wild o' 8 liberty. But be he as he will, yet one ere night I will embrace him with a soldier's arm, That he shall shrink under my courtesy.— Arm, arm, with such speed!—And, follow, soldiers, Better consider what you have to do, [friends, Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue, Can lift your blood up with persuasion. Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, here are letters for you. Hot. I cannot read them now.—O gentlemen! the time of life is short; To spend that shortness basely, were too long; If life did ride upon a dial's point, Still ending at the arrival of an hour. An we live, we live to tread on kings; If die, brave death, when princes die with us. Now, for our consciences, the arms are fair, When the intent of bearing them is just. Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My lord, prepare; the king comes on space.

Hot. I thank him, that he cuts me from my tale, For I profess not talking. Only this— Let each man do his best; and here draw I A sword, whose temper I intend to stain With the best blood that I can meet withal In the adventure of this perilous day. Now,—'Esperance! —Percy!—and set on!— Sound all the lofty instruments of war, And by that music let us all embrace; 'Fore heaven and earth, some of us never shall A second time do such a courtesy. [The Trumpets sound. They embrace, and exult.

Blunt. What is thy name, that in battle thus Thou cross'st me? what honor dost thou seek Upon my head?

4 "Tasking," i. e., reproof. — "Cital," i. e., mention.
5 "Master'd," i. e., was master of. — "Own," i. e., so wild o' liberty, i. e., so wild and licentious. — "Esperance!" was the motto of the Percy family.
Dogn. Know, thou, my name is Douglas; And I do haunt thee in the battle thus, Because some tell me that thou art a king.
Blunt. They toll thee true.
Dogn. The lord of Stafford dear to-day has bought Thy likeness; for, instead of thee, king Harry, This sword hath ended him: so shalt it thee, Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.
Blunt. I was not born a yeilder, thou proud Scot; And thou shalt find a king that will revenge Lord Stafford's death.

They fight, and Blunt is slain.

Enter Hotspur.
Hot. O Douglas! haste thou fought at Holmedon I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.
Dogn. All's done, all's won: here breathless lies Hot. Where?
[the king.
Dogn. Here.
Hot. This, Douglas! no: I know this face full
A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt, [well:
Semblably furnish'd like the king himself;
Dogn. A fool go with thy soul, 'where'er it goes!
A borrowed' title hast thou bought too dear:
Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?
Hot. The king hath many making in his costs.
Dogn. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his costs;
I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece,
Until I meet the king.
Hot. Up, and away!
Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day.
[Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter Falstaff.
Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot here: here's no scoring, but upon the pate.—Soft! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt:
—there's honor for you; here's no vanity.—I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too: God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels.—I have led my ragamuffins where they are peppered: there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive, and they are for the town's end, to beg during life. But who comes here?

Enter Prince Henry.
P. Hen. What! stand'st thou idle here? lend me Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff [thy sword:
Under the hoods of vanquiting enemies, Whose deaths are yet unreveng'd. I pr'ythee, lend me thy sword.
Fal. O Hal! I pr'ythee, give me leave to breathe a while. —Turk Gregory never did such deeds in arms, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.
P. Hen. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee. I pr'ythee lend me thy sword.
Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou'rt not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.
P. Hen. Give it me. What is it in the case?
Fal. Ay, Hal; 'tis hot, 'tis hot: there's that will sack a city.
[P. Hen. What! is't a time to jest and daily now?
[Throws it at him, and exit.
Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him. If he do come in my way, so: if he do not, if I come in my way, I'll kill, let him make me carbado of me. If I like not such a winning honor as Sir Walter hath, give me life; which if I can save, so; if not, honor comes unlooked for, and there's an end.

*Seemingly. — "No vanity," is used ironically, to denote the excess of the quality.— "Turk Gregory" is Pope Gregory the Seventh, surnamed Hildebrand.—A carbado is a piece of meat scored for the gridiron.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums. Excursions. Enter the King, Prince Henry, Prince John, and Westmoreland.
K. Hen. I pr'ythee, Harry, withdraw thyself; thou'st break't so much. — Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.
P. John. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.
P. Hen. I do beseech your majesty, make up.
Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.
K. Hen. I will do so.—My lord of Westmoreland,
Lead him to his tent.
West. Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent.
P. Hen. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help:
And heaven forbid, a shallow scratch should drive
The prince of Wales from such a field as this, Where stain'd no nobility lies trodden on, And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!
P. John. We breathe too long.—Come, cousin Westmoreland,
Our duty this way lies: for God's sake, come.
[Exeunt Prince Johns and Westmoreland.
P. Hen. By God thou hast deceived me, Lancaster, I did not think thee lord of such a spirit:
Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John, But now, I do respect thee as my soul.
K. Hen. I saw him hold lord Percy at the point, With lustier maintenance than I did look for Of such an ungrawn warrior.
P. Hen. No! Of this boy.
Lends mottle to us all.
[Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter Douglas.
Douglas. Another king! they grow like Hydra's
I am the Douglas, fatal to all those [heads.
That wear those colors on them:—what art thou, That counterfeitst the person of a king?
K. Hen. The king himself; who, Douglas, grieves
So many of his shadows thou hast met, [at heart, And not the very king. I have two boys Seek Percy, and thyself, about the field: But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily, I will assay thee; and defend thyself.
Douglas. I fear thou art another counterfeit, And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a king: But mine I am sure thou art, whose thou be, And thus I win thee.

They fight: the King being in danger, enter P. Harry.
P. Hen. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art Never to hold it up again! the spirits [like
Of valiant Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms:
It is the prince of Wales that threatens thee, Who never promised, but he means to pay.

They fight: Douglas flies.
Cheerly, my lord: how fares your grace?—
Sir Nicholas Gaysway hath furrow sent, And so hath Clifton: I'll to Clifton straight.
K. Hen. Stay, and breathe a while.
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion;
And show'd wilt make'st some tender of my life,
In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.
P. Hen. O God! they did me too much injury, That ever said I herculest for your death.
If it were so, I might have let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas over you;
Which would have been as speedy in your end, As all the poisonous potions in the world,
And sav'd the treacherous labor of your son.
K. Hen. Make up to Clifton: I'll to Nicholas Gaysway.
[Exit King Henry

*Reputation.
Enter HOTSPUR.

HOT. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth. P. HEN. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name. HOT. My name is Harry Percy. P. HEN. Why, then I see A very valiant rebel of that name. I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy, To share with me in glory any more: Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere; Nor can one England brook a double reign, Of Harry Percy, and the prince of Wales. HOT. Nor shall it, Harry, for the house of York To end the one of us; and would to God, Thy name in arms were now as great as mine! P. HEN. I'll make it greater, ere I part from thee; And all the budding honors on thy crest I'll crop, to make a garland for my head. HOT. I can no longer brook thy vanities. [They fight.]

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal!—Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you. Enter Douglas : he fights with Falstaff, who falls down as if he were dead, andexit Douglas. Hotspur is wounded, and falls. HOT. O, Harry! thou hast robb'd me of my youth. I better brook the loss of brittle life, Than those proud titles thou hast won of me: They wound my thoughts worse than thy sword my flesh:— But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool; And time, that takes survey of all the world, Must have a stop. O! I could prophesy But that the early and cold hand of death Lies on my tongue.—No, Percy, thou art dust, And food for—[Dies.

P. HEN. For worms, have Percy. Fare thee well, great heart!— Ill-won'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk! When that this body did contain a spirit, A kingdom for it was too small a bound; But now, two paces of the vilest earth Is room enough;—this earth that bears thee dead, Bears not alive so stout a gentleman. If thou wert sensible of courtesy, I should not make so dear a show of zeal:— But let my favours hide thy mangled face, And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself For doing these fair rites of tenderness, Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven: Thy ignomy sleep with thee in the grave, But not remember'd in thy epitaph.—

[Seeing Falstaff on the ground.]

What! old acquaintance! could not all this flesh Keep in a little life! Poor Jack, farewell: I could have better spair'd a better man. O! I should have a heavy miss of thee, If I were much in love with vanity. Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day, Though many derrer, in this bloody fray. [Embellow'd will I see thee by and by; Till then, in blood by noble Percy lie. [Exit. Fal. [Rising.] Embellow'd! if thou embowell me to-day, I'll give you leave to 4 powdere me, and eat me too, to-morrow. 'Sblood! 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagan't Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I lie; I am no counterfeit: to die, is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man, who hath not the life of a man; but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better part of valor is discretion, in the which better part, I have sav'd my life. 'Zounds! I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead. How, if he should counterfeit too, and rise? By my faith, I am afraid he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure; yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise, as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me: therefore, sirrah, with a new wound in thy thigh come you along with me. [He takes Hotspur on his back.]

Re-enter Prince Henry and Prince John.

P. HEN. Come, brother John; full bravely hast Thy maiden sword. [thou'ls'd P. John. But, soft! whom have we here? Did you not tell me this fat man was dead? P. HEN. I did; I saw him dead, breathless, and On the ground.—[bleeding Art thou alive? or is it phantasy That plays upon our eyesight? I pr'ythee, speak; We will not trust our eyes, without our ears. Thou art not what thou seem'st. Fal. No, that's certain: I am not a double man; but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I u 'Jack. There is Percy: [Throwing down the body.] if your father will do me any honor, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you. P. HEN. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thee dead. Fal. Didst thou?—Lord, lord, how this world is given to lying!—I grant you I was down and out of breath, and so was he; but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be forgiven, so; if not, let them that should reward valor bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the tithe: if the man were alive, and would deny it, 'ounds! I would make him cut a piece of my sword. P. John. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard. [John.— P. HEN. This is the strangest fellow, brother Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back: For my part, if a lie may do thee grace, I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. [A Retreat is sounded. The trumpet sounds retreat; the day is ours. Come, brother, let us to the highest of the field, To see what friends are living, who are dead. [Exeunt Prince Henry and Prince John. Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do. [Exit, dragging out Percy's Body.

SCENE V. Another Part of the Field.

The Trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Prince Henry, Prince John, Westmoreland, and Others, with Worcester, and Vernon, prisoners.

K. HEN. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.— Ill-spirited Worcester, did we not send grace, Pardou, and terms of love to all of you? And would'st thou turn our offers contrary? Misuse the tenor of thy kinsman's trust? Three knights upon our party slain to-day, * * * A Jack," i.e., a paltry fellow.\footnote{\textsuperscript{1}}
A noble earl, and many a creature else,
Had been alive this hour,
If, like a Christian, thou hadst truly borne
Betwixt our armies true intelligence.

Wor. What I have done, my safety urg'd me to,
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Which not to be avoided falls on me.

K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon
Other offenders we will pause upon.

Exeunt Worcester and Vernon, guarded.

How goes the field?
P. Hen. The noble Scot, lord Douglas, when he saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The noble Percy slain, and all his men
Upon the foot of fear, fled with the rest;
And falling from a hill he was so bruis'd,
That the pursuers took him. At my tent
The Douglas is, and I beseech your grace,
I may dispose of him.
K. Hen. With all my heart.
P. Hen. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you
This honorable bounty shall belong.
Go to the Douglas, and deliver him
Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free:
His valor, shown upon our crests to-day,
Hath taught us how to cherish such high deeds,
Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

P. John. I thank your grace for this high courtesy,
Which I shall put in act without delay.
P. Hen. Then this remains,—that we divide our
You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland,
Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest speed,
To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Scroop,
Who, as we hear, are busily in arms:
Myself, and you, son Harry, will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower and the earl of March.
Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
Meeting the check of such another day:
And since this business so fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won.

Exeunt.

SCENE, England.

INDUCTION.

Workworth. Before Northumberland's Castle.

Enter Rumour, painted full of Tongues.

Rum. Open your ears; for which of you will stop
The vent of hearing, when loud Rumour speaks?
I, from the orient to the drooping west,
Making the wind my post-horse, still unfold
The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
Upon my tongues continual slanders ride,
The which in every language I pronounce,
Stuffing the ears of men with false reports.
I speak of peace, while covert enmity,
Under the smile of safety, wounds the world:
And who but Rumour, who but only I,
Make fearful musters, and prepar'd defence;
Whilst the big year, swolen with some other grief,

Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
And no such matter? Rumour is a pipe
Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures;
And of so easy and so plain a stop,
That the blunt monster with uncounted heads,
The still-discordant wavering multitude,
Can play upon it. But what need I thus
My well-known body to anatomize
Among my household? Why is Rumour here?
I run before King Harry's victory;
Who in a bloody field by Shrewsbury
Hath beaten down young Hotspur, and his troops,
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Even with the rebels' blood. But what mean I to speak so true at first? my office is to noise abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell

*The stops are the holes in a flute or pipe.
Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword;
And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stoop'd his unpointed head as low as death.
This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns
Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hold of ragged ⁴ stone,
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland,
Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tiring on,
And not a man of them brings other news.
Than they have learn'd of me; from Rumor's tongues
They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The same. ¹

Enter Lord Bardolph. ²

Bard. Who keeps the gate here? ho!—Where is the earl?

Ward. Who shall I say you are?

Bard. Tell thou the earl,
That the lord Bardolph doth attend him here.
Ward. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard:
Please it your honor, knock but at the gate,
And he himself will answer. ⁴[Exit Warder.

Enter Northumberland.

Bard. Here comes the earl.
North. What news, lord Bardolph? every minute
Should be the father of some ⁵ stratagem. [bow
The times are wild: contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
And bears down all before him.
Bard. Noble earl, I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.
North. Good, an God will! ²
Bard. As good as heart can wish.
The king is almost wounded to the death.
And in the fortune of my lord, your son,
Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts
Kill'd by the hand of Douglas; young Prince John,
And Westmoreland and Stafford, fled the field;
And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the bulk sir John,
Is prisoner to your son. Of such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
 Came not till now to dignify the times,
Since Cesar's fortunes.
North. How is this deriv'd?
Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?
Bard. I spoke with one, my lord, that came from A gentleman well-bred, and of good name, [thence;
That freely render'd me these news for true. [sent North. Here comes my servant, Travers, whom I
On Tuesday last to listen after news.
Bard. My lord, I over-rode him on the way,
And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he happily may retell from me.

Enter Travers.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you?
Trav. My lord, sir John Umfreville turn'd me back
With joyful tidings; and, being better hors'd,
Out-rode me. After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost ⁶ forespent with speed,
That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloodied horse.
He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him

I did demand, what news from Shrewsbury:
He told me that rebellion hath bad luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold.
With that he gave his able horse the head,
And, bending forward, struck his armed heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade
Up to the rowel-head; and, starting so,
He seem'd in running to devour the way,
Staying no longer question.

North. Ha!—Again.

Say he, young Harry Percy's spur was cold?
Of Hotspur, coldspur? that rebellion
Had met ill-luck!

Bard. Who, he?
He was some ⁷ hiding fellow, that had stolen
The horse he rode on, and, upon my life,
Spoke at a venture. Look, here comes more news.

Enter Morton.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf,
Foretels the nature of a tragic volume:
So looks the ⁸ strong, wherein th' imperious flood
Hath left a witness! an inexpressible
Sight. Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?
Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord;
Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask,
To fright our party.

North. How doth my son and brother?
Thou trembling— and the whiteness in thy cheek
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Even such a man, so fair, so spirited,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him, half his Troy was burn'd:
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue,
And I my Percy's death, ere thou report'st it.
This thou wouldst say,—Your son did thus, and thus
Your brother, thus; so fought the noble Douglas;
Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds,
But in the end, to stop mine ear indeed,
Thou hast a sigh to blow away this praise,
Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead.
Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother, yet;
But for my lord, your son—

North. Why, he is dead.

See, what a ready tongue suspicion hath!
He that but fears the thing he would not know,
Hath by instinct knowledge from others' eyes,
That what he fear'd is chang'd. Yet speak, Morton:
Tell thon thy ear his divinity lies,
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace,
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.
Mor. You are too great to be lay'd gainsaid:
Your spirit is too true; your fears too certain.
North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead.
I see a strange confusion in thine eye:
Thou shrink'st thy head; and hold'st it fear, or sin,
To speak ⁹ the truth. If he be slain, say so;—
The tongue offends not, that reports his death;
And he doth sin that doth belie the dead,
Not he which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,

Scene II. Second Part of King Henry IV.

Remember'd knocking a departing friend.

Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.
Mor. I am sorry I should force you to believe
That which I would to Heaven I had not seen;
But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Rendering faint 'quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Harry Monmouth; whose swift wrath beat down
The never-daunted Percy to the earth,
From whence with life he never more sprung up.
In few, his death, whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dullest peasant in his camp,
Being 'bruitied once, took fire and heat away
From hence, till rest, tempest! courager of his troops:
For from his metal was his party steel'd;
Which once in he alabed, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead.
And as the thing that's heavy in itself,
Upon enforcement flies with greatest speed,
So did our men, heavy in Hotspur's loss,
Lead to this weight such lightness with their fear,
That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim,
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field. Then was that noble Worcester
Too soon ta'en prisoner; and that furious Scot,
The bloody Douglas, whose well-laboring sword
Had three times slain th' appearance of the king,
'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame
Of Honour. 'Twas too dire for him in his flight,
Stumbling in fear, was took. The sum of all
Is, that the king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy power, to encounter you, my lord,
Under the conduct of young Lancaster,
And Westmoreland. This is the news at full.

North. For this I shall have time enough to mourn.
In poison there is physic; and these news,
Having enclouded me with darkness more
To make me sick, being in some measure made me well:
And as the wretch, whose fever-weak'nd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, 'buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms; even so my limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now en'gd with grief,
Are thrice themselves. Hence, therefore, thou 'nosc
A sharp comment, with joints of steel.
Crutch! Must glove this hand: and hence, thou sickly quoif!
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit.
Now bind my brows with iron; and approach
The rag'dst hour that time and spite dare bring,
To frown upon th' en'gr'd Northumberland,
Let heaven kiss earth: now, let not nature's hand
Keep the wild flood confin'd: let order die;
And let this world no longer be a stage,
To feed contention in a lingering act,
But let one spirit of the first-born Cain
Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set
On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,
And darkness be the burier of the dead! [lord.

Thou. This strained passion doth you wrong, my Bard. Sweet car, divorce not wisdom from your honor.

Mor. The lives of all your loving complices
Lean on your health; the which, if you give o'er
To stormy passion, must perforce decay.
You cast the event of war, my noble lord, [said,
And sum'd the account of chance, before you let us make head. It was your presump'ture,
That in the 4th of blows your son might drop:

manned with an agate till now: but I will in-set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel; the juvenal, the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fleged. I will sooner have a beard grew in the palm of my hand, than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say, his face is a face-royal. God may finish it when he will. It is not a hair amis yet: he may keep it still as a face-royal, for a barber shall never earn six pence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man ever since his father was a batchelor.
He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him.—What said master Dumbleton about the satin for my short cloak, and my shoes?

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph; he would not take his bond and yours: he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned like the glutton: may his tongue be hotter.—A whoreson Achitophel; a rascal yea-foolish knife, to bear a gentleman in hand, and then stand upon security.—The whores-on smiths do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles; and a man is thorough with them in honest taking up, then must they stand upon security. I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth, as offer to stop it with security. I looked he should have sent me two and twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security. Well, he may sleep in security; for he hath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it; and yet cannot he see, though he have his own lantern to light him.—Where’s Bardolph?

Page. He’s gone into Smithfield to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul’s, and he’ll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get a wife in the stews, I were manned, horsed, and twined.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, and an Attendant.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that com-
ted the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close; I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What’s he that goes there?

Atten. Falstaff, an’t please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He that was in question for the rob-bbery.

Atten. He, my lord; but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury, and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the lord John of Lancaster.

Atten. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder, my master is deaf.

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow; I must speak with him.

Atten. Sir John.

Fal. What! a young knave, and begging? Is there not wars? is there not employment? Doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebel-

Atten. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say we were an honest man setting my knighthood and my soldiership aside, I had lied in my throat if I had said so.

Atten. I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiership aside, and give me leave to tell you, you may give me such a truth as, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so? I lay aside that which grows to me? If thou get’st any leave of me, hang me: if thou tak’st leave, thou wert better be hanged. You hunt-counter, hence! avant!

Atten. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord!—God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad;
I heard say, your lordship was sick: I hope, your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the salut-

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from much grief: from study, and perturbation of the brain. I have read the cause of his effects in Galen: it is a kind of dearness.

Ch. Just. I think you are fallen into the disease, for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Nay, my lord, very well: rather, an’t please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled with.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not, if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord, but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me, in respect of poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or, in indeed, a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were maters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned con-sel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt cannot live in less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise: I would my means were greater, and my waist slendier.

Scene III. Second Part of King Henry IV.

Ch. Just. You have mislaid the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince hath mislaid me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loath to gall a new-healed wound. Your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little gilded over your night's exploit on Gadshill; you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o'er-posting that action.

Fal. My lord.—

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

Fal. To wake a wolf, is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wasp's candle, my lord; all tallow: if I did any of my wax, my growth would prove the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gray, gray, gray.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light, but, I hope, he will look upon me without weigthing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go. I cannot tell; virtue is of so little regard in these coster-monger times, that true valor is turned bear-herd. Pregnancy is made a tapster, and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings; all the other gifts appertain to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. These are old, consider not the capacities of us that are young: you measure the heat of our lives with the bitterness of your galls; and we that are in the vaward of your youth, I must confess, are wags too.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scowll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye, a dry hand, a yellow cheek, a white beard, a decreasing leg, an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken, your wind short, your chin double, your wit single, and every part you blasted with antiquity, and will you yet call yourself young. Fie, fie, fie, sir John.

Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the morning, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice,—I have lost it with hollaining, and singing of anthems. To approve my youth farther, I will not: the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding; and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. For the box o' the ear that the prince gave you, he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it, and the young lion repents; marry, not in ashes, and sackcloth, but in new silk, and old saucy.

Ch. Just. Well, God send the prince a better companion!

Fal. God send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just. Well, the young prince hath severed you and prince Harry. I hear, you are going with lord John of Lancaster against the archbishop, and the earl of Northumberland.

Fal. Yea! I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look, you pray, all you that kiss my holy peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day; for, by the Lord, I take but two strips out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, and I brandish any thing but my bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous action can peep out his head, but I am thrust upon it: well, I cannot last for ever. But it was always you and our armies join not in a hot day: for, they have a good thing, to make it too common. If you will needs say I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God, my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is: I were better to be eaten to death with rust, than to be scoured to nothing with perpetual motion.

Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless your expedition.

Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pound to furnish me forth?

Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny: you are too impatient to have crosses. Fare you well: commend me to your cousin Westmoreland.

Fal. I must upon this Excerpt Chief Justice and Attendant.

Ch. Just. What is? Do not you agree with Sir Walter in his opinion? A man can no more separate age and covetousness, than he can part young limbs and leechery; but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other, and so both the diseases prevent my curses.—Boy! Page. Sir?

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats and two-pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable.—Go, bear this letter to my lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the earl of Westmoreland; and this to old mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair of my chin. About it: you know where to find me. [Exit Page.] A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this pox! for the one, or the other, plays the rogue with my great toe. 'Tis no matter, if I do halt; I have the wars for my color, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. A good wit will make use of anything; 'Twill turn diseases to commodit.

[Exit.

Scene III.—York. A Room in the Archbishop's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of York, the Lords Hastings, Mowbray, Earl Marshal, and Bardolph.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause, and know our means;

And, my most noble friends, I pray you all,

Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes.—

And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?

Mowb. I well allow the occasion of our arms;

But gladly would be better satisfied,

How, in our means, we should advance ourselves

To look with forehead bold and big enough

Upon the power and puissance of the king.

Hast. Our present musters grow upon the file

To five and twenty thousand men of choice;

And our supplies live largely in the hope

Of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns

With an incensed fire of injuries. [Thus—

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter Hostess; Fang, and his Boy, with her; and Snare following.

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?

Fang. It is entered.

Host. Where's your 4 yeoman? Is't a lusty yeoman? will he stand to't?

Fang. Sirrah, where's Snare?

Host. O lord! ay! good master Snare.

Snare. Here, here.

Fang. Snare, we must arrest sir John Falstaff.

Host. Yea, good master Snare; I have entered him and all.

Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.

Host. Alas the day! take heed of him: he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most beastly. In good faith, he cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will 'fain like any devil: he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

Host. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.

Fang. And I but sit him once; an he come but within my line.

Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, he's an infinitive thing upon my score.—Good master Fang, hold him sure:—good master Snare, let him not escape. He comes continuously to Pie-corner, (saving your manhoods) to buy a saddle; and he's indited to dinner to the lubber's head in Lumbert-street to-morrow. Smooth's the silkman: I pray ye, since my exon is entered, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred mark is a long score for a poor lone woman to bear; and I have borne,

1 Multitude.—Dressed.—A ballad's follower was called a sergeant's yeoman.—Thrust.—Grasp.—Act.
and borne, and borne; and have been tubbed off, and tubbed off, and tubbed off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing, unless a woman should be made an ass, and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong.—

Enter Sir John Falstaff, Page, and Bardolph.

Yonder he comes; and that arrant malseye-nose knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices, master Fang and master Snare: do me, do me, do me my offices...

Fal. How now! whose mare's dead? what's the matter?

Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of mistress Quickly.

Fal. Away, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph: cut me off the villain's head; throw the quen in the channel.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph.

Fang. A rescue! a rescue!

Host. Good people, bring a rescue or two. Thou wilt not? thou wilt not? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!

Fal. Away, you scullion! you rampallian! you fusslician! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, attended.

Ch. Just. What is the matter? keep the peace here, ho!

Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me!

Ch. Just. How now, sir John! what, are you brawling here? [noise?] Doth this become your place, your time, and busi-You should have been well on your way to York.—Stand from him, fellow: wherefore hang'st on him?

Host. O! my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Easchcap, and he is arrested at my suit.

Ch. Just. For what suit?

Host. It is more than for some, my lord; it is for all, all I have. He hath eaten me out of house and home: he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his; but I have some of it out again, or I will ride thee o' nights, like the mare.

Fal. I think, I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantge of ground to get up.

Ch. Just. How comes this, sir John?—Fie! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of ex- clamation?—Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?

Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?

Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself, and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a *wared-gilt goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Whitsun week, when the prince broke thy head for likening his father to a singing-man of Windsor; thou diest swear to me then, as I was wash- ing thy wound, to marry me, and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Kech, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip Quickly? I coming ia to borrow a mess of vinegar; telling us, she had a good dish of prawns, whereby thou didst desire to eat some, whereby

I told thee, they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, de- sire me to be no more so familiarly with such poor people; saying, that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-cash: deny it, if thou canst.

Fal. My Lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you. She hath been in good case, and the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you, I may have redress against them.

Ch. Just. Sir John, sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a confidant brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sauciness from you, can thrust me from a level con- sideration; you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the easy-yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in purse and person.

Host. Yes, in truth, my lord.

Ch. Just. Pr'ythee, peace.—Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villainy you have done with her: the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance.

Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this *snare without reply. You call honorable boldness, impudent sauciness: if a man will make court'sy, and say nothing, he is virtuous. No, my lord, my hum- ble duty remember'd, I will not be your suitor: I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs.

Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong: but answers in the effect of your reputation, and satisfy the poor woman.

Fal. Come hither, hostess. [Taking her aside.

Enter Gower.

Ch. Just. Now, master Gower! what news?

Gow. The king, my lord, and Henry prince of Wales

Are near at hand: the rest this paper tells.

Fal. As I am a gentleman.

Host. Faith, you said so before.

Fal. As I am a gentleman. Come, no more words of it.

Host. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate, and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking: and for thy walls,—a pretty slight drollery, or the story of the prodigal, or the German hunting in waterwork, is worth a thousand of these bed hangings, and these fly bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound, if thou canst. Come, an it were not for thy humors, there is not a better weath in England. Go, wash thy face, and *draw thy action. Come, thou must not be in this humor with me; dost not know me? Come, come, I know thou wast set on this.

Host. Pray thee, sir John, let it be but twenty nobles; I faith I am loath to pawn my plate, in good earnest, la.

Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift: you'll be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope, you'll come to supper. You'll pay me all together!

* Homicidal.—Homicide.—Man-slayer.—Partly gilt.
"Fal. Will I live?—Go, with her, with her; hook on, hook on.
Host. Will you have Doll Tear-sheet meet you at supper?
Fal. No more words: let’s have her.
[Exeunt Hostess, Bardolph, Officers, and Page.]
4 Ch. Just. I have heard better news.
Fal. What’s the news, my good lord?
Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?
Gow. At Basingstoke, my lord.
Fal. I hope, my lord, all’s well: what is the news, my lord?
Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?
Gow. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse, Are march’d up to my lord of Lancaster, Against Northumberland and the archbishop.
Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?
Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently: come, go along with me, good master Gower.
Fal. My lord!
Ch. Just. What’s the matter?
Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?
Gow. I must wait upon my good lord here: I thank you, good sir John.
Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.
Fal. Will you sup with me, master Gower?
Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, sir John?
Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me.—This is the right feeding grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair.
Ch. Just. Now, the lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Street.

Enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.
Poins. Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.
P. Hen. ‘Tis faith, it does me, though it discords the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Dost it not show visibly in me to desire small meat?
Poins. Wray, a prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition.
P. Hen. Belike then, my appetit was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz. these, and those that were thy peach-color’d ones? or to bear the inventory of thy shirts; as, one for superlity, and one other for use?—but that the tennis-court-keeper knows better than I, for it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low-countries have made a shift to eat upp thy holland: and God knows, whether those that brawl out the ruins of thy *linen, shall inherit his kingdom; but the midwives say, the children are not in the fault, whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.
Poins. How ill it follows, after you have labored so hard, you should talk so idle! Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?
Poins. Yes, faith, and let it be an excellent good thing.
P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.
Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.
P. Hen. Marry, I tell thee,—it is not meet that I should tell thee, for my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee, (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.
Poins. Very hardly upon such a subject.
P. Hen. By this hand, thou think’st me as far in the devil’s book, as thou and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistency; let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my heart bleeds inwardly, that my father is so sick; and keeping such vile company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me all ostentation of sorrow.
Poins. The reason?
P. Hen. Why. This would’st thou think of me, if I should weep?
Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.
P. Hen. It would be every man’s thought; and thou art a blessed fellow, to think as every man thinks: never a man’s thought in the world keeps the road-way better than thine: every man would think me an hypocrite indeed. And what accepts your most worshipful thought to think so?
Poins. Why, because you have been so lowd, and so much engrailed to Falstaff.
P. Hen. And to thee.
Poins. By this light, I am well spoken on; I can hear it with mine own ears: the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second brother, and that I am a proper fellow of my hands, and those two things, I confess, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.
P. Hen. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: he had him from me Christian; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him ape.

Enter Bardolph and Page.
Bard. God save your grace.
P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolph.
Bard. Come, you virous ass, [To the Page.] you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man at arms are you become? Is it such a matter to get a pottepot’s maidhead?
Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red *lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window: at last, I spied his eyes; and, methought, he had made two holes in the ale-wife’s new *red petticoat, and peeped through.
P. Hen. Hath not the boy profited?
Bard. Ay, thou whereon uppright rabbit, away! Page. Away, you rascally Althea’s dream, away!
P. Hen. Instruct us, boy: what dream, boy?
Page. Marry, my lord, Althea dreamed she was delivered of a fire-brand, and therefore I call him her dream.
P. Hen. A crown’s worth of good interpretation.—There it is, boy.
Poins. O, that this good blossom could be kept from cutters!—Well, there is sixpence to preserve thee.
Bard. And you do not make him be hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong.

* Bastard children, wrapt up in his old shirts.

* Outward show. —Odell; induces. — Brave; courageous.
—* A red lattice," i.e., an alehouse window.
SCENE III.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

P. Hen. And how doth thy master, Bardolph?
Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town: there's a letter for you.

Poins. Delivered with good respect.—And how doth the *martelos, your master?
Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him: though that be sick, it dies not.

P. Hen. I do allow this 2ween to be as familiar with me as my dog; and he holds his place, for look you how he writes.

Poins. [Reads.] "John Falstaff, knight,"—every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself; even like those that are kin to the king, for they never prick their finger, but they say, "There's some of the king's blood in you." "How comes that?" says he, that takes upon him not to conceive: the answer is, as ready as a borrower's cap: "I am the king's poor cousin, sir."

P. Hen. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japheth. But to the letter:

Poins. "Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry Prince of Wales, greeting."—Why, this is a certificate.

P. Hen. Peace! Poins. "I will imitate the honorable Romans in brevity;”—he sure means brevity in breath, short-winded,—"I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favors so much, that he swears, thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repeat at idle times as thou may'st, and so farewell.

"Thine, by yea and no, (which is as much as to say, as thou usest him,) Jack Falstaff, with my familiars; John, with my brothers and sisters; and Sir John with all Europe."

My lord, I will steep this letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Hen. That's 3but to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Poins. God send the wench no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Hen. Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds, and mock us. —Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord.

P. Hen. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old 4frank?

Bard. At the old place, my lord, in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. What company?

Page. Ephesians, my lord; of the old 5church.

P. Hen. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old mistress Quickly, and mistress Doll Tear-sheet.

P. Hen. What 6 pagan may that be?

Page. A proper gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.

P. Hen. Even such kin as the parish hellers are to the town bull.—Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper?

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.

P. Hen. Sirrah, you boy,—and Bardolph;—no word to your master that I am yet come to town: there's for your silence. 2Giving money.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir, I will govern it.

P. Hen. Fare ye well; go. [Exeunt BARDOLPH and Page.]—This Doll Tear-sheet should be some road.

Poins. I warrant you, as common as the way between St. Alban's and London.

P. Hen. How might we see Falstaff bestow himself to-night in his true colors, and not ourselves be seen?

Poins. Put on two leathern jerkins, and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

P. Hen. From a god to a bull? a heavy descension! it was Jove's case. From a prince to a pretence! a low transformation! that shall be mine; for in everything the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me, Ned. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Workworth. Before the Castle.

Enter Northumberland, Lady Northumberland, and Lady Percy.

North. I pray thee, loving wife and gentle daughter, give even way unto my rough affairs: [ter, Put not you on the visage of the times, And be like them to Percy troublesome.

Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no more. Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honor is at pawn, And, but my going, nothing can redeem it. [wars! Lady P. O, yet, for God's sake, go not to these The time was, father, that you broke your word, When you were more endued't to it than now; When your own Percy, when your own heart-dear Harry, Threw many a northward look, to see his father Bring up his powers; but he did long in vain. Who then persuaded you to stay at home? There were two honors lost, yours, and your son's: For yours,—may heavenly glory brighten it! For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun In the grey vault of heaven: and, by his light, Did all the chivalry of England move To do brave acts, he was, indeed, the glass Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves. He had no legs, that practised not his gait; And speaking thick, which nature made his blemish, Became the accents of the valiant; That for those could speak loud, and tardily, Would crown their own perfection to abuse, To seem like him: so that, in speech, in gait, In diet, in affections of delight, In military rules, in humors of blood, He was the mark and glass, copy and book, [him! That fashion'd others. And him,—O wondrous O miracle of men!—him did you leave, (Second to none, unsounded by you) To look upon the hideous god of war In disadvantage; to abide a field, Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name Did seem defensible:—so you left him. Never, O, never, do his ghost the wrong, To hold your honor more precise and nice With others, than with him: let them alone. The marshal, and the archbishop, are strong: Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers, To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck, Have talk'd of Mornmouth's grave.

North. Beshrew your heart, Fair daughter! you do draw my spirits from me, With new lamenting ancient oversights. But I must go, and meet with danger there, Or it will seek me in another place, And find me worse provided.

\(^{1}\text{Act.}\)
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

ACT II.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Boar’s Head Tavern, in Eastcheap.

Enter Two Drawers.

Dol. I make them? gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the disease, Doll; we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my pure virtue, grant that.

Dol. Yea, joy; our chains, and our jewels.

Fal. “Your brooches, pearls, and oewches”—for to serve bravely, is to come halting off, you know: to come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely:

Dol. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion: you two never meet, but you fall to some discord. You are both, in good troth, as putrefacit as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another’s confluences. What the good year! one must bear, and that must be you: you are the weaker vessel; as they say, the emptier vessel.

Dol. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hoghead? there’s a whole merchant’s venture of Bordeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better studded in the hold.—Come, I’ll be friends with you: thou not going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again, or no, there is nobody—cares.

Re-enter Drawer.

Dol. Hang yourself, hostess?

Host. Pray you, pacify yourself, sir John: there comes no swaggerers here.

Dol. Host! thou hear? it is nine ancient.

Host. Tilly-valley, sir John, never tell me: your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before master Tiscick, the deputy, the other day; and, as he said to me,—it was no longer ago than Wednesday last,—“Neighbor Quickly,” says he;—master Dumb, our minister, was by then:—“Neighbor Quickly,” says he, “receive those that are civil; for,” said he, “you are in an ill name?”—now, he said so, I can tell whereupon; “for,” says he, “you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive;” “receive,” says he, “no swaggering companions.”—There comes none here:—you would bless you to hear what he said.—No, I’ll no swaggerers.

Fal. He’s no swaggerer, hostess: a tame cheat, faith; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy grey-hound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance.—Call him up, drawer.

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater; but I do not love swaggering: by my troth, I am the worse, when he doth as a swagger. Feel, masters, how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

He was so suffer’d; so came I a widow,

Dol. I make them? gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the disease, Doll; we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my pure virtue, grant that.

Dol. Yea, joy; our chains, and our jewels.

Fal. “Your brooches, pearls, and oewches”—for to serve bravely, is to come halting off, you know: to come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers bravely:

Dol. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion: you two never meet, but you fall to some discord. You are both, in good troth, as putrefacit as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another’s confluences. What the good year! one must bear, and that must be you: you are the weaker vessel; as they say, the emptier vessel.

Dol. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hoghead? there’s a whole merchant’s venture of Bordeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better studded in the hold.—Come, I’ll be friends with you: thou not going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again, or no, there is nobody—cares.

Re-enter Drawer.

Dol. Hang yourself, hostess?

Host. Pray you, pacify yourself, sir John: there comes no swaggerers here.

Dol. Host! thou hear? it is nine ancient.

Host. Tilly-valley, sir John, never tell me: your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before master Tiscick, the deputy, the other day; and, as he said to me,—it was no longer ago than Wednesday last,—“Neighbor Quickly,” says he;—master Dumb, our minister, was by then:—“Neighbor Quickly,” says he, “receive those that are civil; for,” said he, “you are in an ill name?”—now, he said so, I can tell whereupon; “for,” says he, “you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive;” “receive,” says he, “no swaggering companions.”—There comes none here:—you would bless you to hear what he said.—No, I’ll no swaggerers.

Fal. He’s no swaggerer, hostess: a tame cheat, faith; you may stroke him as gently as a puppy grey-hound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance.—Call him up, drawer.

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater; but I do not love swaggering: by my troth, I am the worse, when he doth as a swagger. Feel, masters, how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

SCENE IV.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

Dol. So you do, hostess.
Host. Do I? yea, in very truth do I, an 'twere an aspen leaf. I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and Page.

Fal. Welcome, ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.
Pist. I will discharge upon her, sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly offend her.
Host. Come, I'll drink no proofs, nor no bullets. I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I.
Pist. Then to you, mistress Dorothy: I will charge you.

Pist. I know you, mistress Dorothy.

Fal. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung, away! By this wise, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy claps, an you play the salty cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket hilt stave juggler, you!—Since when, I pray you, sir?—God's light! with two points on your shoulder? much!
Pist. I will murder your ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol: I would not have you go off here. Discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Dol. Captain! thou abominable damned cheater, art thou not ashamed to be called captain? An captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain, you slave! for what? for tearing a poor whore's ruff in a bawdy-house?—He a captain! Hang him, rogue! He lives upon mouldy stewed prunes, and dried cakes. A captain! these villains will make the word captain as odious as the word occupy, which was an excellent good word before it was ill-sorted: therefore captains had need look to't.

Bard. Pray thee, go down, good ancient.
Pist. Not I: I tell thee what, corporal Bardolph; I could tear her.—I'll be revenged of her.

Page. Pray, thee go down, good ancient.

Pist. I'll see her damned first;—to Pluto's damned lake, by this hand, to the infernal deep, with Erebüs and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down with, dogs! down!

Dol. Haven, dogs! down!

Host. Have not Hiren here?

Hostess. Good captain Peesel, be quiet; it is very late i' the faith. I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good humors, indeed!—Shall pack-horses, and hollow pamper'd jades of Asia, Which cannot go but thirty miles a day, Compare with Caesars, and with Cannibals, And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with King Cerberus, and let the welkin roar.

Shall we fall foul for toys?

Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Begone, good ancient: this will grow to a brawl anon.

Pist. Die men, like dogs; give crowns like pins. Have we not Hiren here?

Host. Go, my word, captain, there's none such here. What the good year! do you think I would dasy her? for God's sake, be quiet.

Pist. Then feed, and be fat, my fair Calipolis. Come, give's some sack.

Fal. Come we to full points here, and are et ceteras noth-

Pist. Fal. Sweet knight, I kiss thy zeal.—What! we have seen the seven stars.

Dol. For God's sake, thrust him down stairs: I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.
Pist. Thrust him down stairs! know we not Galloway's bags?

Fal. Quoit him down, Bardolph, like a shove-grout shilling: nay, an he do nothing but speak nothing, he shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.
Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we incise? [Sneezes up his sword.

Then, death, rock me asleep, abridge my doleful days! Why then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds Untwine the sisters three! Come, Atropos, I say!

Host. Here's goody stuff toward!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.

Fal. Give you down stairs.

[Drawing.

Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house, afore I'll be in these territs and frights. So; murder, I warrant now.—Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons; put up your naked weapons.

[Exeunt BARDOLPH and Pistol.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet: the rascal is gone.

Host. Are you not hurt i' the groin? methought he made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

Fal. Have you turned him out of doors?

Bard. Yes, sir: the rascal's drunk. You have hurt him, sir, in the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal, to brave me!

Dol. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, poor ape, how thou swearest! Come, let me wipe thy face,—come on, you whoreson chaps.—Ah, rogue! i' faith, I love thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the nine worthies. Ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Dol. Do, if thou dar'st for thy heart: if thou dost, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheets.

Enter Music.

Page. The music is come, sir.

Fal. Let them play.—Play, sirs.—Sit on my knee, Doll.—A rascal braggling slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

Dol. I' faith, and thou followedst him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew bon-pirg, when wilt thou leave fighting o' days, and joining o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven!

Enter behind, Prince Henry and Poius, disguised like Drawers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's head: do not bid me remember mine end.

Doll. Sirrah, what humor is the prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow: he would have made a pantler, he would have chipped bread well.

Doll. They say, Poius has a good wit.

Fal. He a good wit? hang him, baboon! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard: there is no more conceit in him, than is in a mallet.

Doll. Why does the prince love him so, then?

Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness; and he plays at quoits well; and eats conger and fennel; and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons; and rides the wild mare with the boys; and jumps upon joint-stools; and swears with a good grace; and wears his boot very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg; and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories; and such other gambol faculties he has, that show a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is taxing the ear; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoidiups.

P. Hen. Would not this nay of a horse wheel have his ears cut off?

Poius. Let's beat him before his whore.

P. Hen. Look, whether the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.

Fal. Is it not strange, that desire should so many years outlive performance?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

P. Hen. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction! what says the almanack to that?

Poius. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon, his man, be not chasping to his master's old tables, his notes.

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses. [heart.

Doll. Nay, truly: I kiss thee with most constant Fal. I am old, I am old.

Doll. I love thee better than I love c'er a scurvy young boy of them all.

Fal. What stuff wilt have a kirtle of? I shall receive money on Thursday; thou shalt have a cap toward. A merry song I come: it grows late: we'll to bed. Thou'll forget me, when I am gone.

Doll. By my troth, thou'lt set me a weeping, an thou say'st so: prove that ever I dress myself handsomely till thy return.—Well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis!

P. Hen. Poius, Anon, anon, sir. [Advancing. Fal. Ha! a bastard son of the king's.—And art not thou Poius, his brother?

P. Hen. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead.

Fal. A better than thou: I am a gentleman; thou art a drawer.

P. Hen. Very true, sir, and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my troth, welcome to London.—Now, the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu! are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty,—by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcoming [Puncting his hand upon Doll. Doll. How, you fat fool? I scorn you. Poius. My lord, he will drive you out of your Patt. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence, and leave it unpicked. [Knocking heard.] More knocking at the door.

Re-enter Bardolph.

How now! what's the matter?

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presently: A dozen captains stay at door for you.

Patt. Pay the musicians, sirrah. [To the Page.]—Farewell, hostess;—farewell, Doll. You see, my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after: the undersever may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Farewell, good wenches. If I be not sent away post, I will see you again ere I go.

Doll. I cannot speak;—if my heart be not ready to burst.—Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Farewell, farewell.

[Exeunt Falstaff and Bardolph.

Host. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come peased-time; but an honester, and truer-hearted man,—Well, fare thee well.

Bard. [Within.] Mistress Tear-sheet!

Host. What's the matter?

Bard. [Within.] Bid mistress Tear-sheet come to my master.

Host. O! run, Doll; run; run, good Doll. Come.—She comes blubbered.—Yea—will you come, Doll?

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry in his Nightgown, with a Page.

K. Hen. Go, call the earls of Surrey and of Warwic;

But, ere they come, bid them o'er-read these letters, and well consider of them. Make good speed.

[Exit Page.

How many thousand of my poorest subjects Art at this hour asleep! O sleep! O gentle sleep! Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down, And keep me so long in th' unquiet state Of restlessness and fear? Why should not slept sleep, Upon uneasy palls stretching thee, And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber, Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great, Under high canopies of costly state, And lull'd with sound of sweetest melody? O, thou dull god! why liest thou with the viles, In loathsome beds, and leavest the kingly couch, A watch-case, or a common larum bell? Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains In cradle of the rude imperious surge, And in the visitation of the winds, Who take the rufian billows by the top, Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them With drooping clamors in the slippery abroad, That with the hurly death itself awakes? Can'st thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose To the wet sea-bow in an hour so rude; And in the calmest and most stilllest night, With all appliances and means to boot, Deny it to a king? Then, happy low, lie down! Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty!

K. Hen. Is it good morrow, lords?

War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past. [lords.

K. Hen. Why then, good morrow to you all, my Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you?

War. Yes, my liege.

K. Hen. Then you perceive, the body of our king—How foul it is:—what rank diseases grow, And with what danger, near the heart of it. War. It is but as a body, yet, distemper'd, Which to his former strength may be restored, With good advice, and little medicine. My lord Northumberland will some be cool'd. [fate, K. Hen. O God! that one might read the book of And see the revolution of the times Make mountains level, and the continent, Weary of solid firmness, melt itself Into the sea:—and, other times, to see The beachy girdle of the ocean Too wide for Neptune's hips;—how chances mock, And changes fill the cup of alteration, With divers liquors! O, if this was seen, The happiest youth, viewing his progress through, What perils past, what crosses to ensue, Would shut the book, and sit him down and die. 'Tis not ten years gone, Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends, Did feast together, and in two years after Were these two wars: it is but eight years, since This Percy was the man nearest my soul; Who like a brother to'd in my affairs, And laid his love and life under my foot; Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard, Gave him defiance. But which of you was by, (You, cousin Nevil, as I may remember,) I To Warwick.

When Richard, with his eye brimful of tears, Then check'd and rated by Northumberland, Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy! "Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne:"— Then, though God knows, I had no such intent, But that necessity so bound the event, That I most greatly, were compelled to kiss. "The time shall come," thus did he follow it, "The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head, Shall break into corruption:"—so went on, Foretelling this same time's condition, And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives, Figuring the nature of the times dissolv'd; The which observ'd, a man may prophesy, With a near aim, of the main change of things As yet not come to life, which in their seeds, And weak beginnings, lie intreasured. Such things become the hatch and brood of time; And, by the necessary form of this, King Richard might create a perfect guess, That great Northumberland, then false to him, Would, of that seed, grow to a greater falseness, Which should not find a ground to root upon, Unless on you. K. Hen. Are these things, then, necessities?

Then let us meet them like necessities: And that same word even now cries out on us. They say, the bishop and Northumberland Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord: Rumor doth double, like the voice and echo, The numbers of the fear'd.—Please it your grace, To go to bed; upon my soul, my lord, The powers that you already have sent forth, Shall bring this prize in very easily. To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd a certain instance that Glendower is dead. Your majesty hast been this fortnight ill, and these unseason'd hours, perforce, must add unto your sickness.

K. Hen. I will take your counsel: and were these inward wars once out of hand, We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Court before Justice Shallow's House in Gloucestershire.

Enter Shallow and Silence, meeting; Mouldy, Shadow, Wart, Feeble, Bull-calf, and Servants, behind.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on, sir; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer, by the good Lord. And how doth my good cousin in Silence?

Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my cousin, your bedfellow? and your fairest daughter and mine, god-daughter Eliza?

Sil. Alas! a black cowel, cousin Shallow.

Shal. By yea and nay, sir, I dare say, my cousin William has become a good scholar. He is at Oxford, still, is he not?

Sil. Indeed, sir; to my cost.

Shal. He must then to the limes of court shortly. I was once of Clentam's: where, I think, they will take of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were called lusty Shallow then, cousin.

Shal. By the mass, I was called my thing; and I would have done any thing, indeed, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Barnes, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele a Cotswold man: you had not four such swing-backers in all the limes of court again: and, I may say to you, we knew where the d-bona-roras were, and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now sir John, a boy, and page to Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk.

Sil. This sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?

Shal. The same sir John, the very same. I saw him break Skugan's head at the court gate, when he was a crack not thus high: and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiter, behind Gray's-inn. Jesu! Jesu! the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of mine old acquaintance are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 'tis certain; very sure, very sure: death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all; all shall die. How a good yoke of bullocks at Stanford fair?

Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certain.—Is old Double of your town living yet?

Sil. Double, sir.

Shal. Jesu! Jesu! Dead!—he drew a good bow: and dead!—he shot a fine shot.—John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much money on his head. Dead!—he would have clapped in the clout at twelve score; and carried you a forcandy shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half; that it would have done a man's heart good to see.—How a score of ewes now?

a Cross.—"A black ouzel," i.e. a black-bird. —Rakoc.
Wench.—"Boy."—Clapped in the clout at twelve score, "i.e. hit the white mark at twelve score yards.

Sil. Thereafter as they be; a score of good ewes may be worth ten pound.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Enter Bardolph, and one with him.

Sil. Here come two of sir John Falstaff's men, as I think.

Shal. Good morrow, honest gentlemen.

Bard. I beseech you, which is justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace. What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commands him to you; my captain, sir John Falstaff: a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir: I knew him a good backword man. How doth the good knight? may I ask, how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon; a soldier is better accommodated than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated!—it is good; yea, indeed, is it: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated:—it comes of accommodo:—very good; a good phrase.

Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word. Phrase, call it you? By this good day, I know not the phrase: but I will maintain the word with my sword to a soldier-like word, and a word of exceeding good command, by heaven. Accommodated; that is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated; or, when a man is,—being, whereby,—he may be thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falstaff.

Shal. It is very just.—Look, here comes good sir John.—Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand. By my troth, you'll like well, and bear your years very well: welcome, good sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good master Robert Shallow.—Master Surry-card, as I think.

Shal. No, sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in communion with me.

Fal. Good master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Fie! this is hot weather.—Gentlemen, have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men? Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll? where's the roll?—let me see, let me see: so, so, so, so. Yea, marry, sir;—Ralph Mouldy,—let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so.—Let me see; where is Mouldy?

Mould. Here, an it please you.

Shal. What think you, sir John? a good limb fellow: young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?—Mould. Yea, an it please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert used.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, i' faith! things that are mouldy lack use:—very singular good!—In faith, well said, sir John; very well said.

Fal. Prick him.

[To Shallow. ]—Mould, my heart is prick'd well enough before, as you could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone now, for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery. You need not to have prick'd me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.

† Dress.
Fal. Go to; peace, Mouldy! you shall go. Mouldy, it is time you were spent.
Moul. Spent!

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace! stand aside; know you where you are?—For the other, sir John:—let me see. —Simon Shadow!

Ful. Yea marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?
Shal. Here, sir.

Shal. Shadow, whose son art thou?
Shal. My father's son, sir.

Ful. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male. It is often so, indeed; but not of the father's substance.

Shal. Do you like him, sir John?
Ful. Shadow will serve for summer, prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the master-book.

Shal. Thomas Wart!
Ful. Where's he?

Wart. Here, sir.
Ful. Is thy name Wart?
Wart. You, sir.

Ful. Thou art a very ragged warr. Shadow. Shall I prick him, sir John?
Ful. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well. —Francis Fleeble!
Fec. Here, sir.
Ful. What trade art thou, Fleeble?
Fec. A woman's tailor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?
Ful. You may; but if he had been a man's tailor, he would have prick'd you. —Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?

Fec. I will do my good will, sir: you can have no master-book.

Ful. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Fleeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove, or most magnificent mouse.—Prick the woman's tailor well, master Shallow; deep, master Shallow.

Fec. I would Wart might have gone, sir.
Ful. I would thou wert a man's tailor, that thou mightst mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousands: let that suffice, most forcible Fleeble.

Fec. It shall suffice, sir.

Ful. I am bound to thee, reverend Fleeble.—Who is next?

Shal. Peter Bull-calf of the green!
Ful. You, marry, let us see Bull-calf.
Bull. Here, sir.

Ful. 'T were God, a likely fellow.—Come, prick me Bull-calf till he roar again.

Bull. O lord! good my lord captain,—Ful. What, dost thou roar before thou art prick'd?
Bull. O lord! sir, I am a diseased man.
Ful. What disease hast thou?

Bull. A whereson cold, sir; a cough, sir; which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs upon his coronation day, sir.

Ful. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown. We will have away thy cold; and I will take such order, that thy friends shall ring for thee.—Is here all?

Shal. Here is two more called than your number; you must have but four here, sir:—and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Ful. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, by my truth, master Shallow.

Shal. O, sir John! do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's fields?
Ful. No more of that, good master Shallow; no more of that.

Shal. Ha, it was a merry night. And is Jane Nightwork alive?
Ful. Sir, she lives, master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.
Ful. Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide Master Shallow.

Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bosa-roba. Dost she hold her own well?

Ful. Old, old, master Shallow.

Shal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old: certain she's old, and had Robin Nightwork by old Night-work before I came to Clement's-inn.

Sil. That's fifty-five year ago.

Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hast seen that that this knight and I have seen!—Ha, sir John, said I well?

Ful. We have heard the chimes at midnight, master Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, sir John, we have. Our watch-word was, 'Hem, boys!'—Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner.—O, the days that we have seen!—Come, come. [Exeunt Falstaff, Shallow, and Silence.

Bull. Good master corporal Bardolph, stand my friend, and here is four Harry ten shillings in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be hanged, sir, as go: and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends: else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Moul. And good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she has nobody to do any thing about her, when I am gone; and she is old, and cannot help herself. You shall have forty, sir.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Fec. By my truth, I care not: a man can die but once:—we owe God a death. I'll never bear a base mind:—an't be my destiny, so; an't be not, so. No man's too good to serve his prince; and let it go which way it will, he that dies this year is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said: thou art a good fellow.
Fec. 'Faith, I'll bear no base mind.

Re-enter Falstaff, and Justices.

Ful. Come, sir, which men shall I have?

Shal. Four, of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you. —I have three pounds to free Mouldy and Bull-calf.

Ful. Go to; well.

Shal. Come, sir John, which four will you have?

Ful. Do you choose for me.

Shal. Marry then,—Mouldy, Bull-calf, Fleeble, and Shallow.

Ful. Mouldy, and Bull-calf.—For you, Mouldy, stay at home till you are past service:—and for your part, Bull-calf, grow till you come unto it: I will none of you.

* Coins of the value of ten shillings.
Sir John, sir John, do not yourself wrong. They are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

FAL. Will you tell me, master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thewes, the stature, bulk, and big *semblance of a man? Give me the spirit, master Shallow. —Here's Wat's; —you see what a ragged appearance it is: he shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a pewterer's hammer; come off, and on, swifter than he that gibbets-on the brewer's bucket. And this same half-faced fellow, Shadow, —give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. And, for a retreat, —how swiftly will this Feeble, the woman's tailor, run off? O, give me the spare man, and spare me the great ones. —Put me a calver into Wat's hand, Bardolph.

BARD. Hold, Hold; escape: thus, thus, thus.

FAL. Come, manage you my caliver. So: —very well: —go to: —very good: —exceeding good. —O, give me always a little, lean, old, chapped, bald 4 shot. —Well said, Faith, Wat: thou'rt a good scholar, thou'rt a tester for the caliver.

Shal. He is not his craft's master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end green, (when I lay at Clement's inn) I was then sir Dagonet in Arthur's 6 show, there was a little 9 quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus: and he would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: 'ah, tah, tah,' would he say: "bombe." would he say; and away again would he go, and again would he come. —I shall never see such a fellow.

FAL. These fellows will do well, master Shallow. —God keep you, master Silence: I will not use many words with you. —Fare you well, gentlemen both: I thank you: I must do a dozen mile to-night.

BARD. Pity that you give the soldiers costs.

Shal. Sir John, the Lord bless you, and God prosper your affair, and send us peace. At your return, visit our house. Let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure, I will with you to the court.

FAL. 4 Fore God, I would you would.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke at a word. Fare you well. [Exeunt Shallow and Silence.]

FAL. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen. On, Bardolph; lead the men away. [Exeunt Bardolph, Recruits, &c.] As I return, I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of justice Shallow. Lord, lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starred justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he hath done about Tumniltown street; and every third word a lie, dier paid to the bearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring; when he was naked, he was, for all the world, like a forged radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife: he was so forlorn, that his dimensions and his thick sight were invisible: he was the very genius of famine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him —mandrake. He came ever in the rearward of the fashion; and sung those tunes to the 6 over-scutched huivases that he heard the carmen whistle, and swear: they were his fincuses, or his 'good-nights.'

*Resemblance; similitude. — A caliver was a small, light musket, or hand-gun. — "Traverse," i. e. match. — "Shot," i. e. shot. — "Arthur's show" was an exhibition of archery. — "Quick; nimble. — "Tumult-town street, or Turnmillstreet, near Clerkenwell, was a famous resort of bullies, rogues, and other desperate characters. — Whipped. — Titles of little poems. And now is this Vice's 4 dagger become a squire, and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard, and then he 4 burst his head, for crowding among the martial men. I saw it; and told John of Gaunt, he beat his own 9 name; for you might have thrust him, and all his apparel, into our eel-skin: the case of a troble houblow was a manison for him, a court; and now has he found and beaves. Well, I will be acquainted with him, if I return; and it shall go hard, but I will make him a philosopher's two 6 stones to me. If the young 20 dance be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason in the law of nature but may snap at him. Time shape, and there an end. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A Forest in Yorkshire.

Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and Others.

Arch. What is this forest call'd? [Grace.
Hast. 'Tis Gaultree forest, an't shall please your Arch. Here stand, my lords; and send discover- To know the numbers of our enemies. [Crs forth,
Hast. We have sent forth already. Arch. 'Tis well done. — My friends and brethren in these great affairs, I must acquaint you, that I have receiv'd New-dated letters from Northumberland; Their cold intent, tenor and substance, thus: — Here doth he wish his person, with such powers As might hold 9 sortance with his quality, The which he could not levy; whereupon He is retird, to rige his growing fortunes, To Scotland: and concludes in hearty prayers, That your attempts may overlive the hazard, And fearful meeting of their opposite. [ground,
Mowb. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now, what news? Mess. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile, In goodly form comes on the enemy. And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number. Upon, or near, the rate of thirty thousand. Mowb. The just proportion that we gave them out. 1 Let's away on, and face them in the field.

Enter Westmoreland.

Arch. What well-appointed leader fronts us here? Mowb. I think it is my lord of Westmoreland. West. Health and fair greeting from our general, The prince, lord John and Duke of Lancaster. Arch. Say on, my lord of Westmoreland, in peace, What doth concern your coming? West. Then, my lord, Unto your grace do I in chief address The substance of my speech. If that rebellion Came like itself, in base and abject routs, Led on by bloody youth, 2 guarded with 2 rags, And countenanced by boys, and beggars; — The buffoon called Fie, in the old moralities, used a wooden dagger, similar to that of the modern Harlequin.— 1 Broke. — "Gaunt is thin, slender. — "A philosopher's two stones," i. e., twice as good as the philosopher's stone.— The dace and pike are both river fish, the latter noted for its voracity.— "Hold sortance," i. e., be suitable.— "Well-appointed," i. e., completely accoutred.— "Guarded," i. e., ornamented. —
I say, it damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here, to dress the ugly form
Of base and bloody insurrection
With your fair honors. You, lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd;
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd;
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd;
Whose white investments figure innocence,
That need and very blessed spirit of peace,
Wherefore do you so ill translate it?
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war?
Turning your books to glove's, your ink to blood,
Your pens to lances, and your tongue divine
To a loud trumpet, and report of war?
Arch. Wherefore do I this?—so the question stands:
Briefly to this end.—We are all diseas'd:
And, with our surfeiting, and wanton hours,
Have brought ourselves into a burning fever,
And we must bleed for: of which disease
Our late king, Richard, being infected, died.
But, my most noble lord of Westmoreland,
I take not on me here as a physician,
Nor do I judge, as an ender, and by diploma,
Troop in the thousands of military men;
But, rather, show a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds, sick of happiness,
And purge the obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
[ suffer,
What wounds our arms may do, what wounds we are Possess'd of grievances. griefs heavier than these we.
We see which way the stream of time doth run,
And are enforce'd from our most quiet chair
By the rough torrent of occasion;
And have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve, to show in articles,
Which, long ere this, we offer'd to the king,
And might by no suit gain an audience.
When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are denied access unto his person,
Even by those men that most have done us wrong.
The dangers of the days but newly gone,
Whose memory is written on the earth
With yet appearing blood, and the examples
Of every minute's instance, present now,
How much, in these ill-conceived times,
To break peace, or any branch of it,
But to establish here a peace indeed,
Concurring both in name and quality.
West. When ever yet was your appeal denied?
Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been sabord'd to grumble on you,
That could seal this lawful part, only book
Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine,
And consecrate commotion's bitter edge?
Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth,
To brother born an household cruelty,
I make my quarrel in particular.
West. There is no need of any such redress;
Or, if there were, it not belongs to you.
That reason, why not to him, in part, and to us all,
That feel the bruises of the days before,
And suffer the condition of these times
To lay a heavy and unequal hand
Upon our honors?
West. O! my good lord Mowbray,
Construe the times to their necessities,
And you shall say indeed, it is the time,
And not the king, that doth you injuries.
Yet, for your part, it not appears to me,
Either from the king, or in the present time,
That you should have an inch of any ground
To build a grief on. Were you not restor'd
To all the duke of Norfolk's signories,
Your noble and right-well-remember'd father's?
Mowb. What thing, in honor, had my father lost,
That needs the review of time, and review of me
But, what a Henry Bolingbroke, and he,
Being mounted, and both roused in their seats,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through 4 sights of steel,
And the loud trumpet blowing them together;
Then, then, when there was nothing could have stay'd
My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O! when the king did throw his b wander down,
His own life hung upon the staff he throw'd:
Then throw he down himself, and all their lives,
That, by his account, and by his account,
Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.
West. You speak, lord Mowbray, now you know not what.
The earl of Hereford was reputed, then,
In England the most valiant gentleman:
Who knows, on whom fortune would then have smiled?
But if your father had been victor there,
He never had borne it out of Coventry;
For all the country, in a general voice,
Cried hate upon him; and all their prayers, and love,
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
And bless'd, and grace'd, indeed, more than the king.
But this is mere digression from my purpose.
Here come I from our princely general,
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace,
That he will give you audience; and wherein
It shall appear that your demands are just,
You shall enjoy them; every thing set off,
That might so much as think you enemies.
Mowb. But he hath fore'd us to compel this offer,
And it prove'd from policy, the best.
West. Mowbray, you overween, to take it so.
This offer comes from mercy, not from fear.
For, lo! within a b klen our army lies,
Upon mine honor, all too confident
To give admittance to a thought of fear.
Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armor all as strong, our cause the best:
Then, reason 'ill our hearts should be as good;
Say you not, then, our offer is compel'd?
[Hey.
Mowb. Well, by my will, we shall admit no par-
West. That argues but the shame of your offence:
A rotten case abides no handling.
Hast. Hath the prince John a full commission,
In very ample virtue, in his father's stead?
To hear, and absolutely to determine
Of what condition we shall stand upon?
West. That is intend'd in the general's name.
I muse you make so slight a question. [schedule,
Arch. Then, take my lord of Westmoreland, this
For this contains our general grievances:

*T heir armed staves in charge," i.e., their lances fixed in the rest for the encounter.—2 S ights," i.e., spears.—
Truncheons.—"You overween," i.e., you overrate yourself.—"Within a ken," i.e., within sight.—"Reason will," i.e., it is reasonable.—Understood.
Each several article herein redress'd;
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are aspiring to this action,
Acquitted by a true substantial form;
And present execution of our wills
To us, and to our purposes, confin'd,
We come within our awful banks again,
And knit our powers to the arm of peace.
West. This will I show the general. Please you, lords,
In sight of both our battles we may meet:
And either end in peace, which God so frame,
Or to the place of difference call the swords
Which must decide it.
Arch. My lord, we will do so. [Exit West.
Mowbr. There is a thing within my bosom tells me,
That no conditions of our peace can stand.
Hast. Fear you not that: if we can make our peace
Upon such large terms, and so absolute,
As our conditions shall consist upon,
Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.
Mowbr. Ay, but your valuelion shall be such,
That every slight and false-derived cause,
Yea, every idle, nice, and wanton reason,
Shall to the king taste of this action:
That, were our royal faiths martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chalk,
And good from bad find no partition.
Arch. No, no, my lord. Note this,—the king is wary
Of dainty and such pick'ing grievances:
For he hath found, to end one doubt by death
Revives two greater in the heirs of life.
And therefore will he wipe his tables clean,
And keep no tell-tale to his memory,
That may repeat and history his loss
To new remembrance. For full well he knows,
He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoeapts present occasion:
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend.
So that this land, like an offensive wife,
That hath enraged her man to offer strokes,
As he is strickling, holds his infant up,
And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm
That was upres't to execution.
Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.
Arch. This very true:
And therefore be assure'd, my good lord marshal,
If we do now make our atonement well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.
Mowbr. Be it so.
Here is return'd my lord of Westmoreland.
Re-enter Westmoreland.
West. The prince is here at hand. Please your lordship,
To meet his grace just distance 'twixt our armies?
Mowbr. Your grace of York, in God's name then, set forward.
Arch. Before, and greet his grace, my lord: we come.

SCENE II.—Another Part of the Forest.
Enter, from one side, MOVERAY, the Archbishop,
HASTINGS, and Others: from the other side, Prince
JOHN OF LANCASTER, WESTMORELAND, Officers
and Attendants.
P. John. You are well encounter'd here, my cousins, in Mowbray. Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop;
And so to you, lord Hastings,—and to all,—
My lord of York, it better show'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text,
Than now to see you here an iron man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
Turning the word to sword, and life to death.
That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the sunshine of his favor,
Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
Alack! what mischief might he set abroad, [top,
In shadow of such greatness. With you, lord bishop,
It is even so. Who hath not heard it spoken,
How every soul were within the bonds of God?
To us, the speaker in his parliament.
To us, th' imagin'd voice of God himself:
The very opener and intelligence,
Between the grace, the sanctities of heaven,
And our dull workings: O! who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place,
Employ the countenance and grace of heaven
As a favorite dowl his prince's name,
In deeds dishonorable? You have taken up,
Under the counterfeited seal of God,
The subjects of his substitute, my father:
And, both against the peace of heaven and him,
Have here upswarm'd them.
Arch. Good my lord of Lancaster,
I am not here against your father's peace;
But, as I told my lord of Westmoreland,
The time misorder'd doth, in common sense,
Crowd us, and crush us to this monstrous form
To hold our safety up. I sent your grace
The parcels and particulars of our griefs; [court,
The which have been with scorn shov'd from the Whereon this Hydra-som of war was wov'n:
Whose furious ey's may well be charm'd asleep,
With grant of our most just and right desires,
And true obedience, of this madness cure'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty.
Mowbr. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes
To the last man.
Hast. And though we here fell down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them;
And so much success of mischief shall be born,
And heir from heir hold this quarrel up,
Whiles England shall have generation. [shallow,
P. John. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too
To sound the bottom of the after-times. [rectly,
West. Pleadeth your grace, to answer them dis,
How farthforth you do like their articles.
P. John. I like them all, and do allow them well:
And swear, here, by the honor of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning, and authority,—
My lord, these graces shall be with speed redress'd;
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you,

Discharge your powers unto their several counties,

Let's drink together friendly, and embrace,

Hast. Go, captain, [To an Officer.] and deliver to
This news of peace: let them have pay, and part,
I know, it will well please them: hie thee, captain.
[Exit Officer.
Arch. To you, my noble lord of Westmoreland.
1 Drinks.
West. I pledge your grace: [2 Drinks.] and, if you knew what pains
I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely: but my love to you
Shall show itself more openly hereafter.
Arch. I do not doubt you.
West. I am glad of it.—
Health to my lord, and gentle cousin, Mowbray.
2 Drinks.
Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season;
For I am, on the sudden, something ill.
Arch. Against ill chances men are ever merry,
But heaviness foreruns the good event.
West. Therefore be merry, coz; since sudden sorrow
Serves to say thus,—some good thing comes tomorrow.
Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.
Mowb. So much the worse, if your own rule be true. [Shouts within.
P. John. The word of peace is render'd. Hark,
how they shout!
Mowb. This had been cheerful, after victory.
Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest,
For then both parties nobly are subdued,
And neither party loser.
P. John. Go, my lord,
And let our army be discharged too.
[Exit Westmoreland.
And, good my lord, so please you, let your trains
March by us, that we may peruse the men
We should have cop'd withal.
Arch. Go, good lord Hastings;
And, ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by.
[Exit Hastings.
P. John. I trust, lords, we shall lie to-night together.—
Re-enter Westmoreland.
Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still?
West. The leaders having charge from you to
Will not go off until they hear thee speak.
[stand,
P. John. They know their duties.
Re-enter Hastings.
Hast. My lord, our army is dispers'd already.
Like youthful steers unyked, they take their courses
East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke up,
Each hurries towards his home, and sporting-place.
West. Good tidings, my lord Hastings; for the which
I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason:—
And you, lord archbishop,—and you, lord Mowbray;
Of capital treason I attach you both.
West. Is this proceeding just and honorable?
West. Is your assembly so?
Arch. Will you thus break your faith?
P. John. I pown'd thee none.
I promis'd you redress of these same grievances,
Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honor,
I will perform with a most christian care.
But, for you, rebels, look to taste the due
Meet for rebellion, and such acts as yours.
Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.—
Strike up our drums! pursue the scatter'd strays;
Heaven, and not we, hath safely fought to-day.—
Some guard these traitors to the block of death:
Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath.
[Exeunt.
SCENE III.—Another part of the Forest.
Alarums: Excursions. Enter Falstaff and Cole-ville, meeting.
Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you; and of what place, I pray?
Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is Coleville of the date.
Fal. Well then, Coleville is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place, the date: Coleville shall still be your name, a traitor your degree, and the dungeon your 5-dale,—a dale deep enough; so shall you be still Coleville of the date.
Cole. Are not you sir John Falstaff?
Fal. As good a man as he, sir, who'er I am.
Do ye yield, sir, or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are the drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death: therefore, rouse up fear and trembling, and do obedience to my mercy.
Cole. I think, you are sir John Falstaff, and in that thought yield me.
Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a helfy of any indifferency, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe: my womb, my womb, my womb
undoes me.—Here comes our general.
Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Westmoreland, and others.
P. John. The heat is past, follow no further now.—
Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.—
[Exit West.
Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while?
When everything is ended, then you come;
These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life,
One time or other break some gallows' back.
Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus: I never knew yet, but rebuke and check was the reward of valor. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded lither with the very extremest inch of possibility:
I have fondered nine-score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valor, taken sir John Coleville of the date, a most furious knight, and valorous enemy. But what of that? he saw me, and yielded; that I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of b Rome, I came,
saw, and overcame.
P. John. It was more of his courtesy than your deserving.
Fal. I know not: here he is, and here I yield him.
And I beseech your grace, let it be hooked with the rest of this day's deserts; or, by the lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it, Coleville kissing my foot. To the which course if I be enforced, if you do not all show like girt two-pences to me, and L, in the clear sky of fame, o'ershrine you as much as the full moon act and use. Hereof comes it, that prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, mummied, husbanded, and filled, with excellent endeavor of drinking good, and good store of fertile sherris, that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them should be, to forswear thin potations, and to addict themselves to sack.

Enter Bardolph.

How now, Bardolph?

Bard. The army is discharged all, and gone. Fal. Let them go. I'll through Glostershire; and there will I visit master Robert Shallow, require: I have him already tempering between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Westminster. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, Clarence, Prince Humphrey, Warwick, and others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if God doth give successful To this debate that bleddeth at our doors, [end We will our youth lead on to higher fields, And draw no swords but what are sanctified. Our navy is address'd, our power collected, Our substities in absence well invested, And every thing lies level to our wish: Only, we want a little personal strength, And pause us, till these rebels, now afoot, Come underneath the yoke of Government.

War. Both which, we doubt not but your majesty Shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. Humphavy, my son of Gloucester, Where is the prince your brother?

[Exit Humphrey.

K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Gloucester, thou hast not met with the prince thy brother? He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas. Thou hast a better place in his affection, Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy, And noble offices thou mayst effect Of meditiation, after I am dead, Between his greatness and thy other brethren. Therefore omit him not: blunt not his love, Nor lose the good advantage of his grace, By seeming cold, or careless of his will, For he is gracious, if he be observ'd. He hath a tear for pity, and a hand Open as day for melting charity; Yet, notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint, As 'humorous as winter, and as sudden As flame before a wall, when the spring of the day. His temper, therefore, must be well observ'd; Chide him for faults, and do it reverently When you perceive his blood inflin'd to mirth, But, being moody, give him line and scope, Till that his passions, like a whale on ground, Confound themselves with working. Learn this, Thomas, And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends, A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in.
That the united vessel of their blood,
Mingled with venom of suggestion,
(As, force perforce, the age will pour it in)
Shall never leak, though it do work as strong
As a cement, or rash gunpowder.

K. Hen. Why art thou not at Windsor with him, Thomas?

Cla. He is not there to-day: he dines in London.
K. Hen. And how accompanied? can’st thou tell that?

Cla. With Pages, and other his continual followers.
K. Hen. Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds,
And he, the noble image of my youth,
Is overspread with them: therefore, my grief
Stretches itself beyond the hour of death.
The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
In forms imaginary, th’ unguided days,
And rotten times, that you shall look upon
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.
For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot-blood are his counsellors,
When means and lavish manners meet together,
O, with what wings shall his affections fly
Towards fronting peril and oppos’d decay!

War. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite.
The prince but studies his companions,
Like a strange tongue: wherein, to gain the language,
’Tis needful, that the most immodest word
Be look’d on, and learn’d; which once attain’d,
Your highness knows, comes to no farther use,
But to be known, and hated. So, like gross terms,
The prince will, in the perfectness of time,
Cast off his followers, and their memory
Shall as a pattern or a measure live,
By which few come but the memory of others,
Turning past evils to advantages.

K. Hen. ’Tis seldom, when the bee doth leave her
In the dead carrion. [Enter Westmoreland.] Who’s here? Westmoreland?

West. Health to my sovereign, and new happiness
Added to that that I am to deliver!
Prince John, thy son, dost kiss thy grace’s hand:
Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hasting, and all,
Are brought to the correction of your law.
There is not now a rebel’s sword unsheath’d,
But peace puts forth her olive everywhere.
The manner how this action hath been borne,
Here at more leisure may your highness read,
With every course in his particular.

K. Hen. O Westmoreland! thou art a summer bird,
Which ever in the launch of winter sings
The lifting up of day. [Enter Harcourt.] Look! here’s more news.

Har. From enemies heaven keep your majesty;
And, when they stand against you, may they fall
As those that I am come to tell you of:
The earl Northumberland, and the lord Bardolph,
With a great power of English, and of Scots,
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrown.
The manner and rude order of the fight,
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

K. Hen. And wherefore should these good news make me sick?
Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in fullest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food,—
Such are the poor, in health; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach,—such are the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not.
I should rejoice now at this happy news,
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy.—
O me! come near me; now I am much ill.

P. Humph. Comfort, your majesty!
Cla. O my royal father! West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself: look up!

War. Be patient, princes: you do know, these fits
Are with his highness very ordinary.
And he will do that in his mirth he’s pleased to do.
Cla. No, no; he cannot long hold out these pangs.
Th’ incessant care and labor of his mind
Hath wrought the mure, that should confine it in,
So thin, that life looks through, and will break out.

P. Humph. The people fear me; for they do observe
Unfather’d heirs, and lustily births of nature:
The seasons change their manners, as the year
Hath found some months asleep, and leap’d them over.

Cla. The river hath thrice flow’d, no ebb between
And the old folk, time’s doting chronicles,
Say, it did so, a little time before
That our great grandsire, Edward, sick’d and died.

War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers.
P. Humph. This apoplexy will, certainly, be his end.
K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence
Into some other chamber: softly, pray.

[They place the king on a bed in an inner part of the room.

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;
Unless some dull and favorable hand
Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War. Call for the music in the other room.
K. Hen. Set me this paper between my pillow here.
Cla. His eye is hallow, and be changes much.
War. Less noise, less noise!

[Enter Prince Henry.

P. Hen. Who saw the duke of Clarence?
Cla. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

P. Hen. How now! rain within doors, and none
How doth the king?

War. [abroad.]

P. Humph. Exceeding ill.

P. Hen. Heard he the good news yet?
Tell it him.

P. Humph. He alter’d much upon the hearing it.

P. Hen. If he be sick with joy, he will recover
Without physic.

War. Not so much noise, my lords.—Sweet prince,
The king your father is disposed to sleep.

Cla. Let us withdraw into the other room.

War. Will’t please your grace to go along with us?
P. Hen. No; I will sit and watch here by the king.

[Exit all but Prince Henry.

Why doth the crown lie there, upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?
O polish’d perturbation! golden care!
That keep’st the ports of slumber open wide.
To many a watchful night, sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow with homely biggin bound,
Snores out the watch of night. O pestiferous!
When thou dost pinch thy bedfellow, thou dost sit
Like a rich armor worn in heat of day,
That scales with safety.—By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather, which stirs not:

*Will.—"Fear me," i.e., make me afraid.—*Ladybird, i.e., one with small birds: monster.—*As the year," i.e., as if the year,.—*A historical fact. It happened Oct. 12, 1411.—*Slow; soothing.—*Gates.—A biggin was a head-band of coarse cloth: so called because worn by the Beguines, an order of nuns.
Did he aspire, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move.—My gracious lord! my father!—
This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep,
That from this golden ringol hath divor'd
So many English kings. Thrice due from me
Is tears and heavy sorrows of the blood,
Which nature, love, and filial tenderness,
Shall, O dear father! pay thee plentifully:
My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me.—Lo! here it sits.

[Putting it on his head.]
Which heaven shall guard; and put the world's whole
Into one giant arm, it shall not force [strength
This lineal honor from me. This from thee
Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me. [Exit
K. Hen. Warwick! Gloster! Clarence!

Re-enter Warwick, and the rest.

Cla. Dost the king call?
War. What would thy majesty? How fares thy grace?
[Enter Lords.]
K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, my
Cla. We left the prince, my brother, here, my
Who undertook to sit and watch by you. [liege,
K. Hen. The prince of Wales? Where is he?
He is not here. [let me see him:
War. This door is open; he is gone this way.
P. Humph. He came not through the chamber where we staid.
[My pillow?
K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.
K. Hen. The prince hath taken it hence:—go,
Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose [seek him out.
My sleep my death?—
Find him, my lord of Warwick; chide him hither.
[Exit Warwick.

This part of his conjoins with my disease,
And helps to end me.—See, sons, what things you are;
How quickly nature falls into revolt,
When gold becomes her object.
For this the foolish over-careful fathers
Have brooked their sleep with thoughts,
Their brains with care, their bones with industry:
For this they have engrossed and pit'd up
The chamber'd heaps of strange and heavy gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts, and martial exercises;
When, like the bee, tolling from every flower
The virtuous sweets,
Our thighs pack'd with wax, our mouths with honey,
We bring it to the hive, and, like the bees,
Are murmer'd for our pains. This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the ending father.—

Re-enter Warwick.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long,
Till his friend's sickness hand! determin'd me?
War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks;
With such a deep demeanor in great sorrow,
That tyranny, which never quaff'd but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd th' knife
With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.
K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter Prince Henry.

Lo, where he comes.—Come hither to me, Harry.—
Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.
[Exit Clarence. prince Humphrey, Lords, &c.
P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak again.

K. Hen. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that
I stay too long by thee, I weary thee. [thought:
Dost thou so hunger for mine empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honors
Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!
Suen but a little; for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind,
That it will quickly drop: my day is set.
Thou hast stol'n that, which, after some few hours,
Were thine without offence, and at my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation:
Thy life did manifest thou lov'dst me not,
And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it.
Thou hidst a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life.
What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?
Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear.
That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.
Let all the tears that should bedew my heart,
Be drops of balm to sanctify thy head;
Only that I knew not with forgotten parts
Give that which gave thee life unto the worms.
Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form.
Harry the fifth is crown'd!—Up, vanity!
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence;
And to the English court assemble now,
From every region, ape of idleness!
Now vigorous combats, purge you of your scum:—
Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dance,
Revel the night, rob, murder, and commit
The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?
Be happy, he will trouble you no more:
England shall double glad his treble guilt,
England shall give him office, honor, might;
For the fifth Harry from curb'd licence plucks
The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
Shall flesh his tooth in every innocent.
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O! thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants.
P. Hen. O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears,
The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke, and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And He that wears the crown immortal,
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more
Than as your honor, and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
Which my most true and inward duteous spirit
Teacheth, this prostrate and exterior bending.
Heaven witness with me, when I here came in,
And found no course of breath within your majesty,
How cold it struck my heart! if I do feign,
O! let me in my present wilderness die
And never live to show th' incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed.
Coming to look on you, thinking you dead,
And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,
I spake unto the crown, as having sense,
Ing, And thus upbraided it: "The care on thee depend-
Hath fed upon the body of my father;
Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worth of gold.
Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,

" Ringol," i. e., circle.—" Tolling," i. e., taking toll.—
* Accumulations,—* Exeunt.
Preserving life in medicine a potable:
But thou, most fine, most honor'd, most renown'd,
Hast cut thy bearer up." Thus, my most royal
Accusing it, I put it on my head;
To try with it, as with an enemy
That had before my face murder'd my father,
The quarrel of a true inheritor:
But if it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride;
If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
Did, with the least affectation of a welcome,
Give entertainment to the weight of it,
Let God for ever keep it from my head,
And make me as the poorest wassail is,
That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!

K. Hen. O my son!
God put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou night'st win the more thy father's love,
Pleasing so wisely in excuse of it.
Come hither, Harry; sit thou by my bed,
And hear, I think, the very latest counsel
That ever I shall breathe. God knows, my son,
By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,
I met this crown; and I myself know well
The troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
Better opinion, better confirmation;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. It seem'd in me,
But as an honor snatch'd with boisterous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistance's;
Which daily grew to quarrel, and to bloodshed,
Wounding supposed peace. All these bold fears,
Thou seest, with peril I have answered;
For all my reign hath been but as a scene
Acting that argument, and now my death
Changes the mode: for what in me was purchase,
Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort;
So, thou the garland wear'st as successively,
Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough; since griefs are green,
And all my friends, which thou must make thy friends,
Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out;
By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose power I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd. Which to avoid,
I cut some off; and had a purpose now
To lead out many to the Holy Land,
Lest rest, and lying still, might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,
Be it thy course to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne out,
May waste the memory of the former days.
More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
How I came by the crown, O God, forgive,
And grant it may with thee in true peace live!

P. Hen. My gracious liege,
You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;
Thenplain, and right, must my possession be:
Which I, with more than with a common pain,
Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter Prince John of Lancaster, Warwick,
Lords, and Others.

K. Hen. Look, look, here comes my John of Lan-

P. John. Health, peace, and happiness, to my royal

K. Hen. And thou bring'st me happiness, and peace, on John;

But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, wither'd trunk: upon thy sight,
My worldly business makes a period.
Where is my lord of Warwick?

P. Hen. My lord of Warwick!

K. Hen. Dost any name particular belong
Unto the lodging where I first did swoon?

Wer. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord.

K. Hen. Land be to God! — even there my life must end.

It hath been prophesied to me many years,
I should not die but in Jerusalem,
Which vainly I supposed the Holy Land.

But, bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie:
In that Jerusalem shall Harry die.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

Enter Shallow, Falstaff, Bardolph, and Page.

Shal. By cock and 'pie, sir, you shall not away to-night.—What, Davy, I say!

Fal. You must excuse me, master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excused.—Why, Davy!

Enter Davy.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy, Davy, —let me see, Davy; let me see:—yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus; those I precepts cannot be served: and, again, sir,—shall we saw the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook; are there no young pigeons?

Davy. Yes, sir.—Here is, now, the smith's countenance for shoeing, and plough irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and paid.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had:—and, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the suck he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. He shall answer it.—Some pigeons, Davy; a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little kickshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yes, Davy. I will use him well. A friend 'tis court is better than a penny in purse. Use his men well, Davy, for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back-bitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well conceited, Davy. About thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Wincet against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against

2 "Cock and pie" was ancienly a common substitute for an oath.—Warrants.— Cast up; computed.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.

ACT V.

Enter Prince John, Prince Humphrey, Clarence, Westmoreland, and Others.

Warr. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry: O! that the living Harry had the temper of him, the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places, that must strike sail to spirits of vile sort.

Ch. Just. Peace be with him that hath made Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier.

P. Humph. O! good my lord, you have lost a friend, indeed.

And I dare swear, you borrow not that face of seeming sorrow: it is, sure, your own. [find, P. John. Though no man be assured what grace to you stand in costliest expectation: I am the sorrier; 'twould, 'twere otherwise.

Cla. Well, you must now speak sir John Falstaff fair, Which swims against your stream of quality.

Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honor. Led by th' impartial conduct of my soul; And never shall you see, that I will beg A ragg'd and forestal'd remission. If truth and upright innocency full me, I'll to the king, my master, that is dead, And tell him who hath sent me after him.

Warr. Here comes the prince.

Enter King Henry V.

Ch. Just. Good morrow, and heaven save your majesty!

King. This new and gorgeous garment, majesty, Sits not so easy on me as you think.—Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear: This is the English, not the Turkish court; Not Amurath and Amurath's son, But Harry Harry. Yet be sad, good brothers, For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you: Sorrow so royally in you appears, That I will deeply put the fashion on, And wear it in my heart. Why then, be sad; But entertain no more of it, good brothers, Than a joint burden laid upon us all. For me, by heaven, I bid you be assured, I'll be your father and your brother too; Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares: Yet weep, that Harry's dead, and so will I; But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears, By number, into hours of happiness.

Ch. Just. I am assured, if I be measure'd rightly, Your majesty had no just cause to hate me. King. No! How might a prince of my great hopes forget So a joint burden laid upon me? What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison The immediate heir of England! Was this easy?

* That is a pardon obtained by beggarly supplication. — Amurath IV., emperor of the Turks, died in 1508; his second son Amurath succeeded him, had all his brothers strangled at a feast,—"Was this easy?" I. e., Was this a light offence?
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV. 403

May this be wash'd in Letho, and forgotten?
Ch. Just. I then did use the person of your father;
The image of his power lay then in me:
And, in th' administration of his law
Whiles I was busy for the commonwealth,
Your highness pleased to forget my place,
The majesty and power of law and justice,
The image of the king whom I presented,
And struck me in my very sort of judgment:
Whereon, as an offender to your father,
I gave bold way to my authority,
And did commit you. If the deed were ill,
Be you contented, wearing now the garland,
To go where you have set your decree to butt;
To pluck down justice from your awful bench;
To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person:
Nay, more; to spurn at your most royal image,
And mock your workings in a second body.
Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours,
Be it now the father, and propose a son;
Hear your own dignity so much profan'd,
See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted,
Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd,
And then imagine me taking your part,
And in your power soft silencing your son.
After this cold consideration, sentence me
And if you have a king, speak in your stated
What I have done, that misbecame your place,
My person, or my liege's sovereignty.
Well, King. You are right, justice; and you weigh this Therefore still bear the balance, and the sword;
And I do wish your honors may increase,
Till you do live to see a son of mine
Offend you, and obey you, as I did.
Shal. Shall I live to speak my father's words:
"Happy am I, that have a man so bold,
That dares do justice on my proper son;
And not less happy, having such a son,
That would deliver up his greatness so
Into the hands of justice."—You did commit me,
For which, I do commit into your hand
The wrong that you have so; and bear
With this remembrance,—that you use the same
With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit,
As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand.
You shall be as a father to my youth;
My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear,
And I will stoop and humble my intents
To your well-practis'd, wise directions.
And, prince all, believe me, I beseech you:
My father is gone wild into his grave,
For in his tomb lie my affections,
And with his spirit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectation of the world,
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down
After my seeming. The tide of blood in me
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now:
Now doth it turn, and ebb back to the sea,
Where it shall mingle with the state of floods,
And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
Now, call we our high court a parliament,
And let us choose such limits of noble counsel,
That the great body of our state may go hand in hand with the best govern'd nation;
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us,
In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.

Our coronation done, we will dispatch,
As I before remember'd, all our state:
And (God consigning to my good intents)
No prince, nor peer, shall have just cause to say,
God shorten Harry's happy life one day. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Glostress. The Garden of Shalow's House.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Silence, Bardolph, the Page, and Davy.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard; where, in an arbor, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways, and so forth.—Come, cousin Silence;—and then to bed.

Fal. 'Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren; beggars all, beggars all, sir John,—merry, good sir.—Spread, Davy; spread, Davy; well said, Davy.

Fal. Davy this Davy serves you for good uses: he is your serving-man, and your husband.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, sir John.—By the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper;—a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down.

Sil. Ah, sirrah! quoth-a, we shall
Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer, [Singing.
And praise heaven for the merry year;
When flesh is cheap and females dear,
And lusty lads roam here and there,
So merrily,
And ever among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart!—Good master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give master Bardolph some wine, Davy.

Davy. Sweet sir, sit; I'll be with you anon:—most sweet sir, sit.—Master page, good master page, sitt profance! What you want in meat, we'll have in drink. But you must bear: the heart's all.

[Exeunt.

Shal. Be merry, master Bardolph;—and my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all; [Singing.
For women are shrews, both short and tall:
'Tis merry in hall, when beards wag all,
And welcome merry shrove-tide.
Be merry, be merry, &c.

Fal. I did not think master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who I? I have been merry twice and once, ere now.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. There is a dish of leather-coats for you. [Setting them before BARDOLPH.

Shal. Davy,—

Davy. Your worship,—I'll be with you straight.

A cup of wine, sir?

Sil. A cup of wine, that's brisk and fine, [Singing.
And drink unto the lemon wine;
And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well said, master Silence.

Sil. An we shall be merry, now comes in the sweet of the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, master Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come;
I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

[Exeunt.

* A second body, i.e., a representative.  Propose a sm., i.e., imagine that you have a son.  In your state, i.e., your regal character and your good intents; warning. — Seriously; soberly. — "The state of floods," i.e., the majestic dignity of the ocean, the chief of floods.

2 Summon.—"Profanes I" (Italian) 'Much good may it do you!"—Shrove tide was the ancient carnival.—"Leather-coats," i.e., apples; commonly called rusticates.
Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome: if thou wastest any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart.—Welcome, my little thin fellow, and welcome, indeed, too. I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaliers about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,—

Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together.

Ha! will you not, master Bardolph?

Bard. Yea, sir, in a 'pottle pot.'

Shal. By God's leggins I thank thee.—The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing: be merry. [Knocking heard.] Look, who's at door there. Ha! who knocks?

Pat. Why, now you have done me right.

[To Silence, who drinks a bumper.]

Sil. Do me a right, And do me knight: 'S mingos.

Is't not so?

Pat. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so? Why, then say, an old man can do somewhat.

Re-enter Davy.

Davy. An't please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.

Pat. From the court? let him come in.—

Enter Pistol.

How now, Pistol?

Pist. Sir John, God save you, sir.

Pat. What wind blew you hither, Pistol?

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man to good. Sweet knight, the art now one of the greatest men in the realm.

Sil. By-lady, I think he be, but gentleman Puff of Barbary.

Pat. Puff?

Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base!—Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend, and helter-skelter have I rode to thee; and tidings do I bring, and lucky joyes, and golden times, and happy news of price.

Pat. I pr'ythee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. A foutra for the world, and worldlings base! I speak of Africa, and golden joyes.

Pat. O base Assyrian knight! what is thy news?

Let king Copelanus know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John. [Sings.]

Pist. Shall dagonius curs confront the Heliconis. And shall good news be baffled?

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap.

Shal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding. Pistol. Why then, hainest therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir:—if, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it, there is but two ways, either to utter them, or to conceal them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, Bezonian? speak, or die.

Shal. Under king Harry.

Pist. FARRY the fourth? or fifth?

Shal. Harry the fourth.

Pist. A foutra for thine office!—

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king;—Harry the fifth's the man. I speak the truth: When Pistol lane, do this; and fig me, like The bragging Spanish.

Pat. What! is the old king dead?

Pist. As nail in door: the things I speak are just.

Pat. Away, Bardolph! saddle my horse.—Master Robert Shallow, choose what office thou wilt in the land, 'tis thine.—Pistol, I will double charge thee with dignities.

Bard. O joyous day!—I would not take a knighthood for my fortune.

Pat. What! I do bring good news.

Pat. Carry master Silence to bed.—Master Shallow, my lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am fortune's steward. Get on thy boots: we ride all night.

—O, sweet Pistol!—Away, Bardolph. [Exit Bard.]

—Come, Pistol, utter more to me; and, withal, devise something, to do thyself good.—Boot, boot, master Shallow: I know, the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses; the laws of England are at my commandment. Happy are they which have been my friends, and woe unto my lord chief justice!—

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also!—Where is the life that late I led, say they: Why, here it is: Welcome this pleasant day! [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—London. A Street.

Enter Beadle, dragooning in Hostess Quickly, and Doll Tear-sheet.

Host. No, thou arrant knave! I would to God I might die, that I might have thee hanged; thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

I Bead. The constables have delivered her over to me, and she shall have whipping-cheer enough, I warrant her. There hath been a man or two lately killed about her.

Dol. Nut-hook, nut-hook, you lie. Come on: I'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe-visaged rascal, an the child I now go with do miscarry, thou hast better than lastest struck thy mother, thou poper-faced villain.

Host. O the Lord, that sir John were come! he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God the fruit of her womb miscarry!

I Bead. If it do, you shall have a dozen of cushions bagain; you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you both go with me, for the man is dead, that you and Pistol beat among you.

Dol. I'll tell thee what, thou thin man in a censer, I will have you as soundly swinged for this,—you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished converser! If you be not swung, I'll forewear half-kittles.

I Bead. Come, come, you she knight-errant, come. Host. O God, that right should thus overcome might! Well, of suffrance comes ease.

Dol. Come, you rogue, come: bring me to a justice. Host. Ay; come, you starved blood-hound.

Dol. Goodman death! goodman bones! Host. Thou art weary thou!

* The door-sa!it is the nail in a door on which the knocker strikes, supposed to be derived from reiterated strokes. * Nut-hook* was a term of reproach for a catch poll. * To enable her to counterfeit pregnancy. * The causes, or foreparts, had frequent reference to the skin or any part, in a barbarous kind of embossed work, to which allusion is here made. * Beadles usually wore a blue livery. * A half-kettle was kind of apron. * Anatomy; skeleton.
Dol. Come, you thin thing; come, you rascal!
1 Bead. Very well.

SCENE V.—A public Place near Westminster Abbey.

Enter two Grooms, stewing Rashes.
1 Groom. More rashes, more rashes!
2 Groom. The trumpets have sounded twice.
1 Groom. It will be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation. Despatch, despatch.

Enter Falstaff, Shallow, Pistol, Bardolph, and the Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, master Robert Shallow; I will make the king do you grace. I will leer upon him, as he comes by, and do mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. God bless thy lungs, good knight.

Fal. Go home, Pistol; stand behind me.—[To Shallow.] O! if I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal I had to shift thee.

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. It shows my earnestness of affection.
1 Pist. It doth so.

Fal. My devotion.
2 Pist. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift thee.

Shal. It is most certain.

Fal. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him: thinking of nothing else; putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis semper ideum, for absconque huiil est;
'Tis all in every part.

Shal. 'Tis so, indeed.

Pist. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver, And make thee rage.

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, Is in base durance, and contiguous prison; Haul’d thither by most mechanical and dirty hand:—[snake, Round up revenge from ebon den with fall Alecto’s; For Doll is in; Pistol speaks nought but truth.

Fal. I will deliver her.

[Shouts within, and trumpets sound.

Pist. There roar’d the sea, and trumpet-clanger sounds.

Enter King and his Train, including the Chief Justice.

Fal. God save thy grace, king Hal! my royal Hal!

Pist. The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal *imp of fame!

Fal. God save thee, my sweet boy!

King. My lord chief justice, speak to that vain man.

Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what 'tis you speak?

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!

King. I know thee not, old man: fall to thy prayers; How ill white hairs become a fool, and jester! I have long dream’d of such a kind of man, So surfeit-swoll’d, so old, and so profane; But, being awake, I do despise my dream.

Make less thy body, *hence, and more thy grace; Leave gormandizing; knew, the grave doth gape

* Child; offsprings.—* Henceforward.

For thee three wider than for other men.
Reply not to me with a fool-born jest:
Presume not that I am the thing I was;
For God doth know, so shall the world perceive,
That I have turn’d away my former self:
So will I those that kept me company.
When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots:
Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death,
As I have done the rest of my misleaders,
Not to come near our person by ten mile.
For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil;
And as we hear you do reform yourselves,
We will, according to your strength and qualities,
Give you advancement.—Be it your charge, my lord,
To see perform’d the tenor of our word.—
Set on.

[Exeunt King and his Train.

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. Ay, marry, sir John; which I beseech you
To let me have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this: I shall be sent for in private to him. Look you, he must seem thus to the world.

Fear not your advancement; I will be the man yet that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot perceive how, unless you should give me your doubles, and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard was but a color.

Shal. A color, I fear, that you will die in, sir John.

Fal. Fear no colors: go with me to dinner.

Come, lieutenant Pistol;—come, Bardolph.—I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter Prince John, the Chief Justice, Officers, &c.

Ch. Just. Go, carry sir John Falstaff to the Fleet.

Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord! —

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you soon.

Take them away.

Pist. Se fortuna me tormenta, *il sperare me consente.

P. John. I like this fair proceeding of the king’s.

He hath *intent, his wansted followers
Shall be all very well provided for:
But all are banish’d, till their conversations
Appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

[lord.

P. John. The king hath call’d his parliament, my

Ch. Just. He hath.

P. John. I will not odds, that, ere this year expire,

We hear our civil swords, and native fire,
As far as France. I heard a bird so sing,

Whose music, to my thinking, pleas’d the king.

Come, will you hence? [Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

*By one that can dance.

First my fear, then my courtesy, last my speech.
My fear is your displeasure, my courtesy my duty, and my speech to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech, now, you undo me; for what I have to say, is of mine own making, and what indeed

* "He hath intent," i. e., he designs; he purposes.
I should say, will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture.—Be it known to you, (as it is very well) I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this; which, if, like an ill venture, it come unluckily home, I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here, I promised you, I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies: bate me some, and I will pay you some; and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs? and yet that were but light payment, to dance out of your debt; but a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me; if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France: where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary; when my legs are too, I will bid you good night; and so kneel down before you; but, indeed, to pray for the queen.

* Most of the ancient interludes conclude with a prayer for the king or queen. Hence, probably, the écurie royale at the foot of modern play-bills.

CHORUS.

Enter Chorus, as Prologue.

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars: and at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentle all,
The flat unraised spirit that hath daud'd,
On this unworthy scaffold, to bring forth
So great an object: can this cockpit hold
The vasty fields of France? or may we cram

Within this wooden ³O the very ³casques,
That did affright the air at Agincourt?
O! pardon, since a crooked figure may
Attest in little place a million;
And let us, ciphers to this great account,
On your imaginary forces work.
Suppose, within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies,
Whose high and mighty fronts the perilous,
Narrow ocean parts asunder.
Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts;
Into a thousand parts divide one man,
And make imaginary puissance:
Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them

¹An allusion to the circular form of the theatre.—²Helmet.
"Imaginary forces," i.e., powers of imagination; fancy.
Printing their proud hoofs i the receiving earth;
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our kings,
Carry them here and there, jumping o'er times,
Turning th' accomplishments of many years
Into an hour-glass: for the which supply,
Admit me chorus to this history;
Who, prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. An Ante-chamber in the King's Palace.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cant. My lord, I'll tell you, that self bill is urg'd,
Which in th' eleventh year of the last king's reign
Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
But that the a scrambling and unquiet time
Did push it out of farther b question.

Ely. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?

Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,
We lose the better half of our c possessions;
For all the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us; being valued thus,—
As much as would maintain, to the king's honor,
Full fifteen earls, and fifteen hundred knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
And, to relief of lazars, and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
A hundred alms-houses, right well supplied;
And to the coffers of the king beside,
A thousand pounds by the year. Thus runs the bill.

Ely. This would drink deep.

Cant. 'Twould drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention?

Cant. The king is full of grace, and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.
The tenth nor the first left his father's body,
But that his wildness, mortified in him,
Seem'd to die too: yea, at that very moment, Consideration like an angel came,
And whipp'd th' offending Adam out of him, Leaving his body as a paradise,
'T envelop and contain celestial spirits.

Never was such a sudden scholar made:
Never came reformation in a flood,
With such a heady current, scouring faults;
Nor never Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-marving, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate: Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
You would say, it hath been all-in-all his study:
List his discourse of war, and you shall hear
A fearful battle render'd you in music: Turn him to any cause of policy,
The Gordian knot of it he will unfold,
Familiar as his garter; that, when he speaks, The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honeyed sentences;
So that the art and practic part of life

*Scrambling— Debate.— Listen to.

Must be the mistress to this d theoretic:
Which is a wonder, how his grace should glean it,
Since his addiction was to courses vain;
His e companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports;
And never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and f popularity.

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbor'd by fruit of baser quality:
And so the prince obscur'd his contemplation
Under the veil of wildness; which, no doubt,
Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night, Unseen, yet crescere in his faculty.

Cont. It must be so; for miracles are ceas'd,
And therefore we must needs admit the means,
How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,
How now for mitigation of this bill
Urg'd by the commons? Dost his majesty
Inclined to it, or no?

Cant. He seems indifferent,
Or, rather, b swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing th' exhibitors against us;
For I have made an offer to his majesty,—
Upon our spiritual convocation,
And in regard of causes now in hand,
Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
As touching France,—to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy yet
Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my lord?
Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty;
Save, that there was not time enough to hear
(Areas, his grace would fain have done)
The sever'd, and unhidden passages
Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms,
And, generally, to the crown and seat of France,
Deriv'd from Edward, his great grandfather.
Ely. What was th' impediment that broke this off?
Cant. The French ambassador upon that instant
Crav'd audience; and the hour, I think, is come,
To give no sooner hearing. Is it four o'clock?

Ely. It is.
Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy,
Which I could with a ready guess declare,
Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.
Ely. I'll wait upon you, and I long to hear it.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room of State in the Same.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Bedford, Exeter,
Warwick, Westmoreland, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious lord of Canterbury?
Exe. Not here in presence.

K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle.

Exe. 'Tis, shall we call in th' ambassador, my liege?
K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin: we would be resolv'd,
Before we hear him, of some things of weight,
That task our k thoughts, concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cant. God, and his angels, guard your sacred
And make you long become it!

* That is, His theory must have been taught by art and practice.—'Companions.—' Popularity," I. e., familiarity with the common people.—" Increasing; growing—' Inclined, not noted in him any study, and unhidden passages," I. e., the particulars, and unconcealed circumstances.— 'Task our thoughts," I. e., keep our thoughtsibus.
K. Hen. May I with right and conscience make this claim?

Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign; For in the book of Numbers is it written—
When the man dies, let the inheritance
Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag:
Look back into your mighty ancestors:
Go, my dread lord, to your great grandsire’s tomb,
From whom you claim; invoke his warlike spirit,
And your great uncle Edward the black prince,
Who on the French ground play’d a tragedy,
Making defeat on the full power of France,
Whiles his most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion’s whelp
Forge in blood of French nobility.
O noble English! that could entertain
With half their forces the full pride of France,
And let another heir claim it from the land,
All out of work, and bold for action.

Ely. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead,
And with your puissant arm renew their feats.
You are their heir, you sit upon their throne;
The blood and courage, that renowned them,
Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege
Is in the very May-morn of his youth,
Ripe for exploits, and mighty ensigns.

Exe. Your brother kings, and monarchs of the
Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know your grace hath cause, and Means, and might;
So hath your highness—never king of England
Had nobles richer, and more loyal subjects,
Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England,
And lie pavilion’d in the fields of France.

Cant. O! let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
With blood, and sword, and fire, to win your right:
In aid whereof, we of the spirit
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time
Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm t’ invade the
But lay down our proportions to defend Against the Scot; who will make road upon us
With all advantages.

Cant. They of these marches, gracious sovereign,
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the piling borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the courting

Of Charles the great. Also King Lewis the tenth,
Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied
That fair queen Isabel, his grandmother,
Was lined of the lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorain;
By the which marriage the line of Charles the great
Was reunited to the crown of France.

So that, as clear as is the summer’s sun,
King Pepin’s title, and Hugh Capet’s claim,
King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear
To hold in right and title of the female.

So do the kings of France unto this day,
Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law,
To bar your highnesses claim from the female;
And rather choose to hide them in a net,
Than amply to furbane their crooked titles

Usurp’d from you and your progenitors.

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you,
My learned lord, we pray you to proceed,
And justly and religiously unfold,
Why the law of Salique, that they have in France,
Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.
And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
That you should fashion, wreath, or bow your reading,
On which you enhance your understanding soul.

With opening titles miscreate, whose right
Suits not in native colors with the truth;
For God doth know, how many, now in health,
Shall drop their blood in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to.

Therefore, take heed how you impound our person,
How you take not proper care against of war:
We enrage you, in the name of God, take heed;
For never two such kingdoms did contend
Without much fall of blood; whose guiltless drops
Are every one a woe, a sore complaint,
’Gainst him whose wrongs give edge unto the swords
That make such waste in brief mortality.

Under this conjunction, speak, my lord,
And we will hear, note, and believe your heart,
That what you speak is in your conscience wash’d,
As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign, and you
That owe yourselves, your lives, and services,
To this imperial throne,—There is no bar
To make against your highness’ claim to France,
But this, which their progeny from Pharamond,
In terram Salicam militres non succedunt,
"No woman shall succeed in Salique land,"
Which Salique land the French unjustly glose,
To be the realm of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this law, and female bar:
Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Salique is in Germany,
Between the floods of Some and Elbe:
Where Charles the great, having subdued the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certain French;
Who, holding in disdain the German women
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establish’d then this law,—to wit, no female
Should be inheretrix in Salique land;
Which law, (I say,) as truly as I said and Sala,
Is at this day in Germany call’d Meisen.
Then doth it well appear, the Salique law
Was not devised for the realm of France;
Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred one and twenty years
After defunct of king Pharamond,
Idly suppos’d the founder of this law:
Who died within the year of our redemption
Four hundred twenty-six, and Charles the great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the river Sala in the year
Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
King Pepin, which depos’d Childerick,
Did, as heir general, being descended
Of Charibell, which was daughter to king Clothair,
Make claim and title to the throne of France.
Hugh Capet also,—who usurp’d the crown
Of Charles the duke of Lorain, sole heir male
Of the true line and stock of Charles the great,—
To 1 found his title with some shows of truth,
Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,
Convey’d himself as th’ heir to the lady Lingare,
Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son

But fear the main intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a greedy neighbor to us:
For you shall read, that my great grandfather
Never went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot on his unfurnished kingdom
Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
With ample and brim fulness of his force;
Gailing the gleaned land with hot essays,
Girding with grievous siege castles and towns;
That England, being empty of defence,
Hath shook, and trembled at th' ill neighborhood.
Cant. She hath been then more fear'd than burn'd, my liege;
For hear her but exemplified by herself:
When all her chivalry hath been in France,
And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
She hath herself not only well defended,
But taken, and impounded as a stray,
The king of Scots; whom she did send to France,
To fill king Edward's train with prisoner kings,
And make their Chronicle as rich with praise,
As is the ooze and bottom of the sea.
With sunken wreck and sunless treasuries.
West. But there's a saying, very old and true,—
"If that you will France win,
Then with Scotland first begin!"
For once the eagle, England, being in prey,
To be regarded nest that the weasel pot,
Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs;
Playing the mouse in absence of the cat,
To tear and ravish more than she can eat.
Exe. It follows then, the cat must stay at home;
Yet that is not a crush'd necessity,
Since we have locks to safeguard necessaries,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
With hope that the armed hand doth not abound,
Th' advis'd head defends itself at home;
For government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into ports, doth keep in one consent,
Congreeing in a full and natural close,
Like music.
Cant. Therefore dolo heaven divide
The state of man in divvy functions,
Setting endeavor in continual motion;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience: for so work the honey bees,
Creatures that by rule in nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom:
They have a king, and officers of state;
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home,
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad,
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds;
Which pilage they with merry march bring home
To the tentroyal of their emperor:
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singling masons building roofs of gold,
The civil citizens kneading up the honey,
The poor mechanic porters crowling in,
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate,
Their sud'dey justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,—
That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously;
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Come to one mark; as many ways unite;
As many fresh streams meet in one salt sea;
As many lines close in the dial's center;
So may a thousand actions, once afoot;
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore, to France, my liege.
Divide your happy England into four;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withall shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thirce such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried, and our nation lose
The name of hardness, and policy.
K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from Dauphin. [Exit an Attendant.
Now are we well resolv'd and, by God's help,
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,
France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe,
Or break it all to pieces: or there we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms,
Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them;
Either our history shall, with a full mouth,
Speak freely of our acts, or else our grave.
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worship'd with a waxen epigraph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin; for, we hear,
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.
Amb. Many please your majesty, to give us leave
Freely to render what we have in charge:
Or shall we sparingly show you far off,
The Dauphin's meaning, and our embassy?
K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king,
Unto whose grace our passion is as subject,
As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons;
Therefore, with frank and with uncurbed plainness
Tell us the Dauphin's mind.
Amb. Thus then, in few.
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, Edward third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says, that you savor too much of your youth,
And bids you be advis'd, there's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.
He therefore sends you, meet for your spirit,
This tun of treasure; and, in lieu of this,
Desires you, let the dukedoms, that you claim,
Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speaks.
K. Hen. What treasure, uncle?
Exe. Tennis-balls, my liege. [Opening it.
K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasant with us.
His present, and your pains, we thank you for:
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard.
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a wrangler,
That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chahnes. And we understand him well,
How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what we made of them.
We never val'd this poor seat of England,
And therefore, living hence, did give ourselves
To barbarous licence; as 'tis ever common,
That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the Dauphin,—I will keep my state;

Dominion.—A galliard was an ancient dance.—The hazard is a place in the tennis-court, into which the ball is sometimes struck.—A term at tennis.—This poor seat, i. e., the throne.—Living hence, i. e., withdrawing from the court.
Scene I.
KING HENRY V.
411

Be like a king, and show my soul of greatness,
When I do rouse me in my throne of France:
For there I have laid by my majesty,
And plooted like a man for working days,
But I will rise there with all a glory,
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.
And tell the pleasant prince, this mock of his
Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones; and his soul
Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down,
And all that yet ungot, and, if it will,
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.
This but lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name,
Tell you the Dauphin, I am coming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightful hand in a well hallow'd cause.
So, get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin,
His jest will save but of shallower heart.
When thousands weep, more than did laugh at it.—
Convey them with safe conduct.—Fare you well.

[Exeunt Ambassadors.

Exe. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.
Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour,
That may give furtherance to our expedition;
For we have now no thought in us but France,
Save those to God, that run before our business.
Therefore, let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected, and all things thought upon,
That may with seasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings; for, God before,
We'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door.
Therefore, let every man now task his thought,
That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt.

Scene II.

Enter CHORUS.

Chor. Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dailliness in the wardrobe lies:
Now strife the armourers, and honor's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man.
They sell the pasture now to buy the horse;
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English mercuries:
For now sits Expectation in the air:
And hides a sword, from hills unto the point,
With crowns imperial, crowns, and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French, advis'd by good intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear, and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.
O England! model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,
What might'th ouf to do, that honor would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural.
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns, and three corrupted men,
One, Richard earl of Cambridge, and the second,
Henry lord Scroop of Masham, and the third,
Sir Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland,

* Bails of stone supplied the place of bullets, when ordnance was first used.

Have, for the guilt of France, (O guilt, indeed!)
Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France:
And by their hands this grace of kings must die,
If hell and treason hold their promises,
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on; and well digress:
Th' abuse of distance,' and so force a play.
The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene
Is now transported, gentle, to Southampton.
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit,
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
We'll not offend one stomach with our play.
But, till the king come forth, and not till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.

[Exit.

Enter Nym and Bardolph.

Bard. Well met, corporal Nym.

Nym. Good morrow, lieutenant Bardolph.

Bard. What, are ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little; but when time shall serve, there shall be smites;—but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink, and hold out mine iron. It is a simple one: but what thought I will toast cheese, and it will endure cold as another man's sword will; and there's an end.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends, and we'll be all three sworn brothers to France: let it be so, good corporal Nym.

Nym. 'Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my crest, that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly; and, certainly, she did you wrong, for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell; things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may save their threats about them that time, and some say knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistol and Mrs. Quickly.

Bard. Here comes ancient Pistol, and his wife.—Good corporal, be patient here.—How now, mine host Pistol?

Pist. Base tike, call'st thou me host?

Now, by this hand I swear, I scorn the term;
Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Quick. No, by my troth, not long: for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight. [Nym draws his sword.] O well-a-day, lady! if he be not 'chner now!—we shall see willful adultery and murder committed.

Bard. Good Lieutenant—good corporal, offer nothing here.

Nym. Fish!

Pist. Fish for thee, Iceland dog; thou prink-ear'd cur of Iceland! — [Draws his sword.]

Quick. Good corporal Nym, show thy valor, and put up your sword.

--Gold.—"My task," I e., my determination,—"I cannot tell," i. e., I know not what to say or think of it.—A tike was a large dog, now called a mongrel.
Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus. 1
Pist. Solus, outrageous dog! O viper vile!
The solus in thy mouth most marvellous face;
The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat,
And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, 2 perdy;
And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!
I do retort the solus in thy bowels:
For I can 3 take, and Pistol's cock is up,
And flashing fire will follow.
Nym. No, I am not
Barbarous; you cannot conjure me.
I have an humor to knock you indifferently well.
If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that's the humor of it.
Pist. O bragart vile, and damned furious wight!
The grave doth gape, and dating death is near;
Therefore 4 exhale.
Bard. Hear me; hear me what I say:—he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier.
[Draws.
Pist. An oath of mickle might, and fury shall abate.
Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give;
Thy spirits are most tall.
[ 5 Pistol and Nym shoothe their swords.
Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms; that is the humor of it.
Pist. Coupe le gorge, that's the word?—I defy y thee again.
O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?
No! to the spital go,
And from the powdering tub of infamy
Fetch forth the hazar kite of Crescids's kind,
Doll Tear-sheet by name, and her consequence:
I have, and I will hold, the 6 quondam
For the only she; and—pausca, there's enough.
Enter the Boy.
Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master, and your hostess.—He is very sick, and would to bed.—Good Bardolph, put thy face between his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pun: 7 faith
he's very ill.
Bard. Away, you rogue.
Quick. By my troth, he'll yield the crew a puding one of these days: the king has killed his heart.—Good husband, come home presently.
[Exeunt Mrs. Quickly and Boy.
Pist. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together. Why, the devil, should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?
Pist. Let floods o'erswell, and floods for food howl on!
Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?
Pist. Base is the slave that pays.
Nym. That now I will have; that's the humor of it.
Pist. As manhood shall compound. Push home.
[ 8 Draw again.
Pist. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust,
I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.
[Course.
Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me too?
Pist. Pythyon, put up.
Nym. I shall have of my eight shillings, I won of you at betting?
Pist. A noble shalt thou have, and present pay:
And liquor likewise will I give to thee,
And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood:
I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me.
Is not this just? for I shall suther be Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.
[Sheathes his sword.
Give me thy hand.
Nym. I shall have my noble?
Pist. In cash most justly paid.
Nym. Will then, that's the humor of it.
[They shake hands.
Re-enter Mrs. Quickly.
Quick. As ever you come of women, come in quickly to sir John. Ah, poor heart! he is so shaked of a burning quotidian tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.
Nym. The king hath run bad humors on the knight,
that's the even of it.
Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right:
His heart is fractured and corrodere.
Pist. Let us condole the knight, for lambkins we will live.
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Southampton. A Council-Chamber.
Enter Exeter, Bedford, and Westmoreland.
Bed. 'Fore God, his grace is bold to trust these traitors.
Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.
West. How smooth and even they do bear them—
As if allegiance in their bosoms sat,
[elves,
Crowned with the faith, and constant loyalty.
Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend,
By interception which they dream not of.
Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,
Whom he hath dulf'd and cloyd' with gracious favors;
That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell
His sovereign's life to death and treachery!
Trumpets sound. Enter King Henry, Scoot,
Cambridge, Grey, Lords, and Attendants.
K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will abroad.
My lord of Cambridge,—and my kind lord of Marshy
And you, my gentle knight, give me your thoughts:
Think you not, that the powers we bear with us
Will cut their passage through the force of France,
Doing the execution, and the act,
For which we have in 9 head assembled them?
Scoot. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.
[Exeunt.
K. Hen. I doubt not that: since we are well per
We carry not a heart with us from hence,
That grows not in a fair consent with ours;
Nor need not one behind, that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us.
Cam. Never was monarch better fear'd, and lov'd,
Than is your majesty: 2 there's not a subject,
That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness
Under the sweet shild of your government.
Grey. True: those that were your father's enemies,
Have steep'd their galls in honey, and do serve you
With hearts = create of duty and of zeal.
K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thank—
And shall forget the office of our hand,
[Fulness,
Sooner than 3 quittance of desert and merit,
According to the weight and worthiness.
Scoot. So service shall with steel'd sinews toil,
And labor shall refresh itself with hope,
Exeunt.
K. Hen. "In head," i. e., in forces. = Agreement; accord.
= "Create," i. e., compounded; made up. = Recompense.

1) "solus"  2) "perdy"  3) "take"  4) "exhale"  5) "quondam"  6) "pausca"  7) "fath"  8) "compound"  9) "head"
KING HENRY V.

To do your grace incessant services.

K. Hen. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter,
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That railing against our person: we consider,
It was excess of wine that set him on;
And, on *our more *advice, we pardon him.
Scoope. That's mercy, but too much security:
Let him be punish'd, sovereign; lest example
Breed by his sufferance more of such a kind.
Com. So may your highness, and yet punish too.
Scoope. To show great mercy, if you give him life
After the taste of much correction.
K. Hen. Ains! your too much love and care of me
Are heavy boisons 'gainst this poor wretch.
If little faults, proceeding on *distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and disgusted.

Scene II.

Thou hast brought us to a thought, though Cambridge, Scoope, and Grey, in their dear
And tender preservation of our person, care,
Would have him punish'd. And now to our French
Who are the *state commissioners?

Com. I one, *my lord:
Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.
Scoope. So did I, *my lord:-
Grey. And I, my royal sovereign.
K. Hen. Then, Richard, earl of Cambridge, there is yours:—
[knight,
There yours, lord Scoop of Marsham:— and, sir
Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:
Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.—

They read and start.

My lord of Westmoreland, and uncle Exeter.
We will absent to-night.—Why, how now, gentlemen!

What see you in those papers, that you lose
So much complexion?—look ye, how they change:
Their checks are paper.—Why, what read you there,
That hath so cowardly and chas'd your blood
Out of appearance?

Com. I do confess my fault,
And do submit you to your highness' mercy.
Grey. Scoope. To which we all appeal.
K. Hen. The mercy that was *quick in us but late,
By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd:—
You must not care, for shame, to talk of mercy;
For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,
As though you were on your masters worrying you.—
See you, my princes, and my noble peers,
These English monsters! My lord of Cambridge here,—
You know, how apt our love was to accord
To furnish him with all apperitions
Belonging to his honor; and this man
Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd,
And sworn unto the practices of France,
To kill us here in Hampton: to the which,
This knight, no less for bounty bound to us
Than Cambridge is, hath likewise sworn.—But O!
What shall I say to thee, lord Scoop? thou cruel,
Ingratitude, savage, and inhuman creature!
Thou that did'st bear the key of all my counsels,
That knewst the very bottom of my soul,
That almost might'st have rov'd me into gold,
Would'st thou have practis'd on me for thy use?
May it be possible, that foreign hire
Could out of thee extract one spark of evil,
That might annoy my finger? *'tis so strange,

That, though the truth of it stands off as *gross
As black and white, my eye will scarcely see it.
Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke-devils sworn to either's purpose,
Working so *grossly in a natural *enmity,
That admiration did not *swoop at them:
But thou, *gainst all proportion, didst bring in Wonder to wait on treason, and on murder:
And whatsoever cunning fiend it was,
That wrought upon thee so preposterously,
Had got the voice in hell for excellence,
And other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation
With patches, colors, and with forms, being fetch'd
From glistening semblances of piety:
But he that *temper'd thee bade thee stand up,
Gave thee no instance why thou should'st do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.
If that same demon, that hath gild'd thee thus,
Should with his lion gait walk the whole world,
He might return to vasy *Tartar back,
And tell the legions—I can never win
A soul so easy as that Englishman's.
O, how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of *affiance! Show men duteous!
Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned?
Why, so didst thou: come they of noble family?
Why, so didst thou: seem they violent?
Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet?
Free from gross passion, or of mirth or anger;
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood;
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest *complement;
Not working with the eye without the ear,
And but in purged judgment trusting neither?
Such, and so fully *indulged, didst thou seem;
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
To mark the full-fraught man, and best *indulged,
With some suspicion. I will weep for thee,
For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
Another fall of man.—Their faults are open:
Arrest them to the answer of the law,
And God acquit them of their practices.

Exe. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard earl of Cambridge.
I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry lord Scoop, of Marsham.
I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland.
Scoope. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd,
And I repent my fault more than my death;
But which I beseech your highness to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.

Com. For me,—the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive,
The sooner to effect what I intended:
But God be thanked for prevention;
Which I in *suffrance heartily will rejoice.
Behold the God that made us to be so refined,
*Endowed; gifted:—"Which I in suffrance," i.e., at which prevention, in suffering, I will heartily rejoice.

* "Sends off as gross," i.e., as apparent.—*Pitifully;
evidently.—"That admiration did not whoop at them," i.e., that excited no exclamation of surprise.—"That temper'd thee," i.e., that *ruled thee.—*Tartarus.—"Of affiance," i.e., of the mutual confidence of man and man.—
Behavior, etc.—*"Finer are these," i.e., so refined.—*Endowed; gifted:—"Which I in suffrance," i.e., at which prevention, in suffering, I will heartily rejoice.
Jain'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers
Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death;
Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt,
And his whole kingdom unto desolation.
Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you have sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
Poor miserable wretches, to your death;
The taste whereof, God, of his mercy, give you
Patience to endure, and true repentance
Of all your dear offences.—Bear them hence.

[Exeunt Conspirators, guarded.

Now, lords, for France; the enterprise whereof
Shall be to you, as us, like glories.
We doubt not of a fair and lucky war,
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous treason, lurking in our way
To hinder our beginnings: we doubt not now,
But every rub is smoothed on our way.
Then, forth, dear countrymen: let us deliver
Our patience in the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition.
Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance:
No king of England, if not king of France.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—London. Mrs. QUICKLY's House, in Eastcheap.

Enter Pistol, Mrs. QUICKLY, NYM, BARDOLPH, and Boy.

Quick. Pr'ythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yeam.—

Bardolph, be bythie; Nym, raise thy vacant veins;
Boy, bristle thy courage up; for Falstaff he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore.

Bard. Would I were with him, where'some'ry'er he is, either in heaven, or in hell.

Quick. Nay, sure, he's not in hell: he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom.

'A made a fine cu'd and went away, as it had been any Christian child; 'a parted ev'ry just between two days, and one ev'ry third between six.
For after I saw him tumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end, I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen on a table of green frieze. How now, sir John? quoth 1: what, man! be of good cheer. So 'a cried out:—God, God, God! three or four times: now I, to comfort him, bid him, 'a should not think of God; I hoped, there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet.
So, 'a bade me lay more clothes on his feet: I put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward, and upward, and all was cold as any stone.

Nym. They say, he cried out of sack.

Quick. Ay, that 'a did.

Bard. And of women.

Quick. Nay, that 'a did not.

Boy. Yes, that 'a did; and said, they were devils incarnate.

Quick. 'A could never abide carnation; 'twas a color he never liked.

Boy. A said once, the devil would have him about women.

Quick. 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle women;
but then he was rheumatic, and talked of the whore of Babylon.

Boy. Do you not remember, 'a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose, and 'a said it was a black soul burning in hell?

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone that maintained that fire: that's all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let's away.—My love, give me thy lips
Look to my chattels, and my movables:
Let senses rule; the word is, "Pitch and pay!"

Trust none;

For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes,
And bold-fist is the only dog, my duck:
Therefore, carete be thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy 4 crystals.—Yoke-fellows in arms,
Let us to France: like horse-leeches, my boys,
To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

Boy. And that is but unwholesome food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farewell, hostess.

Quick. What! cannot kiss, that is the humor of it; but alien.

Pist. Let housewifery appear: keep close, I thee command.

Quick. Farewell; adieu. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—France. A Room in the French
King's Palace.

Flourish. Enter the French King attended; the Dolphin, the Duke of Burgundy, the Constable, and Others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power upon us,
And more than carefully it us concerns,
To answer royally in our defences.
Therefore the dukes of Berry, and of Bretagne,
Of Brabant, and of Orléans, shall make forth,
And you, prince Dauphin, with all swift despatch,
To line, and new repair, our towns of war
With men of courage, and with means defendant:
For England is his apprehensions now in a fire,
As wasters to the sucking of a gulp.
It fits us, then, to be as provident
As fear may teach us, out of late examples
Left by the fatal and neglected English
Upon our fields.

Dut. My most redoubted father,
It is most meet we war us 'gainst the foe;
For peace itself should not so * dull a kingdom,
(Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question)
But that defences, musters, preparations,
Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected,
As were a war in expectation.
Therefore, I say, 'tis meet we all go forth,
To view the sick and feeble parts of France:
And let us do it with no show of fear;
No, with no more, than if we heard that England
Were busied with a Whitson morris dance:
For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Con. O prince Dauphin!
You are too much mistaken in this king
Question your grace the late ambassadors,
With what great state he heard their embassy,
How well supplied with noble counsellors,

* Mrs. Quickly means luscious.—"Thy 4 crystals," i. e. dry thyme eyes.—* Dull, i. e., render torpid, inactive.
How modest in exception, and, withal, how terrible in constant resolution, and you shall find, his vanities forspent were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, covering discretion with a coat of folly; as gardeners do with ordure hide those roots that shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable; but I think it so, it is no matter: In cases of defence, 'tis best to weigh the enemy more mightily than he seems, so the proportions of defence are fill'd; which, of a weak and nigardy projection, doth like a miser, spoil his coat with scattering a little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we king Harry strong; and, princes, look, you strongly arm to meet him. The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us, and he is breed out of that bloody strain, that haunted us in our familiar paths; witness our too much memorable shame, when Creesy battle fatally was struck, and all our princes captiv'd by the hand of that black name, Edward the black prince of Wales; whilst that his mighty sire, on mountain standing, up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun, saw his heroidal seed, and smil'd to see him, Mangie the work of nature, and deface the patterns that by God, and by French fathers, to be true to, and do the same—

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Harry King of England do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience. Go, and bring them.

[Exeunt Mess. and certain Lords.]

You see, this chace is hotly follow'd, friends.

Dau. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward dogs must spend their months, when what they seem to threaten runs far before them. Good my sovereign, take up the English short, and let them know of what a monarchy you are the head:

Self-love, my liege, is not so vilo a sin as self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with Exeunt and Train.

Fr. King. From our brother of England! Exe. From him; and thus he greets your majesty. He wills you, in the name of God Almighty, that you divest yourself, and lay apart the borrow'd glories, that by gift of heaven, by law of nature, and of nations, long to him, and to his heirs; namely, the crown, and all wide-stretched honors that pertain, by custom and the ordinance of times, unto the crown of France. That you may know, 'tis no sinister, nor no awkward claim, pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days, nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd; he sends you this most memorable line,

[Giving a pedigree.

In every branch truly demonstrative; willing you overlook this pedigree, and when you find him evenly deriv'd, from his most fam'd of famous ancestors,

Edward the third, he bids you then resign your crown and kingdom, indirectly held from him, the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows?

Exe. Bloody constraint; for if you hide the crown even in your hearts, there will he take for it: Therefore, in fierce tempest is he coming, in thunder, and in earthquake, like a Jove, that, if requiring fail, the storm will be strong, and bids you, in the bowels of the Lord, deliver up the crown, and to take mercy on the poor souls, for whom this hungry war opens his vasty jaws; and on your head turning the widows' tears, the orphans' cries, the dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans, for husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers, that shall be swallowed in this controversy, this is his claim, his threatening, and my message; unless the Dauphin be in presence here, to whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this farther: To-morrow shall you bear our full intent back to our brother of England.

Dau. For the Dauphin, I stand here for him: what to him from England?

Exe. Scorn, and defiance, slight regard, contempt, and any thing that may not misbecome the mighty sender, doth he prize you at. Thus says my king: and, if your father's highness do not, in grant of all demands at large, sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty, he'll call you to so hot an answer of it, that caves and wondrous vaul'tages of France shall bide your trespass, and return your mock in second accent of his ordinance.

Dau. Say, if my father render fair return, it is against my will; for I desire nothing but odds with England: to that end, as matching to his youth and valour, I did present him with the Paris balls.

Exe. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it, were it the mistress court of mighty Europe, and, be assur'd, you'll find a difference, as we his subjects have in wonder found, between the promise of his greener days, and these he masters now. Now he weighs time, even to the utmost grain; that you shall read in your own losses, if he stay in France. [Full.

Fr. King. To-morrow shall you know our mind at Exe. Despatch us with all speed, lest that our king come here himself to question our delay, for he is footed in this land already. [Conditions. Fr. King. You shall be soon despatch'd with fair a night is but small breath, and little pause, to answer matters of this consequence.

ACT III.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Thus with imagin'd wing our swift scene flies, in motion of no less celerity Than that of thought. Suppose, that you have seen The well-appointed king at Hampton pier Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet With silken streamers the young Phoebus fanning: Play with your fancies, and in them behold, Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing; Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give

Choir. Let me to France with a mighty step.
SCENE I.—France. Before Harlequin.

ALARUM. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Grosier, and Soldiers, with Scaling Ladders.

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more;
Or close the wall up with our English dead!
In peace, there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillness, and humility;
But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favor'd rage;
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head,
Like the brass cannon; let the brow o'erwhelm it,
As fearfully, as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and gout his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit.
To his full height.—On, on, you noble English!
Whose blood is as the red, red roses,
That frett out from fathom of war-proof.
Fathers, that, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought.
And shew'd their swords for lack of argument.
Dishonor not your mothers: now attest,
That those whom you call'd fathers did beget you.
Be coy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war.—And you, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your pasture: let us swear
That you are worth your breeding; which I doubt not,
For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble harte in your eyes,
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot:
Follow your spirit; and upon this charge,

Cry—God for Harry! England! and Saint George!

[Exeunt. Alarum, and Chambers go off.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Bord. On, on, on, on, on! to the breach, to the breach!

Nym. Pray thee, corporal, stay: the knockers are too hot; and for mine own part, I have not a case of lives: the humor of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.

[Abound.

Pist. The plain song is most just, for honors do knock.

Boy. Would I were in an aloofhouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.

Pist. And I:

If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But dipter would I now.

Boy. And as duly,
But not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.

[Enter FLEELLEN.

Fle. Up to the breach, you dogs! avaint, you cullets!

[Driving them forward.

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!
Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage;
Abate thy rage, great duke!—[cluck!

Good lawcock, bate thy rage; use lenity, sweet Nym. These be good humors!—your honor wins bad humors.

[FLEELLEN drives out Nym, Pistol, and Bardolph.

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these three swashbucklers. I am boy to them all three, but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me; for, indeed, three such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph, he is white-livered, and red-faced; by the means whereof, 'a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol, he hath a killing tongue, and a quiet sword; by the means whereof 'a breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym, he hath heard, that men of few words are the best men; and therefore he seems to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are match'd with as few good deeds; for 'a never broke any man's head but his own, and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal anything, and call it purchase. Bardolph stole a lute-case; here it twelve leagues, and sold it for three halfpence. Nym and Bardolph are sworn brothers in filching, and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I knew by that piece of service the men would carry fourcoats. They would have me as familiar with men's pockets, as their gloves or their hammer-clips; which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket, to put into mine, for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them, and seek some better service: their villainy goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up. [Exit?"
Enter Macmorris and Jamy, at a distance.

Gov. Here 'a come; and the Scots captain, captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous fabulous gentleman, that is certain; and of great expedition, and knowledge in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say, guile day, captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, great captain James. Good king, now, Captain Macmorris! have you quit the mines? have the pioneers given o'er?

Mac. By Christ, la, tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my hand, I swear, and my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blowed up the town, so Christ save me, la, in an hour. Of! tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish ill done.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I perceive you now will you vouchsafe me, you look, a few disquisitions with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the wars, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly, to satisfy my opinion, and partly, for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline: that is the point.

Mac. I think, by not being very guile, guile dear, guile captain both: and I saithe quit you with guile love, as I may pick occasion; that saith I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Christ save me. The day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes; it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet calls us to the breach, and we talk, and, by Christ, do not, 'tis shame for us all: God save me, 'tis shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand: and there is threats to be cut, and works to be done, and there isht nothing done, so Christ saithe me.

Jamy. By the mass, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, aile do guile service, or aile lie the grand for it; ay, or go to death; and aile pay me, I will be as merry as I may, the least I can do that is the brief and the long. Marry, I was full fain heard some question 'tween you tway.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, I think, you look, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—

Mac. Of my nation! What ish my nation? ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knife, and a rascal?

What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

Flu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, captain Macmorris, peradventure, I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as good a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of wars, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself; so Christ saithe me, I will cut off your head.

Gow. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Gow. The town sounds a parley.

Flu. Captain Macmorris, when there is more better opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of wars; and there is an end.

* Requite; answer.

SCENE III.—The Same. Before the Gates of Harfleur.

Enter King Henry, his Train and Forces. The Governor and some Citizens on the Walls.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town? This is the latest parle we will admit: Therefore, to our best mercy give yourselves, Or, like to men proud of destruction, Defy us to our worst; for, as I am a soldier, A name that in my thoughts becomes me best, If I begin the battery once again, I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur, Till in her ashes she lie buried.

The gates of mercy shall be all shut up; And the flesh'd soldier, rough and hard of heart, In liberty of bloody hand shall range With conquering wide as hell, raging like grass Your fresh fair virgins, and your flowering infants.

What is it then to me, if impious war, Army'd in flames like to the prince of fiends, Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats In desolation wide; with consecrating wide as hell, raging like grass Your fresh fair virgins, and your flowering infants.

What is't to me, when you yourselves are cause, If your pure maidens fall into the hand Of hot and forcing violence? What rein can hold licentious wickedness, When down the hill he holds his fierce career? We may as boistrous spend our vain command Upon their enraged soldiers in their spoil, As send precepts to the Leviathan To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur, Take pity of your town, and of your people, Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command; Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds Of heady murder, spoil, and villainy. If not, why, in a moment look to see The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters; Your fathers taken by the silver swords, And their most reverend heads dash'd to the wall; Your naked infants spitted upon pikes, Whiles the mad mothers with their howls confus'd Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtered men. What say you? will you yield, and this avoid, Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Gow. Our expectation hath this day an end.

The Dauphin, whom of succor we entreated, Returns us that his powers are not yet ready To raise so great a siege. Therefore, great king,
We yield our town and live to thy soft mercy.
Enter our gates; dispose of us, and ours,
For we no longer are defensible.

K. Hen. Open your gates!—Come, uncle Exeutor,
Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain,

\[ Gates opened. \]
And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:
Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,
The winter coming on, and sickness growing
Upon our soldiers, we will retire to Calais.
To-night in Harfleur will we be your guest;
To-morrow for the march are we 2 addrèss'd.

\[ Flourish. The King, &c. enter the Town. \]

SCENE IV.—Rouen. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Katharine and Alice.

Alice. Alice, tu as esté en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un peu, madame.

Kath. Je te prie, m'enseignez; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appellez vous la main, en Angleis?

Alice. La main? elle est appelée, de hand.

Kath. De hand. Et les doigts?

Alice. Alice. Les doigts? ma foi, je oublie les doigts; mais je me souviendrai. Les doigts je pense, qu'ils sont appelé de fingres; ory, de fingres.

Kath. La main, de hand; les doigts, de fingres.

Je pense, que je suis le bon coeleste, d'y gnay deux mots d'Angleis visiblement. Comment appellez vous les angles?

Alice. Les ongles? les appelons, de nails.

Kath. De nails. Écoutez; dites moi, si je parle bien: de hand, de fingres, de nails.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame; il est fort bon Angleis.

Kath. Dites moi l'Angleis pour le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coude.

Alice. De elbow.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fâche la répétition de tous les mots, que vous m'avez appris dès à présent.

Alice. El est troy difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Kath. Excusez moi, Alice; écoutez: de hand, de fingre, de nails, de arm, de bilbow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu! je m'en oublie; de dcioub. Comment appellez vous le col?

Alice. De nick, madame.

Kath. De nick: Et le menton?

Alice. De chin.

Alice. Out. Sans vostre honneur; en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi dréil que les nôtys d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne deute point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu, et en peu de temps.

Alice. Nervez vous pas déjà oublie ce que je vous ay enseigné?

Kath. Non, je récévez à vous promptement.

Alice. De hand, de fingre, de nails, madame.

Kath. De nails, de arme, de bilbow.

Alice. Sans vostre honneur, de elbow.

Kath. Ainsi dis je: de elbow, de nick, et de sin: Comment appellez vous le pied et la robe?

Alice. De foot, madame; et de con.

Je ne voudrais prononcer ces mots devant les seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde. Il faut de foot, et de con, non seulement. Je receverai autre fois ma leçon ensemble: de hand, de fingre, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de nick, de sin, de foot, de con.

Alice. Excellent, madame!

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois: allons nous à dîner.

\[ Exeunt. \]

SCENE V.—The Same. Another Room in the Same.

Enter the French King, the Dauphin, Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. Tis certain, he hath pass'd the river

Sonne.

Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord,

Let us not live in France: let us quit all.

And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Duc. O Dieu vivant! Shall a few sprays of us,
The emptying of our father's luxury,
Our scions, put in wild and savage stock,
Spirit up so suddenly into the clouds,

And overlook their graffiers?

Duc. Ha! Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman

Mort de mie! If they march along,

Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom,

To buy a 'slabbery and a dirty farm

In that 4 nook-shotten isle of Albion.

Mettele. Con. Dieu de batailles! where have they this

Is not their climate figgy, raw, and dull,

On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale,

Killing their fruit with frowns? Can sodden water,

A drench for 'a mere addrest, their barly broth,

Deccot their cold blood to such valiant heat?

And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine,

Seem frosy? O! for honor of our land,

Let us not hang like raping isicles

Upon our houses' thatch, whilst a more frosy people

Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields,

Poor we may call them, in their native lords.

Duc. By faith and honor,

Our madams mock at us, and plainly say,

Our mettle is bred oat; and they will give

Their bodies to the lust of English youth,

To new-store France with bastard warriors.

Bohm. They bid us to the English dancing-schools,

And teach 'lavolles high, and swift & corantos;

Saying, our grace is only in our hands.

And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjouy, the herald? sped him hence:

Let him greet England with our sharp defiance.

Up: princes! and, with spirit of honor, earl'd

More sharper than your swords, lie to the field.

Charles De-linethod, high constable of France;

You dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berry,

Alconson, Bradant, Bar, and Burgundy;

Jacques Chatillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,

Beaumont, Grandpré, Rouari, and Fauconberg,

Foix, Lestrelle, Boclequait, and Charlois,

High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights,

For your great & states, now quit you of great shames.

Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land.

With 'peones pointed in the blood of Harfleur,

Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow

Upon the valleys, whose low vassal seat

The Alps doth split and void his rheum upon.

Go, down upon him,—you have power enough,—

And in a captive chariot into Rouen

SCENE VI.—The English Camp in Picardy.

Enter Gower and Fluellen.

Gow. How now, captain Fluellen? come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent services confederate at the bridge.

Gow. Is the duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honor with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my living, and my uttermost power: he is not (God be praised, and pleased!) any hurt in the world; but keeps the pride most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an ancient, lieutenant, there, at the pride,—I think, in my very conscience, he is as valiant a man as Mark Antony, and he is a man of no estimation in the world; but I did see him do as gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called ancient Pistol.

Gow. I know him not.

Enter Pistol.

Flu. Here is the man.

Pist. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favors: the Noy of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise God; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier firm and sound of heart, 4
And luxom valor, hath, by cruel fate
And giddy fortune's furious fickle wheel,
That godless blind,
That stands upon the rolling restless stone,—
Flu. By your patience, ancient Pistol. Fortune is painted plaid, with a muller afore her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is plaid; and she is painted also with a wheel, to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and constant, and mutability, and variation: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls. In good truth, the poet makes a most excellent description of it: fortune is an excellent moral. [Kem;]

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and sworn on For he hath stoln a psax, and hanged must 'a be. A damned death! Let gallows gaps for dog, let man go free, And let not hemp his wine-pipe suffice. But Exeter hath given the doom of death, 4

For psax of little price: Therefore, go speak, the duke will hear thy voice, And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord, and vile reprooch:
Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee requite.

Flu. Ancient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why then, rejoice therefore.

Flu. Certainly, ancient, it is not a thing to rejoice at; for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his goat pleasure, and put him to execution, for discipline ought to be used.

Friendship
Pist. Die and be damned; and u was thy
Flu. It is well.

Pist. The fig of Spain!

[Exeunt Pistol, making the sign.

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeiter: I remember him now; a bawd; a cutpurse.

Flu. I'll assure you, a utter'd as prave words at the bridge, as you shall see in a summer's day. But it is very well, and he has spoke to me; that is well, I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue; that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself at his return into London under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in the great commanders' names, and they will learn you by rote where services were done,—at such and such a sconce, at such a breach, at such a convoy: who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on: and this they can perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new coined oats: and what a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on. But you must learn to know such sanders of the age, or else you may be marvellously mistook.

Flu. I tell you what, captain Gower: I do perceive, he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the world he is: if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. [Drum heard.] Hark you, the king is coming, and I must speak with him from the bridge.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, and Soldiers 'sick and tattered.

Flu. Got please your majesty!

K. Hen. How now, Fluellen? canst thou from the bridge?

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the pride: the French is gone off, look you, and there is gallant and most prave passages. Marry, th' athversary was have possession of the pride, but he is enforced to retire, and the duke of Exeter is master of the pride. I can tell your majesty, the duke is a prave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th' athversary hath been very great, reasonably great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church; one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all babukles, and wheelers, and knods, and flames of fire; and his lips plews at his nose, and

SCENE VII.—The French Camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Rambures,

the Duke of Orleans, the Dauphin, and others.

Con. Tut! I have the best armor of the world.

Would it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armor; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dan. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armor—

Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince I would.

Dan. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that trembles but on four pasteras.

Ca, ha! He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were air; le cheval voltant, the Pegasus, qui a les marnes de feu! When I besride him, I sorr, I am a hawk; he trots the air; the ear sings when he touches it; the basest born of his hoof is more nu-

sical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the color of the nutmeg.

Dan. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire, and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness, while his rider mounts him:

he is, indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dan. It is the prince of palfreys: his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dan. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot, from the rising of the bark to the lodging of the lamb, very desired praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as flu-

dent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all. 'Tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world (familiar to us, and unknown) to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him. I once writ a sonnet in his praise, and began thus: "Won-er of Nature!"—

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mis-stress.

Dan. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser; for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dan. He well; which is the prescript praise, and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Nay, for methought yesterday, your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dan. So, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dan. Oh! then, belike, she was old and gentle;

and you rode, like a "kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your straight trowsers."

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dan. Be warned by me, then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bags. I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dan. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armor—

Orl. You are as well provided of both as any prince I would.

Dan. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that trembles but on four pasteras.

Ca, ha! He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were air; le cheval voltant, the Pegasus, qui a les marines de feu! When I besride him, I sorr, I am a hawk; he trots the air; the ear sings when he touches it; the basest born of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the color of the nutmeg.

Dan. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire, and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness, while his rider mounts him: he is, indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call beasts.

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dan. It is the prince of palfreys: his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dan. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot, from the rising of the bark to the lodging of the lamb, very desired praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all. 'Tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world (familiar to us, and unknown) to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him. I once wrote a sonnet in his praise, and began thus: "Wonder of Nature!"—

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

Dan. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser; for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dan. He well; which is the prescript praise, and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Nay, for methought yesterday, your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dan. So, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dan. Oh! then, belike, she was old and gentle; and you rode, like a "kern of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your straight trowsers."

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dan. Be warned by me, then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bags. I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.
SCENE VII.

KING HENRY V.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears his own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la triste lasse embourbier: thou makest use of anything.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress; or any such proverbs, some little kins to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constable, the armor, that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars, or suns, upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

Dau. That may be; for you bear a many superfluous, and 'twere more honor some were away.

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismounted.

Dau. Would, I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way; but I would it were morning, for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight: I'll go arm myself. [Exit.

Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.

Ram. He longs to eat the English.

Con. I think he will eat all he kills.

Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.

Orl. He is simply the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity, and he will still be doing.

Orl. He never did harm, that I heard of.

Con. Nor will do none to-morrow: he will keep that good name still.

Orl. I know him to be valiant.

Con. I was told that, by one that knows him better than you.

Orl. What's he?

Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said, he cared not who knew it.

Orl. He needs not; it is no hidden virtue in him.

Con. By my faith, sir, but it is; never any body saw it, but his lackey: 'tis a hedged valor, and when it appears it is hate.

Orl. Ill never said well.

Con. I will cap that proverb with—there is flattery in friendship.

Orl. And I will take up that with—give the devil his due.

Con. Well placed: there stands your friend for the devil; have at the very eye of that proverb, with—a pox of the devil.

Orl. You are the better at proverbs, by how much—a fool's bolt is soon shot.

Con. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were over shot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tents.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Mess. The lord Grandpré.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman.—Would it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England!—he longs not for the dawning, as we do.

Orl. What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge.

Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.

Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armor, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures: their mastiffs are of unmatched courage.

Orl. Foolish ears! that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples. You may as well say, that's a valiant flea, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathize with the mastiffs in robustions and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives: and, then, give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.

Orl. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.

Con. Then shall we find to-morrow they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm: consider what we shall do about it. [Exeunt.

Orl. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see; by We shall have each a hundred Englishmen.

ACT IV.

Enter Chorus.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time, When creeping murmur, and the poring dark, Fills the wide vessel of the universe, From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night, The lum of either army still sounds, That the full sentinel their secret whispers, The secret whispers of each other's watch: Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames Each battle sees the other'sumber'd face: Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents, The armorers, accomplishing the knights, With busy hammers closing rivets up, Give dreadful note of preparation. The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll, And the third hour of drowsy morning's nam'd. Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul, The confidant and over-lusty French Do the low-rated English play at dice; And chide the cripple, tardy-gaited night, Who, like a fool and ugly witch, doth limp So tediously away. The poor condemned English, Like sacrificial, by their watchful fires Sit patiently, and lily ruminate The morning's danger; and their gesture sad, Investing lank-lean cheeks, and war-worn coats, Present them unto the gazing moon So many horrid ghosts. O! now, who will behold The royal captain of this ruin'd band, Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent, Let him cry—Praise and glory on his head! For forth he goes, and visits all his host, Bids them good-morrow with a modest smile, And calls them brothers, friends, and countrymen.

* Foolish. — *Lowly; gently. — *Shadowed; shaded. — *Over-saucy.
KING HENRY V.

ACT IV.

Upon his royal face there is no note,
How dread an army hath environd him,
Nor doth he deliberate one jot of color
Unto the weary and all-watched night;
But freshly looks, and over-bears in attain,
With cheerful semblance, and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks.
A largess universal, like the sun,
His bleared eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear, that mean and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night.
And so our scene must to the battle fly;
Where, 0 for pity! we shall much disgrace—
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,
Right ill disposed, in brawl ridiculous,—
The name of Agincourt. Yet sit and see;
Minding true things by what their mockeries be.

[Exit.]

SCENE I.—The English Camp at Agincourt.

Enter King Henry, Bedford, and Gloster.

K. Hen. Gloster, 'tis true that we are in great danger.
The greater, therefore, should our courage be.—
Good morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty!
There is some soul of goodness in things evil;
Would men observing distil it out,
For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers,
Which is both healthful, and good husbandry:
Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all; admonishing,
That we should 'dress us fairly for our end.
Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

Enter Erpingham.

Good morrow, old sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a churlish turf of France.

Erping. Not so, my liege: this lodging likes me better,
Since I may say, now lie I like a king.

K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present
Upon example; so the spirit is eased:
And when the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh vigor.
Lend me thy cloak;—Sir Thomas,—Brothers both,
Commend me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good morrow to them; and, anon,
Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glo. We shall, my liege.

[Exeunt Gloster and Bedford.

Erping. Shall I attend your grace?

K. Hen. No, my good knight;
Go with my brothers to my lords of England:
And, then, I would no other company.

Erping. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!

[Exeunt Erpingham.

Enter Pistol.

Pist. Who was 't here?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discus unto me; art thou officer?
Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trail st thou to the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so. What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.

Pist. The king's a buckwheat, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an -imp of fame;
Of parents good, of fist most valiant:
I kiss his dirty shoe, and from heart-string
I love the truly bullet What's thy name?

Pist. Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of Corn?
K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leck about his pate,
Upon Saint David's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The ?fco for thee then?

K. Hen. I thank you. God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol called.

[Exeunt.

K. Hen. It sorts well with your fierceness.

Enter Fluellen and Gower, severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. So, in the name of Chesh Christ, speak lower.
It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and ancient prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept. If you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle, or pibble pabble, in Pompey's camp: I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the nobility of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you bear him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass and a fool, and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb? in your own conscience now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will.

[Exeunt Gower and Fluellen.

K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion, there is much care and valor in this Welshman.

Enter John Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morn which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be; but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but I think we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

Will. A good old commander, and a most kind gentleman. I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet lie should; for, though I speak it to you, I think the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him, as it doth to me; the emblem shows to him, as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by; in his nakedness he appears but a man, and though his afflictions are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like decorum. Therefore, when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: yet in reason no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

1 Jolly follow.—Child; offering.—"The fez," i. e., a fez.—Agrees.

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will; but, I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in Thames up to the neck: and so I would be gone, I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king: I think, he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then, I would be here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poor men saved.

K. Hen. I dare say, you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone, howsoever you speak this, to feel other men's minds. Methinks, I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just, and his quarrel honorable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects. If his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Will. But, if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make: when all those legs, and arms, and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all, 'We died at such a place;'' some swearing, some crying for a surgeon, some upon their wives left poor behind them, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their childrenrawly left. I am afraid there are few die well, that die in a battle; for how can they charitable dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that used them to it, whom to disoblige were against all pretention of objection.

K. Hen. So, if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandise, do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers, and die in many irreconciled injuries, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation. But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitration of swords, can try it out with all unsighted soldiers. Some, penitent, have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury; some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pilage and robbery. Now, if these men have defaced the law, and outrun native punishment, though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his badge: war is his scene; so that here men are punished, for before-break of the king's laws, in now the king's quarter: where they feared the death, they have borne life away, and where they would be safe, they perish: then, if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation, than he was before guilty of those impurities for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's; but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore, should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience; and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gained: and, in him that escapes, it were not sin to think, that making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill upon his own head: the king is not to answer it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. And, if I well heard the king say, he would not be ransomed.

Will. Ay, he said so to make us fight cheerfully; but when our throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we never the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder gun, that a poor and a private displeasure can do against a monarch. You may as well go about to turn the sun to ice with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come, 'tis a foolish saying.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too round: I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live, K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bosom: then, if ever thou dost acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove: give me another of thine.

K. Hen. Will. This will I also wear in my cap; if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, 'This is my glove,' by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it. Will. Thou dost as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels now, if you could tell how to reckon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one they will beat us, for they bear them on their shoulders; but it is no English treason to cut French crowns, and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper. [Exeunt Soldiers. Upon the king! let us our lives, our souls, Our debts, our careful wives, our children, And our sins, lay on the king!—we must bear all. O hard condition! twin-born with greatness, Subject to the breath of every fool, Whose sense no more can feel but his own wringing! What infinite heart's ease must kings neglect, That private men enjoy?"
And what have kings, that privates have not too,
Save ceremony, save general ceremony?
And what art thou, thou idle ceremony?
What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more
Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers?
What are thy rents? what are thy comings-in?
O ceremony, show me but thy worth!
What is thy soul? but adulation?
Art thou angit else but place, degree, and form?
Creating awe and fear in other men,
Wher'in thou art less happy, being fear'd,
Than they in fearing
What drink'st thou off, instead of homage sweet,
But poison'd flattery? O! be sick, great greatness,
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure.
Think'st thou, the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Can'st thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee,
Command the health of it? No, thou proud dreamer,
That play'st so subly with a king's repose:
I am a king, that find thee; and I know,
'Tis not the balm, the sceptor, and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The inter-tissued robe of gold and pearl,
The s'farced title running 'fore the king,
The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp
That beats upon the high shore of this world;
No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,
Not all these laid in bed majestical,
Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave,
Who, with a body full'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cram'd with d'istasteful bread,
Never sees horrid night, the child of hell,
But a sack'd key, from the rise to set,
Sweats in the eye of Phurbas, and all night
Sleeps in Elysium; next day, after dawn,
Doth rise and help Hyperion to his horse,
And follows so the ever running year
With profitable labor to his grave:
And, but for ceremony, such a wretch,
Winding up days with toil, and nights with sleep,
Hath the bare noble-and and vantage of a king.
The slave, a member of the country's peace,
Enjoys it, but in gross brain little wots,
What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
Whose hours the peasant best advantages.

Enter Erpingham.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,
Seek through your camp to find you.
K. Hen. Good old knight,
Collect them all together at my tent:
I'll be before thee.

Erp. I shall do, my lord. [Exit.

K. Hen. O, God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts:
Possess them not with fear: take from them now
The sense of reckoning, if th' opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them!—Not to-day, O Lord!
O! not to-day, think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown.
1 Richard's body have interred now,
On it have bestow'd more contrive tears,
Than from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a day their widder's hands hold up
Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two chantries, where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do;
Though all that I can do is nothing worth,
And say—tomorrow is Saint Crispian:
Then will he strip his sleeve, and show his scars.
Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
But he'll remember with advantages
What feats he did that day. Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouths as household words,—
Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloster,—
Be in their flowing cup, and daily remembered.
This story shall the good man teach his son,
And Crispin Crispian shall never go by,
From this day to the ending of the world,
But we in it shall be remembered;
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers:
For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother: be he ne'er so vile,
This day shall gentle his condition:
And gentlemen in England, now a-bed,
Shall think themselves accurs'd they were not here,
And hold their manhoods cheap, while any speaks
That fought with us upon Saint Crispin's day.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed:
The French are bravely in their battles set,
And will with all experience charge on us.

K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so.
West. Perish the man whose mind is backward now.

K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from Eng—
West. God's will! my liege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, might fight this royal battle.

K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwise'd five thou—

SCENE III.—The English Camp.

Enter all the English Host; Gloster, Bedford, Exeter, Salisbury, and Westmoreland.

Glo. Where is the king?—Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.
West. Of fighting men they have full threescore thousand.

Exe. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.
Sat. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.
God be wi'you, princes all; I'll to my charge:
If we no more meet, till we meet in heaven,
Then, joyfully,—my noble lord of Bedford,—
My dear lord Gloster,—and my good lord Exeter,—
And my kind kinsman,—warries all, alien!—
Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

Exe. Farewell, kind lord. Fight valiantly to-day:
And yet I do thee wrong, to mind thee of it,
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valor.

[Exeunt Salisbury.

Bed. He is as full of valor, as of kindness;
Princely in both.

West. O! that we now had here

Enter King Henry.

But one ten thousand of those men in England,
That do no work to-day.

K. Hen. What's he, that wishes so?—My cousin Westmoreland.—No, my fair cousin: If we are mark'd to die, we are so now
To do our country's lust; and if to live,
The fewer men, the greater share of honor.
God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
By Jove, I am not covetous for gold;
Nor care I who but feed upon my cost;
It yearns me not if men my garments wear:
Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
But, if it be a sin to covet honor,
I am the most offending soul alive.
No, 'faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:
God shall preserve you, if you would not lose so great an honor.
As one man more, methinks, would share from me,
For the best hope I have. O! do not wish one more:
Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,
That he, which hath no stomach to this fight,
Let him depart: his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convoy put into his purse:
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us.
This day is call'd—the feast of Crispian:
He, that outlives this day, and sees old age,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian.
He, that shall live this day, and see old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his friends,
Our gayness and our a gift are all b besmirth'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
(Good argument, I hope, we will not fly)
And time hath worn us into slovenly.
But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim;
And my poor soldiers tell me, yet ere night
They'll be in fresher robes, for they will pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads,
And turn them out of service. If they do this,
As, if God please, they shall, my ransom then
Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labor;
God help me with the money for ransom, gentle herald;
They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints,
Which, if they have as I will leave 'em them,
Shall yield them little, tell the Constable.

Mont. I shall, king Harry; and so fare thee well.
Thou never shalt hear herald any more.
[Exit.

K. Hen. I fear, thou wilt once more come hither for a ransom.

Enter the Duke of York.

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg
The leading of this ward.
[March away:
K. Hen. Take it, brave York.
Now, soldiers,
And how thou pleasedst, God, dispose the day!

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Field of Battle.

Pist. Yield, cur.

Fr. Sol. Je pense, que vous êtes le gentilhomme de bonne qualité.

Fr. Sol. On est sieur Deu!

Pist. O! signieur Dow shall be a gentleman.

* Perpend my words, O signieur Dow, and mark:—
O signieur Dow, thou diest on point of fox,
Except, O signieur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransom.

Fr. Sol. O, prenez miséricorde! ayez pitié de moi!

Pist. Moy shall not serve, I will have forty moys;
For I will fetch thy ¥ rim out at thy throat,
In drops of crimson blood.

Fr. Sol. Est il impossible d'échapper la force de ton bras!

Pist. Brass, cur!

Thou damned and b luxuriant mountain goat,
Offer'st me brass?

Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moi!

Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a run of moys?—
Come hitter, boy: ask this slave in French,
What is his name.

Boy. Etoutez: comment êtes vous appelé?

Fr. Sol. Monseigneur le Fer.

Boy. He says his name is master Fer.

Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and b fork him, and ferret him.—Discuss the same in French unto him.

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and ferret, and fork.

Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

Fr. Sol. Quoi dit-il, monsieur?

SCENE VII.—Another Part of the Field.

Flu. Kill the pays and the luggage! 'tis expressly against the law of arms; 'tis as arant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offered. In your conscience now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certain, there's not a boy left alive; and the cowardly rascals, that ran from the battle, have done this slaughter besides; they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent; wherefore the king most worthily hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. O! 'tis a gallant king.

Flu. Ay, he was born at Monmouth, captain Gower. What call you the town's name, where Alexander the pig was born?

Gow. Alexander the great.

Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig, great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnificent, are all one reckonings; save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think, Alexander the great was born in Macedon: his father was called Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think, it is in Macedon, where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain,—if you look in the maps of the world, I warrant, you shall find, in the comparisons between Monmouth and Macedon, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon, and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth; it is called Wye at Monmouth, but it is out of my pains, what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmon in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander, God knows, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wrathes, and his cholers, and his moods, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicates in his pains, did, in his ales and his anges, look you, kill his pest friend, Clytus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that: he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: as Alexander killed his friend Clytus, being in his ales and his cups, so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, turned away the fat knight with the great pell-mell: he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaveries, and mocks; I have forgot his name.

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he. I'll tell you, there is good men born at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Alarum. Enter King Henry, with a part of the English Forces and Prisoners; Warwick, Gloster, Exeter, and others.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France. Until this instant.—Take a trumpet, herald; Ride thou unto the horsemen on yond hill; Tell them the news of this our victory, And void the field: they do offend our sight. If they'll do neither, we will come to them, And make them skirr, as swift as stones, Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have; And not a man of them that we shall take, Shall taste our mercy.—Go, and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy.

Exe. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Glo. His eyes are humbler than they us'd to be.

K. Hen. How now! what means this, herald? know'st thou not, That I have fin'd these bones of mine for ransom? Com'st thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king: I come to thee for charitable licence, That we may wander o'er this bloody field, To look our dead, and then to bury them; To sort our nobles from our common men; For many of our princes, woe the while! Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood; So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs In blood of princes, and their wounded steeds.
K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald, I know not if the day be ours, or no; for yet a many of your horsemen peer, and gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours. K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength, that it is! — What is this castle call'd, that stands hard by? Mont. They call it Agincourt. K. Hen. Then call we this the field of Agincourt, fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus. Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the plack prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most brave battle here in France. K. Hen. They did, Fluellen. Flu. Your majesty says very true. If your majesty be remembered of it, the Welshmen did good service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps, which your majesty knows, to this hour it is to be honorable edge of the service; and, I do believe, your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day. K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honor: For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman. Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your majesty's Welshlood out of your body, I can tell you that. God pluck it, and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too! K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman. Flu. By Chesu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the world: I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be God, so long as your majesty is an honest man. K. Hen. God keep me so! — Our heralds go with me just notice of the numbers dead, [him: On both our parts.—Call yonder fellow lifter. [Points to Williams. Exit Montjoy and others. Exe. Soldier, you must come to the king. K. Hen. Soldier, why wear'st thou that glove in thy cap? Will. An't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive. K. Hen. An Englishman? Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal that swaggered with me last night; who, if 'a live, and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear: or, if I can see my glove in his cap, (which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear, if alive) I would strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath? Flu. He is a c coward and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience. K. Hen. It may be, his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree. Flu. Though he be as great a gentleman as the tevil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath. If he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain, and a Jack sauce, as ever his pluck shoe trod upon God's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la.

a Coward.—b Great sort," i.e., high rank.—c Saucy Jack.
Enter King Henry, and Exeter.

K. Hen. How now! what’s the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain, and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alençon. And, my liege, this was my glove here is the fellow of it; and he that I gave it to in change promised to wear it in his cap: I promised to strike him if he did. I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

K. Hen. Your majesty hear now, saving your majesty’s manhood, what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lowe-knavish fellow, with your own majesty is me testimony, and witness, and avowments, that this is the glove of Alençon, that your majesty is give me, in your conscience now.

K. Hen. Give me thy glove, soldier: look, here is the fellow of it.

’Twas I, indeed, thou promisedst to strike; And thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. And please your majesty, let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction? Will all offences, my lord, come from the heart: never came any from mine, that might offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was oursell thou didst abuse.

Will. Your majesty must not judge you, if you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you, take it for your own fault, and not mine: for had you been as I took you for, I had made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, fellow, And wear it for an honor in thy cap, Till I do challenge it.—Give him the crowns.

And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

K. Hen. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his pelly.—Hold, there is twelve peace for you, and I pray you to serve Got, and keep you out of pravvls, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions; and, I warrant you, it is the pester for you.

K. Hen. Will I will none of your money.

Flu. Is it not lawful, and please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. Hen. Yes, captain, but with this acknowledg-That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great good.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites:
Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum.
The dead with charity enclos’d in clay, And then to Cabias; and to England then, Where ne’er from France arrived more happy men.

Enter Choristers. Chor. Vouchsafe: all those that have not read the story, That I may prompt them: and if such as have, I humbly pray them to admit th’ excuse Of time, of numbers, and due course of things, Which cannot in their huge and proper life Be here presented. So, let him land, And solemnly see him set on to London. So swift a pace hath thought, that even now You may imagine him upon Blackheath; Where, that his lords desire him, to have borne His bruised helmet, and his bended sword, Before him, through the city, he forbids it.

of low degree. I pray you, fall to: if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain; you have astonished him.

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will pet his pate four days.—Prithee, I pray you; it is got for your green wound, and your bloody cocoxemb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly, and out of doubt, and out of question too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge. I eat and eat I swear—

Flu. Eat, I pray you. Will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel: thou dost see, I eat.

Flu. Much good do you, said knife, heartily. Nay, pray you, throw none away; the skin is got for your broken cocoxemb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at 'em; that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is good.—Hold you; there is a great to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a great!

Flu. Yes; verily, and in truth, you shall take it, and I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy great, in earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing I will pay you in cudgels: you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God be wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate.

[Exit.]

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Why, if you are a counterfeit cowardly knife. Will you mock at an ancient tradition, begun upon an honorable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valor, and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words? I have seen you a gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not the less handle an English cudgel; you find it otherwise; and, henceforth, let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition. Fare ye well.

[Exit.]

Pist. Dost fortune play the huswife with me now?

News. Have I, that my Doll is dead! the spirit Of malady of France;

And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.

Old I do wax, and from my weary limbs
Honor is cudgel'd. Well, baw'd I'll turn,
And something lean to cutpurse of quick hand.

To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:
And patches will I get unto these cudgel'd scars,
And swear, I got them in the Gallin wars.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—Troyes in Champagne. An Apartment in the French King's Palace.

Enter, at one door, King Henry, Bedford, Gloster, Exeter, Warwick, Westmoreland, and other Lords; at another, the French King, Queen Isabel, the Princess Katharine, Lords, Ladies, &c., the Duke of Burgundy, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are Unto our brother France, and to our sister, [met. Health and fair time of day:—joy and good wishes To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine;—]

Stunned. — Scuffling; screeching. — Disposition; temper. — A huswife, i. e., jilt; hussy. — Ho-pilat. — That is, Peace, for which we are here met, be to this meeting.
And, as a branch and member of this royalty, By whom this great assembly is contriv'd, We, also want you, Kate, our American — And, princes French, and peers, health to you all. Fr. King. Rightjoyous are we to behold your face, Most worthy brother England; fairly met:— So are you, princes English, every one. Q. Isia. So happy be the issue, brother England, Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting, As we are now glad to behold your eyes; Your eyes, which hitherto have been in them Against the French, that met them in their bent, The fatal balls of murdering basilisks: The venon of such looks, we fairly hope, Have lost their quality, and that this day Shall change all griefs and quarrels into love. K. Hen. To cry amen to that thus we appear. Q. Isia. You English princes all, I do salute you. Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love. Great kings of France and England, that I have labor'd With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavors, To bring your most imperial majesties Unto this bar and royal interview, Your mightiness on both parts best can witness. Since then, my office hath so far prevail'd, That face to face, and royal eye to eye, You have congreag'd, let it not disgrace me, If I demand before this royal view, What rub, or what impediment, there is, Why that the naked, poor, and mangled peace, Dear nurse of arts, plenty, and joyful births, Should not in this best garden of the world, Our fruit and image, lift up her lovely visage (?) Alas! she hath from France too long been chas'd, And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps, Corrupting in its own fertility. Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart, Unpruned dies: her hedges even-pleached, Like prisoners wildly over-grown with hair, Put forth disorder'd twigs: her hollow less The durnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory, Do root upon, while that the couler rusts, That should 1deracinate such savagery: The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover, Wanting the scythe, all uncropped, rank, Conceives by idleness, and nothing teams, But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckses, burs, Losing both beauty and facility; And 2all our vineyards, fallows, meads, and hedges, Defective in their natures, grow to wildness. Even so our houses, and ourselves, and children, Have lost, or do not learn, for want of time, The sciences that should become our country, But grow, like savages, as soldiers will, That nothing do but meditate on blood, — To swearing, and stern looks, 2cleared't attire, And every thing that seems unnatural. Which to reduce into our former 4favor, You are assembled; and my speech entreats, That I may know the *let, why gentle peace Should not expel these imperfections, And bless us with her former qualities. or if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favors, I could lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jack-asses, never off; but, before God, Kate, I cannot look greenly, nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sunburning, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I suppose these plain solutions, if thou canst love me for this, take me; if not, to say to thee that I shall die, is true; but for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined constancy, for he perform must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places; for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favors, they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a panter; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall, a straight back will stoop, a black beard will turn white, a curled pate will grow bald, a fair face will wither, a full eye will wax hollow; but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and the moon; or, rather, the sun and the moon, for it shines bright, and never changes, but keeps its course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me: and take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king, and what sayest thou then to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I should love de enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate; but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well, that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine; and, Kate, when France is mine and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell vat is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French, which I am sure will hang upon my tongue like a newly married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off.—Quand j'ai la possession de France, et quand vous avez la possession de moi, (let me see, what then? — Saint Dennis be my speed!)—donc vous et moi: it is as easy for me, Kate, to tell thee my heart, as to speak so much more French. I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Siens votre honneur, le François que vous parlez, est meilleur que l'Anglois que je parle.

K. Hen. No, 'faith, is not, Kate; but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly falsely, must needs be granted to be much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of thy neighbors tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know, thou lovest me: and at night when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you'll desire me to disguise those parts in me, that you love with your heart: but, good Kate, mock me mercifully, the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou best mine, Kate, (as I have a saving faith within me tells me thou shalt) I get thee with scammeling, and thou must therefore needs make a good soldier-bredger. Shall

"The weak list," I.e., the slight barrier.
Enter the French King and Queens, Burgundy, Bedford, Glosier, Exeter, Westmoreland, and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty. My royal cousin, Teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz, and my condition is not smooth; so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her you must make a circle; if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked, and blind.

Can you blame her, then, being a maid yet roset over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consent to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink, and yield, as love is blind and enforces.

Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent winking.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maidens, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral ties me over to time, and a hot summer; and so I shall catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so; and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness, who cannot see many a fair French city, for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspec- tively: the cities turned into a maid, for they are all girdled with maiden walls, that war hath not entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content, so the maiden cities you talk of, may wait on her; so the maid, that stood in the way of my wish, shall show me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article: His daughter, first; and then in sequel, all, According to their firm proposed natures.

Exe. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:

Where your majesty demands,—that the king of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition, in French,—Notre très cher fils Henry roi d'Angleterre, heretier de France; and thus in Latin,—Praecorissimus filius noster Henricus, rex Anglise, et heres Francie.

Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied, But your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Hen. I pray you, then, in love and dear alliance Let that one article rank with the rest; And, thereupon, give me your daughter. [raise up

Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood Issue to me, that the contending kingdoms Of France and England, whose very shores look pale, With envy of each other's happiness, May cease their hatred; and this dear conjunction Plant neighborhood and Christian-like accord In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France.

All. Amen! [ness all,

K. Hen. Now welcome, Kate:—and bear me wit That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

Q. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages; Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one! As man and wife, being two, are one in love, So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal, That never may ill office, or fell jealousy, Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage, Thrust in between the pact of these kingdoms, To make divorce of their incorporate league; That English may as French, French Englishmen, Receive each other!—God speak this Amen!

All. Amen! [day,

K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage:—on which My lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath, And all the peons' for surety of our leagues. Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me; And may our oaths well kept and prosperous be!

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Westminster Abbey.

Dead March. The Corpse of King Henry the Fifth is discovered, lying in state; attended on by the Dukes of Bedford, Gloster, and Exeter; the Earl of Warwick, the Bishop of Winchester, Heralds, &c.

Bed. Hung the heavens with black, yield day to night!

*An allusion to the practice of hanging the stage with black when a tragedy was to be acted.

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky,
And with them scourge the bad revolting stars,
That have conspired unto Henry's death!

Henry the fifth, too famous to live long!

England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Glo. England ne'er had a king, until his time.

Virtue he had deserving to command:

His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams;
His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings;
His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire,

*"Consented unto," i.e., conspired together to promote.
Scene I. First Part of King Henry VI. 435

More dazled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces.
What should I say? his deeds exceed all speche:
He ne'er lift up his hand, but conquered. [blood?

Exc. With corn in black: why mourn we not in Hen'ry is dead, and none stand alive.
Upon a wooden coffin we attend;
And death's dishonorable victory
We with our stately presence glorify,
Like captives bound to a triumphant car.
What! shall we curse the planets of mishap,
That plotted thus our glory's overthrow?
Or shall we think the subtle-witted French
Conjurors and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
By magic verses have contriv'd his end?

Win. He was a king, bless'd of the King of kings.
Unto the French the dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be, as was his sight.
The battles of the Lord of hosts he fought:
The church's prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church? where is it? Had not churchmen pray'd,
His thread of life had not so soon decay'd:
None do you like but an effeminate prince,
Whom, like a school-boy, you may over-awe.

Win. Glover, whate'er we like, thou art protector,
And lookest to command the prince, and realm.
Thus let the world commend thee in awe,
More than God, or religious churchmen may.

Glo. Name not religion, for thou lov'st the flesh;
And ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes. [in peace.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars, and rest your minds
Let's to the altar:—Heralds, wait on us.—
Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms.
Since arms avail not, now that Henry's dead.
Posterity, await for wretched years,
When at their mothers' moist eyes babes shall suck,
Our isle be made a nectar of salt tears,
And none but women to wall the dead.—
Henry the fifth! thy ghost I invoke;
Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils!
Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!
A far more glorious star thy soul will make,
Than Julius Cæsar, or bright Cassiope.

Mess. My honorable lords, health to you all.
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture:
Guipue, Champaigne, Rheims, Orleans,
Paris, Guyors, Poictiers, are all quite lost. [corse?

Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's
Speak softly, or the loss of those great towns
Will make him burst his head, and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? is Rouen yielded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the

Exc. How were they lost? what treachery was us'd?

Mess. No treachery; but want of men and money.
Among the soldiers this is muttered,—
That here you maintain several factions;
And whilst a field should be despatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals.
One would have lingering wars with little cost;
Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;
A third man thinks, without expense at all,
By guileful fair words peace may be obtained.

Bed. Wake, awake, English nobility.
Let not all that your honor's new-begot:

*There was a nation long prevalent that life might be destroyed by metrical charms.—Nurse.

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Exc. Were our tears wanting to this funeral,
These tidings would call forth their flowing tides.

Bed. Me they concern; regent I am of France.—
Give me my steel'd coat! I'll fight for France.—
Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!
Wounds will I lend the French instead of eyes,
To weep their interminable miseries.

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad mis-
France is revolted from the English quite, [chance.
Except some petty towns of no import:
The Dauphin, Charles, is crowned king in Rheims;
The bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;
Regnier, duke of Aujon, doth take his part;
The duke of Alençon fliteth to his side.

Exc. The Dauphin crowned king! all fly to him!
O! whither shall we fly from this reproach?

Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' throats.—
Bedford, if thou be shak, I'll fight it out. [mess]

Bed. Glover, why doubt'st thou of my forward-
An army have I muster'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is over-run.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My gracious lords, to add to your lamentations,
Wherewith you have been proud to swell Henry's hearse,
I must inform you of a dismal fight,
Betwixt the stout lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What? wherein Talbot overcame? 'tis so?

3 Mess. O! no; wherein lord Talbot was o'er-thrown:
The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.
The tenth of August last, this dreadful lord,
Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,
By three-and-twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon.
No leisure had he to unrank his men;
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof, sharp stakes, plac'd out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground confusingly.
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.
More than three hours the fight continued;
Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him;
Here, there, and everywhere, enraged he flew.
The French exclaimed, the devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood against him.
His soldiers, spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! A Talbot! cried out again;
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.
Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up,
If sir John Fastolfe had not play'd the coward:
He being in the rearward, plac'd behind
With purpose to relieve and follow them,
Cowardly deed, not having struck one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre:
Enclosed were they with their enemies.
A base Wallon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,
Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then, I'll play myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease,
Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,
Unto his dauntless foe-men is betray'd.

3 Mess. O, no! he lives; but is taken prisoner.

1 Mess. Her, 1. e., England's. 4 Their interminable miseries.
1 o, miseries which have had but a short intermission.
And lord Scales with him, and lord Hungerford:
Most of the rest slaughter’d, or took, likewise.

Bed. His ransom there is none but I shall pay.
I’ll hale the Dauphin headlong from his throne;
His crown shall be the ransom of my friend:
Poor of their lords I’ll charge for one of ours.—
Farewell, my masters; to my task will I,
Bonfires in France withforth I am to make,
To keep our great Saint George’s feast withal;
Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take,
Whose bloody deeds shall 1 cause all Europe quake.
3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is besieg’d.
The English army is grown weak and faint;
The cord of Salisbury cannot support it.
And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,
Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Exe. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn,
Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,
Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Bed. I do remember it; and here take my leave,
To go about my preparation.  [Exit.

Glo. I’ll to the Tower, with all the haste I can,
To view th’ artillery and munition;
And then I will proclain young Henry king.  [Exit.
Exe. To Eltham will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain’d his special governor;
And for his safety there I’ll best devise.  [Exit.

Win. Each hath his place and function to attend:
I am left out; for me nothing remains.
But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office:
The king from Eltham I intend to steal,
And sit at chiefest stem of public weal.  [Exit.

SCENE II.—France. Before Orleans.

Flourish. Enter Charles, with his Forces; Alençon, Reignier, and others.

Char. Mars his true moving, even as in the heavens,
So in the earth, to this day is not known.
Late did he shine upon the English side;
Now we are victors, upon us he smiles.
What towns of any moment but we have?
And pleasant here were we near Orleans!
’Tis past them, mere fashion’d English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.  [Becomes Aure.
Alençon. They want their porridge, and their fat bull
Either they must be dictated like mules,
And have their provender tied to their mouths,
Or piteous they will look like drowned mice.
Reignier. Let’s raise the siege. Why live ye idly here?
Talbot is taken whom we wont to fear:
Remaineth none but mad-brain’d Salisbury,
And he may well in fretting spend his gall;
Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.
Char. Sound, sound alarm! we will rush on them.
Now, for the honor of the 3 forborne French!
Him I forgive my death, that killeth me,
When he sees me go back one foot, or
[Exeunt.

Alarums; Excursions; afterwards a Retreat.

Re-enter Charles, Alençon, Reignier, and others.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I!—
Dogs! cowards! bastards!—I would ne’er have fled,
But for they lords left me to hide my enemies.
Reignier. Salisbury is a desperate homicide;
He Righet as one weary of his life:
The other lords, like lions wanting food,
Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.
Alençon. Froissart, a countryman of ours, records,
England all Olivers and Rowlands bred,

a "Their hungry prey," i. e., the prey for which they are hungry.

During the time Edward the third did reign,
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Sumons, and Golfaisses,
It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten!
Lean raw-bon’d rascals! who would e’er suppose
They had such courage and audacity?
Char. Let’s leave this town; for they are hair-brain’d slaves,
And hunger will enforce them be more eager:
Of old I know them; rather with their teeth
The walls they’ll tear down, than forsake the siege.
Reignier. I think, by some odd gimmals, or device,
Their arms are set like clocks still to strike on;
Else, were their could they hold out so, as they do.
By my consent, we’ll e’en let them alone.
Alençon. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where’s the prince Dauphin? I have news for him.
Char. 4 Bastard of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.
Bast. Methinks; your looks are sad, your chear appall’d:
Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay’d, for success is at hand:
A holy maid kithur with me I bring,
Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven,
Ordained is to raise this tedious siege,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France.
The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,
Exceeding the nine 5 sibyls of old Rome;
What’s past and what’s to come, she can descry.
Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words,
For they are certain and unfallible.
Char. Go, call her in.  [Exit Bastard.] But first, to try her skill,
Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:
Question her proudly, let thy looks be stern.
By this means shall we sound what skill she hath.
[Retires.

Enter La Pucelle, Bastard of Orleans, and others.

Reignier. Fair maid, is’t thou wilt do these wondrous feats?
Pucelle. Reignier, is’t thou that thinkest to besiegue
Where is the Dauphin?—Come, come from behind;
I know thee well, though never seen before.
Be not amaz’d, there’s nothing hid from me:
In private will I talk with thee apart.—
Stand back, you lords, and give us leave awhile.
Reignier. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.
[They retire.

Pucelle. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd’s daughter,
My wit untrain’d in any kind of art.
Heaven and our gracious Lady hath it pleas’d
To shine on my Contemplative estate:
Lo! whilst I waited on my tender lambs,
And to sun’s parching heat display’d my cheeks,
God’s mother deigned to appear to me;
And in a vision full of majesty,
Will’d me to leave my base vocation,
And free my country from calamity.
Her aid she promis’d, and assured success:
In complete glory she reveal’d herself;
And, whereas I was black and swart before,
With those clear rays which she infused on me,
That beauty am I bless’d with, which you see.
Ask in what question thou canst possibly,
And I will answer unpremeditated:

a A gimmal is a piece of jointed work, where one piece moves within another; here it is taken at large for an ex-guise.

5 Countess.—By the nine sibyls are probably meant the nine stygian books brought to one of the Tarquins.
SCENE III.—London. Tower Hill.

Enter, at the Gates, the Duke of Gloster, with his Serving-men.

Glo. I am come to survey the Tower this day; since Henry's death, I fear, there is conveyance. Where be these warders, that they wait not here? Open the gates! 'Tis Gloster that now calls. [Servants knock.]

1 Ward. [Within.] Who's there, that knocks so imperiously?

1 Serv. It is the noble duke of Gloster. [Let in.]

2 Ward. [Within.] Who's or he be, you may not be 1 Serv. Viliains, answer you so the lord protector? 1 Ward. [Within.] The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd. [mine?]

Glo. Who will'd you so? or whose will stands but there's none protector of the realm but I. — Break up the gates, I'll be your warrantize.

Shall I be flouted thus by dunghill grooms?

GLOSTER'S MUSK RUSH AT THE TOWER GATES. Enter to the gates, WOODVILLE, the Lieutenant.

Wood. [Within.] What noise is this? what traitors have we here?

Glo. Lieutenant, is it you whose voice I hear? Open the gates! here's Gloster that would enter.

Wood. [Within.] Have patience, noble duke; I may not open;

The cardinal of Winchester forbids:

From him I have express commandment, that thou, nor none of thine, shall be let in. [me?]

Glo. Fault-hearted Woodville, prizest him 'fore Arrogant Winchester, that haughty prelate, Whom Henry, our late sovereign, 'er'd could brook? Thou art no friend to God, or to the king:

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly. [1 Serv. Open the gates unto the lord protector: 3 We'll burst them open, if you come not quickly.

Enter Winchester, and Servants in tawney coats.

Win. How now, ambitious Humphrey! what means this? [shut out?]

Glo. I'll send priest, dost thou command me be Win. I do, thou most usurping priditor, And not protector, of the king or realm.

Glo. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator, Thou that contriv'dst to murder our dear lord; Thou that giv'st whores indulgences to sin. Ul!'t canvass here in the broad and carnal'man's lust, If thou proceed in this thy insolence. [foot: Win. Nay, stand thou back; I will not budge a

This be Damascus, be thou cursed Cain, To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Glo. I will not slay thee, but I'll drive thee back. Thys scarlet robes, as a child's bearing-cloth I'll use to carry thee out of this place. [face. Win. Do what thou dar'st; I'll hear thee to thy Glo. What! am I dar'd, and bearded to my face? — Draw, men, for all this is a privilege'd place: Blue coats to tawney coats. Priest, beware thy beard;

[GLOSTER AND HIS MEN ATTACK THE BISHOP. I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly. Under my feet I stamp my cardinal hat, In spite of pope or dignities of church;

Here by the checks I'll drag thee up and down. Win. Gloster, thou'lt answer this before the pope.
Glo. Winchester goose! I cry—a rope! a rope!—
Now beat them hence; why do you let them stay?—
They'll chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's array.—
Out, tawney coats!—out, a scarlet hypocrite!

Here Gloster's Men beat out the Cardinal's Men,
And enter, in the hurry-hurry, the Mayor of London and his Officers.

May. Fie, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,
Thus contumeliously should break the peace!

Glo. Peace, mayor! thou knowest little of my wrongs.
Here's Beaufort, that regards not God nor king,
Hath here disturb'd the Tower to his use.

Win. Here's Gloster too, a foe to citizens;
One that still motions war, and never peace,
O'charging your free purses with large fines;
That seeks to overthrow religion,
Because he is protector of the realm;
And would have armor, here, out of the Tower,
To crown himself king, and suppress the prince.

Glo. I will not answer thee with words, but blows.

May. Nought rests for me, in this tumultuous strife,
But to make open proclamation.—

Come, officer: as loud as thou canst cry.

Off. All manner of men, assembled here in arms this day, against God's peace, and the king's, we charge and command you, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, hide, or use, any sword, weapon, or dagger, hereafter, upon pain of death.

Glo. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law;
But we shall meet, and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloster, we'll meet, to thy dear cost be sure:
Thy heart-blood I will have for this day's work.

May. I'll call for clubs, if you will not away.—
This cardinal's more naughty than the devil.

Glo. Mayor, farewell: thou dost but what thou may'st.

Win. Abominable Gloster! guard thy head;
For I intend to have it off ere long. [Exit.

May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.—

Good God! that nobles should such a stomachs bear!
I myself fight not once in forty year. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—France. Before Orleans.

Enter, on the Walls, the Master-Gunner and his Son.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieged,
And how the English have the suburbs won.

Son. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them. Howe'er unfortunate I miss'd my aim: [by me:]

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou rul'd
Chief master-gunner am I of this town;
Something I must do to procure me grace.
The prince's 4 espiants have informed me,
How th' English, in the suburbs close entrench'd,
Wont, through a secret grate of iron bars
In yonder tower to overpeer the city;
And thence discover, how, with most advantage,
They may vex us with shot, or with assault.
To intercept this inconvenience,
A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd;
And fully even these three days have I watch'd,
If I could see them. Now, boy, do thou watch,
For I can stay no longer on my post.
If thou spy' st any, run and bring me word,

*An allusion to the Bishop's habit.—"Such stomachs,"
I.e., such haughty pride.—Favor.—Spies.

And thou shalt find me at the governor's. [Exit.

Son. Father, I warrant you; take you no care:
I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them.

Enter, in an upper Chamber of a Tower, the Lords
SALISBURY, and TALBOT; Sir WILLIAM GLAN-
DALE, Sir Thomas Gargrave, and others.

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy! again return'd!
How went thou handled, being prisoner,
Or by what means got'st thou to be relased'd,
Discourse, I pr'ythee, on this tatter's top.

Tal. The duke of Bedford had a prisoner,
Called the brave lord 3 of Ponton de Sastriades;
For him I was exchange'd and ransomed.
But now a baser run of arms by far.
Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me:
Which I, disdaining, scorn'd; and craved death,
Rather than I would be so vile-estemed:
In fine, redeem'd I was as I desired.

But, O! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart:
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.

Sal. Yet tell'st thou not, how thouwert entertain'd.

Tal. With scoffs, and scorns, and contumelious in open market-place produc'd they me; [taunts.

To be a public spectacle to all:
Here, said they, is the terror of the French,
The scare-crow that affrights our children so.
Then broke I from the officers that led me,
And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame.

My grisly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near for fear of sudden death.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;
So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread,
That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel,
And spurn in pieces posts of adamant.
Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had,
That walk'd about me every minute-white,
And if I did but stir out of my bed,
Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endur'd,
But we will be revenge'd sufficiently.
Now, it is suppertime in Orleans.
Here, through this grate, I can count every one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortify:
Let us look in; the sight will much delight thee.—
Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glandale,
Let me have your express opinions,
Where is best place to make our battery next.

Gar. I think, at the north gate; for there stand long towers.

Glan. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.

Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,
Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.

[Shot from the Town. SALISBURY, and Sir
THO. GARGRAVE fall.

Sal. O Lord! have mercy on us, wretched sinners.
Gar. O Lord! have mercy on me, woeful man.

Tal. What chance is this, that suddenly hath cross'd us?—

Speak, Salisbury; at least, if thou canst speak:
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?
One of thine eyes, and thy cheek's side struck off!—
accursed tower! accursed fatal hand,
That hath contriv'd this woeful tragedy!
In thirteen battles Salisbury o'creame;
Henry the fifth he first train'd to the wars;
Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.—
Yet liv'st thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,
One eye thou hast to look to heaven for grace.
The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.
Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,
If Salisbury want mercy at thy hands!—
Bears hence his body, I will help to bury it,—
Sir Thomas Gagrave, hast thou any life?
Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.
Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort;
Thou shalt not die, whiles—
He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me,
As who should say, "When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French."—
Platagetan, I will; and, Nero-like,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn:
Wretched shall France be only in my name.

[An Alarum: it thunders and lightens.

What stir is this? What tumult in the heavens?
Whence cometh this alarum, and the noise?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, my lord! the French have gathered
head:
The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,
A holy prophetess, now risen up,
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

[Salisbury lifts himself up and groans.

Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury doth groan!
It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd—
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you,
Pucelle or 4 puddle, dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.—
Convey me Salisbury into my tent,
And then we'll try what dastard Frenchmen dare.

[Exeunt, bearing out the bodies.

SCENE V.—The Same. Before one of the Gates.

Salisbury. Skirmishings. Pucelle pursues the Dauphin,
And drives him: then enter Joan la Pucelle,
Driving Englishmen before her. Then enter Talbot.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valor, and my force?
Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them;
A woman clad in armor chase them.

Enter la Pucelle.

Here, here she comes,—I'll have a bawd with thee;
Devil, or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee; thou art a witch,
And straightforward give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Puc. Come, come; 'tis only I that must disgrace thee.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so prevar'ly? My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

Puc. Talbot, farewell; thy hour is not yet come; I must go victual Orleans forthwith.
O'ertake me if thou canst; I scorn thy strength.
Go, go, cheer up thy hunger-starved men;
Help Salisbury to make his testament,
This day is ours, as many more shall be.

[Pucelle enters the Town, with Soldiers.

Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;
I know not where I am, nor what I do.
A witch by fear, not force, like 4 Hannibal,
Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists:
So beaves with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away.
They call'd us for our fearness English dogs;

Now, like to whatels, we cry ing run away.

[A short Alarum.

Hark, countrymen! either renew the fight,
Or tear the lions out of England's coat;
Renounce your soil, give sheep in lions' stead:
Sheep run not half so 2 treacherous from the wolf,
Or horse, or oxen, from the leopard,
As you fly from your self-subdued slaves.

[Alarum. Another skirmish.

It will not be.—Retire into your trenches:
You will consent unto Salisbury's death,
For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.—
Pucelle is enter'd into Orleans,
In spite of us, or aught that we could do.
O! would I were to die with Salisbury,
The shame hereof will make me hide my head.

[Alarum. Retreat. Exeunt Talbot and his Forces.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

Flourish. Enter, on the Walls, Pucelle, CHARLES, REIGNIER, ALENCON, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colors on the walls!
Resc'd is Orleans from the English wolves.
Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word.
Char. Divinest creature, bright Astrea's daughter,
How shall I honor thee for this success?
Thy promises are like Adonis' garden,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next—
France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess!—
Recover'd is the town of Orleans:
More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state.
Rey. Why ring not out the bells aloud throughout the town?
Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires
And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the joy that God hath given us. [joy,
Alen. All France will be replete with mirth and
When they shall hear how we have play'd the men.
Char. 'Tis Joan, not we, by whom the day is won,
For which I will divide my crown with her;
And all the priests and friars in my realm
Shall in procession sing her endless praise.
A stately pyramid to her I'll rear,
Than Rhodope's, or Memphis', ever was:
In memory of her, when she is dead,
Her ashes, in an urn more precious
Than the rich-jewel'd coffer of Darius,
Transported shall be at high festivals
Before the kings and queens of France.
No longer on Saint Dennis will we cry,
But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint.
Come in; and let us banquet royally,
After this golden day of victory. [Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same.

Enter to the Gates, a French Sergeant, and Two Servants.

Serg. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant.
If any noise, or soldier, you perceive,
Near to the walls, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of 4 guard.

[Exeunt Sergeant.

1 Serv. Sergeant, you shall.

Then are poor ser-
(When others sleep upon their quiet beds) [victors
Constram'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

4 * The court of guard," i. e., the guard-room.
Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, and Forces, with scaling Ladders; their Drums beating a dead march.

Tal. Lord regent, and redoubted Burgundy, By whose approach the regions of Artois, Walloon, and Picardy, are friends to us, This happy night the Frenchmen are secure, Having all day carous’d and banqueted. Embrace we, then, this opportunity, As fitting best to a quittance their deceit, Contriv’d by art, and baseful sorcery. [his fame, Bed. Coward of France!—how much he wrongs Deserting of his own arm’s fortitude, To join with witches, and the help of hell. Bur. Traitors have never other company. But what’s that Pucelle, whom they term so pure? Tal. A maid, they say.

Bed. A maid?—and be so martial! Bur. Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long; If we, under them, the standard of the French, She carry armor, as she hath begun. [spirits

Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with God is our fortress, in whose conquering name Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot; we will follow thee. Tal. Not all together: better far, I guess, That we do make our entrance several ways, That if it chance any one of us do fail, The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed. I’ll to you corner.

Bur. And I to this.

Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.—

Now, Salisbury, for thee, and for the right Of English Henry, shall this night appear How much in duty I am bound to both. [The English scale the Walls, crying St. George! a Talbot! and all enter the Town. Sent. [Within.] Arm! arm! the enemy doth make assault!

1 Frenchmen leap over the Walls in their shirts. Enter, several ways, Bastard, Alewson, Revisier, half ready, and half unready. Alen. How now, my lords! what, all unready so? Bast. Unready! ay, and glad we ’scap’d so well. Reig. ’Twas time, I trow, to wake and leave our Hearing altars at our chamber doors. [beds

Alen. Of all exploits, since first I followed arms, Ne’er heard I of a warlike enterprise More venturous, or desperate than this. Bast. I think, this Talbot be a friend of hell. Reig. If not of hell, the heaves, sure, favor him. Alen. Here come charles: I marvel, how he sped.

Enter Charles and La Pucelle.

Bast. Tut! holy Joan was his defensive guard. Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame? Didst thou at first, to flatten us withal, Make us partakers of a little gain, That now our loss might be ten times so much? Puc. Wherefore is charles impatient with his At all times will you have my power alike? [friend? Sleeping or wakking must I still prevail, Or will you blame, and lay the fault on me?— Improvident soldiers! had your watch been good, This sudden mischief never could have fallen. Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default, Throwing in front of the watch to-night, Did look no bolder to that weighty charge. Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept, As that whereof I had the government, We had not been thus shamefully surpris’d. Bast. Mine was secure.

Reig. And so was mine, my lord. Char. And for myself, most part of all this night, Within her quarter, and mine own precinct, I was employ’d in passing to and fro, About relieving of the sentinels: Then, how, or which way, should they first break in? Puc. Question, my lords, no further of the case, How, or which way: ’tis sure, they found some place But weakly guarded, where the breach was made; And now there rests no other shift but this,— To gather our soldiers, scatt’d and dispers’d, And lay new platforms to endangered them.

Alarum. Enter an English Soldier, crying, a Tal- bot! a Talbot! They fly, leaving their Clothes behind.

Sold. I’ll be so bold to take what they have left. The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword; For I have loaden me with many spoils, Using no other weapon but his name. [Exit. SCENE II.—Orleans. Within the Town. Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundy, a Captain, and others. Bed. The day breaks to begin, and night is fled, Whose pitchy mantle over-veil’d the earth. Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit. [Retreat sounded.

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury; And have advance it in the market-place, The middle centre other of this curtailed town. Now have I paid my vow unto his soul; For every drop of blood was drawn from him, There have at least five Frenchmen died to-night, And that hereafter ages may behold What ruin happen’d in revenge of him Within their chiefest temple I’ll erect A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be inter’d: Upon the which, that every one may read, Shall be engrav’d the sack of Orleans, The treacherous manner of his mournful death, And what a terror he had been to France. But, lords, in all our bloody massacre, ’tis true, we met not with the Dauphin’s grace, His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc, Nor any of his false confederates. Bed. ’Tis thought, lord Talbot, when the fight began, Rous’d on the sudden from their drowsy beds They did, amongst the troops of armed men, Leap o’er the walls for refuge in the field. Bur. Myself, as far as I could well discern For smoke, and dusky vapors of the night, Arm’d men so vast that the Dauphin, and his trait; When arm in arm they both came swiftly running, Like to a pair of loving turtule-doves, That could not live asunder, day or night. After that things are set in order here, We’ll follow them with all the power we have. Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords! Which of this princely Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts [train So much applauded through the realm of France? Tal. Here is the Talbot; who would speak with him? Mess. The virtuous lady, countess of Auvergne, With modesty admiring thy renown, By me entreats, great lord, thou woul’st vouchsafe To visit her poor castle where she lies;
That she may boast she hath beheld the man
Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

'\text{Ber.} Is it even so? Nay, then, I see, our wars
Will turn unto a peaceful comic sport,
When ladies crave to be encompass'd with.—

You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit. [men \text{Tal.} Ne'er trust me then; for when a world of
Could not prevail with all their oratory,
Yet hath a woman's kindness over-rul'd.—
And therefore tell her, I return great thanks,
And in submission will attend on her.—
Will not your honors bear me company?

Bed. No, truly, it is more than manners will;
And I have heard it said, unbidden guests
Are often welcome when they are gone.
\text{Tal.} Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,
I mean to prove this lady's courtesy. [my mind.
Come hither, captain. [\text{Whispers.}]—You perceive
Capt. I do, my lord, and mean accordingly. [\text{Exit.}

\text{SCENE III.—Auvergne. Court of the Castle.}

Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Porter, remember what I gave in charge;
And, when you have done so, bring the keys to me.

\text{Port.} Madam I will. [\text{Exit.}

\text{Count.} The plot is hid: if all things fall out right,
I shall as famous be by this exploit,
As Scythian Thomyris by Cyrus' death.
Great is the rumor of this dreadful knight,
And his achievements of no less account;
Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,
To give their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and Talbot.

\text{Mess.} Madam, according as your ladyship desir'd,
By message carr'd, so is lord Talbot come. [\text{man!}

\text{Count.} And he is welcome.—What is this the \text{Mess.} Madam, it is \text{Count.} Is this the scourge of France?

Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?
I see report is fabulous and false:
I thought I should have seen some Hercules,
A second Hector for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.
Also this is a child, a silly dwarfed wretch;
It cannot be, this weak and wither'd shripl
Should strike such terror to his enemies.

\text{Tal.} Madam, I have been bold to trouble you;
But, since your ladyship is not at leisure,
I'll sort some other time to visit you.

\text{Count.} What means he now?—Go ask him,
Whither he goes.

\text{Mess.} Stays, my lord Talbot; for my lady craves
To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

\text{Tal.} Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief,
I go to certify her Talbot's here.

\text{Re-enter Porter, with Keys.}

\text{Count.} If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.
\text{Tal.} Prisoner! to whom?

\text{Count.}

To me, blood-thirsty lord;
And for that cause I train'd thee to my house.

Long time thy shadow hath been thall to me,
For in my gallery thy picture hungs;
But now the substance shall endure the like,
And I will chain these legs and arms of thine,
That hast by tyranny these many years,
Wasted our country, slain our citizens,
And sent our sons and husbands captive.

*Judgment; opinion. — Wrinkled.
Plan. Tut, tut! here is a mannerly forbearance: The truth appears so naked on my side, That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparel'd, So clear, so shining, and so evident, That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Plan. Since you are tongue-tied, and so loath to speak, In dumb signals proclaim your thoughts. Let him, that is a true-born gentleman, And stands upon the honor of his birth, If you grant me, that I have pleased truth, From off this bier pluck a white rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no coward, nor no flatterer, But dare maintain the party of the truth, Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me. War. I love no colors; and, without all color Of base insinuating flattery, I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet.

Plat. I pluck this red rose with young Somerset; And say withal, I think he held the right. [more, Ver. Stay, lords, and gentlemen; and pluck no Till you conclude that he, upon whose side The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree, Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good master Vernon, it is well objected: If so clear, so shining, and so evident. Plan. And I. Ver. Then, for the truth and plainness of the case, I pluck this pale and maiden blossom here, Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off; Let, bleeding, you do paint the white rose red, And fall on my side so, against your will. Plan. My lord, for my own purpose, Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt, And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on: who else? Law. Unless my study and my books be false, The argument you held was wrong in you; In sign whereof, I pluck a white rose too.

Som. Here, sir, is your seducer; where is your argument? Ver. Here, sir, is my scabbard: and saying that, Shall give your white rose in a bloody red. [roses. Plan. Mean time, your cheeks do counterfeite our For pale they look with fear, as witnessing The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet, 'Tis not for fair, but anger; and thy cheeks Blush for pure shame to counterfeite our roses, And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding That shall maintain what I have said is true, [roses. Wherefore let Plantagenet dare not so wounding that, Weaken your arm, and let him wither with him. War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him, Somerset: His grandfather was Lionel, duke of Clarence, Third son to the third Edward, king of England.

Plan. He 2braves him on the place's privilege, Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words On any plot of ground in Christendom. Was not thy father, Richard earl of Cambridge, For treason executed in our late king's days? And by his treason stand'st thou not attained, Corrupted, and except from ancient germs? His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood; And, till thou be restor'd, thou art a yeoman.

Plan. My father was attached, not attainted, Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor; And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset, Were growing time once ripe'd to my will. For your partaker Poole, and you yourself, I'll note you in my book of memory, To scourge you for this apprehension: Look to it well, and say you are well warn'd. Som. Ah! this shall find us ready for thee still, And know us by these colors for thy foes; For these my friends in spite of thee shall wear.

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose, As cognizance of my blood-drinking hate, Will I for ever, and my faction, wear, Until it wither with me in my grave, Or flourish to the height of my degree. Syf. Go forward, and be chok'd with thy ambition: And so farewell, until I meet thee next. [Exit.

Som. Have with thee, Poole.—Farewell, ambitious Richard. [Exit.

Plan. How I am bruv'd, and must perforce endure it! [house.

War. This blot, that they object against your Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament, Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloster; And if thou be not then created York, And will not live to be account'd Warwick. Mean time, in signal of my love to thee, Against proud Somerset, and William Poole, Will I upon thy party wear this rose.

And here I propose this brawl to-day, Grown to this faction in the Temple garden, Shall send, between the red rose and the white, Ten thousand souls to death and deadly night. Plan. Good master Vernon, I am bound to you, That on you my behalf would pluck a flower. Ver. In your behalf still will I wear the same. Law. And so will I. Plan. Thanks here's gentle sir: Come, let us four to dinner. I dare say, This quarrel will drink blood another day. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. A Room in the Tower.

Enter Mortimer, blind, brought in a Chair by Two Keepers.

Mort. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age, Let dying Mortimer here rest himself: Even like a man now hale'd from the rack, So fare my limbs with long imprisonment; And these grey locks, the pursuivants of death, Nestor-like aged in 6a cage of care, Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer. These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent, Wax dim, as drawing to their ejection: Weak shoulders, overcome with burdening grief, And pitiless arms, like to a wither'd vine

* That is, dumb signs.—"No colors." i. e., no deceits: a play upon the word. — * Well objected, i. c., justly proposed.

4 "Creatless yeoman," i. e., those who have no right to arms.—The Temple, being a religious house, was a sanctuary.—"Partaker," i. e., accomplice.

* Opinion.—"Badge." — Pursuivants are officers who sit on heralds.—End.
That drops his sapless branches to the ground:
Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
As witting I no comfort have.
But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come?
I say, my mother I entrust'd my lord, will come:
We sent unto the Temple, to his chamber,
And answer was return'd that he will come.

[Exit Keeper.]

Mor. Enough; my soul shall then be satisfied.—
Poor gentleman, his wrong doth equal mine.
Since Henry Mamouth first began to reign,
Believe whose glory I was great arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had;
And even since then hath Richard been obscure'd,
Depriv'd of honor and inheritance:
But now, the arbitrator of desairs,
Just death, kind uprize of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence.
I would his troubles likewise were expir'd,
The joy so might recover what was lost.

Enter Richard Plantagenet, 3 and Keeper.

1 Keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.
Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?
Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly us'd,
Your nephew, late despaired Richard, comes.
Mor. Direct mine arms I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp.
O! tell me, when my lips do touch his cheek,
That I may kindly give one fainting kiss,—
And now declare, sweet stem from York's great stock,
Why dost thou say—of late thou wert desir'd!
Plan. First, lean thin age ached back against mine
And in that case I'll tell thee my 4 disease. [arm,
This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew twixt Somerset and me;
Among which terms he us'd his lavish tongue,
And did upbraid me with my father's death:
Which obloquy set bars before my tongue,
Else with the like I had requited him.
Therefore, good uncle, for my father's sake,
In honor of a true Plantagenet,
And for alliance sake, declare the cause
My father, earl of Cambridge, lost his head.
Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me,
And hath deni'd me all my flow'ring youth
Within a loathsome dungeon, there to pine,
With a poisoned instrument of his own descent.
Plan. Discover more at large what cause that was:
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess.
Mor. I will, if that my fading breath permit,
And death approach not ere my tale be done.
Henry the fourth, his grandfader to this king,
Depos'd his 5 nephew Richard, Edward's son,
The first-begotten, and the lawful heir
Of Edward, king the third of that descent:
During whose reign the Piques of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavor'd my advancement to the throne.
The reason mov'd these warlike lords to this,
Was for that young king Richard thus remov'd,
(Leaving no heir begotten of his body)
I was the next by birth and parentage;
For by my mother I derived arm
From Lionel duke of Clarence, the third son
To king Edward the third, whereas he
From John of Gaut doth bring his pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroic line.
But mark: as, in this 6 haughty great

"Unmeaning; discountenance.
Nephew is here used for cousin.
High; lofty."

They labored to plant the rightful heir,
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.
Long after this, when Henry the fifth,
(Succeeding his father Bolingbrooke) did reign,
Thy father, earl of Cambridge, then deriv'd
From famous Edmund Langley, duke of York,
Marrying my sister, that thy mother was,
Again, in pity of my hard distress,
Lov'd an army, 7 weening to redeem,
And have install'd me in the diadem;
But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the title rested, were suppress'd.
Plan. Of which, my lord, your honor is the last.
Mor. True; and thou seest, that I no issue have,
And that my fainting words do warrant death.
Thou art my heir: the rest, I wish thee gather;
But yet be wary in thy studious care.
Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with me.
But yet, methinks, my father's execution
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.
Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic:
Strong-fixed is the house of Lancaster,
And, like a mountain, not to be remov'd.
But now thy uncle is removing hence,
As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place.
Plan. O, uncle! would some part of my young years
Might but redeem the passage of your age.
Mor. Thou dost, then, wrong me; as the slaught'rer doth,
Which giveth many wounds, when one will kill
Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good;
Only, give order for my funeral.
And so farewell; and fair be all thy hopes,
And prosperous be thy life, in peace, and war!

[Dict.]

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parting soul!
In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage,
And like a hermit overspa'd thy days,—
Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast;
And what I do imagine, let that rest.—
Keepers, convey him hence; and I myself
Will see his burial better than his life.—

[Exeunt Keepers, bearing out Mortimer.
Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort:
And, for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house,
I doubt not but with honor to redress;
And therefore haste I to the parliament,
Either to be restored to my blood,
Or make my will th'o' advancer of my good. [Exit.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Exeter, Gloster,
WarwicK, somerset, and suffolk; the Bishop of winchester, richard Plantagenet, and others.
Win. Com'st thou with deep premeditated lines,
With written pamphlets studiously devis'd?
Humphrey of Gloster, if thou canst accuse,
Or ought intend'st to lay unto my charge,
Do it without invention, suddenly;
As I with sudden and extemporal speech

4 Thinking.—" A Bill," i.e., articles of accusation.
Glo. Presumptuous priest! this place commands my patience.

Or thou shouldst find thou hast dishonor’d me.

Think not, although in writing I prefer

The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg’d, or am not able

Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen:
No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestiferous, and diabolical pranks,
As ever infants prattled of thy pride.

Thou art a most pernicious usher,
Froward by nature, enemy to peace;
Lascivious, wanton, more than well become
A man of thy profession, and degree:
And for thy treachery, what’s more manifest,
In that thou hast laid a trap to take my life,
As well at London bridge, as at the Tower?
Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloster, I do defy thee. — Lords, vouchsafe
To give me hearing what I shall reply.
If I were covetous, ambitious, proud,
As he will have me, how am I so poor?
Or how hapst it, I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling?
And for dissension, who preserveth peace
More than I do, except I be provok’d?
No, my good lords, it is not that offenders;
It is not that that hath incendi’d the duke:
It is, because no one should sway but he;
No one but he should be about the king;
And that engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him rear those heterosexuals forth.
But he shall know, I am as good—

Glo. Thou bastard of my grandfather!—

Win. Ay, lordly sir; for what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in another’s throne?
Glo. Am I not the protector, saucy priest?
Win. And am I not a prelate of the church?
Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,
And useth it to patronage his theft.
Win. Unreverent Gloster!

Glo. Thou art reverent.

Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.
Win. Rome shall remedy this.

War. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.

Som. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.
Methinks, my lord should be religious,
And know the office that belongs to such.
War. Methinks, his lordship should be humbler:
It fitted not a prelate so to plead.
Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch’d so near.
War. State holy, or unhallow’d, what of that?
Is not his grace protector to the king?
Plan. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his tongue;

[Aside]

Lest it be said, "Speak, sirrah, when you should;
Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords?"

Else would I have a flogging at Winchester.

K. Hen. Unles of Gloster, and of Winchester,
The special watchmen of our English weal,
I would prevail, if prayers might prevail,
To join your hearts in love and amity.

Of what a scandal is it to our crown,
That such noble peers as ye should jar.
Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell,
Civil dissension is a viperous worm,
That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.—

[A noise within: Down with the taxeuny coats!]

What tumult’s this?

War. An uproar, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the bishop’s men.

[Enter the Mayor of London, and some Citizens.
Most. O, very good lords, and virtuous Henry,
Pray the city of London, pity us!
The 3 bishop’s and the duke of Gloster’s men,
Forbidden late to carry any weapon,
Have fill’d their pockets full of pebble-stones;
And banding themselves in contrary parts,
Do pelt so fast at one another’s 9 pates,
That many have their giddy brains knock’d out.
Our windows are broke down in every street,
And we for fear compell’d to shut our shops.

Enter, skimming, the Retainers of Gloster,
And Winchester, with bloody pates.

K. Hen. We charge you, on allegiance to ourself,
To hold your slaughtering hands, and keep the peace.
Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.

1 Serv. Nay, if we be Forbidden stones, we’ll fall to it with our teeth.

2 Serv. Do what ye dare; we are as resolute.

[Skirmish again.

Glo. You, of my household, leave this peevish broil,
And set this unaccustomed fight aside.

1 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a man
Just and upright; and, for your royal birth,
Inferior to none but to his majesty;
And ere that we will suffer such a prince,
So kind a father of the commonweal,
To be disgraced by an ink-horn mate,
We, and our wives, and children, all will fight,
And have our bodies slaughter’d by thy face.

3 Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails
Shall pitch a field, when we are dead.

[Skirmish again.

Glo. Stay, stay?

And, if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear a while.
K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul!—

Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold
My sighs and tears, and will not once relent?
Who should be pitiful, if you be not?
Or who should study to preserve a peace,
If holy churchmen take delight in broils?

[Enter; War. 9 Yield, lord protector; and yiel’d, Winchester. Except you mean, with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sovereign, and destroy the realm.
You see what mischief, and what murder too,
Hath been enacted through your enmity;
Then, be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stoope;
Or I would see his heart out, ere the priest
Should ever get that privilege of me.

War. Behold, my lord of Winchester, the duke
Hath banish’d muddy discontented fury,
As by his smooth’d brows it doth appear:
Why look you still so stern, and tragi-cal?

Glo. Here, Winchester; I offer thee my hand.

[War. 9 Winchester refuses it.
K. Hen. Fye, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you
That malice was a great and grievious sin;
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,
But prove a chief offender in the same?

War. Sweet king!—the bishop hath a kindly b. girl.
For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent:

5 "An inkhorn mate," i. e. a bookish person; a pedant.
6 "A hath a kindly girl," i. e. feels an emotion of kindness.

What! shall a child instruct you what to do? Wis. Well, duke of Gloster, I will yield to thee; Love for thy love, and hand for hand I give. [Gives his hand. Glo. Ay; but I fear me, with a hollow heart. [Aside. See here, my friends, and loving countrymen; This token serveth for a flag of truce, Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers. So help me God, as I dissemble not! Wis. So help me God, as I intend it not! [Aside. K. Hen. O, loving uncle, and kind duke of Gloster, How joyfully am I made by this contract! Away, my masters: trouble us no more, But join in friendship, as your lords have done. 1 Serv. Content: I'll to the surgeon's. 2 Serv. And so will I. 3 Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern affords. [Exeunt Mayor, 2 Citizens, Servants, &c. War. Accept this scroll, most gracious sovereign, Which in the right of Richard Plantagenet We do exhibit to your majesty. [prince, Glo. Well urg'd, my lord of Warwick:—for, sweet And if your grace mark every circumstance, You have great reason to do Richard right; Especially for those occasions At Pithom-place I told your majesty. K. Hen. And those occasions, uncle, were of force: Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is, That Richard be restored to his blood. War. Let Richard be restored to his blood; So shall his father's wrongs be recompen'd. Wis. As will the rest, so will'th Winchester. K. Hen. If Richard shall be true, not that alone, But all the whole inheritance I give, That doth belong unto the house of York, From whence you spring by lineal descent. Plan. Thy 2 honor'd servant vows obedience, And humble service, till the point of death. K. Hen. Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot; And in a reguerson of that duty done, I girt thee with the valiant sword of York. Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet, And rise created princely duke of York. Plan. And so thrive Richard as thy foes may fall: And as my duty springs, so perish they That grudge one thought against your majesty. All. Welcome, high prince, the mighty duke of York! Som. Perish, base prince, ignoble duke of York! [Aside. Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty, To cross the seas, and to be crowned in France. The presence of a king engenders love Amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends, As it disseminates his enemies. [goes; K. Hen. When Gloster says the word, king Henry For friendly counsel cuts off many foes. Glo. Your ships already are in readiness. [Flourish. Exeunt all but Exeter. Exe. Ay, we may march in England, or in France, Not seeing what is likely to ensue. This hase dissonance, grown betwixt the peers, Burns under weighty ashes of forge'd love, And will at last break out into a flame: As foster'd members rot but by degrees, Till bones, and flesh, and sinews, fall away, So will this base and envious discord breed. And now I fear that fatal prophecy, Which, in the time of Henry, nam'd the fifth, Was in the mouth of every sucking babe,— That Henry, born at Monmouth, should win all, And Henry, born at Windsor, should lose all: Which is so plain, that Exeter doth wish His days may finish ere that hapless time. [Exit.

SCENE II.—France. Before Rouen.

Enter La Pucelle disguised, and Soldiers dressed like Countrymen, with Sacks upon their Backs.

Puc. These are the city gates, the gates of Rouen, Through which our policy must make a breach. Take heed, be wary how you place your words; Talk like the vulgar sort of market-men, That come to gather money for their corn. If we have entrance; (as I hope we shall) And that we find the slothful watch but weak, 'll by a sign give notice to our friends:

That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

I Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to suck the city, And we be lords and rulers over Rouen;

Therefore we'll knock. [Knocks. Guard. [Within.] Qui est là?

Puc. Pauvres, les pauvres gens de France;

Poor market-folks, that come to sell their corn.

Guard. Enter; go in: the market-hall is rous.

[Opening the gates. Puc. Now, Rouen, I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground.

[Exit. Pucelle, &c. enter the City.

Enter Charles, Bastard of Orleans, Alesçon, and Forces.

Char. Saint Dennis bless this happy strangern, And once again we'll sleep secure in Rouen. Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle, and her 2 practisants.

Now she is there, how will she specify Where is the best and safest passage in? Alcm. By thrusting out a torch from yonder tower; Which, once discerr'd, shows, that her meaning is,— No way to 2 that, for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter La Pucelle on a Battlement, holding out a Torch burning.

Puc. Behold! this is the happy wedding torch, That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen, But burning fatal to the Talbotites. Bast. See, noble Charles, the beacon of our friend; The burning torch in yonder turret stands. Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge, A prophet of the fall of all our foes! Alcm. Defer no time; delays have dangerous ends:

Enter, and cry The Dauphin! presently, And then do execution on the watch. [They enter.

Alarums. Enter Talbot, and English Soldiers.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy Talbot but survive thy treachery. [tears,
Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress, Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares, That hardly we escap'd the pride of France. [Exeunt to the Town.

Alarum. Excursions. Enter, from the Town, Bedford, brought in sick in a Chair, with Talbot, Burgundy, and the English Forces. Then, enter on the Walls, La Pucelle, Charles, Bastard, Alesçon, Reignier, and others.

Puc. Good morrow, gallants. Want ye corn for I think, the duke of Burgundy will fast, [bread? Before he'll buy again at such a rate.

"'Twas full of darrell; do you like the taste?" 2 3 Practisants," i. e., confederates in strategies. — 4 No way to that," i. e., no way equal to that. — "The pride," i. e., the haughty power.
Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend, and shameless courtzean! I trust, ere long, to choke thee with thine own, And make thee curse the harvest of that corn. Char. Your grace may starve, perhaps, before that time. [trenson. Bed. O! let no words, but deeds, revenge this Puc. What will you do, good grey-beard? break And run a tilt at death within a day of life? Tal. Foul fiend of France, and hag of hell’s des- Encompass’d with thy lustful paramours, [spite, Becomes it thee to tempt his valiant age, And twit with cowardice a man half dead? Damned, I’ll have a bout with you again, Or else let Talbot perish with this shame. [peace: Tal. Ay, you do hot, sir?—Yet, Pucelle, hold thy If Talbot do but thunder, ruin will follow.— [Talbot, and the rest, consult together. God speed the parliament! who shall be fools? Tal. Dare ye come forth, and meet us in the field? Puc. Belike, your lordship takes us then for fools, To try if that our own be ours, or no. Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate, But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest. Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out? Alen. Signior, no. Tal. Signior, hang!—base muleteers of France! Like peasant foot-boys do they keep the walls, And dare not take up arms like gentlemen. Puc. Away, captains! let’s get us from the walls, For we have no goodness by his looks, God be wi’ you, my lord: we came, but to tell you— That we are here. [Exeunt La Pucelle, &c., from the Walls. Tal. And there will be too, ere it be long, Or else reproach be Talbot’s greatest fame.— Vow, Burgundy, by honor of thy house, That I did once public wrongs in France, Either to get the town again, or die; And I, as sure as English Henry lives, And as his father here was conqueror, As sure I swear to get the town, or die. Bur. My vows are equal partners with thy vows. [Exeunt. Tal. We are we go, regard this dying prince, The valiant duke of Bedford.—Come, my lord, We will bestow you in some better place, Fitter for sickness, and for crazy age. Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonor me: Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen, And will be partner of your weal, or woe. [you. Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read, That stout Pendragon, in his litter, sick, Came to the field, and vanquished his foes. Methinks, I should revive the soldiers’ hearts, Because I ever found them as myself. Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast!— Then, be it so—heavens keep old Bedford safe!— And now no more ado, brave dying prince, But gather we our forces out of hand, And set upon our boasting enemy. [Exeunt Burgundy, Talbot, and Forces, leaving Bedford, and others. Alarums: Exeunt. Enter Sir John Fastolfe, and a Captain. Cap. Whither away, sir John Fastolfe, in such haste? Fast. Whither away? to save myself by flight: We are like to have the overthow again. Cap. What? will you fly, and leave lord Talbot? Fast. Ay, all the Talbots in the world, to save my life. [Exit. Cap. Cowardly knight! ill fortune follow thee! [Exit. Retreat: Exeunt. Enter, from the Town, La Pucelle, ALENÇON, CHARLES, &c. and exequat. fying. Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when Heaven please, For I have seen our enemies’ overthrow. What is the trust or strength of foolish man? They, that of late were daring with their sculls, Are glad and vain by flight to save themselves. [Dies, and is carried off in his Chariot. Alarums. Enter Talbot, Burgundy, and others. Tal. Lost, and recover’d in a day again! This is a double hour, Burgundy; Yet heavens have glory for this victory. Bur. Warlike and matchless Talbot, Burgundy Embraces thee in his heart; and there erects Thy noble deeds, as valor’s monument. [now! Tal. Thinks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle I think her old familiar is asleep: [glooms? Now were the Bastard’s brave heart, and Charles his What, all a-spect? Rouen hangs her head for grief, That such a valiant company are fled. Now will we take some order in the town, Placing therein some expert officers, And then depart to Paris to the king; For there young Henry with his nobles lies. Bur. What wills lord Talbot pleaseth Burgundy. Tal. But yet, before we go, let’s not forget The noble duke of Bedford, late decess’d, But see his exequies fulfilled in Rouen: A braver soldier never couched lance, A gentler heart did never sway in court; But kings, and mightiest potentates must die, For that’s the end of human misery. [Exeunt. SCENE III.—The Same. The Plains near the City. Enter CHARLES, the Bastard, ALENÇON, La Pucelle, and Forces. Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident, Nor grieve that Rouen is so recovered: Care is no cure, but rather corrosive, For things that are not to be remedied. Let four batals Talbot triumph for a while. And like a peacock sweep along his tail, We’ll pull his plumes, and take away his train, If Dauphin and the rest will be but rul’d. Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto, And of thy cunning had no diffidence: One sudden fall shall never breed distrust. Baa. Search out thy wit for secret policies, And we will make thee famous through the world. Alen. We’ll set thy statue in some holy place, And have thee reverence’d like a blessed saint: Employ thee, then, sweet virgin, for our good. Puc. Then thus it must be; this doth Joan devise. By fair persuasions, mix’d with sugar’d words, We will entice the duke of Burgundy To leave the Talbot, and to follow us. Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that, France were no place for Henry’s warriors; Nor should that nation boast it so with us, But be exterminated from our provinces. [France, Alen. For ever should they be expuls’d from And have not title of an earldom here. Puc. Your honors shall perceive how I will work. * Scoif.—All a-mort, i.e., quite cast down.— “Take some order,” i.e., make some necessary dispositions.— * Funeral rites.— Exterminated; rooted out.— Expelled.
SCENE I.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

To bring this matter to the wished end,
Draughts heard after off.
Hark! by the sound of drum you may perceive
Their powers are marching until Parisward.

An English March. Enter, and pass over, Talbot and his Forces.
There goes the Talbot, with his colors spread,
And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the Duke of Burgundy and Forces.
Now, in the rearward comes the duke, and his:
Fortune in favor makes him lag behind.
Summon a parley; we will talk with him.

[Trumpets sound a parley.]

Char. A parley with the duke of Burgundy.
Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy?
Puc. The princely Charles of France, thy countryan.
Bur. What say'st thou, Charles? for I am marching hence.
Char. Speak, Pucelle, and enchant him with thy words.
Puc. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of France,
Stay; let thy humble handmaid speak to thee.
Bur. Speak on; but be not over-tedious.
Puc. Look on thy country, look on fertile France,
And see her cities and her towns defaced
By wanton ruin of the cruel foe.
As looks the mother on her lovely babe,
When death doth close his tender dying eyes,
See, see, the pining malady of France:
Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds,
Which thou thyself hast given her woful breast.
O! turn thy edged sword another way;
Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help.
One drop of blood, drawn from thy country's bosom,
Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore:
Return thee, therefore, with a flood of tears,
And wash away thy country's stained spots.
Bur. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words,
Or nature makes me suddenly relent. [thee,
Puc. Besides, all French and France exclaims on Doubling thy birth and lawful prosperity.
Whom join'st thou with, but with a lordly nation
That will not trust thee but for profit's sake?
When Talbot hath set footing once in France,
And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill,
Who then but English Henry will be lord,
And thou be thrust out, like a fugitive?
Cal me to mind, and mark but this for proof,
Was not the duke of Orleans thy endear?
And was he not in England prisoner?
But, when they heard he was thine enemy,
They set him free, without his ransom paid,
In spite of Burgundy, and all his friends.
Seem, then, thou fightest against thy countreymen,
And join'st with them will be thy slaughter-men.
Come, come, return; return, thou wand'ring lord:
Charles, and the rest, will take thee in their arms.
Bur. I am vanquished: these haughty words of
Have batter'd me like roaring cannon-shot,
And made me almost yield upon my knees. —
Forgive me, country, and sweet countreymen !
And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace:
My forces and my power of men are yours. —
So, farewell, Talbot; I'll no longer trust thee.
Puc. Done like a Frenchman; turn, and turn again!
[Aside.

Char. Welcome, brave duke! thy friendship makes us fresh.
Bast. And doth beget new courage in our breasts.
Aien. Pucelle hath bravely played her part in this,
And doth deserve a coronet of gold.

Char. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers,
And seek how we may prejudice the foe. [Exit.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, and other Lords, Vernon, Basset, &c. To them Talbot, and and some of his Officers.

Tal. My gracious prince, and honorable peers,
Hearing of your arrival in this realm,
I have a while given truce unto my wars,
To do my duty to my sovereign:
In sign whereof, this arm—that hath reclaim'd
To your obedience fifty fortresses,
Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength,
Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem,—
Lest his sword before his highness' feet;
And with submissive loyalty of heart,
Ascribes the glory of his conquest got,
First to this his God, and next unto your grace.

K. Hen. Is this the lord Talbot, uncle Gloster,
That hath so long been resident in France?

Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

K. Hen. Welcome, brave captain, and victorious
When I was young: (as yet I am not old) lord. I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword.
Long since we were a resolved of that truth,
Your faithful service, and your toll in war;
Yet never have you tasted our reward,
Or been resolver'd with so much thanks.
Because till now we never saw your face.
Therefore, stand up; and, for these good deserts,
We here create you earl of Shrewsbury,
And in our coration take your place.

[Flourish. Exeunt King Henry, Gloster,
Talbot, and Nobles.

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea,
Disgracing of these colors, that I wear
In honor of my noble lord of York,
Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?
Bas. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage
The cunous barking of thy saucy tongue
Against my lord, the duke of Somerset.
Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honor as he is.
Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man as York.
Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that.

Bas. Villain, thou know'st, the law of arms is such,
That, whose draws a sword, 'tis present death,
Or else this blow should broach thy dearest blood.
But I'll unto his majesty, and crave
I may have liberty to venge this wrong,
When thou shalt see, I'll meet thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you;
And after meet you sooner than you would. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room of State.

Enter King Henry, Gloster, Exeter, York, Suffolk, Somerset, Winchester, Warwick, Talbot,
the Governor of Paris, and others.

Glo. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.
Win. God save king Henry, of that name the sixth!
[Sound Trumpets.

Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath,—

[Governor kneels.

*Convinced,—Rewarded.—"Those colors" i. e., the badge of a rose.
That you elect no other king but him,
Esteem none friends, but such as are his friends,
And none your foes, but such as shall pretend—
Malicious practices against his state:
This shall ye do, so help you righteously God!

[Exeunt Gov. and his Tram.]

Enter Sir John Fastolpe.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,
To haste unto your coronation,
A letter was deliver'd to my hands,
Writ to your grace from the duke of Burgundy.

[Tal. gives it.]

Tal. Shame to the duke of Burgundy, and thee!
I vow'd, base knight, when I did meet thee next,
To tear the garter from thy craven's leg;
Plucking it off.

Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed in that high degree.—
Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest.
This dastard, at the battle of Patay,
When but in all I was six thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,
Before we met, or that a stroke were given,
Like to a trusty squire, did run away:
In which assault we lost twelve hundred men;—
Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,
Were there surpris'd, and taken prisoners.
Then, judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;
Or whether that such cowards ought to wear
This ornament of knighthood, yea, or no!

Glo. To say the truth, *his fact was infamous,
And ill becoming any common man,
Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.

Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,
Knights of the garter were of noble birth,
Vulgar and virtuous, full of *haughty courage,
Such as were grown to credit by the wars;
Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,
But always resolving in *worst extremes.

He, then, is not that furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
Profaning this most honorable order;
And should (if I were worthy to be judge)
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hear'st thy doom;
Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight.
Henceforth we banish thee on pain of death.—

[Exit Fastolpe.]

And now, my lord protector, view the letter
Sent from our uncle duke of Burgundy. [his style]
Glo. What means his grace, that he hath charg'd
No more but, plain and bluntly,—"To the king!"
Hath he forgot he is his sovereign?
Or doth this curishd superscription
*Portend some alteration in good will? [cause,— What's here? [Reads.]
"I have upon especial
Mov'd with compassion of my country's wreck,
Together with the pitiful complaints
Of such as your oppression feeds upon,
Forsaken your pernicious faction," [France."
And join'd with Charles, the rightful king of
O, monstrous treachery! Can this be so?
That in alliance, amity, and oaths,
There should be found such false dissembling guile?

K. Hen. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt?
Glo. He doth, my lord; and is become a thy foe.
K. Hen. Is that the worst this letter doth contain?
Glo. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writeth.

K. Hen. Why then, lord Talbot, there, shall talk
With him.

And give him chastisement for this abuse.—
How say you, my lord? are you not content?—
Tal. Content, my liege? Yes; but that I'm prevented,
I should have begg'd I might have been employ'd.
K. Hen. Then gather strength, and march unto him straight.

Let him perceive how ill we brook his treason;
And what offence it is to flout his friends.
Tal. I go, my lord; in heart desiring still,
You may behold confusion of your foes. [Exit.]

Enter Vernon and Basset.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign!
Bass. And me, my lord; grant me the combat too!
York. This is my servant: hear him, noble prince.
Som. And this is mine: sweet Henry, favor him.
K. Hen. Be patient, lords, and give them leave to speak.

Say, gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaim?
And wherefore crave you combat? or with whom?
Ver. With him, my lord; for he hath done me wrong.
Bass. And with him; for he hath done me wrong, K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both complain?
First let me know, and then I'll answer you.
Bass. Crossing the sea from England into France,
This fellow, here, with vain courting tongue
Upbraided me about the rose I wear;
Saying, the sanguine color of the leaves
Did represent my master's blushing checks,
When stubbornly he did repugn the truth,
About a certain question in the law,
Arse'd between the duke of York and him;
With other vile and ignominious terms:
In conflation of which rude reproach,
And in defence of my lord's worthiness,
I crave the benefit of law of arms.
Ver. And that is my petition, royal lord:
For though he seem, with forged quitain conceit,
To set a gloss upon his bold intent,
Yet know, my lord, I was provok'd by him,
And he first took exceptions at this badge,
Prondning, that the paleness of this flower
Bewray'd the faintheart of my master's heart.
York. Will not this mulice, Somerset, be left?
Som. Your private grudge, my lord of York, will Though ne'er so cunningly you smother it. [out,
K. Hen. Good Lord! what madness rules in brain-sick men?
When, for so slight and frivolous a cause,
Such factious emulations? still arise. —
Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,
Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace.
York. Let this disension first be try'd by fight,
And then your highness shall command a peace.
Som. Then the quarrel becastheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it, then.
York. There is my pledge; accept it, Somerset.
Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.
Bass. Confirm it so, mine honorable lord.
Glo. Confirm it so? Confounded be your strife,
And perish ye, with your audacious prate!
Presumptuous vassals! are you not ashamed,
With this inmodest chimerous courage
To trouble and disturb the king and us?
And you, my lords, methinks, you do not well,
To bear with their perverse objections;
Much less to take occasion from their mouths

* Intend; design.—* Mean; dastardly.—* High-spirited.
To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves:
Let me persuade you take a better course. [friends. Exe. It grieves his highness: good my lords, be

Henceforth, I charge you, as you love our favor,
Quiet to forget this quarrel, and the cause.—
And you, my lords, remember where we are;
In France, amongst a fickle waver ing nation.
If they perceive dissuasion in our looks,
That within ourselves we disagree,
How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd to wilful disobedience, and rebel?
Beside, what infamy will there arise,
When foreign princes shall be certified,
That for a toy, a thing of no regard,
King Henry's peers, and chief nobility,
Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France?
O! think upon the conquest of my father,
My tender years; and let us not forego
That for a trifle, that was bought with blood.
Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.
I see no reason, if I wear this rose,
[Putting on a red Rose.
That any one should therefore be suspicious
I more incline to Somerset than York:
Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both.
As well they may applaud me willy and I crown,
Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd.
But your discretions better can persuade,
Than I am able to instruct or teach:
And therefore, as we hither came in peace,
So let us still continue peace and love.—
Cousin of York, we institute your grace
To be our regent in these parts of France:
And as my lord of Somerset, unite
Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot;
And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,
Go cheerfully together, and digest
Your angry choler on your enemies,
Ourself, my lord protector, and the rest,
After some respite, will return to Calais;
From thence to England; where I hope ere long
To be presented by your victories
With Charles, Alcaun, and that traitorous rout.
[Flourish. Exeunt King Henry, Glo., Som.,
Win., Suf., and Basset. War. My lord of York, I promise you, the king
Prettily, me thought, did play the orator.
York. And so he did; but yet I like it not,
In that he wears the badge of Somerset.
War. Tush! that was but his fancy, blame him not;
I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.
York. And, if I wist he did,—But let it rest;
Other affairs must now be managed.
[Exeunt York, Warwick, and Vernon. Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy
For, had the passions of thy heart burst out, [voice;
I fear, we should have seen deceip'ther'd there
More copious spoile, more furious raging broils,
Than yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd.
But howso'er, no simple man that sees
This jarring discord of nobility,
This shoudering of each other in the court,
This factious blazing of their favorites,
But that it doth pressage some ill event.
'Tis much when scapes are in children's hands;
But more, when envy breeds 4 unkind division;
There comes the ruin, there begins confusion.
[Exit.

SCENE II.—France. Before Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot, with his Forces. Tol. Go to the gates of Bourdeaux, trumpeter:
 Summon their general unto the wall.
Trumpet sounds a Parley. Enter, on the Walls, the General of the French Forces, and others.
English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth,
Servant in arms to Harry king of England;
And thus he would.—Open your city gates,
Be humble to us, call my sovereign yours,
And do him homage as obedient subjects,
And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power;
But, if you frown upon this proffer'd peace,
You tempt the fury of my three redress,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire;
Who, in a moment, even with the earth
Shall by your stately and air-braving towers,
If you forsake the offer of their love.
Gen. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death,
Our nation's terror, and their bloody scourge,
The period of thy tyranny approached.
On us thou canst not enter lest by death;
For, I protest, we are well forti
ded,
And strong enough to issue out and fight:
If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee.
On either hand thee there are squadions pitch'd
To wall thee from the liberty of flight,
And no way canst thou turn thee redress,
But death dost from thee with apparent spoil,
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.
Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament,
To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot.
Lo! there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man,
Of an invincible unconqu'rd spirit:
This is the latest glory of thy praise,
That I, thy enemy, 'd thee withal;
For ere the glass, that now begins to run,
Finish the process of his sandy hour,
These eyes, that see thee now well colored,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.
[Drum off. Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.
[Exeunt General, &c., from the walls. Tol. He fables not; I hear the enemy.—
Out, some light horsemen, and persue their wings.—
O, negligent and heedless discipline!
How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale!
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Max'd with a yelping kennel of French curs!
If we be English deer, be then in a blood;
Not 4 rascal-like, to fall down with a pinch,
But rather moody mad, and desperate stags,
Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine,
And they shall find dear deer of us, my friends.—
God, and Saint George, Talbot, and England's right.
Prosper our colors in this dangerous fire!
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains in Gascony.

Enter York, with Forces; to him, a Messenger. York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?

9. *"If I wist he did," i. e., if I thought he did.—"This much," i. e., 'tis an alarming circumstance. — Malles—Unnatural.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Som. How now, sir William! Whither were you sent? [Lord Talbot; Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold Who, ring'd about with bold adversity, Cries out for noble York and Somerset, To beat assailing death from his weak legs: And whilsts the honorable captain there Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs, And, in advantage d' lingering, looks for rescue, You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honor, Keep off aloof with worthless * emulation. Let not your private discord keep away The levied succours that should lend him aid, While he, renowned noble gentleman, Yields up his life unto a world of colds. Orleans the Bastard, Charles, and Burgundy, Alençon, Reignier, compass him about, And Talbot perisheth by your default. [aid. Som. York set him on, York should have sent him Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims; Swearing that you withhold his levied host, Collected for this expedition. [horse. Soon would lies he might have sent and had the I owe him little duty, and less love, And take foul scorn to fawn on him by sending. Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France, Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot! Never to England shall he bear his life, But dies betray'd to fortune by your state. Som. Good for me; I will despise the horsemen Within six hours they will be at his aid. [straight: Lucy. Too late comes rescue: he is ta'en, or slain, For fly he could not, if he would have fled, And fly would Talbot never, though he might. Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then adieu! Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The English Camp near Bourdeaux.

Enter Talbot and John his Son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee, To tutor thee in stratagems of war, That all men's name might be in thee reviv'd, When spleen age, and weak unable limbs, Should bring thy father to his drooping chair. But,—O, malignant and ill-boding stars!— Now thou art come into a feast of death, A terrible and unavowed danger: Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest horse, And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape By sudden flight. Come, daily not; begone. John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son? And shall I fly? O! if you love my mother, Dishonor not her honorable name, To make a bastard, and a slave of me: The world will say he is not Talbot's blood, That basely fled, when noble Talbot stood. Tal. Fly to revenge my death, if I be slain. John. He that flies so will ne'er return again. Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die. John. Then let me stay; and father, do you fly: Your loss is great, so your regard should be; My worth unknown, no loss is known in me. Upon my death the French can little feast, In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost. Flight cannot stain the honor you have won.

Spies. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out, That he is march'd to Bourdeaux with his power, To fight with Talbot. As he march'd along, By your * spies were discovered Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led, Which John 'd with him, and made their march for Bourdeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset, That thus delays my promised supply Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege! Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid, And I am * bow'd by a traitor villain, And cannot help the noble chevalier. God comfort him in this necessity! If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter Sir William Lucy.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English strength, Never so needful on the earth of France, Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot, Whose sword is girdled with a waist of iron, And henn'd about with grim destruction. To Bourdeaux, warlike duke! to Bourdeaux, York! Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's honor. York. O God! that Somerset—who in proud heart Doth stop my cornets—were in Talbot's place! So should we save a valiant gentleman, By forfearing a traitor and a coward, Mad trend and wrathful fury, make me weep, That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep. Lucy. O, send some succor to the distress'd lord! York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word: We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get; All long of this vile traitor Somerset. [soul! Lucy. Then, God take mercy on brave Talbot's And on his son, young John; whom two hours since I met in travel toward his warlike father. This seven years did not Talbot see his son, And now they meet where both their lives are done. York. Alas! what joy shall noble Talbot have, To bid his young son welcome to his grave! Away! vexation almost stops my breath, That true and friends greet in the hour of death.— Lucy, farewell! no more my fortune can, But curse the cause I cannot aid the man.— Maine, Blois, Poictiers, and Tours, are won away, Long all of Somerset, and his delay. [Exit York with his Forces.

Lucy. Thus, while the vesture of sedition Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders, Sleeping neglect doth both betray to loss, The conquest of our scource-cold conqueror, That ever-living man of memory, Henry the fifth. When by each other cross, Lives, honors, lands, and all, hurry to loss. [Exit.

* SCENE IV.—Other Plains of Gascony. Enter Somerset, with his Army; an Officer of Talbot's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now. This expedition was by York, and Talbot, Too rashly plotted: all our general force Might with a sally of the very town Be buckled with. The over-daring Talbot Hath solli'd all his gloss of former honor, By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure. York set him on to fight, and die in shame, That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name. Off. Here is sir William Lucy, who with me Set from our o'er-match'd forces forth for aid.

Enter Sir William Lucy.
SCENE VII.
FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

But mine it will, that no exploit have done:
You fled for vantage every one will swear,
But if I fly, they'll say it was for fear.
There is no hope that over I will stay,
If the first hour I shrink, and run away.
Here, on my knee, I beg mortality.
Rather that life preserved with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb?
John. Ay, rather, than I'll shame my mother's womb.

Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee go.
John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.
Tal. Part of thy father may be sav'd in thee.
John. No part of him but will be shamed in me.
Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it.

John. Yes, your renowned name: shall flight abuse
Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain.

John. You cannot witness for me, being slain.
If death be so apparent, then both fly.
Tal. And leave, my lord Talbot, to fight, and
My age was never tainted with such shame.
John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame?
No more can I be sever'd from your side,
Then can yourself yourself in twain divide:
Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I;
For live I will not, if my father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.
Come, side by side together live and die,
And soul with soul from France to heaven fly.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A Field of Battle.

Alarums: Excursions, wherein Talbot's Son is humbled and, and Talbot rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victory! fight, soldiers, fight!
The regent hath with Talbot broke his word,
And left us to the rage of France's sword.
Where is John Talbot?—pause and take thy breath;
I gave thee life, and rescued thee from death.
John. O, twice my father! twice am I thy son:
The life thou gav'st me first was lost and made;
Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire,
It warmed thy father's heart with proud desire
Of bold-fac'd victory. Then leaden age,
Quicken'd with youthful spleen and warlike rage,
Beat down Alençon, Orleans, Burgundy,
And from the pride of Gallia rescu'd thee.
The irreful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, and had the mainheadship
Of thy first fight, I soon encountered,
And, interfacing blows, I quieted shed
Some of his bastard blood; and, in disgrace,
Bespoke him thus:—"Contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood I spilp of thine,
Mean and right poor; for that pure blood of mine,
Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy!"—
Here purposing the Bastard to destroy,
Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's care,
Art thou not weary, John? How dost thou fare?
Wilt thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly,
Now thou art seal'd of the son of chaivalry
Fly to revenge my death, when I am dead;
The help of one stands me in little stead.
O! too much folly is it, well I wot,
To hazard all our lives in one small boat.
If I to-day die not with Frenchmen's rage,
To-morrow shall I die with mickle age:
By me they nothing gain, and if I stay,
'r'st but the short-naming of my life one day:
In thee thy mother dies, our household's name,
My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame.
All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;
All these are sav'd, if thou wilt fly away.

[smart.

John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me
These words of yours draw life-blood from my heart.
On that advantage, bought with such a shame,
(To save a paltry life, and slay bright fame)
Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly.
The coward horse that bears me fall and die!
And like to me the peasant boys of France,
To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance!
Surely, by all the glory you have won,
An if I fly I am not Talbot's son:
Then, talk no more of flight, it is no boot,
If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.

Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete,
Thou Icarus. Thy life to me is sweet:
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side,
And, commendable prdu'd, let's die in pride.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Another part of the Same.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Talbot wounded, supported by a Soldier.

Tal. What is my other life?—mine own is gone:
O, where's young Talbot? where is valiant John?—
Triumphant death, smear'd with captivity,
Young Talbot's valor makes me smile at thee.—
When he perceive'd me shrink, and on my knee,
His bloody sword he brandish'd over me,
And like a hungry lion did commence
Rough deeds of rage, and stern impatience;
But when my angry guardian stood alone,
Tendering my 'ruin, and asailing of none,
Dizzy-ey'd fury, and great rage of heart,
Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clashing battle of the French:
And in that son of blood my boy did drench
His overmounting spirit; and there died
My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride.

Enter Soldiers, bearing the Body of John Talbot.

Sold. O, my dear lord! lo, where your son is borne!
[To scorn,

Tal. Thou quick, death, which laugh'st us here
Anon, from thy insulting tyranny,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,
Two Talbots, winged through the lither sky,
In thy despite shall scape mortality.—
O! thou whose wounds become lured-favor'd death,
Speak to thy father, ere thou yield thy breath:
Brave death by speaking, whether he will or no;
Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy foe.—
Poor boy! he smiles, methinks; as who should say,
Had death been French, then death had died to-day.
Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms.
My spirit can no longer bear these harms.
Soldiers, adieu! I have what I should have,
Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave.

[Dies.

Alarums. Exeunt Soldiers, leaving the two Bodies.

Enter Charles, Alençon, Burgundy, Bastard, La Pucelle, and Forces.

Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in,
We should have found a bloody day of this.

_Bast._ How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging as a mad dog, did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

_Puc._ Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said, "Thou maiden youth be vanquish'd by a maid!" But with a proud, majestical high scorn, he answered thus: "Young Talbot was not born to be the pilfage of a piglet wrench.

So, rushing in the bowels of the French, he left me proudly, as unworthy fight. [knight.

_Bur._ Doubtless, he would have made a noble See, where he lies interred in the arms Of the still bleeding nursar of his harms. [der.

_Bast._ How they to pieces, hack their bones asunder. Whose life was England's glory, Galland's wonder.

_Char._ O, no! forbear; for that which we have fled During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

_Enter Sir William Lucy, attended; a French Herald preceding._

_Lucy._ Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent, To know whom it hath the glory of the day.

_Char._ On what submissive message art thou sent?

_Lucy._ Submission, Dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;

_We English warriors not what it means._

I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en, And to survey the bodies of the dead.

_Char._ For prisoners ask'st thou? hell our prison is.

_Lucy._ But where's the great Alcides of the field, Valiant lord Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury?

_Char._ Creator of his rare success in arms, Great earl of Washford, Waterford, and Valence; Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchifield, Lord Strange of Blackmere, lord Verdun of Alton, Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, lord Furnival of Shelf; The thrice victorious lord of Falconbridge; [field, Knight of the noble order of St. George, Worthy Saint Michael, and the golden fleece; Great marshall to Henry the sixth Of all his wars within the realms of France?

_Puc._ Here is a silly stately style indeed! The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms hath, Writes not so tedious a style as this,— Him, that thou magnificest with all these titles, Shining, and fly-blown, lies here at our feet.

_Lucy._ Is Talbot slain? the Frenchman's only scourge, Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis? O! were mine eye-balls into bullets turn'd, That I in rage might shoot them at your faces. O! that I could but call these dead to life, It were enough to fright the realm of France. Were but his picture left among you here, It would amaze the proudest of you all, Give me their bodies, that I bear them forth, And give them burial as beassems their worth.

_Puc._ I think, this upstart is old Talbot's ghost, He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit. For God's sake, let him have 'em; keep them here, They would but sting, and patey the air.

_Char._ Go, take their bodies hence.

_Lucy._ I'll bear them hence; But from their very ashes shall be rear'd A phoenix that shall make all France afraid.

_Char._ So be we rid of them, do what thou wilt. And now to Paris, in this conquering vein: All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. A Room in the Palace.

_Enter King Henry, Glaston, and Exeter._

K. Hen. Have you perus'd the letters from the pope, The emperor, and the earl of Armagnac?

_Glo._ I have, my lord; and their intent is this:— They humbly sue unto your excellent grace, To have a godly peace concluded Of between the realms of England and of France. K. Hen. How doth your grace affect their motion?

_Glo._ Well, my good lord; and as the only means To stop effusion of much Christian blood, And establish quietness on every side. K. Hen. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought, It was both impious and unnatural, That such immansity and bloody strife Should reign among professors of one faith.

_Glo._ Beside, my lord, the sooner to effect, And surer bind, this knot of amity, The earl of Armagnac, near to Charles, A man of great authority in France, Proffers his only daughter to your grace In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry. K. Hen. Marriage, uncle? alas! my years are young, And fitter is my study and my books,

_Tham wanton dalliance with a paramour._

Yet, call the ambassadors; and, as you please, So let them have their answers every one:

I shall well content with any choice, Tends to God's glory and my country's weal.

_Enter a Legate, and two Ambassadors, with Winchester, as a Cardinal._

Exe. What! is my lord of Winchester install'd, And call'd unto a Cardinal's degree?

Then, I perceive that will be verified,

Henry the fifth did sometime prophesy,— "If once he come to be a cardinal, He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown." K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits Have been consider'd and debated on. Your purpose is both good and reasonable; And, therefore, are we certainly resolv'd, To draw conditions of a friendly peace;

Which, by my lord of Winchester, we mean Shall be transported presently to France.

_Glo._ And for the proffer of my lord, your master, I have inform'd his highness so at large, As—liking of the lady's virtuous gifts, Her beauty, and the value of her dowry,— He doth intend she shall be England's queen. K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contract, Bear her this jewel, pledge of my affection.—

_Glo._ [Gives it. And so, my lord protector, see them guarded, And safely brought to Dover; where, instal'd, Commit them to the fortune of the sea.] [Exeunt King Henry and Train; Glaston, Exeter, and Ambassadors._

_Win._ Stay, my lord legate: you shall first receive The sum of money, which I promised Should be deliver'd to his holiness For clothing me in these grave ornaments.

_Leg._ I will attend upon your lordship's pleasure._

_Win._ Now, Winchester will not submit, I trow, Or be inferior to the proudest peer. Humphrey of Glaston, thou shalt well perceive, That, neither in birth, or for authority, SCENE II.—France. Plains in Anjou.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alencon, La Pucelle, and Forces, marching.

Char. Those news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits, and turn again unto the warlike French. Alencon. Then, march to Paris, royal Charles of France, and keep not back your powers in dailiance. Pucce. Peace be amongst them, if they turn to us; else ruin combat with their palaces! [Enter a Scout.

Scout. Success unto our valiant general, and happiness to his accomplices! [Speak. Char. What tidings send our scouts? I pr'ythee, Scout. The English army, that divided was into two parties, is now conjoin'd in one, And means to give you battle presently. Char. Somewhat too sudden, sirs, the warning is; But we will presently provide for them. Bar. I trust, the ghost of Talbot is not there: Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear. Of all base passions fear is most accur'd.— Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be thine; Let Henry fret, and all the world repine. Char. Then on, my lords; and France be fortunate! [Exit.

Scene III.—The Same. Before Angiers.

Alarums; Excruciations. Enter La Pucelle.

Pucce. The regent conquerors, and the Frenchmen fly.— Now help, ye charming spells, and periphts; Ay ye, choice spirits, that admonish me, And give me signs of future accidents: [Thunder. You see, my worthy, that are our auguries Under the lordly monarch of the north, Appear, and aid me in this enterprise! [Enter Friends.

This speedy and quick appearance argues proof Of your accustom'd diligence to me. Now, ye familiar spirits, that are call'd Out of the powerful regions under earth, Help me this once, that France may get the field. [They walk, and speak not.

b Where I was wont to feed you with my blood, I'll loop a member off, and give it you, In earnest of a further benefit, So you do condescend to help me now.— [They hang their heads.

No hope to have redress!—My body shall Pay recompense, if you will grant my suit. [They hang their heads. Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice, Entreat you to your wonted fartherance? Then take my soul; my body, soul, and all, Before that England give the French the foil. [They depart.

See! they forsake me. Now the time is come, That France must vaii her lofty-plumed crest, And let her head fall into England's lap. My ancient incantations are too weak, And hell too strong for me to buckle with. Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust. [Exit.

Periphts were charms worn about the neck as preservatives from disease or danger. b Whereas, " Vail," i. e., lower.

Alarums. Enter French and English, fighting; La Pucelle and York fight hand to hand. La Pucelle is taken. The French fly.

York. Danseul of France, I think, I have you fast: Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms, And try if they can gain your liberty.— A goodly prize, fit for the devil's grace! See, how the ugly witch doth bend her brows, As if, with Giree, she would change my shape. Pucce. Chang'd to a worse shape thou canst not be. York. O! Charles the Dauphin is a proper man: No shape but his can please your dainty eye. Pucce. A plaguing mischief light on Charles, and May ye both be suddenly surpris'd! [Thrice! By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds! York. Fell, burning hag! enchantress, hold thy tongue. Pucce. I pr'ythee, give me leave to curse a while. York. Curse, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake. [Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter Suffolk, leading in Lady Margaret.

Suff. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner. [Gazes on her. O, fairest beauty! do not fear, nor fly, For I will touch thee but with reverence hands; I kiss these fingers [Kissing her hand] for eternal And lay them gently on thy tender side: [Peace, Who art thou? say, that I may honor thee. Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a king, The king of Naples, whoseoe'rt thou art. Suff. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd. Be not offended, nature's miracle, Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me: Who dost the man thy cygnet side, Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings. Yet, if this servile usage once offend, Go, and be free again, as Suffolk's friend. [She turns away as going. O, stay!—I have no power to let her go: My hand would free her, but my heart says—no. As plays the sun upon the glassy stream, Twinkling another counterfeited beam, So seems this gorgeous beauty to the eyes. Fain would I woo her, yet I dare not speak: I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind. Fie, De la Poole! d siable not thyself! Hast not a tongue? is she not here thy prisoner? wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight? Ay, beauty's princely majesty is such, Confounds the tongue, and mocks the sense of touch. Mar. Say, earl of Suffolk, if thy name be so, What ransom must I pay before I pass? For, I perceive, I am thy prisoner. Suff. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suit, Before thou make a trial of her love? [Aside. Mar. Why speak'st thou not? what ransom must I pay? Suff. She's beautiful, and therefore to be wou'd; She is a woman, therefore to be won. [Aside. Mar. Wilt thou accept a ransom, yea, or no? Suff. Fond man! remember that thou hast a wife; Then, how can Margaret be thy paramour? [Aside. Mar. I were best to leave him, for he will not hear. Suff. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling cura. Mar. He talks at random; sure, the man is mad. Suff. And yet a dispensation may be had. Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me. Suff. I'll win this lady Margaret. For whom? Why, for my king: tush! that's a wooden thing.

Cursing—Dispraise; impeach—"A wooden thing," i. e., an awkward business; an undertaking not likely to succeed.
Mar. He talks of wood: it is some carpenter.
Suf. Yet so my fancy may be satisfied. [Aside.
And peace established between these realms.
But there, remains a scruple in that, too;
For though her father be the king of Naples,
Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet is he poor,
And our nobility will scorn the match.
Mar. Hear ye, captain? Are you not at leisure?
Suf. It shall be so, disdain they ne'er so.
Henry is youthful, and will quickly yield.—
Madam, I have a secret to reveal. [Aside.
Mar. What though I be enthral'd? he seems a
And will not any way dishonor me. [Aside.
Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.
Mar. Perhaps, I shall be resc'd by the French,
And then I need not crave his courtesy. [Aside.
Suf. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—
Mar. Tush! women have been captivate ere now.
Suf. Lady, pray tell me, wherefore talk you so?
Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but quid pro quo.
Suf. Say, gentle princess, would you not then
You may not be happy to be made a queen? [Aside.
Mar. A queen in bondage is more vile to me.
Than a slave in base servility,
For princes should be free.
Suf. And so shall you,
If happy England's royal king be true.
Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?
Suf. I'll make to thee Henry's queen;
To put a golden sceptre in thy hand,
And set a precious crown upon thy head,
If thou wilt condescend to be my—
Mar. What?
Suf. His love.
Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.
Suf. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am
To make so happy, to be made a queen? [Aside.
Mar. A queen in bondage is more vile to me.
Suf. And have no portion in the choice myself?
How say you, madam, are you so content?
Mar. And if my father please, I'll give consent.
Suf. Then, call our captains, and our colors forth!
And, madam, at your father's castle walls
We'll crave a parley, to confer with him.
[Troops come forward.
A Parley sounded. Enter Reignier, on the Walls.
Suf. See, Reignier, see thy daughter prisoner.
Reign. To whom?
Suf. To me.
Reign. Suffolk, what remedy?
I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.
Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:
Content, and for thy honor give consent,
Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king,
Whom I with pain have wound and win thereto,
And this her easy-held imprisonment
Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.
Reign. Speak Suffolk as he thinks!
Suf. Fair Margaret knows,
That Suffolk doth not flatter, 4 face, or reign.
Reign. Upon thy princely warrant I descendent
To give thee answer of thy just demand.
[Exit, from the Walls.
Suf. And here I will expect thy coming & down.
Trumpets sounded. Enter Reignier, below.
Reign. Welcome, brave earl, into our territories:
Command in Anjou what your honor pleases.
Suf. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child,
Fit to be made companion with a king:

What answer makes your grace unto my suit?
Reign. Since thou dost design to woo her little worth,
To be the princely bride of such a lord,
Upon condition I may quietly
Enjoy mine own, the county Maine, and Anjou,
Free from oppression or the stroke of war,
My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.
Suf. That is her ransom, I deliver her;
And those two counties, I will undertake,
Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.
Reign. And I again, in Henry's royal name,
As deputy unto that gracious king,
Give thee her hand, for sign of plighted faith.
Suf. Reignier of France, I give thee kingly thanks,
Because this is in traffic of a king:
And yet, methinks, I could be well content
To be mine own attorney in this case.
I'll over, then, to England with this news,
And make this marriage to be solemniz'd.
So, farewell, Reignier. Set this diamond safe
In golden palaces, as it becomes.
Reign. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace
The Christian prince, king Henry, were he here.
Mar. Myself, my lord. Good wishes, praise, and prayers,
Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret. [Going.
Suf. Farewell, sweet madam! But hark you,
Margaret;
No princely commendations to my king?
Mar. Such commendations as become a maid,
A virgin, and his servant, say to him.
Suf. Words sweetly plau'd, and modestly directed.
But, madam, I must trouble you again,—
No loving token to his majesty?
Mar. Yes, my good lord; a pure unspetted heart,
Never yet minted with love, I send the king.
Suf. And this withal. [Aside.
Reign. That for thyself: I will not so presume,
To send such promises to a king. [Aside.
[Exit Reignier and Margaret.
Suf. O,wert thou for myself!—But, Suffolk, stay;
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth:
Those Minotaurs, and ugly treasons, lurk.
Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise:
Benthink thee on her virtues that surmount,
3973 M'dal natural graces that extinguish art;
Repeat their semblance often to the sea,
That when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet,
Thou may'st bereave him of his wits with wonder.
[Exit.

Enter York, Warwick, and others.
York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to burn.

Enter La Pucelle, guarded; and a Shepherd.
Shep. Ah, Joan! this kills thy father's heart out—
Have I sought every country far and near, [right.
And, saw therby it is my chance to find thee out,
Must I behold thy timeous cruel death?
Ah, Joan! sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with thee.
Pae. Docrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood:
Thou art no father, nor no friend, of mine. [so Shep. Out, out!—My lords, an please you, 'tis not
I did begot her, all the parish knows:
Her mother Liveth yet, can testify
She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.
War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?
4 Silly; foolish.—Untimely.—Miser, here, simply means a miserable creature.
York. This argues what her kind of life hath been; Wicked and vile, and so her death concludes.

Shp. Fie, Joan! that thou wilt be so obstinate! God knows, thou art a collyop of my flesh, And for thy sake have I shed many a tear: Deay me not, I pr'ythee, gentle Joan. [man, Puc. Peasant, avante!]—You have suborn'd this Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shp. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest, The morn that I was wedded to her mother. Knelt down and take my blessing, good my girl.— Wilt thou not stope? Now cursed be the time Of thy nativity! I would, the next Thy mother gave thee, when thou suck'dst her breast, Had been a little, ratsbane for thy sake; Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field, I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee. Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab? O! burn her, burn her: hanging is too good. [Exit.]

York. Break thou in pieces, and consume to ashes, Thou foul accursed minister of hell!

Enter Cardinal Beaufort, attended.

Car. Lord regent, I do greet your excellence With letters of commission from the king. For know, my lords, the states of Christendom, Mov'd with 'remorse of these outrageous broils, Have earnestly implored a general peace, Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French; And here at hand the Dauphin, and his train, Approcheth to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn'd to this effect? After the slaughter of so many peers, So many captains, gentlemen, and soldiers, That in this quarrel have been overthrown, And sold their bodies for their country's benefit, Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace? Have we not lost most part of all the towns, By treason, falsehood, and by treachery, Our great progenitors had conquer'd?—

O, Warwick, Warwick! I foresee with grief The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York! if we conclude a peace, It shall be with such strict and severe covenants, As little shall the Frenchmen gain thereby.

Enter Charles, attended: Alençon, Bastard, Reignier, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed, That peaceful truce shall be proclaimed in France, We come to be informed of your designs, What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for bolling choler chokes The hollow passage of my prison'd voice, By sight of these our 'bulaful enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:— That, in regard king Henry gives consent, Of more compassion, and of lenity, To case your-countrymen of distress'd war, And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace, You shall become true liege-men to his crown. And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear To pay him tribute, and submit thyself, Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroy under him, And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Men. Must he be then as shadow of himself? Adorn his temples with a coronet, And yet, in substance and authority, Retain but privilege of a private man? This proffer is absurd and reasonless.

Char. 'Tis known, already that I am posses'd With more than half the Gallifin territories, And therein revenue'd for their lawful king: Simil I, for here of the rest unvanquish'd, Detruit so much from the glisty perspectiv, As to be call'd vicerey of the whole? No, lord ambassador; I'll rather keep That which I have, than, coveting for more, Be cast from possibility of all. [means York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret Used intercession to obtain a league, And now the matter grows to compromise, Stand'st thou afoe upon comparisons?]

* Obligate. — Child.
Either accept the title thou usurp'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our king,
And not of any challenge of desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reg. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract:
If once it be neglected, ten to one,
We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy
To save your subjects from such massacre,
And ruthless slaughters as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostility;
And, therefore, take this compact of a truce,
Although you break it when your pleasure serves.

War. How sayst thou, Charles? shall our condition stand?
Char. It shall; only reserve'd, you claim no influence
In any of our towns of garrison.
York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty;
As thou art knight, never to disobey,
Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,
Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.—

[Charles, and his Nobles, give tokens of fealty.
So; now dismiss your army when ye please:
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still,
For here we interchange a solemn peace. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, in conference with Suffolk; Gloster and Exeter following.

K. Hen. Your wondrous rare description, noble earl,
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Rest, my dear friend, in your worthy praise,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart;
And like as rigor of tempestuous gusts
Provokes the mightiest hull against the tide,
So am I driven by breath of her renown,
Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Suf. Thou! my good Lord, this superficial tale
Is but a preface of her worthy praise,
The chief perfections of that lovely dame,
(Had I sufficient skill to utter them)
Would make a volume of enticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit.

And, which is more, she is not so divine,
So full replete with choice of all delights,
But with as humble bowlness of mind,
She is content to be at your command;
Command, I mean, of virtuous chaste intents,
To love and honor Henry as her lord.

K. Hen. And otherwise will Henry ne'er presume.
Therefore, my lord protector, give consent,
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.

Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sin.
You know, my lord, your highness is betroth'd
Unto another lady of extremest
How shall we, then, dispense with that contract,
And not deface your honor with reproach?

Suf. As doth a ruler with unlawful oaths:
Or one that, at a triumph having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds,
A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds,
And therefore may be broke without offence. [that?]

Glo. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret, more than
Her father is no better than an earl,
Although in glorious titles he excel'd?

Suf. Yes, my good lord, her father is a king,

The king of Naples and Jerusalem;
And of such great authority in France,
As his alliance will confirm our peace,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. And so the earl of Armurpe may do,
Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.

Exe. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberal dower,
Where Reignier sooner will receive, than give.

Suf. A dower, my lords! disgrace not so your king,
That he should be so subject, base, and poor,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect love.

Henry is able to enable his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich.
So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.

Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Than to be dealt in by authority:
Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,
Must be companion of his nuptial bed;
And therefore, lords, since he affects her most,
The most of all these reasons bindeth us,
In our opinions she should be preferred.

For what is wedlock forced but a hell,
An age of discord and continual strife?
Whereas the contrary bringeth bliss,
And is a pattern of celestial peace.

Whom should we match with her, not being a king?
But Margaret that is daughter to a king?
Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,
Approves her fit for none but for a king;
Her valiant courage, and undaunted spirit,
(And in more than women commonly is seen)
Will answer our hope in issue of a king;
For Henry, son unto a conqueror,
Is likely to beget more conquerors,
If with a lady of so high resolve,
As is fair Margaret, he be link'd in love.
Then yield, my lords; and here conclude with me,
That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.

K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your report
My noble lord of Suffolk, or for that
My tender youth was never yet attaint
With any passion of the inflamm'd love
I cannot tell; but this I am assured,
I feel such sharp dissenion in my breast,
Such fierce alarmus both of hope and fear,
As I am sick with working of my thoughts.

Take, therefore, shipping; post, my lord, to France;
Agree to any covenants, and procure
That Lady Margaret doth safely come
To cross the seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henry's faithful and anointed queen.

For your expenses and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.

Be gone, I say; for till you do return,
I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.

And you, good uncle, banish all offence:
If you do censure by what I will be,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sudden execution of my will.
And so conduct me, where from company
I may revolve and ruminate my grief. [Exit

Glo. Ay, a grief, I fear me, both at first and last.

Exeunt Gloster and Exeter.

Suf. Thus Suffolk hath prevailed; and thus he goes,
As did the youthful Paris once to Greece,
With hope to find the like event in love,
But prosper better than the Trojan did.
Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king;
But I will rule both her, the king, and realm. [Exit

"By attorneyship," i.e., by the intervention of another man's choice.—Judge.—Sorrow.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

SCENE, in various parts of England.

ACT I.

Flourish of Trumpets: then Haults. Enter, on one side, King Henry, Duke of Gloucester, Salisbury, Warwick, and Cardinal Beaufort; on the other, Queen Margaret, led in by Suffolk; York, Somerset, Buckingham, and others, following.

Suf. As by your high imperial majesty I had in charge at my depart for France, As procurator to your excellence, To marry princess Margaret for your grace; So, in the famous ancient city Tours,

In presence of the kings of France and Sicil, The dukes of Orleans, Calaber, Bretaigne, and Alescon, [bishops, Seven earls, twelve barons, and twenty reverend I have perform’d my task, and was espous’d: And humbly now upon my bended knee, In sight of England and her lordly peers, Deliver up my title in the queen To your most gracious hands, that are the substance Of that great shadow I did represent: The happiest gift that ever marquess gave, The fairest queen that ever king receiv’d. [garet: K. Hen. Suffolk, arise.—Welcome, queen Mar: I can express no kinder sign of love, Than this kind kiss.—O Lord! that lends me life, Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness;
For thou hast given me, in this beauteous face,
A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.

[Flourish.]

Q. Mar. Great king of England, and my gracious
The truest conference that my mind hath had
By day, by night, waking, and in my dreams,
In courtly company, or at my beads,
With you mine alderliest sovereign,
Makes me the bolder to salute my king
With ruder terms, such as my wit affords,
And over-joy of heart doth minister.

[speech, K. Hen.] Her sight did ravish, but her grace in Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty,
Makes me from wondering fall to weeping joys:
Such is the fullness of my heart's content.

Lords, with one cheerful voice welcome my love.

All. Long live queen Margaret, England's happiness!

Q. Mar. We thank you all.

[Flourish.]

Suff. My lord protector, so it please your grace,
Here are the articles of contracted peace,
Between our sovereign, and the French king Charles,
For eighteen months, concluded by consent.

Glo. [Reads.] "Imprimis: It is agreed between
The French king, Charles, and William de la Poole, marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry, king of England,—that the said Henry Henry be received by Margaret, daughter unto Reignier king of Naples, Sicilia, and Jerusalem, and crown herself queen of England ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.—Item,—That the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine, shall be released and delivered to the king her father."

[Passing.]

K. Hen. Uncle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me, gracious lord;
Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no farther.

K. Hen. Uncle of Winchester, I pray, read on.

Car. [Reads.] "Item: It is further agreed between them,—that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered over to the king his father; and she sent over of the king of England's own proper cost and charges, without having any dowry."

K. Hen. They please us well.—Lord marquess, kneel here down:

We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk,
And girt thee with the sword.—Cousin of York,
We here discharge thy grace from being regent
Of the parts of France, till term of eighteen months
Be full expir'd.—Thanks, uncle Winchester,
Gloster, York, Buckingham, Somerset,
Salisbury, and Warwick;

We thank you all for this great favor done,
In entertainment to my princely queen.
Come, let us in; and with all speed provide
To see her coronation be perfom'd.

Erect King, Queen, and Suffolk.

Glo. Brave princes of England, pillars of the state,
To you duke Humphrey must unload his grief,
Your grief, the common grief of all the land.
What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valor, coin, and people, in the wars?
Did he so often lodge in open field,
In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toll his wits,
To keep by policy what Henry got?
Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,
Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick,
Receiv'd deep scars in France and Normandy?

Or hath mine uncle Beaufort, and myself,
With all the learned council of the realm,
Studied so long, sat in the council-house
Early and late, debating to and fro
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe?
And hath his highness in his infancy
 Been crowned in Paris, in despite of foes?
And shall these labors, and these honors, die?
Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our counsel, die?
O peers of England! shameful is the thought:
Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame,
Blotting your names from books of memory,
Razing the characters of your renown,
Defacing monuments of conquer'd France,
Undoing all, as all had never been.

[Car. Nephew, what means this passionate disperation with such circumstance?
For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still.

Glo. Ay, uncle, we will keep it, if we can;
But now it is impossible we should,
Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roost,
Hath given the duchies of Anjou, and Maine,
Unto the poor king Reignier, whose large style
Agrees not with the leniency of his purse.

Sut. But, by the death of him that died for all,
These counties were the keys of Normandy,—
But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son?

War. For grief, that they are past recovery;
For, were there hope to conquer them again,
My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no tears.
Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both;
Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer:
And are the cities that I got with wounds,
Deliver'd up again with peaceful words?

Mat. Diem!

York. For Suffolk's duke, may he be suffocato
That dima the honor of this warlike isle!
France should have torn and rent my very heart,
Before I would have yielded to this league.
I never read but England's kings have had Large sums of gold, and dowries, with their wives;
And our king Henry gives away his own,
To match with her that brings no vantages.

Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before,
That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth,
For costs and charges in transporting her!
[France.
She should have stay'd in France, and starv'd in Beforeer.

Car. My lord of Gloster, now you grow too hot.
It was the pleasure of my lord the king.

Glo. My lord of Winchester, I know your mind:
'Tis not my speeches that you do mislike,
But 'tis my presence that doth trouble ye.
Rancor will out: proud prelate, in thy face
I see thy fury. If I longer stay
We shall begin our ancient bickering.—
Lordings, farewell; and say, when I am gone,
I prophesied, France will be lost ere long.

[Exit.]

Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage.
'Tis known to you he is mine enemy;
Nay, more, an enemy unto you all,
And no great friend, I fear me, to the king.
Consider, lords, he is the next of blood,
And heir apparent to the English crown:
Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,
And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,
There's reason he should be displeas'd at it.
Look to it, lords: let not his smoothing words
Bewitch your hearts; be wise, and circumspecct.
What though the common people favor him,

a "Alden thieves," i.e., best beloved.
SCENE II. SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. 459

Calling him "Humphrey the good Duke of Gloster!"
Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice—
"Join maintain your royal excellence!"

With—"God preserve the good duke Humphrey!"
I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss,
He will be found a dangerous protector.

Buck. Why should he, then, protect our sovereign,
He being of age to govern of himself?—
Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
And all together, with the duke of Suffolk,
Whose weighty business from his seat
Carr. This weighty business will not brook delay;
I'll to the duke of Suffolk presently. [Exit.

Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's
And greatness of his place to grief to us, [pride,
Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal.
His insolence is more intolerable
Than all the princes in the land beside:
If Gloster be dispach'd, he'll be protector.

Buck. Or thou, or I, Somerset, will be protector,
Despite dukedom Humphrey, or the cardinal.

[Exeunt Buckingham and Somerset.

Sat. Pride went before ambition follows him.
While these do labor for their own preferment,
Behoves it us to labor for the realm.
For, whereas, but the greatness of Gloster,
Did bear him like a noble gentleman.
Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal,
More like a soldier, than a man o' the church.
As stout, and proud, as he were lord of all,
Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself.
Unlike the ruler of a common-wealth.

Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age,
Thy deeds, thy plainness, and thy honor-keeping,
Have won the greatest favor of the commons,
Excepeting none but good duke Humphrey:
And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland,
In bringing them to civil discipline;
Thy late exploits, done in the heart of France,
When thou wert regent for our sovereign,
Have made thee fearful, and honor'd, of the people.
Join we together, for the public good,
In what we can to bridge and suppress
The pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal,
With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition;
And, as we may, cherish duke Humphrey's deeds,
While they do tend to profit of the land.

War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land,
And doth his country the service he can, to York.
And so says York, for he hath greatest cause.

Sat. Then let's make haste away, and look unto the main.

War. Unto the main? O father! Maine is lost;
That Maine, which by main force 2 did Warwick win,
And would have kept, so long as breath did last.
Main chance, father, you meant; but I meant Maine,
Which I will win from France, or else be slain.

[Exeunt Warwick and Salisbury.
York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French;
Paris is lost; the state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point now they are gone.
Suffolk concluded on the articles,
The peers agreed, and Henry was well pleas'd,
To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.
I cannot blame them all: where is it to them?
Tis thine they give away, and not their own.
Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pilagine,
And purchase friends, and give to courtiers.
Still revelling, like lords, till all be gone;
While as the silly owner of the goods
Weeps over them, and wrings his helpless hands,
And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,
While all is shar'd, and all is borne away,
Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own:
So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his own lands are bargain'd for, and sold.

Methinks, the realms of England, France, and Ire—
Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood, [hand,
As did the fatal brand Athlen burn'd,
Unto the prince's heart of Calydon,
Anjou and Maine, both given unto the French!
Cold I had he for France, even as I have of fertile England's soil.
A day will come when York shall claim his own;
And therefore I will take the Nevils' part,
And make a show of love to proud duke Humphrey,
And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown,
For that's the golden mark I seek to hit.
Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
Nor hold the sceptre in his childish fist,
Nor wear the diadem upon his head,
Whose church-like humors fit not for a crown.
Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve:
Watch thou, and wake, when others be asleep,
To pry into the secrets of the state,
Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love,
With his new bride, and England's noblest queen,
And Humphrey, with the peers he fall'n at joll
Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd,
And in my standard bear the arms of York,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster;
And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,
Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Duke of Gloster's House.

Enter Gloster and the Duchess.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ravish'd corn,
Hanging the head at Ceres' plebeous head? Why doth the great duke Humphrey knit his brows, As bowing at the favors of the world? What are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight? What seest thou there? king Henry's diadem, Enchas'd with all the honors of the world? If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the same.
What a profit of it, at such a low gold.
What, is't too short? I'll lengthen it with mine;
And having both head-ear'd it up, We'll both together lift our heads to heaven,
And never more abuse our sight so low,
As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.

Glo. O Neil! sweet Neil, if thou dost love thy lord,
Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts,
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry,
Be my last breathing in this mortal world.
My troubous dream this night doth make me sad.
Duch. What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite it
With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.

Glo. Methought, this staff, mine office-badge in this
Was broke in twain: by whom, I have forgot,
But, as I think, 't was by the cardinal;
And on the pieces of the broken wand Were plac'd the heads of Edmund duke of Somerset,
And William de la Poole, first duke of Suffolk.

3 Ticklish; whose life was to continue only so long as a certain firebrand should last. Altho' having thrown it into the fire, he expired in torments.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.
ACT 4.

This was my dream: what it doth bode God knows.

Duch.  Tut! this was nothing but an argument,
That he that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove
Shall lose his head for his presumption.

But listen to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke:
Methought I sat in seat of majesty,
In the cathedral church of Westminster, [crown'd;
And in that chair where kings and queens were
Where Henry, and dame Margaret, kneel'd to me,
And on my head did set the diadem.

Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I clidle outright.

Presumptuous dame! ill-nurtur'd Eleanor!
Art thou not second woman in the realm,
And the protector's wife, belov'd of him?
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Above the reach or compass of thy thought?
And wilt thou still be humming treachery,
To tumble down thy husband, and thyself,
From top of honor to disgrace's feet!
Away from me, and let me hear no more.

Duch. What, what, my lord! are you so choleric
With Eleanor, for telling but her dream?
Next time I'll keep my dreams unto myself,
And not be check'd.

Glo. Nay, be not angry; I am pleas'd again.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord protector, 'tis his highness' pleasure,
You do prepare to ride unto St. Albans,
Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk.

Glo. I go. —Come, Nell; thou wilt ride with us!

Duch. Yes, my good lord, I'll follow presently.

[Exit Gloster and Messenger.

Follow I must; I cannot go before,
While Gloster bears this base and humble mind.
We are a man, and a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks,
And smooth my way upon their headless necks:
And, being a woman, I will not be slack
To play my part in fortune's pageant.

Where are you there? Sir John, nay, fear not, man,
We are alone; here's none but thou, and I.

Enter Hume.

Hume. Jesus preserve your royal majesty!

Duch. What say'st thou? majesty! I am but grace.

Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's
Your grace's title shall be multiplied. —[Advice, Duch. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet confer'd?

With Margaret Jourdain, the cunning witch,
And Roger Belingbrooke, the conjurer,
And will they undertake to do me good? [highness
Hume. This they have promised,—to show you
A spirit rais'd from depth of under ground,
That shall make answer to such questions,
As by your grace shall be propounded him.

Duch. It is enough: I'll think upon the questions.
When from St. Albans we do make return,
We'll see these things effect'd to the full.
Here, Hume, take this reward: make merry, man,
With thy confederates in this weighty cause.

[Exit Hume.

Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold,
Marry, and shall. But how now, Sir John Hume!
Seal up my eyes, and give no words but mum:
The business asketh silent secrecy.
Dame Eleanor gives gold to bring the witch:
Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil.
Yet have I gold flies from another coast:
I dare not say, from the rich cardinal,

And from the great and new-made duke of Suffolk;
Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,
They, knowing dame Eleanor's aspiring humor,
Have hired me to undermine the duchess,
And be the false confederates in her brain.
They say, a crafty knife does need no broker;
Yet am I Suffolk's, and the cardinal's broker.
Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near
To call them both a pair of crafty knaves.
Well, so it stands; and thus, I fear, at last,
Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck,
And her attainture will be Humphrey's fall.

Sort how it will, I shall have gold for all. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Peter, and others, with Petitions.

1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close: my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then we may deliver our supplications in sequel.

2 Pet. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he's a good man. Jesu bless him!

Enter Suffolk and Queen Margaret.

1 Pet. Here 'a comes, mechinth, and the Queen with him. I'll be the first, sure.

2 Pet. Come back, fool! this is the duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.

Suf. How now, fellow! would'st any thing with me?

1 Pet. I pray my lord, pardon me: I took ye for your lord protector.

Q. Mar. "To my lord protector!" are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them. What is thine?

1 Pet. Mine is, m'not please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife, and all, from me.

Suf. Thy wife too! that is some wrong indeed. —What's yours? —What's here? [Reads.] "Against the duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Melford." —How now, sir knave?

2 Pet. Alas! sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. [Presenting his petition.] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying, that the duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.  Q. Mar. What say'st thou? Did the duke of York say, he was rightful heir to the crown?

Peter. That my master was? No, farsooth; my master said, that he was; and that the king was an usurper.

Suf. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]—Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently. —We'll hear more of your matter before the king.

[Exit Servants with Pet.

Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected Under the wings of our protector's grace, Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

[Reads the Petition.

Away, base eulitions! —Suffolk, let them go.

All. Come, let's be gone.

[Exeunt Petitioners.

Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, may this be the guise,
Is this the fashion in the court of England?
Is this the government of Britain's isle,
And this the royalty of Albion's king?
What! shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the surly Gloster's governance?
Am I a queen in title and in style,
And must be made a subject to a duke? I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours,

460

464 Sort how it will," i. e., let the issue be as it will.

4 There are the four cards: see the rich courtier.

*Ill-educated.

*Whereas is used for where, whereas.

Scene III.
Second Part of King Henry VI.

 Thou ran'st a tilt in honor of my love,
 And sto'st away the ladies' hearts of France,
 I thought king Henry had resembled thee,
 In courage, courtship, and proportion;
 But all his mind is bent to holiness,
 To number Ave-Marias on his heads:
 His thought is more than the holy apostles;
 His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ;
 His study is his till-yard, and his loves
 Are brazen images of canoniz'd saints.
 I would, the college of the cardinals
 Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome,
 And set the triple crown upon his head:
 That were a state fit for his holiness.

 Suf. Madam, be patient: as it was cause
 Your highness came to England, so will I.
 In England work your grace's full content.

 Q. Mar. Beside the haught protector, have we Beaufort,
 The imperious churchman; Somerset, Buckingham,
 And grumbling York: and not the least of these,
 Buckinghamesse, more in England than King.

 Suf. And be of these that can do most of all,
 Cannot do more in England than the Nevils:
 Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.

 Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much,
 As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife:
 She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,
 More like an empress than duke Humphrey's wife.
 Strangers in court do take her for the queen:
 She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
 And in her heart she scorns our poverty.
 Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her?
 Contemptuous base-born *ealstall as she is,
 She vaunted 'mongst her minions t'other day,
 The very train of her worst wearing gown
 Was better worth than all my father's lands,
 Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms for his daughter.

 Suf. Madam, myself have lim'd a bush for her;
 And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
 That she will light to listen to their lays,
 And never mount to trouble you again.
 So, let her rest; and, madam, list to me,
 For I am bold to counsel you in this.
 Although we fancy not the cardinal,
 Yet must we join with him, and with the lords,
 Till we have brought duke Humphrey in disgrace.
 As for the duke of York, this late b complaint
 Will make but little for his benefit:
 So, one by one, I will weave all the realm,
 And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

 Enter King Henry, York, and Somerset; Duke and Duchess of Gloster, Cardinal Beaufort, Buckingham, Salisbury, and Warwick.

 K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not which;
 Or Somerset, or York, all's one to me.
 York. If York have ill demean'd himself in France,
 Then let him be denny'd the regentship.

 Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,
 Let York be regent: I will yield to him.
 War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or no,
 Dispute not that York is the worthier.

 Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy letters speak.
 War. A cardinal's not my better in the field.

 Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.
 War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.

 Sat. Peace, son:—and show some reason, Buckingham,
 Why Somerset should be prefer'd in this.

 Q. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it so.
 Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself
 To give his censure. These are no women's matters.

 Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your grace
 To be protector of his excellence?
 Glo. Madam, I am a protector of the realm,
 And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.

 Suf. Resign it, then, and leave thine insolence.
 Since thou wert king, (as who is king but thou?)
 The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck:
 The Dauphin hath prevail'd beyond the seas,
 And all the peers and nobles of the realm
 Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.

 Car. The commons hast thou raised; the clergy's
 Are lank and lean with thy extortions.

 Som. Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's at
 Have cost a mass of public treasury.

 BucK. Thy cruelty, in execution
 Upon offenders hath exceeded law,
 And left thee to the mercy of the law.

 Q. Mar. Thy sole of offices, and towns in France,
 If they were known, as the suspect is great,
 Would make thee quickly hop without thy head.

 [Exit Gloster.
 Give me my fan: what, minions! can you not?

 [Giving the Duchess a box on the ear.
 I cry you mercy, madam; was it you?

 [man.

 Buck. Was't I? yea, I was, pront French-maid.
 Could I in my person near thy beauty lay,
 I'd set my ten commands in thy face.

 K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet: 'twas against her will.

 [time.

 Buck. Against her will! Good king, look to't in She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby,
 Though in this place most master: wear no breeches,
 She shall not strike dame Eleanor unreveng'd.

 [Aside.

 [Exit Duchess.

 Buck. Lord Cardinal, I will follow Eleanor,
 And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds:
 She's tickled now; her fame can need no spurs,
 She'll gallop fast enough to her destruction.

 [Exit Buckingham.

 Re-enter Gloster.

 Glo. Now, lords, my choler being overblown
 With walking once about the quadrangle,
 I come to talk of commonwealth affairs.
 As for your spiteful false objections,
 Prove them, and I lie open to the law;
 But God in mercy so deal with my soul,
 As I in duty love my king and country.

 But to the matter that we have in hand,—
 I say, my sovereign, York is meetest man
 To be your regent in the realm of France.

 Suf. Before we make election, give me leave
 To show some reason, of no little force,
 That York is most unmeet of any man.

 York. I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmeet.

 Car. For I cannot flatter thee in pride:
 Next, if I be appointed for the place,
 My lord of Somerset will keep me there,
 Without discharge, money, or furniture,
 Till France be won into the Dauphin's hands.
 Last time I danc'd attendance on his will,
 Till Paris was besieg'd, famish'd, and lost.

 War. That can I witness; and a fouler fact
 Did never traitor in the land commit.

 Glo. Peace, headstrong Warwick!

 War. Image of pride, why should I hold my peace?

 Car. The marks of her ten fingers and thumbs.

 4 His censure," i.e., his opinion, judgment. — The marks of her ten fingers and thumbs.
Enter Servants of Suffolk, bringing in Horner and Peter.

Suf. Because here is a man accus’d of treason:
    Pray God, the duke of York excuse himself!
York. Doth any one accuse York for a traitor?
K. Hen. What mean’st thou, Suffolk? tell me,
To indicate these?
Suf. Please it your majesty, this is the man
That doth accuse his master of high treason.
His words were these:—that Richard, duke of York,
Was rightful heir unto the English crown,
And that your majesty was an usurper.
K. Hen. Say, man, were these thy words?
Hor. An’t, my lord, hang me, if ever I spake the words.
My accuser is my prentice; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me. I have good witness of this: therefore, I beseech your majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain’s accusation.

K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?
Glo. This doom, my gracious lord, if I may
Let Somerset be regent o’er the French, [judge.
Because in York this breeds suspicion;
And let these have a day appointed them
For single combat in convenient place,
For he hath witness of his servant’s零售.
This is the law, and this duke Humphrey’s doom.
Som. I humbly thank your royal majesty.
Hor. And I accept the combat willingly.
Pet. Alas! my lord, I cannot fight: for God’s sake, pity my case! the spite of this man prevailed against me. O, Lord have mercy upon me! I shall never be able to fight a blow. O Lord, my heart!
Glo. Sirrah, or you must fight or else be hang’d.
K. Hen. Away with them to prison; and the day
Of combat shall be the last of the next month.—
Come, Somerset, we’ll see thee sent away. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. The Duke of Gloster’s Garden.

Enter MARGARET JOURDAIN, Hume, Southwell, and Bolingbroke.

Hume. Come, my masters! the duchess, I tell you, expects performance of your promises.

Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided.
Will her ladyship behold and hear our exorcisms?—
Boling. I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invisible spirit: but it shall be convenient, master Hume, that you be by her aile, while we be busy here; and so, I pray you, go in God’s name, and leave us. [Exeunt Hume. — Mother Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth:— John Southwell, read you, and let us to our work.

Enter Duchess above.

Duch. Well said, my masters, and welcome all.
To this we give; the sooner the better.

Boling. Patience, good lady; wizards know their times,
Deep night, dark night, 8 and silence of the night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire;
The time when sorcer-bowls cry, and ban-dogs howl;
And spirits walk, and ghosts break 4 ope their graven,
That time best fits the work we have in hand.
Madam, sit you, and fear not: whom we raise,
We will make fast within a halow’d verge.

[Here they perform the Ceremonies belonging, and make the Circle:— Bolingbroke reads, Conjurro, to, &c. It thunders and lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.

Spir. Alasum. M. Joux, &c. 9
By the eternal God, whose name and power
Thou tremblingst at, answer that I shall ask;
For till thou speak thou shalt not pass from hence.
Spir. Ask what thou wilt.—That I had said and done!
[come?
Boling. First, of the king: what shall of him be?
Spir. The duke: yet lives that Henry shall depose;
But hire outlive, and die a violent death.

[As the Spirit speaks, Southwell writes the answer.
Spir. Boling. What fates await the duke of Suffolk?
Spir. By water shall lie die, and take his end.
Spir. Boling. What shall befall the duke of Somerset?
Spir. Let him shun castles;
Sister shall he lie on the sandy plains
Than where castles mounted stand.
Have done, for more I hardly can endure.
Boling. Descend to darkness, and the burning lake:
Foul fiend, avoid!

[Thunder and lightning. Spirit descends.

Enter YORK and BUCKINGHAM, hastily, with their Guards.

York. Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trust.
Beldame, I think, we watch’d you at an inch.—
What! madam, are you there? the king and common-weal
Are deeply indebted for this piece of pains:—
My lord protector will, I doubt it not,
See you well &guard’d for these good deserts.
Duch. Not half so bad as thine to England’s king,
Injurious duke, that threat’st where is no cause.
Buck. True, madam, none at all. What call you this this?

[Showing her the Peps.
Awash with them! let them be clapp’d up close,
And keep him under. — You, madam, shall with us:
Stafford, take her to thee.

[Exit Duchess from above.

We’ll see your trinkets here are all forth-coming;
All.—Away!

[Exit Guards, with South., Bolo., &c.
York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch’d her well;
A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon!
Now, pray, my lord, let’s see the devil’s writ.
What have we here?
[Reads.

"The duke yet lives that Henry shall depose;
But him outlive, and die a violent death."
Why, this is just
Aio te, Envidia, Romanos vincere * posse.

Well, the rest:
"Tell me, what fate awaits the duke of Suffolk?
By water shall he die, and take his end."

* A ban-dog, or bound-dog, was one that was kept chained for his ferocity.—Rewarded. — Why this is just Aio te, Envidia, etc., i. e. This is just like the old oracle of double meaning: I say that you, the son of Aenas, the Romans will conquer, which might be taken either way, as to the result.
"What shall be done to the Duke of Somerset?—
Let him shun castles;
Safer shall he be on the sandy plains,
Than where castles mounted stand!"
Come, come, my lords;
These oars are hardly attain'd,
And hardly understood.
The king is now in progress towards Saint Albans;
With him is the husband of this lovely lady: [them;
Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry
A sorry breakfast for my lord protector. [York,
Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my lord of
To be the post in hope of his reward.
York. At your pleasure, my good lord.—Who's within there, he!

Enter a Servant.
Invite my lords of Salisbury, and Warwick,
To sup with me to-morrow night.—Away. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Saint Albans.

Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Gloster, Cardiff, and Suffolk, with Falconers hollering.
Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the [brook,
I saw not better sport these seven years' day;
Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high,
And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out.
K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon
And what a pitch she flew above the rest. [made,
To see how God in all his creatures works!
Yea, man and birds are 1️⃣° fain of climbing high.
Suf. No marvel, an it like your majesty,
My lord protector's hawks do tover so well:
They know their master loves to be aloft,
And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.
Glo. My lord, 'tis but a base ignoble mind,
That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.
Car. I thought as much: he'd be above the clouds.
Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal; how think you by that?
Were it not good your grace could fly to heaven?
K. Hen. The treasury of everlasting joy!
Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts

Beat on a crown, the treasure of thy heart:
Persious protector, dangerous peer,
That smooth'st it so with king and commonweal!
Glo, What, cardinal, is your priesthood grown
Tantam carinis codicem clausus tact? [so peremptory,
Churchmen so hot? good uncle, hide such malice;
And with such holiness you well can do it.
Suf. No malice, sir; so more than well becomes
So good a quarrel, and so bad a peer.
Glo. As who, my lord?
Suf. Why, as you, my lord;
An't like your lordly lord-protectorship.
Why, Suffolk, England knows thine insolence.
Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloster,
K. Hen. I pr'ythee, peace,
Good queen; and what not on these furious peers,
For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.
Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make Against this proud protector with my sword.
Glo. 'Faith, holy uncle, would 'twere come to that! [Aside to the Cardinal.
Car. Marry, when thou dar'st. [Aside.

Glo. Make up no fictious numbers for the matter;
In thine own person answer thy abuse. [Aside.
Car. Ay, where thou dar'st not peep: as if thou
This evening on the east side of the grove. [Aside.
K. Hen. How now, my lords!
Car. Believe me, cousin Gloster,
Had not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,
We had had more sport.—Come with thy 4️⃣ two-hand sword. [Aside to Glo.
Glo. True, uncle.
Car. Are you advis'd, the east side of the grove.
K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gloster!
Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord.—
Now, by God's mother, priest, I'll shave your crown
For this, or all my 4️⃣ fence shall fall. [Aside.
Car. Medice tipsum:
Protector, see to't well, protect yourself. [Aside.
K. Hen. The winds grow high; so do your stomachs, lords.
How irksome is this music to my heart!
When such strings jar, what hope of harmony?
I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter one, crying, "A Miracle!"
Glo. What means this noise?
Follow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?
One. A miracle! a miracle!
Suf. Come to the king: 3️⃣ tell him what miracle.
One. Forsooth, a blind man at Saint Alban's shrine,
Within this half hour hath receiv'd his sight:
A man that ne'er saw in his life before. [soul.
K. Hen. Now, God be pra'sd, 't that to believing
Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of Saint Albans, and his brethren;
and Simpson, borne between two persons in a Chair;
his Wife and the Multitude following.
Car. Here come the townsmen on procession,
To present his highness with the man.
K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale,
Though by his sight his sin be multiplied. [king:
Glo. Stand by, my masters; bring him near the
His highness' pleasure is to talk with him.
K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord.
What! hast thou been long blind, and now restor'd?
Simp. Born blind, ain't please your grace.
Wife. Ay, indeed, was he.
Suf. What woman is this?
Wife. His wife, ain't like your worship.
Glo. Hadst thou been his mother, thou cou'dst have better told.
K. Hen. Where wert thou born?
Simp. At Berwick in the north, ain't like your grace.
K. Hen. Poor soul! God's goodness hath been great to thee:
Let never day nor night unshallow'd pass,
But still remember what the Lord hath done.
Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, can't thou here
Or of devotion, to this holy shrine? [by chance,
Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call'd
A hundred times, and off'ner, in my sleep,
By good Saint Alban; who said, —"Sunder, come;
Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee."
Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft
Myself have heard a voice to call him so.
Car. What! art thou lame?
Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me!
Suf. How cam'st thou so?
Simp.
A fall off of a tree.

4️⃣The two-hand sword was sometimes called the long sword.
4️⃣Fence is the art of defence.
Wife. A plum-tree, master.
Glo. How long hast thou been blind?
Simp. Of born so, master.
Glo. What! and would'st climb a tree?
Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.
Wife. Too true; and bought his climbing very dear.
[venture so.
Glo. 'Mass, thou lovest plums well, that would'st
Simp. Alas, good master, my wife desir'd some plums,
And made me climb with danger of my life.
Glo. A subtle knave; but yet it shall not serve.—
Let me see thine eyes—wink now;—now open
In my opinion yet thou seest not well. [them.
Simp. Yes, master, clear as day; I thank God,
And Saint Alban.
[off.
Glo. Sayst thou me now? What color is this cloak Simp. Red, master; red as blood. [gown of!
Glo. Why, that's well said. What color is my Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black as jet. [is of?
K. Hen. Why then, thou know'st what color jet
Suf. And yet, I think, jet did he never see.
Glo. But cloaks, and gowns, before this day a many.
Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.
Glo. Will my sirrah, what's name's mine?
Simp. Alas! master, I know not.
Glo. What's his name?
Simp. I know not.
Glo. Nor his?
Simp. No, indeed, master.
Glo. What's thine own name?
Simp. Sander Simpcox, an if it please you, master.
Glo. Then, Sander, sit thou there, the lyingest knave
In Christendom. If thou hadst been born blind,
Thou might'st as well have known all our names, as
To name the several colors we do wear. [thus Sight may distinguish of colors; but suddenly
To nominate them all, it is impossible.—
My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle;
And would ye not think 'tis cunning to be great,
That could restore this cripple to his legs?
Simp. O, master, that you could!
Glo. My masters of Saint Albans, have you not beadles in your town, and things called whips?
May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.
Glo. Then send for one presently.
May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle-hitter straight.
[Exit an Attendant.
Glo. Now fetch me a stool hither by and by. [A took brought out.] Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap over this stool, and run away.
Simp. Alas! master, I am not able to stand alone:
You go about to torture me in vain.
Re-enter Attendant, and a Beadle with a whip.
Glo. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs.
Simp. Beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.
Beal. I will, my lord.—Come on, sirrah; off with your doubtful quick.
Simp. Alas! master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.
[After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the stool, and runs away; and the People follow and cry, "A Miracle!"
K. Hen. O God! seest thou this, and bearest so long?
Q. Mar. It made me laugh to see the villain run.
Glo. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.
Wife. Alas! sir, we did it for pure need. [town,
Glo. Let them be whipp'd through every market
Till they come to Berwick, from whence they came.
[Exeunt Mayor, Beadle, Wife, &c.
Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.
Suf. True, made the lame to leap, and fly away.
Glo. But you have done more miracles than I;
You made in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.
Enter Buckingham.
K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?
Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.
A* sort of naughty persons, 1 heavily bent,
Under the countenance and confederacy
Of holy Eleanor, the protector's wife,
The ringleader and head of all this rout,
Have practis'd dangerously against your state,
Dealing with witches, and with conjurers,
Whom we have apprehended in the fact;
Raising up wicked spirits from under ground,
Demanding of king Henry's life and death,
And other of your highness' privy council,
As more at large your grace shall understand.
[Giving a paper.
Car. And so, my lord protector, by this means
Your lady is 'forthcoming yet at London.
This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge;
'Tis like, my lord, you will not keep your hour.
Glo. Ambitious churchman, leave't afflic't my heart.
Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers;
And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee,
Or to the meanest groom.
[ones.
K. Hen. O God! what mischiefs work the wicked
Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby.
Q. Mar. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest;
And look thou be faultless, thou wilt best.
Glo. Mindam, for myself, to have I ever do appeal,
How he lov'd me my king, and cannot love;
And, for my wife, I know not how it stands.
Sorry I am to hear what I have heard;
Noble she is, but if she have forgot
Honor, and virtue, and convers'd with such
As, like to pitch, defile nobility,
I banish her, my bed, and company,
And give her, as a prey to law, and shame,
That hath dishonor'd Gloster's honest name.
K. Hen. Well, for this night, we will repose us here:
To-morrow, toward London, back again,
To look into this business thoroughly,
And call these foul offenders to their answers;
And poise the cause in justice equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.
[Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. The Duke of York's Garden.

Enter York, Salisbury, and Warwick.
York. Now, my good lords of Salisbury and War-
Our simple supper ended, give me leave, [wick,
In this close walk, to satisfy myself.
In craving your opinion of my title,
Which is infallible, to England's crown.
Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at the full.
War. Sweet York, begin; and if thy claim be good,
The Nevils are thy subjects to command.
York. Then thus:—
Edward the third, my lords, had seven sons:
The first, Edward the Black Prince, prince of Wales;
The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
Lionel, duke of Clarence; next to whom,

*Sort is here used for company.—b.\b. Lewdly," i. e., wickdly; "knawishly.—"Your lady is forthcoming," i. e., your lady is in custody.
SCENE III.  SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.  465

Was John of Gaunt, the duke of Lancaster;
The fifth was Edmond Langley, duke of York;
The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloster;
William of Windsor was the seventh, and last.

Edward, the Black Prince, died before his father,
And left behind him Richard, his only son:
Who, after Edward the third's death, reign'd as king,
Till Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster,
The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
Crown'd by the name of Henry the fourth,
Seized on the realm; depos'd the rightful king;
Seate him his father, and came to the crown,
And to him the sceptre; where, as all you know,
Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously.

War.  Father, the duke hath told you the very truth:
Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.
York.  Which now they hold by force, and not by right;
For Richard, the first son's heir being dead,
The issue of the next son should have reign'd.

Sat.  But William of Hatfield died without an heir.
York.  The third son, duke of Clarence, from whose line
I claim the crown, had issue—Philippe, a daughter,
Who married Edmond Mortimer, earl of March,
Edmond had issue—Roger, earl of March:
Robert had issue—Edmond, Anne, and Eleanor.

Sat.  This Edmond, in the reign of Bolingbroke,
As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
And but for Owen Glendower had been king,
Who kept him in captivity, till he died.
But to the rest.

York.  His eldest sister, Anne,
My mother, being heir unto the crown,
Married Richard, earl of Cambridge; who was
To Edmond Langley, Edward the third's fifth son,
By her I claim the kingdom: she was heir [son].
To Roger, earl of March; who was the son
Of Edmond Mortimer; who married Philippe,
Solo daughter unto Lionel, duke of Clarence:
So, if the issue of the elder son
Succeeded before the younger, I am king.

War.  What plain proceeding is more plain than Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
The fourth son; York claims it from the third.
Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign:
It fails not yet, but flourishes in thee,
And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.—
Then, father Salisbury, kneel we together;
And in this private plot, be we the first,
That shall salute our rightful sovereign
With honor of his birthright to the crown.

Both.  Long live our sovereign Richard, England's king!
York.  We thank you, lords.  But I am not your Till I be crown'd, and that my sword be stain'd
With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster;
And that's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice, and silent secrecy.
Do you, as I do, in these dangerous days,
Win at the duke of Suffolk's insolence,
At Beaumont's pride, at Somerset's ambition,
At Buckingham, and all the crew of them,
Till they have stain'd the shepherd of the flock,
That upright prince, the good duke Humphrey.
'Tis that they seek; and, in seeking that,
Shall find their deaths, if York can prophesy.

Sat.  My lord, break we off: we know your mind at full.

War.  My heart assures me, that the earl of War-
Shall one day make the duke of York a king.

York.  And, Nevil, this I do assure myself,
Richard shall live to make the earl of Warwick
The greatest man in England, but the king.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same.  A Hall of Justice.

Trumpets sounded.  Enter King Henry, Queen
Margaret, Gloster, York, Suffolk, and Salisbury; the Duchess of Gloster, Margery Jourdain, Southwell, Hume, and Boling-broke, under guard.

K.  Hen.  Stand forth, dame Eleanor Cobham,
Gloster's wife,
In sight of God, and us, your guilt is great:
Receive the sentence of the law, for 2 sin
Such as God's soul 3 is adjudget to death.—
You four, from hence to prison back again;

[To Jourd.  &c.

From thence, unto the place of execution:
The witch in Smithfield shall be burnt to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.

You, madam, for you are more nobly born,
Despoiled of your honor in your life.
Shall, after three days' open penance done,
Live in your country here, in banishment,
With sir John Stanley in the Isle of Man.  [death
Duch.  Welcome is banishment; welcome were my
Glo.  Eleanor, the law, thou seest, hath judg'd thee:
I cannot justify whom the law condemns—

[Exeunt the Duchess, and the other prisoners.

Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
Ah, Humphrey!  this dishonor in thine age
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground.—
I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and mine age would cease.

K.  Hen.  Stay, Humphry duke of Gloster.  Ere Give up thy soul!  Henry will to his head
[thee
Protector be; and God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet.
And go in peace, Humphrey; no less belov'd,
Than when thou wast protector to thy king.
Q.  Mar.  I see no reason why a king of years
Should be protected like a child 5 by peers.
God and king Henry govern England's helm.
Give up your staff, sir, and to the king his realm.

Glo.  My staff?—here, noble Henry, is my staff;
6 To think I fain would keep it makes me laugh.
As willingly do I the same resign,
As e'er thy father Henry made it mine:
And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it,
As others would ambitiously receive it.
Farewell, good king: when I am dead and gone,
May honorable peace attend thy throne.

[Exit.  Q.  Mar.  Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen;
And Humphrey, duke of Gloster, scarce himself,
That bears so shrewd a main: two pull at once,—
His lady banish'd, and a limb lopp'd off;
This staff of honor 4 brought:—there let it stand,
Where it best fits to be, in Henry's hand.
Suf.  Thus drops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays;
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her 7 proudest days.
York.  Lords, let him 8 go.—Please it your majesty,
This is the day appointed for the combat;
And ready are the appellant and defendant,
The armorer and his man, to enter Plats,
So please your highness to behold the fight.  [fore,
Q.  Mar.  Ay, good my lord; for purposely, there-

4 Reached.—  "Let him go," i. e., let him pass out of your thoughts.
Second Part of King Henry VI.

Scene IV.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Gloster and Servants, in mourning clothes.

Glo. Thus, sometimes hath the brightest day a
And after summer evermore succeeds [cold];
Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold:
So, cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.—
Sir, what's o'clock?

Serr. Ten, my lord.

Glo. Ten is the hour that was appointed me

To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess

4 Uneath she may endure the flinty streets,
To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.
Sweet Neil, ill can thy noble mind abrook
That object people, raving on thy face
With curious looks, laughing at thy shame,
That erst did follow thy proud chariot wheels,
When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.
But, so I think, she comes; and I'll prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the Duchess of Gloster, in a white sheet,
With verses written upon her back, her feet bare,
And a taper burning in her hand; Sir John Stanley,
A Sheriff, and Officers.

Serr. So please your grace, we'll take her from The street.

Glo. No, stir not for your lives: let her pass by.

Duch. Come, you come, my lord, to see my open shame?
Now thou dost penance too. Look, how they gaze:
See, how the giddy multitude do point,
And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee.
Ah, Gloster! bide thee from their hateful looks;
And in thy closet pant my shame,
And thou thine enemies, both mine and thine.

Glo. Be patient, gentle Neil; forget this grief.

Duch. Ah, Gloster! teach me to forget myself;
For, whilst I think I am thy married wife,
And thou a prince, protector of this land,
Methinks, I should not thus be led along,
Mail'd I'd up in shame, with papers on my back,
And follow'd with a rabble, that reproach
To see my tears, and hear my deep-set groans.
The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;
And when I start the curious people laugh,
And bid me be advised how I tread.
Ah, Humphrey! can I hear this shameful yoke?
Trow'st thou, that ever I'll look upon the world,
Or be the happy, that enjoy them?
No; dark shall be my light, and night my day:
To think upon my pomp, shall be my hell.
Sometime I'll say I am duke Humphrey's wife,
And he a prince, and ruler of the land;
Yet so he rul'd, and such a prince he was,
As he stood by, whilst I, his forlorn duchess,
Was made a wonder, and a pointing-stock,
To every idle rascal folower.
But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame:
Nor stir at nothing, till the axe of death
Hang over thee, as, sure, it shall shortly will;
For Suffolk,—he that can do all in all
With her, that latheth thee, and hates us all,—
And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest.
Have all lim'd bushies to betray thy wings;
And thy false rabble thronest, they'll tangle thee.
But fear not thou, until thy foot be snar'd,
Nor never seek prevention of thy foes.

Glo. Ah, Neil! forbear; thou almost all awry:
I must offend before I be attainted;

Enter York, with trumpets, alarum to the combattants.

[Alarum. They fight, and Peter strikes down his Master.

Hor. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason.

Peter. O God! have I overcome mine enemies
In this presence? O Peter! thou hast prevailed in right.

K. Hen. Go, and take hence that traitor from our sight;
For by his death we do perceive his guilt:
And God in justice hath reveal'd to us
The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,
Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.

Come, fellow; follow us for thy reward.

[Exeunt.

"Worse bested," i. e., in a worse plight.—According to the old law of duels, knights fought with the lance and sword, but those of inferior rank with an elon staff, to the end of which was fastened a long crummed hard with sand.

Charneco was a kind of sweet wine.

"Uneath," i. e., not easily.—Malicious.—Curse.

"Mail'd up in shame," i. e., wrapped up in disgrace;
According to the sheet of penance.—Deep-lashed.—Be advised," i. e., be careful.
And had I twenty times so many foes,
And each of them had twenty times their power,
All these could not procure me any seathe,
So long as I am loyal, true, and chaste.
Wouldst have me rescue thee from this reproach?
Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away,
But I in danger for the breach of the law.
Thy greatest help is quiet, gentle Nell;
I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience:
These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, held at Bury the first of this next month.
Glo. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein before?
This is close dealing.—Well, I will be there.

[Exit Herald.

My Nell, I take my leave:—and, master Sheriff,
Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.
Sher. An't please your grace, here my commission
And sir John Stanley is appointed now
[stays]
To take her with him to the Isle of Man.
Glo. Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.
Glo. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well. The world may laugh again;
And I may live to do you kindness, if
You do it her: and so, sir John, farewell.
[well?]
Duck. What! gone, my lord, and bid me not fare.
Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.

[Exeunt Glover and Servants.

Duch. Art thou gone so? All comfort go with
For none abides with: my joy is death;
[thee,
Death, at whose name I oft have been affray'd,
Because I wish'd this world's eternity.
Stanley, I pr’ythee, go, and take me hence;
I care not whither, for I beg no favor,
Only convey me where thou art commanded.

Stan. Why, madam, that is to the Isle of Man;
There to be us'd according to your state.

Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:
And shall I, then, be us’d reproachfully?

Stan. Like to a duchess, and duke Humphrey's lady:
According to that state you shall be used.

Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare,
Although thou hast been conduct of my shame!

Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me.

Duch. Ay, ay, farewell! thy office is discharged.—
Come, Stanley, shall we go?
[sheet
Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off this
And go we to attire you for our journey.

Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet:
No; it will hang upon my richest robes,
And show itself, attire me how I can.
Go, lead the way: I long to see my prison.

[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Abbey at Bury.

A Scena. Enter to the Parliament, King Henry, Queen Margaret, Cardinal Beaufort, Suffolk, York, Buckingham, and others.

K. Hen. I must, my lord of Gloucester is not come:
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.
Q. Mar. Can you not see, or will you not observe
The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?

With what a majesty he bears himself;
How insolent of late he is become,
How proud, how peremptory, and unlike himself?
We know the time since he was mild and affable;
And if we did but glance a far-off look,
Immediately he was upon his knee,
That all the court admir'd him for submission:
But meet him now, and, be it in the morn,
When every one will give the time of day,
He knits his brow, and shows an angry eye,
And passeth by with stiff unbowed knee,
Disdaining duty that to us belongs.
Small curs are not regarded when they grin,
But great men tremble when the lion roars:
And Humphrey is no little man in England.
First note, that he is near you in descent,
And should you fall, he is the next will mount.
Me *seemeth, then, it is no policy,
Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears,
And his advantage following your decease,
That he should come about your royal person,
Or be admitted to your highness' council.
By flattery lust he won the commons' hearts,
And, when he please to commotion,
'Tis to be fear'd, they all will follow him.
Now 'tis the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted;
Suffer them now, and they'll o'ergrow the garden,
And choke the herbs for want of weeding.
The reverend care I bear unto my lord
Made me f'collect these dangers in the duke.
If he be fond, call it a woman's fear;
Which fear if better reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe and say, I wrong'd the duke.
My *lords of Suffolk, Buckingham, and York,
Reprove my *allegations if you can,
Or else conclude my worst supposition.

Suf. Well hath thy highness seen into this duke;
And had I first been put to speak my mind,
I think, I should have told your grace's tale.
The duchess by her subornation,
Upon my life, began her devilish practices:
Or if he were not privy to those faults,
Yet, by *reputing of his high descent,
As next the king he was successor heir,
And such high vaunts of his nobility,
Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess,
By wicked means to frame our sovereign's fall.
Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep,
And in his simple show he harbors treason.
The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb:
No, no, my sovereign; Gloster is a man
Unsound'd yet, and full of deep deceit.

Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law,
Devise strange deaths for small offences done?
York. And did he not, in his protectorship,
Lievry great sums of money through the realm
For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it?
By means whereof the towns each day revolted.

Back. Tut! these are petty faults to faults unknown,
Which time will bring to light in smooth duc'd Hum-

K. Hen. My lords, at once: the care you have of us,
To mow down thorns that would annoy our foot,
Is worthy praise; but shall I speak my conscience?
Our kinsman Gloster is as innocent
From meaning treason to our royal person,
As is the sucking lamb, or harmless doe.
The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given,
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

---

* "I. clew," i. e., it seems'th to me._
* "Observe._
* Foolish._
* "By reputing ol," i. e., by valing himself upon.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

Q. Mar. Ah! what's more dangerous than this fond affiance?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,
For he's dispos'd as the wanteful raven.
Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him,
For he's inclin'd as is the ravenous wolf.
Who cannot steal a shape, that means deceit?
Take heed, my lord: the welfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter Somerset.

Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!
K. Hen. Welcome, lord Somerset. 'What's the news from France?'
SOM. That all your interest in those territories
Is utterly bereft you: all is lost.
K. Hen. Cold news, lord Somerset; but God's will.
York. Cold news for me; for I had hope of France.

[Aside.

As firmly as I hope for fertile England,
Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud,
And caterpillars eat my leaves away;
But I will remedy this: gear eye long,
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. All happiness unto my lord the king!
Pardon, my liege, that I have stay'd so long.
Suf. Nay, Gloster, know, that thou art come too,
Unite them in that web of my and your comforts.
[soon. I do arrest thee of high treason here.
Glo. Well, Suffolk, yet thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this arrest:
A heart unspotted is not easily damned.
The purest spring is not so free from mud,
As I am clear from treason to my sovereign.
Who can accuse me? wherein am I guilty?
York. 'Tis thought, my lord, that you took bribes of France,
And, being protector, stay'd the soldiers' pay;
By means whereas his highness hath lost France.

Glo. Is it but thought so? What are they that
I never rob'd the soldiers of their pay, [think it?
Nor ever had one peny bribe from France.
So help me God, as I have watch'd the night,
Ay, night by night, in studying good for England.
That doth that e'er I wrested from the king,
Or any grant I hoarded to my use,
Be brought against me at my trial day.
No: many a pound of mine own proper store,
Because I would not tax the needy commons,
Have I dispersed to the garrisons,
And never ask'd for restitution.

Carr. It serves you well, my lord, to say so much.
Glo. Say no more than truth, so help me God! York. In your protectorship you did devise Strange tortures for offenders, never heard of.
That England was defam'd by tyranny. [tector,
Glo. Why, 'tis well known that, whilst I was pro-
Fity was all the fault that was in me;
For I should melt at an offender's tears,
And lovely words were ransom for their fault:
Unless it were a bloody murderer.
Or foul felonious thief that flee'd poor passengers,
I never gave them condign punishment.
Murther, indeed, that bloody sin, I torture'd
Above the felon, or what trespass else. [saw'd.
Suf. My lord, these faults are 'tensely, quickly an-
But mightier crimes are laid unto your charge,
Whereof you cannot easily purge yourself.
I do arrest you in your highness' name;
And here commit you to my lord cardinal!

To keep, until your further time of trial.
K. Hen. My lord of Gloster, 'tis my special hope,
That you will clear yourself from all suspect:
My conscience tells me you are innocent.

Glo. Ah, gracious lord! these days are dangerous:
Virtue is mock'd with foul ambition,
And charity chas'd hence by rascals hand;
Foul subornation is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land,
I know, their complot is to have my life;
And if my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness;
But mine is made the prologue to their play.
For thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will not conclude their plotted tragedy.
Beaufort's red sparkling eyes blab his heart's malice,
And Suffolk's cloudy brow his stormy fate;
Sharp Buckingham unbear'ds with his tongue
The obvious load that lies upon his heart;
And dogged York, that reaches at the Moon,
Whose overweening arm I have pluck'd back,
By false accuse doth level at my life.—
And you, my sovereign lady, with the rest,
Causeth have hid disgraces on my head,
And with your best endeavor have stir'd up
My liegest liege to be mine enemy.—
Ay, all of you have laid your heads together:
Myself bad nought of your confederacy,
And all to make away my guiltless life.
I shall not want false witness to condemn me,
Nor store of treasons to augment my guilt;
The ancient proverb will be well effect'd,—
A staff is quickly found to beat a dog.

Carr. My liege, his railing is intolerable.
If those that care to keep your royal person
From treason's secret knife, and traitors' venge,
Be thus upbraided, chid, and rated at,
And the offender granted scope of speech,
'Twill make them cool in zeal unto your grace.

Suf. Hath he not twit our sovereign lady, here,
With ignominious words, though clerkly cou'd, as
If she had suborned some to swear
False testimonies to o'erthrow his state?
Q. Mar. But I can give the loser leave to chide.
Glo. For truer spoke, than men: I lose, indeed.
Beshrew the winners, for they played me false;
And well such losers may have leave to speak.

Buck. He'll wrest the sense, and hold us here all Lord Cardinal, he is your prisoner.——

[day.——

Carr. Sirs, take away the deke, and guard him sure.
Glo. Ah! thus king Henry throws away his crutch,
Before his legs be firm to bear his body:
Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnawing who shall guaw thee first.
Ah, that my fear were false! ah, that it were !
For, good king Henry, thy decay I fear.

[Exeunt Attendants with Gloster.

K. Hen. My lords, what to your wisdoms seemeth
Do, or undo, as if ourself were here. —[Rising.

Q. Mar. What! will your highness leave the parliament?

[ grief.

K. Hen. Ay, Margaret, my heart is drown'd with Whose flood begins to flow within mine eyes;
My body round causeth with misery,
For what's more miserable than discontent?—
Ah, uncle Humphrey! in thy face I see
The map of honor, truth, and loyalty;
And yet, good Humphrey, is the hour to come,
That e'er I prov'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.

* This gear,' i.e., this matter; this business.

b Accumation.—n Dearnest.
SCENE I.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

What lowering star now envies thy estate,
That these great lords, and Margaret our queen,
Do seek subversion of thy harmless life?
Thou never didst them wrong, nor man wrong:
And as the butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretched, and beautes when it straues,
Bearing it to the bloody slaughter-house;
Even so remorseless, have they beaused him hence;
And as the dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but weaite her darling's loss;
Even so myself bevails good Gloster's case,
With sad unhelpful tears; and with dimm'd eyes
Look after him, and cannot do him good,
So slowly are his vowed enemies.
His fortunes I will weep; and 'twixt each gron,
Say—"Who's a traitor? Gloster he is none."

Q. Mar. 1' Fair lords, cold snow melts with the sun's hot beams.

Henry my lord is cold in great affairs,
Too full of foolish pity; and Gloster's show
Beyond him, as the mournful crocodile
With sorrow swares relenting passengers;
Or as the snake, roll'd in a flowering *bank,
With shining check'd b'slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent.
Believe me, lords, were none more wise than I,
(And yet herein I judge mine own wit good)
This Gloster should be quickly rid the world.
To rid us from the fear we have of him.
Car. That he should die is worthy policy,
But yet we want a color for his death:
'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of law.
Suf. But, in my mind that were no policy:
The king will labor still to save his life;
The commons haply rise to save his life:
As yet we have but trivial argument,
More than mistrust, that shows him worthy death.
York. So that, by this, you would not have him die.
Suf. Ah! York, no man alive so fain as I.
York. 'Tis York that hath *most reason for his death,—
But, my lord cardinal, and you, 2 lord Suffolk,
Say, as you think, and speak it from your souls,
With your eyes upon an empty kirt, to Guard the chicken from a hungry kite,
As place duke Humphrey for the king's protector!
Q. Mar. So the poor chicken should be sure of death.
Suf. Madam, this true: and weren't that madness, then,
To make the fox surveyor of the fold?
Who, being accus'd a crafty murderer,
His guilt should be but idly posed over,
Because his purpose is not executed?
No; let him die, in that he is a fox,
By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock,
Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood,
As Humphrey's prov'd by reasons to my liege.
And do not stand on quillots how to shay him:
Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty,
Sleeping, or waking, 'tis no matter how,
So he be dead; for that is good deceit
Which, makes him first, that first intends deceit.
Q. Mar. Thrice noble Suffolk, 3 resolutely spoke.
Suf. Not resolute, except so much were done,
For things are often spoke, and seldom meant;
But, that my heart accordeth with my tongue,—
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,—

Say but the word, and I will be his 4 priest. [folk,
Car. But I would have him dead, my lord of Suff-ere you can take due 5 order for a priest.
Say, you consent, and cease well the deed,
And I'll provide his executioner;
I tender so the safety of my liege.
Suf. Here is my hand: the deed is worthy doing.
Q. Mar. And so say I.
York. And I: and now we three have spoke it,
It'skils not greatly who impugns our doom.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Great lords, from Ireland am I come again,
To signify that rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword.
Send succors, lords, and stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For, being green, there is great hope of help.
Car. A breach that craves a quick 6 expedition stop,
What counsel give you in this weighty cause?
York. That Somerset be sent as regent thither.
Tis meet that lucky ruler be employ'd;
Witness the fortune he hath had in France.
Som. If York, with all his *for-fair policy,
Had been the regent there instead of [he,
He never would have stay'd in France so long.
York. No, not to lose it all, as thou last done.
I rather would have lost my life betimes,
Than bring a burden of dishonour home,
By staying there so long, till all were lost.
Show me one scar character'd on thy skin:
Men's flesh preserv'd so whole do seldom win. [fire,
Q. Mar. Nay then, this spark will prove a ragging
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with.—
No more, good York;—sweet Somerset, be still:—
Thy fortune, York, hadst thou been regent there,
Might happily have prov'd far worse than his.
York. What, worse than nought? nay, then a shame take all.
Som. And, in the summer, thee, that wishest shame.
Car. My lord of York, try what your fortune is.
The unicelkernes of Ireland are in arms,
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
Collected choiceby, from each county some,
And try your hap against the Irishmen?
York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.
Suf. Why, our authority is thence, or count
And what we do establish, he confirms us:
Then, noble York, take thou this task in hand.
York. I am content. Provide me soldiers, lords,
While I take order for mine own affairs.
Suf. A charge, lord York, that I will see perform'd.
But now return we to the false duke Humphry.
Car. No more of him; for I will deal with him,
That henceforth, he shall trouble us no more:
And so break off; the day is almost spent.
Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.
York. My lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days,
At Bristol I expect my soldiers,
For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.
Suf. I'll see it truly done, my lord of York.

[Exeunt all but York.

York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful
And change misdoubt to resolution: [thoughts,
Be that thou hop'st to be, or what thou art
Resign to death; it is not worth the enjoying.
Let pale-fuc'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbor in a royal heart. [thought,
Farther than spring-time showers comes thought on 4 "His priest," i. e., his attendant at the last scene.— 5 "Censure well the deed," i. e., judge well of it, have a good opinon of it.— 6 "It'skils not greatly who impugns our doom."

7 Fair-fetched.—Boors.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

ACT III.

And not a thought but thinks on dignity.
My brain, more busy than the laboring spider,
Weaves tedious mazes to trap mine enemies.
Well, nobles, well; 'tis politicly done,
To send me packing with an host of men:
I fear you me but warm the starved snake,
Wher the tallow dips your breasts, will sting your hearts.
'Twixt man I luck'd, and you will give them me:
I take it kindly; yet, be well assur'd,
You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands.
Whiles I in Ireland march a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm,
Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven, or hell;
And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until he shall have formed a golden circuit on my head,
Like to the glorious sun's transparent beams,
Do calm the fury of this mad-bred flaw.
And, for a minister of my intent,
I have seduced a headstrong Kentishman,
John Cade of Ashford,
To make common cause, as full well he can,
Under the title of John Mortimer.
In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade
Oppose himself against a troop of kerns; And fought so long, till that his thighs with darts Were almost like a sharp-quill'd porcupine:
And, in the end being race'd, I have seen Him captor upright, like a wild Morisco,
Shaking the bloody darts, as he his bicorn.
Full often, like a tag-hair'd crafty korne,
Hath he conversed with the enemy,
And undiscover'd come to me again,
And given me notice of their villainies.
This devil here shall be my substitute;
For that he Mortimer, which now is dead,
In face, in gait, in speech, doth resemble:—
By this he shall perceive the common end,
How they affect the house and claim of York.
Say, he be taken, rack'd, and tortured,
I know, no pain they can inflict upon him
Will make him say I mov'd him to those arms;
Say, that he thrive, as 'tis great like he will,
Why, then from Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal mov'd;—
For, Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart, then next for me. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Bury. A Room in the Palace.

Enter certain Murderers, running over the Stage.

1 Mur. Run to my lord of Suffolk; let him know,
We have despatch'd the duke, as he commanded.
2 Mur. O, that it were so!—What have we done?
Didst ever hear a man so penitent?
1 Mur. Here comes my lord.

Enter Suffolk.

Suf. Now, sirs, have you despatch'd this thing?
1 Mur. Ay, my good lord, he's dead. [house.
Suf. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my
I will reward you for this venturesome deed,
The king and all the peers are here at hand.
Have you laid fair the bed? are all things well,
According as I gave directions?
1 Mur. 'Tis, my good lord.
Suf. Away! be gone. [Exit Murderers.

Sound Trumpets. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, Cardinal Beaufort, Somerset, Lords, and others.

K. Hen. Go, call our uncle to our presence straight:

Say, we intend to try his grace to-day,
If he be guilty, as 'tis published.
Suf. I'll call him presently, my noble lord. [Exit.

K. Hen. Lords, take your places; and, I pray you Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Glover, [All,
Than from true evidence, of good esteem,
He be approv'd in practice culpable.
Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail,
That faultless may condemn a noble man!
Pray God he may acquit him of suspicion!
K. Hen. I thank thee, Meg; these words content me much.—

Re-enter Suffolk.

How now! why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?
Where is our uncle? what's that matter, Suffolk?
Suf. Dead in his bed, my lord; Glover is dead.
Q. Mar. Marry, God forefend! [night,
Car. God's secret judgment—I did dream to
The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.

[The King swoons.

Q. Mar. How fares my lord?—Help, lords! the king is dead.

Som. Bear his body: wring him by the nose.
Q. Mar. Run, go; help, help!—O, Henry, open thine eyes!
Suf. He doth revive again.—Madam, be patient. K. Hen. O heavenly God!
Q. Mar. How fares thy gracious lord?—[fort!
Suf. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, com-
K. Hen. What! dost my lord of Suffolk comfort
Come he right now to sing a raven note?—
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers, And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first-conceived sound?—
Hid not thy poison with such sugar'd words, Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say:
Their touch suffright me as a serpent's sting.
Thou boleful messenger, out of my sight!
Upon thine eye-balls murderous tyranny
Sits in grim majesty to fright the world.
Look not upon me, for thine eyes are vomiting,—
Yet do not go away:—come, basilisk,
And kill the innocent gazier with thy sight;—
For in the shade of death I shall find joy,
In look of double death, now Glover is dead.
Q. Mar. Why do you rate my lord of Suffolk thus?
Although the duke was enemy to him,
Yet he, most Christian-like, laments his death:
And for myself, foe as he was to me,
Might liquid tears, or heart-offending groans,
Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,
I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,
Look pale as prime with blood-drinking sighs,
And all to have the noble duke alive.
What know I how the world may deem of me?
For it is known, we were but hollow friends;
It may be judg'd, I made the duke away:
So shall my name with slander's tongue be wounded,
And princes' courts be fill'd with my reproach.
This got I by his death. Ah me, unhappy,
To be thus crown'd, and cursed crown'd with infamy!
K. Hen. Ah, woe is me for Glover, wretched man!
Q. Mar. Be woe for me, more wretched than he is.
What! dost thou turn away, and hide thy face?
I am no loathsome leper; look on me.
What, art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf?
Be poisonous too, and kill thy forlorn queen.
Is all thy comfort shut in Gloster's tomb?
Why, then dame Margaret was never thy joy:
SCENE II.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

Ere his statue, then, and worship it, And make my image but an alehouse sign.
Was I for this night wreek'd upon the sea, And twice by awkward wind from England's bank Drove back again unto my native clime!
What boded this, but well-forewarning wind Did seem to say,—Seek not a scorpion's nest, Nor set no footing on this unkind shore.
What did I then, but curs'd th' unnatural gusts, And he that loss'd them from their brazen caves; And made them blow toward Borough's blessed shore, Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock.
Yet Xolus would not be a murderer, But left that hateful office unto thee:
The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me, Knowing that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore, With tears as salt as sea through thy unkindness:
The splintering rocks cover'd in the sinking sands, And would not dash me with their ragged sides, Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they, Might in thy palace perish Margaret.

As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs, When from the shore the tempest beat us back, I stood upon the hatches in the storm; And when the dusky sky began to rob Me of the last glimpsing sight of thy view, I took a costly jewel from my neck.
A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,— And threw it towards thy land. The sea receiv'd it, And so I wish'd thy body might my heart:
And even with this I lost fair England's view, And bade mine eyes be packing with my heart, And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles, For losing ken of Albion's wished coast.
How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue (The agent of thy foul inconstancy) To sit and witch me, as Ascanius did, When he to Maddoc Dido would unfold His father's acts, commenc'd in burning Troy? Am I not wish'd like her, or thou not false like him? Ah me! I can no more. Die, Margaret, For Henry weeps that thou dost live so long.

Noise within. Enter Warwick and Salisbury.
The Commons press to the door.

War. It is reported, mighty sovereign, That good duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd By Suffolk and the cardinal Beaufort's means. The noble and generous, like an angry hive, They that would lead their, scatter up and down, And care not who they sting in his revenge. Myself have calm'd their sullen mutiny, Until they hear the order of his death. [True.
K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick, 'tis too But how he died, God knows, not Henry. Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse, And comment then upon his sudden death. War. That I shall do, my liege.—Stay, Salisbury, With the rude multitude, till I return.

[Warwick goes into an inner Room, and Salisbury retires.

K. Hen. O thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts! My thoughts that labor to persuade my soul, Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's life. If my suspect be false, forgive me, God, For judgment only doth belong to thee. Fain would I go to chafe his pally lips With twenty thousand kisses, and to rain Upon his face an ocean of salt tears, To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk, And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling; But all in vain are these mean obsequies, And to survey his dead and earthy image, What were it but to make my sorrow greater?

The Doors of an inner Chamber are thrown open, and Gloster is discovered dead in his Bed; Warwick and others standing by it.
War. Come hither, gracious sovereign; view this body.

K. Hen. That's to see how deep my grave is made; For with his soul fled all my worldly solace, And, seeing him, I see my life in a death.
War. As surely as my soul intends to live With that dread King, that took our state upon him To free us from his Father's wrathful curse, I do believe that violent hands were laid Upon the Life of this thrice-famed duke.

Suf. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn tongue! What instance gives lord Warwick for his vow?
War. See, how the blood is settled in his face. Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost, Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless, Being all descended to the lowering heart; Who, in the conflict that it holds with death, Attracts the same familiar evidence 'gainst that enemy; Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er returneth To blush and beautify the check again. But see, his face is black, and full of blood; His eye-balls farther out than when he liv'd, Staring full ghastly like a strangled man: [gling; His hair upcur'd, his nostrils stretch'd with struggle, His hands abroad'd and display'd, as one that grasp'd, And tugg'd for life, and was by strength subdued. Look on the sheets his hair, you see, is sticking, His well-proportion'd beard made rough and rugged, Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd. It cannot be but he was murder'd here: The least of all these signs were probable. [death?
Suf. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to Myself, and Beaufort, had him in protection, And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers.
War. But both of you were vow'd duk'd Humphrey's foes, And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep: 'Tis like you, would not feast him like a friend, And 'tis well seen he found an enemy.
Q. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these noblemen As guilty of the unhappy Henry's most unnatural death.
War. Who finds the leifer dead, and bleeds fresh, And seeth fast by a butcher with an axe, Will but suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter? Who finds the partidge in the puttock's nest, But may imagine how the bird was dead, Although the kite soar with unbleeding beak? Even so suspicions is this tragedy; then, is your knife? Q. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk? where's that Beaufort term'd a kite? where are his talons? Suf. I wear no knife, to slaughter sleeping men; But here's a vengeful sword, rusted with ease, That shall be scoured in his rancorous heart, That slanders me with murder's crimson badge.— Say, if thou dar'st, proud lord of Warwickshire, That I am guilty in duke Humphrey's death.
[Exeunt Cardinal, Son., and another.
War. What darest not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him?
Q. Mar. He darest not calm his contumelious spirit, Nor cease to be an arrogant controller, Though Suffolk dars him twenty thousand times.
War. Madam, be still, with reverence may I say;

* "I see my life in death," i.e. I see my life endangered by his death.—"A timely-parted ghost," i.e., the body of one who had died a natural death.—"His hands abroad displayed," i.e., his fingers widely distended.
For every word you speak in his behalf
Is slander to your royal dignity.

Suf. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanor,
If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
Thy mother took into her damnable bed
Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
Was graft with crab-tree slip; whose fruit thou art,
And never of the Nevils' noble race.
War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers thee,
And I should rob the deathsmen of his fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild,
I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee
Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech,
And say, it was thy mother that thou meant'st;
That thou thyself wast born in bastardy;
And, after all this fearful homage done,
Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell,
Pernicious bloodsucker of sleeping men.

Suf. Thou shalt be waking while I shed thy blood,
If from this presence thou dost go with me.

War. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence.
Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee,
And do some service to due Humphrey's ghost.

[Exeunt Suffolk and Warwick.

K. Hen. What stronger breast-plate than a heart untainted?
Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his quarrel just;
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.

Q. Mar. What noise is this?

Re-enter Suffolk and Warwick, with their Weapons drawn.

K. Hen. Why, how now, lords! your wrathful
weapons drawn
Here in our presence! dare you be so bold?—
Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here?

Suf. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.
[Buried,
Noise of a Crowd within. Re-enter Salisbury.

Sal. Sirs, stand apart; [Speaking to those within.
the king shall know your mind.—
Dread lord, the commons send you word by me,
Unless lord Suffolk straight be done to death,
Or dishonour fair England with his blood.
They will by violence tear him from your palace,
And torture him with grievous lingering death.
They say, by him the good duke Humphrey died;
They say, in him they fear your highness' death;
And mere instinct of love, and loyalty,
Free from a stubborn opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in your behalf.
They say, in care of your most royal person,
That, if your highness should intend to sleep,
And charge, that no man should disturb your rest,
In pain of your disliking, or pain of death,
Yet notwithstanding such a strait edict,
Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,
That slyly glided towards your majesty,
It were but necessary you were banish'd,
Lest, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,
The mortal worm might make the sleep eternal:
And therefore do they cry, though you forbidd,
That they will guard you, who'e you will or no,
From such foul serpents as false Suffolk is;
With whose envenomed and fatal sting,
Your loving uncle, twenty times this worth,
They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king,
my lord of Salisbury!

Suf. 'Tis like the commons, rude unpolish'd heads,
Could send such message to their sovereign;
But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,
To show how 1 quait an omortor you are:
But all the honor Salisbury hath won,
Is, that he was the last of his race.
Sent from a 2 sort of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king,
or we will all break in!

K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I thank them for their tender loving care,
And had I not been 'cited so by them,
Yet did I purpose as they do entreat;
For sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy
Mischance into my state by Suffolk's means:
And therefore, by his majesty I swear,
Whose false unworthy deputy I am,
He shall not breathe infection in this air
But three days longer, on the pain of death.

[Exit Salisbury.

Q. Mar. O Henry! let me plead for gentle Suffolk.
K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk.
No more, I say: if thou dost plead for him,
Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.
Had I but said, I would have kept my word,
But, when I swear, it is irrevocable.—
If after three days' space thou here be'st found
On any ground that I am ruler of,
The world shall not be ransom for thy life.—
Come, Warwick, come; good Warwick, go with me,
I have great matters to impart to thee.

[Exeunt K. Henry, Warwick, Lords, &c.

Q. Mar. Mischance, and sorrow, go along with you!
Heart's discontent, and sour affliction,
Be playfellow's to keep you company.
There's two of you; the devil make a third,
And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!

Suf. Cease, gentle queen, these execrations,
And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.—
[Wretched.

Q. Mar. Fly, coward woman, and soft-hearted
Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemy?

Suf. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse them?
Wouldst cause kill, as doth the mandrake's grain,
I would invent as bitter-searching terms,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear,
Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave.
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words;
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;
My hair be fix'd on end, as one distinct;
Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban:
And even now my burden'd heart would break,
Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!
Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees;
Their chiefest prospect, murdering basilisks!
Their softest touch, as sharps as lizards' stings!
Their music, frightful as the serpent's kiss,
And bowing screech-owls make the concert full!
All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell—
[Thyself;

Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk: thou torment'st
And these dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil,
And turn the force of them upon thyself.

Suf. You bade me ban, and will you bid me leave?
Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,

* "The mortal worm," i.e., the deadly serpent.

b Dextorous. — "A sort," L. c., a company. — d Breathe infection in this air, L. c., contaminate this air with his infected breath.— Curse.
Second Part of King Henry VI.

Scene I.

Well could I curse away a winter's night, Though standing naked on a mast's top, Where but cold would never let grass grow, And think it but a minute spent in sport. Q. Mar. O! let me entreat thee, cease. Give me thy hand,
That I may dow it with my mournful tears; Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place, To wash away my woeful monuments. Q. Mar. Even torture I could bear, but this kiss be constant, That thou might'st think upon these by the seal, Through whom a thousand sighs are breath'd for thee.
So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief; 'Tis but surmise'd whilst thou art standing by, As one that surfeits, thinking on a want. I will repeat thee, or, be well assur'd, Adventure to be banished myself; And banish I am, if but from thee. Go; speak not to me: even now be gone.—
O! go not yet.—Even thus two friends condemn'd Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand leaves, Loather a hundred times to part than die. Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee.
Suf. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banished, Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee. 'Tis not the land I care for, were thou tience:
A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company; For where thou art, there is the world itself, With every pleasure in the world, And where thou art not, desolation. I can no more.—Live thou to joy thy life; Myself! to joy in nought, but that thou liv'st.

Enter VAUX.

Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news,
Vaux. To signify unto his majesty, [I pr'ythee! That cardinal Beaufort is at point of death;
For suddenly a grievous sickness took him, That makes him gasp, and stare, and catch the air, Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth. Sometime he talkes as if duke Humphrey's ghost Were by his side; sometime he calls the king, And whispers to his pillow, as to him, The secrets of his overcharged soul: And I am sent to tell his majesty, That even now he cries aloud for him.
Q. Mar. Go, tell this heavy message to the king. [Exit VAUX.
Ah me! what is this world? what news are these?
But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss, Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure? Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,
And with the southern clouds tend in tears?
Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrows.
Now, get thee hence: the king, thou know'st, is coming;
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.
Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot live;
And in thy sight to die, what were it else, But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap? Here could I breathe my soul into the air, As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe, Dying with mother's dog between its lips;
Where, from thy sight, I should be raging mad, And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes, To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth: So should'st thou either turn my flying soul, Or I should breathe it so into thy body, And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium: To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
From thee to die, were torture more than death.

O! let me stay, befal what may befal.
Q. Mar. Away! though parting be a fretful cor-
It is applied to a deathful wound.
To France, sweet Suffolk: let me hear from thee;
For wheresoe'er thou art in this world's globe, I'll have an Iris that shall find thee out.
Suf. I go.
Q. Mar. And take my heart with thee.
Suf. A jewel, lock'd into the woeful &casket That ever did contain a thing of worth.
Even as a splitted bark, so sunder we:
This way fall I to death.
Q. Mar.
This way for me.
[Exeunt, severally.

Enter King Henry, Salisbury, Warwick, and others. The Cardinal in bed; Attendants with him.

[treasure,
Car. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's Enough to purchase such another island,
So thou will let me live, and feel no pain.
K. Hen. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life,
Where death's approach is seen so terrible!
War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.
Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.
Died he not in his bed? where should he die? Can I make men live, wh're they will or no?
O! torture me no more, I will confess,— Alive again? then show me where he is:
I'll give a thousand pound to look upon him,—
He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.—
Combs his hair: look! look! it stands upright, Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul.—
Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.
K. Hen. O, thou eternal mover of the heavens, Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!
O! beat away the busy meddling fiend, That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul, And from his bosom purge this black despair.
War. See, how the pangs of death do make him groan.
Sal. Disturb him not; let him pass peaceably.
K. Hen. Peace to his soul, if't God's good pleasure be.
Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss, Hold up thy hand, make signal of thy hope.—
[Car. dies.
He dies, and makes no sign.—O God, forgive him!
War. So had a death argues a monstrous life.
K. Hen. Forbear to judge, for we are sinners all,—
Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close, And let us all to meditation.
[Exeunt.

Scene I.—Kent. The Sea-shore near Dover.

Firing heard at Sea. Then enter from a Boat, a Captain, a Master, a Master's-Mate, Walter Whitmore, and others; with them Suffolk, disguised; and other Gentlemen, prisoners.

Cap. The gaudy, babbling, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea,
And now loud-howling wolves pursue the jades
Iris was the messenger of June. —Pitiful.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

ACT IV.

That drag the tragic melancholy night;
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty jaws
Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air.
Therefore, bring forth the soldiers of our prize;
For whilst our pinacle anchors in the Downs,
Here shall they make their ransom on the sand,
Or with their blood stain this disordered shore.—
Maint, this master prisoner freely give I thee;
And, thou that art his mate, make boot of this:—
The other, [Pointing to Suffolk.] Walter Whitmore, is thy share.

1 Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me know. Most. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head.

Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes yours.

Cap. What! think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentlemen?—
Cut both the villains' throats!—for die you shall:
Suff. What! think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
And bear the name and port of gentlemen?—
Cut both the villains' throats!—for die you shall:

Cap. And so should these, if I might have my will.

Cap. Be not so rash: take ransom; let him live.

Suf. Look on my George: I am a gentleman.

Whitmore. Name at what thou wilt; I shall be paid.

Whit. And so shall I; my name is Walter Whitmore.

Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me that by water I should die:
Yet let not this make thee be bloody minded;
Thy name is Gaultier, being rightly sounded.

Whit. Gaultier, or Walter, which it is, I care not;
Never yet did base dishonor blur our name,
But with our sword we wip'd away the blot:
Therefore, when merchant-like I sell revenge,
Broke be my sword, my arms torn and defac'd,
And I proclaim'd a coward through the world!

Lords hold on Suffolk.

Suf. Stay, Whitmore; for thy prisoner is a prince,
The duke of Suffolk, William de la Poole.

Whit. The duke of Suffolk muffled up in rags!

Suf. Ay, but these rags are no part of the duke:
Jove sometime went disguis'd, and why not I?

Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt be.

Suf. Obscure and lowly swain, King Henry's blood,
The honorable blood of Lancaster,
Must not be shed by such a jaded grooms.
Hast thou not kiss'd thy hand, and held my stirrup?
Bare-headed plodded by my foot-cloth smil'd,
And thought thee happy when I shook my head:
How often hast thou wait'd at my cup,
Fell from my trencher, knee'd down at the board,
When I have feasted with queen Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
Ay, and alay this thy abortive pride.

In our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
And duly wait'd for our coming forth.
This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf,
And therefore shall it charm thy riotous tongue.

Whit. Speak, captain, shall I stab the foul-tongued slave?—

1 Gent. First let my words stub him, as he bath me.

Suf. Base slave, thy words are blunt, and so art thou.

Cap. Convey him hence, and on our long boat's side
Strike off his head.

Suf. Thou dar'st not for thy own.

Cap. Yes, Poole.

Suf. Poole?—

Cap. Poole, Sir Poole, lord? is, kernel, puddle, sink; whose filthy and dirt Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.
Now, will I durn up this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing the treasure of the realm: [ground; Thy lips, that kiss'd the queen, shallweep the And thou, that smil'dst at good duke Humphrey's death,
Against the senseless winds shalt grin in vain,
Who in contempt shall kiss at thee again:
And waded be thou to the hags of hell,
For daring to affy a mighty lord
Unto the daughter of a worthess king,
Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem.
By devilish policy art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylva, overgord!' With gobbets of thy mother's bleeding heart.
By thee Anjou and Maine were sold to France:
The false revolting Normans thorough thee
Disdain to call us lord; and Picardy
Hath slain their governors, surpris'd our forts,
And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home.
The princely Warwick, and the Nevil's all,
Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain,
As hating thee, are rising up in arms:
And now the house of York—heard from the crown,
Shameful murder of a guiltless king,
And lofty, proud, encroaching tyranny,—
Burns with revenging fire; whose hopeful colors Advance our half-fac'd sun, striving to shine,
Under the which is writ—Invictus nobilis.
The commons, here in Kent, are up in arms;
And to conclude, reproach, and beggary,
Are crept into the palace of our king,
And all by thee.—Away!—Convey him hence.

Suf. O, that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder
Upon these paltry, servile, object drudges!—
Small things make base men proud: this villain, here,
Being captain of a pinacle, threatens more
Than Bargulus the strong Illyrian pirate.
Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob bee-hives.
It is impossible, that it should die
By such a low vassal as thyself.
Thy words move rage, and not remorse, in me:
I go of message from the queen to France;
I charge thee, wait me safely cross the channel.

Cap. Walter!—

Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must waft thee to thy death.

Suf. Pond gelidae timor occupat artus:—it is thee I fear.

Whit. Thou shalt have cause to fear before I leave What! are ye daunted now? now will ye stoop?

1 Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him; speak him fair.

Suf. Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,
Us'd to command, untaight to plead for favor.
Far be it my head honor such as these
With humble suit; no, rather let my head
Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heaven, and to my king;
And sooner dance upon a bloody pole,
Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar grooms.
True nobility is exempt from fear:
More can I bear, than you dare execute.

Cap. Hale him away, and let him talk no more.

17 "To affy," i. e., to betroth in marriage.—Edward III. bore for his device the rays of the sun dispersing them-selves out of a cloud.—A pinacle formerly signified a ship of small burden, built for speed.
Scene II. Second Part of King Henry VI.

Suf. Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye can, That this my death may never be forgot.—
Great men oft die by vile 2bezontians:
A Roman sworder and banditto slave
Murder'd sweet Tully; Brutus' bastard hand
Stabb'd Julius Caesar; savage islanders
Pompey the great, and Suffolk dies by pirates.
[Exit Suf., with Whit, and others.
Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,
It is our pleasure one of them depart:
Therefore, come you with us, and let him go.
[Exeunt all but the first Gentleman.
Re-enter Whitmore, with Suffolk's Body.
Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,
Until the queen, his mistress, bury it. 1
[Exit.
1 Gent. O, barbarous and bloody spectacle!
His body will I bear unto the king:
If he revenge it not, yet will his friends;
So will the queen, that living held him dear.
[Exit, with the Body.

Scene II. Blackheath.

Enter George Bevis and John Holland.
Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a thistle: they have been up these two days.
John. They have the more need to sleep now then.
Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade, the clothier, means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new nap upon it.
John. So he had need, for 'tis threadbare. Well, I say, it was never merry world in England, since gentlemen came up.
Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handicrafts-men.
John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.
Geo. Nay more; the king's council are no good workmen.
John. True; and yet it is said,—labor in thy vocation:
which is as much as to say,—let the magistrates be laboring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.
Geo. Thou hast hit it; for there's no better sign of a brave mind, than a hard hand.
John. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son,
the Tanner of Wingham.
Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies to make dog's leather of.
John. And Dick, the butcher.
Geo. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.
John. And Smith, the weaver.
Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun.
John. Come, come; let's fall in with them.

Drum. Enter Cade, Dick the Butcher, Smith the Weaver, and others in great numbers.
Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father,—
Dick. Or rather, of stealing a 'case of our hearings.
[Aside.
Cade. —For our enemies shall fall before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes,—Command silence. [Noise
Dick. Silence! 2
Cade. My father was a Mortimer,— Dick. He was an honest man, and a good bricklayer.
Cade. My mother a Plantagenet,—
Dick. I knew her well; she was a midwife.
[Aside.
1 A bezonian is a mean low person.— 2 A "case," i.e., a barrel.

Cade. My wife descended of the Lucies,— Dick. She was, indeed, a pedlar's daughter, and sold many laces.
[Aside.
Smith. But, now of late, not able to travel with her forced pack, she washes bucks here at home.
[Aside.
Cade. Therefore am I of an honorable house.
Dick. Ay, by my faith, the field is honorable;
and there was he born under a hedge; for his father had never a house, but the cage.
[Aside.
Cade. Valiant I am.
Smith. 'A must needs, for beggary is valiant.
[Aside.
Cade. I am able to endure much.
Dick. No question of that; for I have seen him whipped three market days together.
[Aside.
Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.
Smith. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is of proof. 3
Dick. But, methinks, he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt 't the hand for stealing of sheep.
[Aside.
Cade. Be brave then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be in England seven half-penny loaves sold for a penny: the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops; and I will make it felony, to drink small beer. All the realm shall be in common, and in Cheapside shall my palfrey go to grass. And, when I am king, (as king I will be)—
All. God save your majesty!
Cade. I think you, good people:—there shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me their lord.
Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.
Cade. Nay, that I mean to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say, the bee stings; but I say, 'tis the bee's wax, for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since. How now! who's there?
Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham.
Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write read, and cast account.
Cade. O monstrous!
Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.
Cade. Here's a villain!
Smith. He's a book in his pocket, with red letters in't.
Cade. Nay then, he is a conjurer.
Dick. Nay, he can make obligations, and write court-hand.
Cade. I am sorry for't: the man is a proper man, of mine honor; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die.—Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee:
what is thy name?
Clerk. Emmanuel.
Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters.—
'Twill go hard with you.
Cade. Let me alone.—Dost thou use to write thy name, or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?
Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up that I can write my name.
All. He hath confessed: away with him! he's a villain, and a traitor.

* Little places for harlots and vagabonds, set commonly in the market-place, were called cages.— 4 Bonds.
Cade. Away with him, I say! hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck.
[Exeunt some with the Clerk.

Enter MICHAEL.

Mich. Where's our general?
Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow.
Mich. Fly, fly, fly! sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.
Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down.
He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself: he is but a knight, is 'a!
Mich. No.
Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently.  [Knock'd.
[Some rise up.
[Enter Rook.

[Exeunt the two STAFFORDS and Forces.

Cade. And you, that love the commons, follow now show yourselves men; 'tis for liberty.
[Exeunt.

We will not leave one lord, one gentleman:
Spare none but such as go in clouted 3 shoon,
For they are thrity honest men, and such
As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.
Dick. They are all in order, and march towards us.
Cade. But then are we in order, when we are most out of order.

Come: march! forward!
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Another Part of Blackheath.

Alarums. The Two Parties enter, and fight, and both the Staffords are slain.

Enter Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford.
Dick. Here, sir.
Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen,
And thou behavest thyself as if thou hadst been in thine own slaughter-house: therefore thus will I reward thee,—The Lent shall be as long again as it is;
And thou shalt have a license to kill for a hundred 3 years, lacking one.
Dick. I desire no more.
Cade. And, to speak truth, thou deservest no less.
This monument of the victory will I bear; ['Putting on Stafford's armor.] and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse's heels, till I do come to London, where we will have the mayor's sword horne before us.
Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the jails, and let out the prisoners.
Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee.

Come; let's march towards London.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Henry, reading a Supplication; the Duke of Buckingham and Lord Say with him;
at a distance, Queen Margaret, mourning over Suffolk's Head.

Q. Mar. Oft have I heard that grief softens the mind,

And makes it fearful and degenereate;
Think, therefore, on revenge, and cease to weep.
But who can cease to weep, and look on this?
Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast;
But where's the body that I should embrace?
Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supplication?
K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop to extort;
For God forbid, so many simple souls
Should perish by the sword!
And I myself,
Rather than bloody war shall cut them short,
Will parley with Jack Cade their general.—
But stay, I'll read it over once again.
Q. Mar. Ah, barbarous villains! hath this lovely face

Rol'd like a wandering planet over me,
And could it not enforce them to relent,
That were unworthy to behold the same?
K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have thy head.

*  *  *
  "I pass not,
  I, O, I care not.
  Shoes."
Say. Ay, but I hope, your highness shall have his.
K. Hen. How now, madam! Lamenting still, and mourning Suffolk's death? I fear me, love, if that I had been dead, Thou wouldst not have mourn'd so much for me. Q. Mar. No, my love; I should not mourn, but die for thee.

Enter a Messenger.
K. Hen. How now! what news? why com'st thou in such haste?
Mess. The rebels are in Southwark: fly, my lord! Jack Cade proclaims himself lord Mortimer, Descended from the duke of Clarence's house, And calls your grace usurper openly, And vows to crown himself in Westminster. His army is a ragged multitude Of hinds and peasants, rude and merciless: Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death Hath given them heart and courage to proceed. All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen, They call false caterpillars, and intend their death. K. Hen. O graceless men! they know not what they do.
Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Kenilworth, Until a power be rais'd to put them down.
Q. Mar. Ah! were the duke of Suffolk now alive, These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd.
K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee, Therefore away with us to Kenilworth. Say. So might your grace's person be in danger. The sight of me is odious in their eyes; And therefore in this city will I stay, And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.
2 Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London-bridge: Fly and forsake their houses. [the citizens The rascal people, thirsting after prey, Join with the traitor; and they jointly swear, To spoil the city, and your royal court.
Buck. Then linger not, my lord: away, take horse.
K. Hen. Come, Margaret: God, our hope, will succor us.
Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceas'd.
K. Hen. Farewell, my lord: [To Lord Say.] trust not the Kentish rebels.
Buck. Trust no body, for fear you be betray'd.
Say. The trust I have in mine innocence, And therefore am I bold and resolute. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Same. The Tower.
Enter Lord Scales, and others, walking on the Walls. Then enter certain Citizens, below.
Scales. How now! is Jack Cade slain?
1 Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them. The lord mayor craves aid of your honor from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.
Scales. Such aid as I can spare, you shall command, But I am troubled here with them myself: The rebels have assuy'd to win the Tower. But get you to Smithfield, and gather head, And thither I will send you Matthew Gough. Fight for your king, your country, and your lives; And so farewell: rebellion never thrives. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Same. Cannon Street.
Enter Jack Cade, and his Followers. He strikes his Staff on London-stone.
Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, sitting upon London-stone, I charge and command, that, of the city's cost, the pissing-conduit run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now, henceforward, it shall be treason for any that calls me other than lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier, running.
Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!
Cade. Knock him down there. [They kill him.
Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call you Jack Cade more: I think, he hath a very fair warning.
Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.
Cade. Come then, let's go fight with them. But, first, go and set London-bridge on fire; and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Same. Smithfield.
Alarum. Enter, on one side, Cade, and his Company; on the other, the Citizens, and the King's Forces, headed by Matthew Gough. They fight; the Citizens are routed, and Matthew Gough is slain.
Cade. So, sirs.—Now go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of court: down with them all.
Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.
Cade. Be it a lordship, thou shalt have it for that word.
Dick. Only, that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.
John. Mass, 'twill be sore law, then; for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and 'tis not whole yet. [Aside.
Smith. Nay, John, it will be stinking law; for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese. [Aside.
Cade. I have thought upon it; it shall be so. Away! burn all the records of the realm: my mouth shall be the parliament of England.
John. Then we are like to have biting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out. [Aside.
Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter a Messenger.
Mess. My lord, a prize, a prize! here's the lord Say, which sold the towns in France; he that made us pay one and twenty fifteens, and one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy.

Enter George Bevis, with the Lord Say.
Cade. Well, he shall be beleaguered for it ten times. —Ah, thou say, thou serge, nay, thou buckram lord! now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction regal. What causeth thou answer to my majesty, for giving up of Normandy unto monsieur Bassimeau, the dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee by these presents, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the reason that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar-school; and whereas, before, our fore-fathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used; and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun, and a verb, and such abominable words as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer: moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and because they could not read, thou hast hanged 'them; when, indeed, only for that cause they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride in a 4-footch, dost thou not?

Sey. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men theretb than thou go in their hose and doublets.

Dick. And work in their shirt too; as myself, for example, that am a butcher.

Sey. You men of Kent. —

Dick. What say you of Kent?

Sey. Nothing but this: 'tis bona terra, mala gens.

Cade. Away with him! away with him! he speaks Latin. [will.

Sey. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you Kent, in the commentaries Caesar writ,
Is term'd the civil'st place of all this isle:
Sweet is the country, because full of riches;
The people liberal, valiant, active, active,
Which makes me hope you are not void of pity.
I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy; Yet, to recover them, would lose my life.
Justice with favor have I always done;
Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could never.
When I have urg'd extorted at your hands,
Kent, to maintain the king, the realm, and you! Large gifts I have bestow'd on learned clerks,
Because my book preferr'd me to the king:
And, seeing ignorance is the curse of Knowledge, the wise wherein he have wings to heaven,
Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits,
You cannot but forbear to murder me.
This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings
For your behalf.

Cade. Tut! when struck'st thou one blow in the field? [struck

Sey. Great men have reaching hands: oft have I
Those that I never saw, and struck them dead.
Geo. O monstrous coward! what? to come behind forks? [good.

Sey. The cheeks are pale for watching for your Cade. Give him a box o' the ear, and that will make 'em red again.

Sey. Long sitting, to determine poor men's causes,
Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

Cade. Ye shall have a hemeau caudle, then, and the 2 help of hatchet.

Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man?

Geo. The palsy, and not fear, provoketh me.

Cade. Nay, he nods at us; as who should say, I'll be even with you. I'll see if his head will stand steadier on a pole, or no. Take him away, and behold him.

Sey. Tell me, wherein have I offended most?
Have I affected wealth, or honor; speak!
Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold?
Is my apparel sumptuous to behold?
Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death?
These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding,
This breast from harboring foul deceitful thoughts.
O, let me live!

Cade. I feel remorse in myself with his words; but I'll bridle it: he shall die, an he but for pleading so well for his life—Away with him! he has a familiar under his tongue: he speaks not o'

That is, they were hanged because they could not claim the benefit of clergy. — A foot-chawl was a kind of housing which covered the body of the horse. — "Guilty blood-shedding," i. e., shedding innocent blood. — "A familiar," i. e., a demon who was supposed to attend at call.

God's name. Go, take him away, I say, and strike off his head presently; and then break into his son-in-law's house, sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both upon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done. [prayers,

Sey. Ah, countrymen! if when you make your God should be so obdurate as yourselves,
How would it fare with your departed souls?
And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye. [Exeunt some with Lord Say.

The poorest proud in the realm shall not wear a head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute: there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her maidenhead, ere they have it. Men shall hold of me in capite; and we charge and command, that their wives be as free as heart can wish, or tongue can tell.

Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheapside, and take up commodities upon our bills?

Cade. Marry, presently.

All. O brave!

Re-enter Rebels, with the Heads of Lord Say and his Son-in-law.

Cade. But is not this braver?—Let them kiss one another, for they loved well, when they were alive. [Josef them together.] Now part them again, lest they consult about the giving up of some more towns in France. Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night: for with these borne before us, instead of maces, will we ride through the streets; and at every corner have them kiss. —Away! [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Southwark.

Aleram. Enter Cade, and all his Rabblement.

Cade. Up Fish-street! down Saint Magnus' corner! kill and knock down! throw them into Thames! — [A Parley sounded, then a Retreat.] What noise is this I hear! Dare any be so bold to sound retreat or parley, when I command them kill?

Enter BUCKINGHAM and Old CLIFFORD, with Forces. Buck. Ay, here they be that dare, and will disturb them.

Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king Unto the commons whom thou hast misled; And here pronounce free pardon to them all, That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

Clif. What say ye, countrymen? will ye repent,
And yield to mercy, whilst 'tis offer'd you,
Or let a rebel lead you to your deaths?
Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon, Fling up his cap, and say—God save his majesty! Who hates him, and honors not his father,
Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by.

All. God save the king! God save the king!

Cade. What! Buckingham, and Clifford, are ye so brave? —And you, base peasants, do ye believe him? will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks? Hath my sword therefore broke through London Gates, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark? I thought ye would never have given out these arms, till you had recovered your ancient freedom; but you are all recreants, and dastards, and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your buck's with burdens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces. For me,—I will make shift for one; and so—God's curse 'light upon you all!

All. We'll follow Cade: we'll follow Cade.
SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE X. — Enters Cade. Enter a Messenger. Enter a Messenger. Mess. Please it your grace to be advertised, The duke of York is newly come from Ireland, And with a puissant, and united power Of Gallowglasses, and stout Irish kerns, Is marching hitherward in proud array; And still doth proclaim, as he goes along, His arms are only to remove from thee The duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor. K. Hen. Thus stands my state, ’twixt Cade and York distress'd, Like to a ship, that, having scap'd a tempest, Is straightway calm'd, and boarded with a pirate. But now, the Cade driven back, his men dispers'd, And now is York in arms to second him. I pray thee, Buckingham, 3 then go and meet him, And ask him, what's the reason of these arms? Tell him, I'll send duke Edmund to the Tower; — And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither, Until his army be dismiss'd from him. Som. My lord, I'll yield myself to prison willingly, Or unto thee, to do my country good. K. Hen. In any case, he be not too rough in terms, For he is fierce, and cannot break hard language. Buck. I will, my lord; and doubt not so to deal, As all things shall redound unto your good. K. Hen. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better; For yet may England curse my wretched reign. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Kensilworth Castle. Rain Trumpets. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, and Somerset, on the Terrace of the Castle. K. Hen. Was ever king that joy'd an earthly throne, And could command no more content than I? No sooner was I crept out of my cradle, But I was made a king, at nine months old: Was never subject long'd to be a king, As I do long and wish to be a subject. Enter Buckingham and Clifford. Buck. Health, and glad tidings, to your majesty! K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor, Cade, surpris'd? Or is he but retir'd to make him strong? Enter, below, a number of Cade's Followers, with Halter about their Necks. Clif. He's fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield, And humbly thus, with halters on their necks, Expect your highness' doom, of life, or death. K. Hen. Then, heaven, set one thy everlasting gates, To entertain my vows of thanks and praise! — Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives, And show'd how well you love your prince and country, Continue still in this so good a mind, [try: And Henry, though he be unfortunate, Assure yourselves, he will never be unkind: And so, with thanks, and pardon to you all, I do dismiss you to your several countries. All. God save the king! God save the king! *The kerns and Gallowglasses were two orders of foot soldiers attached to the Irish army. "But now," i.e., after this change. —A sallet is a kind of helmet.
In't is not enough, to break into my garden,
And like a thief to come to rob my grounds,
Climbing my walls in spite of me, the owner,
But now wilt thou brave me with these wanton terms?
Cade. Brave thee? ay, by the best blood that ever was broached, and heard thee too. Look on me well: I have eat no meat these five days; yet, come thou and try four men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door nail, I pray God I may ever eat grass more.

Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England
That Alexander Iden, a squire of Kent, [stands,
Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man.
Oppose thy steadfast-gazing eyes to mine;
See if thou canst outface me with thy looks.
Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
Thy leg a stick, compared with this truncheon:
My fist shall fight with all the strength thou hast;
And if mine arm be heaved in the air,
Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth.
As for words, whose greatness answers words,
Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

Cade. By my valor, the most complete champion that ever I heard.—Steel, if thou turn the edge, or cut not with the hurry-boned claw in chines of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove on my knees, thou mayst be turned to hobnails. [They fight. Cade falls.] O! I am slain. Famine, and no other, hath slain me: let ten thousand devils come against me, and give me but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because the unconquered soul of Cade is fled.

Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?
Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead:
Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
To shew the honor that thy master got.

Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory.
Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and exhort all the world to be cowards; for I,
that never feared any, am vanquished by famine,
not by valor. [Dies.
Iden. How much thou wrong'st me, heaven be my judge;
Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare thee!
And as I thrust thy body with my sword,
So wish I, I might thrust soul to hell.
Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave,
And there cut off thy most ungracious head;
Which I will bear in triumph to the king,
Leaving thy trunk for crowns to feed upon.
[Exit, dragging out the body.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. 3 The Fields between Dartford and Blackheath.

The King's Camp on one side: on the other, enter
York, attended, with Drum and Colors: his Irish
Forces at some distance.

York. From Ireland thus comes York, to claim his right,

* "How much thou wrong'st me," I. e., by undervaluing
my prowess.

And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:
King, bells, blood; burn, bonfires, clear and bright,
To entertain great England's lawful king.

art, sancta mater! who would not buy thee dear?
Let them obey, that know not how to rule;
This hand was made to handle nought but gold:
I cannot give due action to my words,
Except a sword, or sceptre, balance b it.
A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul,
On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter Buckingham.

Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb me?
The king hath sent him, sure: I must disseindle.

Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee well. [greeting.
York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy
Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?
Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dear liege,
To know the reason of these arms in peace;
Or why, thou—being a subject as I am,—
Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn,
Shoul'dst raise so great a power without his leave,
Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.

York. Scarcely can I speak, my choler is so great.
[Aside,
O! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint,
I am so angry at these abject terms;
And now, like Ajax Telamonius,
On sheep or oxen could I spend my fury.
I am far better born than is the King:
More like a king, more kindly in my thoughts:
But I must make fair weather yet a while,
Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.—
O Buckingham, I pr'ythee, pardon me,
That I have given no answer all this while:
My mind was troubled with deep melancholy.
The cause why I have brought this army hither,
Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
Seditious to his grace, and to the state.

Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part;
But if thy arms be to no other end,
The king hath yielded unto thy demand:
The duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

York. Upon thine honor, is he prisoner?
Buck. Upon mine honor, he is prisoner.

York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers.—
Soldiers, I thank you all; disperse yourselves:
Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field,
You shall have pay, and every thing you wish.
And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,
Command my eldest son,—nay, all my sons,
As pledges of my fealty and love;
I'll send them all, as willing as I live:
Lands, goods, horse, armor, any thing I have
Is his to use, so Somerset may die.

Buck. York, I commend this kind submission:
We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter King Henry, attended.
K. Hen. Buckingham, doth York intend no harm
That thus be marcheth with thee arm in arm? [to us,
York. In all submission and humility,
York doth present himself unto your highness.

K. Hen. Then what intend these forces thou dost bring?
York. To heave the traitor Somerset from hence;
And fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter Iden, with Cade's Head.

Iden. If one so rude, and of so mean condition,

b "Balance it," i. e., balance my hand.
May pass into the presence of a king.
Lo! I present your grace a traitor's head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.

K. Hen. The head of Cade!—Great God, how
Just art thou!—
O! let me view his visage being dead,
That living wrought me much exceeding trouble.
Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him?
Iden. I was, not like your Majesty. [degree
K. Hen. How art thou call'd, and what is thy Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name;
A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.

But. So please it you, my lord, 'twere not amiss,
He were created knight for his good service.

K. Hen. Iden, kneel down: [He kneels.] Rise up a knight.
We give thee for reward a thousand marks;
And will, that thou henceforth attend on us.

Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty,
And never live but true unto his liege. [the queen:
K. Hen. See, Buckingham! Somerset comes with Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

Enter Queen MARGARET and SOMERSET.
Q. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head,
But boldly stand, and front him to his face.

Yor. How now! is Somerset at liberty?
Then, York, unslee thy long imprison'd thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?—
False king, why hast thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardy I can brook abuse?
King did I call thee? no, thou art not king;
Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
Which dar'st not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor.
That head of thine doth not become a crown;
Thy hand is made to grasp a Palmer's staff,
And not to grace an awful principality.
That gold must round engirt these brows of mine;
Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear, Is able with the change to kill and cure.
Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up,
And with the same to set controlling laws.
Give place; by heaven, thou shalt rule no more
O'er him whom heaven created for thy ruler.

Som. O monstrous traitor!—I arrest thee, York,
Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown.
Obey, audacious traitor: kneel for grace. [of these,
York. Wouldst have me kneel? first let me ask
If they can break I bow a knee to man?
Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail;

[Exit an Attendant.
I know, ere they will have me go to ward,
They'll paven their swords for my enfranchisement.

Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford; bid him come anon.
To say, if that the bastard boys of York
Shall be the surety for their traitor father.
York. O blood-bespotted and Neapsonian,
Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge,
The sons of York, thy better's in their birth,
Shall be their father's bail; and bane to those
That for my surety will refuse the boys.

Enter Edward and Richard Plantagenet, with Forces, at one side; at the other, with Forces also, old Clifford and his Son.

See where they come: I'll warrant they'll make it
good.

Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deth their Cliff. Health and all happiness to my lord the king!

[Knells.

Yor. I thank thee, Clifford! say, what news with Nay, do not fright us with an angry look: [thee?
We are thy sovereign, Clifford; kneel again;
For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee.

Cliff. This is my king, York: I do not mistake;
But thou mistak'st me much, to think I do,—
To bedlam with him! is the man grown mad?

K. Hen. Ay, Clifford; a bedlam and ambitious burnt.
Makes him oppose himself against his king.

Cliff. He is a traitor: let him to the Tower,
And chop away that factious pate of his.
Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey;
His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.

York. Will you not, sons?
Est. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve.
Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall.

Cliff. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here!
York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so;
I am thy king, and thou a false-hearted traitor.
Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,
That with the very shaking of their chains
They may astonish these 'tis-long-looking maidens;
Bid Salisbury, and Warwick, come to me.

Drums. Enter Warwick and Salisbury, with Forces.

Cliff. Are these thy bears? we'll bate thy bears to
And manacle the bearward in their chains, [death,
If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting-place.

Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweaning cur
Run back and bite, because he was withheld;
Who, having suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,
Hath chopp'd his tail between his legs, and cry'd:
And smelt a piece of service will you do,
If you oppress yourselves to match lord Warwick.

Cliff. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump,
As crooked in thy manners as thy shape!

York. Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly anon.

Cliff. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn yourself.

[bow?

K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hath thy kneeforgot to Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son!
What, wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,
And seek for sorrow with thy spectators?
O! where is faith? O! where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbor in the earth?
Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,
And shame thine honorable age with blood?
Why art thou old, and want'st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,
That bows unto the grave with mickle age.

Sal. My lord, I have consider'd with myself
The title of this most renowned duke;
And in my conscience do repute his grace
The rightful heir to England's royal seat.

K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?
Sal. I have. [an oath?

K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven for such
Sal. It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath.
Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity.
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for this wrong;

* Custody; confinement.
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

Q. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself. [Exit,

York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou
I am resolv'd for death, or do this.

Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreams prove true.

War. You were best to go to bed, and dream again,
To keep thee from the tempest of the field.

Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm,
Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;
And that I'll write upon thy burqonet,
Might I but know thee by thy household badge.
War. Now, by my father's badge, old Nevil's crest,
The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff,
This day I'll wear aloft my burqonet,
(As on a mountain-top the cedar shows,
That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm)
Even to affright thee with the view thereof.

Clif. And from thy burqonet I'll rend thy bear,
And tread it underfoot with all contempt,
Devote the bear-ward that protects the bear.

Y. Clif. And so to arms, victorious father,
To quell the rebels, and their 'complices.

Rich. Fie! charity! for shame! speak not in spite,
For you shall sup with Jesus Christ to-night.

Y. Clif. Foul 'stigmatic, that's more than thou canst tell.

Rich. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell. [Exit severely.

SCENE II.—Saint Albans.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Warwick.

War. Clifford of Cumberland! 'tis Warwick calls;
And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,
Now, when the angry trumpet sounds alarm,
And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,
Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me!

Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.

Enter York.

How now, my noble lord! what, all a-foot?

York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed;
But match to match I have encounter'd him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows
Even of the bony beast he lov'd so well.

Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of us the time is come.
York. Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other
For I myself must hunt this deer to death. [Exit,

Clif. War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou
As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day, [fightst.
It grieves my soul to leave thee unarmed.

[Exit Warwick.

Clif. What seest thou in me, York? why dost thou pause?
York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy. [esteem,

Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and
But that 'tis shown ignobly, and in treason.
York. So let it help me now against thy sword,
As I in justice and true right express it.

Clif. My soul and body on the action both!—
York. A dreadful lay!—address thee instantly.
Clif. La fin corrompe les œuvres. [They fight, and Clifford falls and dies.
York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art sail.
Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will! [Exit.

Enter young Clifford.

Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout:
Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O war! thou son of hell,
Whom angry heavens do make their minister,
Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
Hot coals of vengeance!—Let no soldier fly:
He that is truly dedicate to war,
Hath no self-love; nor he, that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valor.—! let the vile world end,
[Seeing his Father's body.
And the premier flames of the last day
Kost earth and heaven together.
Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities and petty sounds
To cease!—Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,
To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve
The silver livery of advised age,
And, in thy reverence, and thy chair-days, thus
To die in rural battle!—Even at this sight,
My heart is turn'd to stone; and while 'tis mine,
It shall be stony, York not our old men spares;
No more will I their babes: tears virginal
Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
And Beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax.
Henceforth I will not have to do with pity:
Meet I an enemy of the house of York,
Into as many gobbets will I cut it,
As wild Medea young Absyrtus did:
In cruelty will I seek out my fame.
Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house;
[Taking up the Body.
As did Æneas old Anchises bear,
So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders;
But then, Æneas bare a living load,
Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine.
[Exit.

Enter Richard Plantagenet and Somerset, fighting:
SOMERSET is slain.

Rich. So, lie thou there:—
For, underneath an alchouse' paltry sign,
The Castle in Saint Albans, Somerset
Hath made the wizard famous in his death.
Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be watfulful:
Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill.
[Exit.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, and others, flying.

Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow; for shame, avay! [garet, stay.

K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens? good Mar:
Q. Mar. What are you made of? you'll not fight,
Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
[Our fly:
To give the enemy way; and to secure us
By what we can, which can no more but fly.

[Alarums after off.
If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom
Of all our fortunes: but if we hapy scape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We shall to London yet; where you are lord,
And where this branch, now in our fortunes made,
May readily be stopp'd.

Enter young Clifford.

Y. Clif. But that my heart's on future mischief set,
I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly;
But fly you must: incurable discomfit
Reigns in the hearts of all our present *parts.

* A burqonet is a helmet. —  Stigmatic," I. e., one on whom nature has set a mark of deformity, a stigma. — * A dreadful lay," I. e., a tremendous stroke.

482 SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI. ACT V.
Away, for your relief; and we will live
To see their day, and them our fortune give.
Away, my lord, away! [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Fields near Saint Albans.

Alarum: Retreat. Flourish; then enter York,
Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, and Soldiers, with Drum and Colors.

York. 'Old Salisbury, who can report of him?
That winter lion, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions and all bruise of time,
And, like a gallant in the bloom of youth,
Repairs him with occasion?

This happy day
Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.

Rich. My noble father,
Three times to-day I holp him to his horse
Three times bestrid him; thrice I led him off,
Persuaded him from any farther act:
But still, where danger was, still there I met him;
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body.

"Bestrid him," i. e., defended him when fallen by striding over him.

Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day;
By the mass, so did we all.—I thank you, Richard:
God knows how long it is I have to live,
And it hath pleas'd him, that three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death.—
Well, lords, we have not got that which we have:
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repairing nature.

York. I know our safety is to follow them;
For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,
To call a present court of parliament:
Let us pursue him, ere the writs go forth.—
What says lord Warwick? shall we after them?

War. After them? nay, before them, if we can.
Now, by my hand, lords, 'twas a glorious day:
Saint Albans' battle, won by famous York,
Shall be eterniz'd in all age to come.—
Sound, drums and trumpets!—and to London all;
And more such days as these to us befall! [Exeunt.

bThat is, 'We have not secured that which we have acquired.'—b'That is, 'Being enemies that are likely so soon to rally, and recover themselves from this defeat.'

ACT I.

Drums. Some Soldiers of York's party break in.

Then, enter the Duke of York, Edward, Richard, Norfolk, Montague, Warwick, and others, with white Roses in their Hats.

War. I wonder how the king escap'd our hands.
York. While we pursued the horsemen of the north,
He sily stole away, and left his men:
Whereat the great lord of Northumberland,
Whose warlike ears could never brook retreat,
Cheer'd up the drooping army; and himself,
Lord Clifford, and lord Stafford, all a-breast,
Charg'd our main battle's front, and, breaking in,
Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.
Edw. Lord Stafford's father, duke of Buckingham, is either slain, or wounded dangerously:
I cleft his beaver with a downright blow;
That this is true, father, behold his blood.
[Showing his bloody Sword.
Mont. And, brother, here's the earl of Wiltshire's blood,
[To York, showing his.
SCENE I.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

485

Whom I encounter'd as the battles joined.

Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did.

[Throwing down the Duke of Somerset's Head.

York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons. —

But, is your grace dead, my lord of Somerset?

Norf. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt!

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake king Henry's head.

And I do it, for he shall no more sit upon the piece of York.

Before I see thee seated in that throne,

Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,

I vow by heaven these eyes shall never close.

This is the palace of the fearful king,

And this the regal seat: possess it, York;

For this is thine, and not king Henry's heirs'.

York. Assist me, then, sweet Warwick, and I will;

For either we have broken in by force.

Norf. We'll all assist you: he, that flies, shall die.

York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk. — Stay me by, my lords:

And, soldiers, stay, and lodge by me this night.

War. And, when the king comes, offer him no violence,

Unless he seek to thrust you out by force.

[They retire.

York. The queen this day here holds her parliament,

But little thinks we shall be of her council.

By words or blows here let us win our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.

War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd,

Unless Plantagenet, duke of York, be king,

And bashful Henry depos'd, whose cowardice

Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute,

I mean to take possession of my right.

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,

The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,

Dark sitter of the throne, misbeliever of his bells,

I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares.

Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English crown.

[Warwick leads York to the Throne, who seats himself.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmoreland, Exeter, and others, with red Roses in their Hats.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits,

Even in the chair of state! belike, he means,

Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer,

To aspire unto the crown, and reign as king.

Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father;

And thine, lord Clifford: thou hast vow'd revenge

On him, his sons, his favorites, and his friends.

North. If I be not, heavens be reveng'd on me!

Cliff. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel.

[down:

West. What! shall we suffer this? let's pluck him

My heart for anger burns; it cannot brook.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle earl of Westmoreland.

Cliff. Patience is for poltroons, such as he:

He durst not sit there had thy father liv'd.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament

Let us assault the family of York.

North. Well hast thou spoken, cousin: be it so.

K. Hen. Ah! know you not, the city favors them,

And they have troops of soldiers at their beck?

Exe. But when the duke is slain, they'll quickly fly.

K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,

To make a shambles of the parliament-house!

Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats,

[They advance to the Duke.

Thou factions duke of York, descend my throne,

And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet:

I am thy sovereign.

York. I am thine.

Exe. For shame! come down: he made thee duke

York. 'Twas by my oaths of love, as the cardiom was.

Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown.

War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown

In following this usurping Henry.

Cliff. Whom should he follow, but his natural king?

War. True, Clifford; that is Richard, duke of York.

K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne?

York. It must and shall be so. Content thyself.

War. Be duke of Lancaster: let him be king.

West. He is both king and duke of Lancaster;

And that the lord of Westmoreland shall maintain.

War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget,

That we are those which clax'd you from the field,

And slew your fathers, and with colors spread

March'd through the city to the palace gates.

North. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;

And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.

West. Plantagenet, of thee, and these thy sons,

Thy kinsmen, and thy friends, I'll have more lives,

Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.

Cliff. Urge it no more; lest that instead of words

I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger.

As shall revenge his death before I stir.

[threats.

War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless York.

Will you, we show our title to the crown?

If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.

K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?

Thy father was, as thou art, duke of York;

Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, earl of March.

I am the son of Henry the fifth,

Who made the Dauphin and the French to stoop,

And seiz'd upon their towns and provinces.

War. Talk not of France, b sith thou hast lost it all.

K. Hen. The lord protector lost it, and not I:

When I was crown'd, I was but nine months old.

Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks,

you look

Father, to the crown from the usurper's head.

Edw. Sweet father, do so: set it on your head,

Mont. Good brother, [To York.] as thou lov'st

And honor'st arms,

Let's fight it out, and not stand caving thus.

Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king

York. Sons, peace!

[will fly.

K. Hen. Peace thou, and give king Henry leave to speak.

War. Plantagenet shall speak first: hear him, lords;

And be you silent and attentive too.

For he that intercepts him shall not live.

[throne,

K. Hen. Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly

Wherein my grandsire, and my father, sat?

No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;

Ay, and their colors—often born in France,

And now in England, to our heart's great sorrow,—

Shall be my winding sheet. — Why faint you, lords?

My title's good, and better far than his.

War. Prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.

K. Hen. Henry the fourth by conquest got the crown.

York. 'Twas by rebellion against his king.

K. Hen. I know not what to say: my title's weak.

[Aside.

Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?

[Since.
York. What then?

K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king;
For Richard, in the view of many lords,
Resign'd the crown to Henry the fourth,
Whose heir my father was, and I am his.
York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,
And made him to resign his crown perforce.
War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstraining'd,
Think you, 'twere prejudicial to his crown?
Exe. No; for he could not so resign his crown,
But that the next heir should succeed and reign.
K. Hen. Art thou, then, Lord Exeter?
Exe. He is the right, and therefore pardon me.
York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?
Exe. My conscience tells me he is lawful king,
K. Hen. All will revolt from me, and turn to him.
North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,
Think not, that Henry shall be so depose'd.
War. Depose'd he shall be in despite of all.
North. Thou art deceiv'd: 'tis not thy southern
Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent, [power,
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,
Can set the duke up in despite of me.
Clif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall knee to him that slew my father!
K. Hen. O Clifford, love not my wounds in my heart!
York. Henry of Lancaster, resign 1 my crown.—
What matter you, or what conspire you, lords?
War. Do right unto this princely duke of York,
Or I will fill the house with armed men,
And, 'er the chair of state, where now he sits,
Write up his title with ramping blood,
Clif. And the Soldiers from themselves.
K. Hen. My Lord of Warwick, hear me but one
Let me for this my life-time reign as king. [word.
York. Confirm the crown to me, and to mine heirs,
And thou shalt reign in quiet while thou liv'st.
K. Hen. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,
Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.
Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?
War. What good is this to England, and himself?
West. Base, fealous, and despairsing Henry!
Clif. How thou hast injur'd both thyself and us!
West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.
North. Nor I.
Clif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.
West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king,
In whose cold blood no spark of honor bides.
North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,
And die in bands for this unmanly deed!
Clif. In dreadful war may'st thou be overcome,
Or live in peace, abandon'd, and despis'd!
[Exeunt Northumberland, Clifford, and Westmoreland.
War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not.
Exe. They seek revenge, and therefore will not
War. Why should you sigh, my lord?
K. Hen. Not for myself, lord Warwick, but my son,
Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.
But be it as it may, I here entail
The crown to thee, and to thine heirs for ever;
[To York.
Conditionally, that here thou take an oath
To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,
To honor me as thy king and sovereign;
And neither by treason, nor hostility,
To seek to put me down, and reign thyself.

* * *
York. This oath I willingly take, and will perform.
[Coming from the Throne.
War. Long live king Henry,—Plantagenet, embrace him.
[sons.
K. Hen. And long live thou, and these thy forefathers
York. Now York and Lancaster are reconcil'd.
Exe. Accurs'd be he, that seeks to make them foes!
[Senex.
The Lords come forward.
York. Farewell, my gracious lord: I'll to my castle.
War. And I'll keep London with my soldiers.
Norf. And I to Norfolk with my followers.
[Exeunt York, and his Sons, Warwick, Norfjolk, Montague, Soldiers, and Attendants.
K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow, to the court.
Enter Queen Margaret and the Prince of Wales.
Exe. Here comes the queen, whose looks draw her anger:
I'll steal away.
K. Hen. Exeter, so will I.
[Going.
Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me; I will follow thee.
K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay.
Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremest?
Ah, wretched man! would I had died a while ago,
And never seen thee, never borne thee son,
Seeing thou hast prov'd so unnatural a father!
Hath he deserv'd to lose his birthright thus?
Had'st thou but lov'd him half so well as I,
Or felt that pain which I did for him once,
Or nourish'd him, as I did with my blood,
Thou would'st have left thy dearest heart-blood there,
Rather than have made that savage duke thine heir,
And disinherited thine only son.
Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me.
If you be king, why should not I succeed!
[son:
K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet
The earl of Warwick, and the duke, enforce'd me.
Q. Mar. Enforce'd thee! art thou king, and wilt be forc'd?
I shame to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch!
Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me,
And given unto the house of York such head,
As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance.
*T'entail him and his heirs unto the crown,
What is it, but to make thy sepulchre,
And enslave it for ever before thy time is come!
Warwick is chancellor, and the lord of Calisia;
Stern Faulconbridge commands the narrow seas;
The duke is made protector of the realm;
And yet shalt thou be safe? such safety finds
The trembling lamb, environed with wolves.
Had I been but wise, and but a woman,
The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes,
Before I would have granted to that act:
But thou prince'st thy life before thine honor;
And seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself,
Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,
Until that act of parliament be repeal'd,
Whereby my son is disinherit'd.
The northern lords, that have forewarn'd thy colors,
Will follow mine, if once they see them spread;
And soldiers they shall be, to thy foul disgrace,
And utter ruin of the house of York.
Thus do I leave thee.—Come, son, let's away:
Our army is ready; come, we'll after them.
K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak.
Q. Mar. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone.
K. Hen. Go, gentle Edward, thou wilt stay with me?
Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.
Prince. When I return with victory from the field,

* Sandal Castle, in Yorkshire.—Betray.
I'll see your grace; till then, I'll follow her.

Q. Mar. Come, son; away! we may not linger thus.

[Exeunt Queen Margaret, and the Prince.]

K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me, and to her son,
Hath made her break out into terms of rage.
Reven'g may she be on that hateful duke,
Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire,
Will cost my crown, and like an empty eagle
Tire on the flesh of me, and of my son!
The loss of those three lords torments my heart:
I'll write unto them, and entreat them fair.
Come, cousin; you shall be the messenger.

Exeunt. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield.

Enter Edward, Richard, and Montague.

Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.
Edw. No; I can better play the orator.
Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter York.

York. Why, how now, sons, and brother! at a strife!
What is your quarrel? how began it first?
Edw. No quarrel, but a slight contention.
York. About what?

Rich. About that which concerns your grace, and
The crown of England, father, which is yours.
Rich. Your right depends not on his life, or death.
Edw. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now:
By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,
It will outrun you, father, in the end.
York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign.
Edw. But for a kingdom any oath may be broken:
I would break a thousand oaths to reign one year.
Rich. No; God forbid, your grace should be for York. I shall be, if I claim by open war. [sworn.
Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak.
York. Thou canst not, son: it is impossible.
Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took
Before a true and lawful magistrate,
That hath authority over him that swears:
Henry had none, but did usurp the place;
Then, seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,
Your true and lawful lord, is vain and frivolous.
Therefore, to arms! And, father, do but think,
How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown,
Within whose circuit is Elysium,
And all that poets reign of bliss and joy.
Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest,
Until the white rose, that I wear, be dyed
Even in the lake warm blood of Henry's heart.
York. Richard, enough: I will be king, or—
Brother, thou shalt to London presently,
And whet on Warwick to this enterprise.—
Thou, Richard, shalt to the duke of Norfolk,
And tell him privily of our intent.—
You, Edward, shall unto my lord Cobham,
With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise:
In the strings: for they are true souls.

Witty, courteous, liberal, full of spirit.—
While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more,
But that I seek occasion how to rise,
And yet the king not privy to my drift,
Nor any of the house of Lancaster?

* * * * *

Enter a Messenger.

But, stay.—What news? Why com'st thou in such post?

Larrys.

Mess. The queen, with all the northern earls and Intends here to besiege you in your castle.
She is hard by with twenty thousand men,
And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.
York. Ay, with my sword. What, think'st thou,
That we fear them?—
Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me:
My brother Montague shall post to London.
Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
Whom we have left protectors of the king,
With powerful policy strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his oats.
Mont. Brother, I go: I'll win them, fear it not:
And thus most humbly I do take my leave.

Exeunt Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer.

York. Sir John, and sir Hugh Mortimer, mine
You are come to Sandal in a happy hour; [uncles,
The army of the queen mean to besiege us.
Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.
A woman's general; what should we fear?

[March after off.

Edw. I hear their drums: let's see these men in order,
And issue forth, and bid them battle straight. [great.
York. Five men to twenty!—though the odds be
I doubt not, uncle, of our victory.
Many a battle have I won in France,
When as the enemy hath been ten to one:
Why should I now not have the like success?
[Arrarm. Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Plains near Sandal Castle.

Alarums; Excursions. Enter Rutland, and his Tutor.

Rut. Ah! whither shall I fly to 'scape their hands?
Ah, tutor! look, where bloody Clifford comes.

Enter Clifford, and Soldiers.

Clif. Chaplain, away: thy priesthood saves thy life.
As for the brat of this accursed duke,
Whose father slew my father, he shall die.
Tut. And I, my lord, will bear him company.
Clif. Soldiers, away with him.
Tut. Ah, Clifford! murder not this innocent child,
Lest thou be hated both of God and man.
[Exeunt, forced by Soldiers.

Clif. How now! is he dead already? Or, is it fear,
That makes him close his eyes?—it open them.

Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch
That trembles under his devouring paws:
And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey,
And so he comes to rend his limbs asunder.—
Ah, gentle Clifford! kill me with thy sword,
And not with such a cruel threatening look.
Sweet Clifford! hear me speak before I die:
I am too mean a subject for thy wrath;
Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.

Clif. In vain thou speakest, poor boy: my father's blood[enter.
Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should
Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again:
He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him.
Clif. Had I thy brethren here, their lives, and thine,
Were not revenge sufficient for me.
No! if I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,

* "Tire," i.e., feed. "That is, Northumberland, Westmoreland, and Clifford. — "Witty," i.e. of sound judgment.

4 "Whose father," i.e., the father of which brat, namely, the Duke of York."
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.
The sight of any of the house of York
Is as a fury to torment my soul;
And till I root out their accursed line,
And leave not one alive, I live in hell.

Therefore—

Rut. O! let me pray before I take my death.—
To thee I pray: sweet Clifford, pity me!
Clif. Such pity as my rapier's point affords.
Rut. I never did thee harm: why wilt thou slay me?
Clif. Thy father hath.
Rut. But 'twas ere I was born.
Thou hast one son, for his sake pity me,
Lost, in revenge thereof, 6 sith God is just,
He be as miserably slain as I.
Ah! let me live in prison all my days,
And when I give occasion of offence,
Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.
Clif. No cause?
Thy father slew my father: therefore, die.

[Clifford stabs him.

Rut. Diti faciant, laudis summa sit ictsa be twe! [Dies.

Clif. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet!
And this thy son's blood cleaving to my blade,
Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood
Congeal'd with this do make me wipe off both.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same.

Alarums. Enter York.

York. The army of the queen hath got the field:
My 2 uncles both are slain in rescuing me;
And all my followers to the eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lambs purs'd by hunger-starved wolves.
My sons—God knows, what hath bechanc'd them,
But this I know—thou hast demean'd themselfe
Like men born to renown by life or death.
Three times did Richard make a lane to me,
And thrice cried,—"Courage, fathers! fight it out!"
And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With purple fashion, painted to the hilt
In blood of those that had encounter'd him:
And when the hardiest warriors did retire, Richard cried,—"Charge! and give no foot of ground!"
And cried,—"Prest, crown, or else a gloriose tomb!
A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!"
With this, we charg'd again; but, out alas!
We bloody'd again: as I have seen a swan
With bloodless labor swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.

[A short Alarum within.

Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue,
And I am faint, and cannot fly their fury;
And, were I strong, I would not shun their fury.
The sands are number'd that make up my life;
Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

Enter Queen MARGARET, CLIFFORD, NORTHUMBERland, and Soldiers.

Come, bloody Clifford,—rough Northumberland,—
I dare your quenchless fury to more rage.
I am your butt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clif. Ay, to such mercy, as his ruthless arm
With dawrright payment show'd unto my father.

Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,
And made an evening at the noon-tide 'crown.'
York. My showers, as the phoenix, may bring forth
A bird that will revenge upon you all:
And in that hope I throw mine eyes to heaven,
Scouring what'er you can afflight with me.
Why come you not?—what! multitudes, and fear?
Clif. So cowards fight when they can fly no farther;
So doves peck the falcon's piercing talons;
So desperate thieves, all helpless of their lives,
Breathe out invective 'gainst the officers.
York. O, Clifford! but behold the once again,
And in thy thought o'er-run my former time;
And, if thou canst for blushing, view this face,
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with cowardice,
Whose frown hath made thee faint and fly ere this.
Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word,
But backle with thee blows, twice two for one.

Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand
I would have thee live the traitor's life. — [causes
Wrath makes him deaf: speak thou, Northumberland.

North. Hold, Clifford! do not honor him so much
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart:
What valor were it, when a curb doth grin,
For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his heel away?
It is war's prize to tuko all vantages,
And ten to one is no impeach of valor.

[They lay hands on York, who struggles.

Clif. Ay, ay; so strives the woodcock with the gin.

North. So doth the coney struggle in the net.

[York is taken prisoner.

York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty?
So true men yield, with robbers so o'er-mach't.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northumberland, come, make him stand upon this mohlich here,
That 'raught at mountains with outstretched arms,
Yet purled but the shadow with his hand. —
What? was it you, that would be England's king?
Was't you that revel'd in our parliament,
And made a preachment of your high descent?
Where are your mess of sons to back you now,
The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?
And where's that valiant crook-backed prodigy,
Dicky your boy, that, with his humming voice,
Was wont to cheer his dad in matters great? or,
With the rest, where is your darling Rutland?
Look, York: I stai'd this napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford with his rapier's point
Made issue from the besom of the boy;
And, if thine eyes can water for his death,
I give this thee to dry thy cheeks withal.

[Throwing it.

Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament my miserable state.
I prythee, grieve to make me merry, York:
What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?
Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad;
And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.
Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.
Thou would'st be fe'd, I see, to make me sport:
York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown.—
A crown for York!—and, lords, bow low to him.
Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on.—

[Putting a paper Crown on his Head.

*That is, the moon tide point on the disk. — "Rauth," i. e., reached. — *Handkerchief.
Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king.
Ay, this is he that took king Henry's chair; and this is he was his adopted heir.—
But how is it, that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?
As I thinketh, ye should not be king,
Till our king Henry had shook hands with death.
And will you a pale your head in Henry's glory,
As his palpable kingship? Now in his life, against your holy oath?
O! 'tis a fault too, too unpardonable.—
Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head!
And whilst we breathe take time to b do him dead.
Cliff. That is my office for my father's sake.
Q. Mar. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he makes.
York. She-wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France;
Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth,
How ill-beseeing is it in thy sex,
To triumph, like an Amazonian trull,
Upon their woes whom fortune captivates?
But that thy face is, visor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush:
To tell thee whence thou can'st, of whom deriv'd,
Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.
Thy father bears the t type of king of Naples,
Of both the Sicils, and Jerusalem,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.
Hadst that poor monarch taught thee to insult?
It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud queen;
Unless the adage must be verified,
That beggars mounted run their horse to death.
'Tis beauty that doth oft make women proud;
But, God he knows, thy share thereof is small.
'Tis virtue that doth make them most admired.
The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at.
'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes thee abominable.
Thou art as opposite to every good,
As the Antipodes are unto us,
Or as the south to the septentrion.
O, tiger's heart, wrapp'd in a woman's Hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child,
To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,
And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible:
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.
Bid'st thou me rage? why, now thou hast thy wish:
Would'st have me weep? why, now thou hast thy For raging wind blows up incessant showers, I'll weep;
And, when the rage allays, the rain begins.
These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies,
And every drop cries vengeance for his death,
'Gainst thee, fell Clifford, and thee, false Frenchwoman.
North. Beshrew me, but his passions move me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.
York. That face of his
The hungry cannibals would not have touch'd;
Would not have stain'd t the rose's lustes with blood:
But you are more inhuman, more inexorable,
O! ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth thou dipp'dst in blood of my sweet boy,
And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this;
And if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
Upon my soul, the heavens will shed tears;
Yea, even my foes will shed first-falling tears,
And say,—"Alas! it was a pitious deed."—
There, take the crown, and with the crown my curse;
And in thy need much comfort come to thee,
As now I reap at thy too cruel hand:
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world!
My soul do heaven, my blood upon your heads!
North. Had he been slaughter-man to all my kin,
I should not, for my life, but weep with him,
To see how only sorrow grieves his soul. [bedlam?
Q. Mar. What! weeping-ripe, my lord Northum-
Think but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.
Cliff. Here's for my oath; here's for my father's death.
[Stabbing him.
Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king.
[Stabbing him.
York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God! My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee.
[Dies.
Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York.
So York may overlook the town of York.
[Flourish. Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Plain near Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire.

A March. Enter Edward and Richard, with their Power.

Edw. I wonder, how our princely father 'scap'd;
Or whether he be 'scap'd away in his
From Clifford's and Northumberland's pursuit.
Had he been ta'en, we should have heard the news;
Had he been slain, we should have heard the news;
Or had he 'scap'd, methinks, we should have heard
The happy tidings of his good escape.—
How fares my brother? why is he so sad?

Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right of father shall become.
I saw him in the battle rage about
And watch'd him how he singled Clifford forth.
Methought, he bore him in the thickest troop,
As doth a lion in a herd of e n e n t:
Or as a bear encompass'd round with dogs,
Who having pinch'd a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloof, and bark at him.
So far'd our father with his enemies;
So fled his enemies my warlike father;
Methinks, 'tis prize enough to be his son.
See, how the morning opens her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun:
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trimm'd like a younger, pranc'ing to his love!

Edw. What! why, he open'st his eyes, or do see three suns?

Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.
See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league inviolable:
Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun!
In this the heavens figure some event.

a "Bore him," i. e., demoned himself. — "A herd of e n e n t," i. e., of want cattle, cows, oxen, &c. — Aurora takes for a time her farewell of the sun, when she damasses him to his diurnal course. — "This circumstance is mentioned by the historians Hall and Holinshed." — "The racking clouds," i. e., the clouds in rapid tumultuary motion.
Edw. 'Tis wondrous strange! the like yet never I think, it cites us, brother, to the field. [heard of. That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet, Each one already blazing by our ^meads, Should, notwithstanding, join our lights together, And over-shine the earth, as this the world. Whate'er it bodes, henceforward will I bear Upon my target three fair shining stars. [Speak it; Rich. Nay, bear three daughters: by your leave I You love the breeder better than the male.

Enter a Messenger in haste.

But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Mess. Ah! one that was a woful looker on, When as the noble duke of York was slain, Your princely father, and my loving lord.

Rich. Say, how he died, for I will hear it all.

Mess. Environed he was with many foes; And stood against them, as the hope of Troy Against the Greeks, that would have enter'd Troy. But Hercules himself must yield to odds; And many strokes, though with a little axe, Hew down, and fell the hardest-timmer'd oak. By many hands your father was subdued; But only slaughter'd by the irrefr [Continue].

Edw. Sweet duke of York! our prop to lean upon, Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay. O Clifford! boisterous Clifford! thou hast slain The flower of Europe for his chivalry; And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him, For hand to hand he would have vanquish'd thee this day. Now, my soul's prince is become a prey; All that he loved shall break from henceforth, This my body Mighty in the ground be closed up in rest, For never henceforth shall I joy again; Never, O never, shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep, for all my body's moisture Scurce serves to quench my furnace-burning heart; Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burden, For selfsame wind, then I should speak withal, as sighing close that her love by last, And burn me up with flames that tears would quench. To weep is to make less the depth of grief. Tears, then, for babies; blows, and revenge, for me!—

Rich. I bear thy name; I'll venge thy death, Or die renowned by attempting it. [Thee.

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with His dauphin and his chair with me to keep.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird, Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun: For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom say; Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter Warwick and Montague, with their Army.

War. How now, fair lords! What face? what news abroad?

Rich. Great lord of Warwick, if we should recount Our baleful news, and at each word's deliverance, Stub poniesides in our flesh till all were told, The words would add more anguish than the wounds. O, valiant lord! the duke of York is slain.

Edw. O, Warwick! Warwick! that Plantagenet, Which held thee dearly as his soul's redemption, Is by the stern lord Clifford done to death.

War. Ten days ago I drown'd these news in tears; And now, to add more measure to your woes, Come I to tell you things 'twix the fallen. After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought, Where your brave father breath'd his last gasp, Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run, Were brought me of your loss, and his depaunt. I, then in London, keeper of the king, Muster'd my soldiers, gather'd flockes of friends, March'd towards Saint Albans to intercept the queen, Bearing the king in my behalf along: For by my scouts I was advertised, That she was coming with a full intent To dash our late decree in parliament, Touching king Henry's oath, and your succession. Short tale to make,—we at Saint Albans met; Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely fought; But, when 'twas made to the coldness of the king, Who look'd all gentleness on his warlike queen, That robb'd my soldiers of their heated spleen, Or whether 'twas report of her success, Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigor, Who thunders to his captives blood and death, I cannot judge; but, to conclude with truth, Their weapons like to lightning came and went: Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight, Or like a lazy thrower with a fail, Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends. I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause, With promise of high pay, and great rewards, But all in vain; they had no heart to fight, And we in them no hope to win the day; So that we fled the king unto the queen. Lord George your brother, Norfolk, and myself, In haste, post-haste, are come to join with you; For in the marches here, we heard, you were, Making another head to fight again. [wrick?

Edw. Where is the duke of Norfolk, gentle War? And when came George from Burgund into England? War. Some six miles off the duke is with the And for your brother, he was lately sent [soldiers; From old aunt, duchess of Burgundy, With aid of soldiers to this needful war. [And.

Rich. 'Twas odds, belike, when valiant Warwick Oft have I heard his praises in pursuit, But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire.

War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou hear For thou shalt know, this strong right hand of mine Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head, And wring the awful sceptre from his rift, Were he as famous, and as bold in war, As he is fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer.

Rich. I know it well, lord Warwick; blame me not: 'Tis love, I bear thy glories, makes me speak. But in this troublous time what's to be done? Shall we go throw away our coats of steel, And wrap our bodies in black mourning gowns, Number our Ave-Maries with our beads? Or shall we on the helmets of our faces Tell our devotion with revengeful arms? If for the last, say—Ay, and to it, lords. [Out,

War. Wily, therefore Warwick came to seek you And therefore comes my brother Montague. Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen, With Clifford, and the haught Northumberland, And of their feather many more proud birds, Scene II. before York.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Queen Margaret, the Prince of Wales, Clifford, and Northumberland, with Drums and Trumpets.

Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of Yonder's head of that arch-enemy, York, that sought to be encompass'd with your crown; Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord? K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that bear their wreck. To see this sight, it fills my very soul—Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault; Not witthoutly have I infringing my vow. Cliff. My gracious liege, this too much lenity And harmful pity, must be laid aside. To whom do lions cast their genteel looks? Not to the beast that would usurp their den. Whose hand is that the forest bear doth lick? Not his that spoils her young before her face. Who 'scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting? Not he that sets his foot upon her back. The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on; And doves will peck in safeguard of their brood. And York did level at a nest, Thou smiling, while he knit his angry brows: He, but a duke, would have his son a king, And raise his issue like a loving sire;

* * * It sorts,* 1 c., it falls out right; things are as they should be.

Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son, Didst yield consent to disinherit him, Which argued thee a most unloving father. Unreasonable creatures feed their young; And though man's face be fearful to their eyes, Yet, in protection of their tender ones, Who hath not seen them, even with those wings Which sometime they have us'd to an fearful flight, Make war with us, and say they would draw to their nest. Offering their own lives in their young's defence? For shame, my liege! make them your precedent. Wore it not pity, that this goodly boy Should lose his birthright by his father's fault, And long hereafter say unto his child,— "What my great-grandfather and grand sire got, My careless father 'snoted away!" Ali! what a shame were this. Look on the boy; And let his manly face, which promiseth Successful fortune, steel thy melting heart To hold thine own, and leave thine own with him. K. Hen. Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator, Inferring arguments of mighty force. But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear, That things ill got, and had a hard access? And happy always was it for that son, Whose father for his horrid going to 'scull? I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind, And would my father had left me no more; For all the rest is held at such a rate, As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep, Than in possession any jot of pleasure. Ah, cousin York! 'twould be the best friends did know, How it doth grieve me that thy head is here! Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits; our foes are nigh, And this soft carriage makes your followers faint. You promised knighthood to our forward son: Unsheath your sword, and dub him presently.— Edward, kneel down. K. Hen. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight; And learn this lesson.—Draw thy sword in right. Prince. My gracious father, by thy kingly leave, I'll draw it as apparent to the crown, And in that quarrel use it to the death. Cliff. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince. Enter a Messenger. Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness: For, with a band of thirty thousand men, Comes Warwick, backing the duke of York; And, in the towns, they do march along, Proclaims him king, and many fly to him. Darraign your battle, for they are at hand. Cliff. I would, your highness would depart the field: The queen hath best success when you are absent. Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord, and leave us to our fortune. [I'll stay. K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore North. Be it with resolution, then, to fight. Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords, And hearten those that fight in your defence. Unsheath your sword, good father: cry, "Saint George!" March. Enter Edward, George, Richard, Warwick, Norfolk, Montague, and Soldiers. Edw. Now, perjurd' Henry, wilt thou kneel for And set thy diadem upon my head, [greece, 1 Foolishly.—The king quotes two proverbs; the one— "Ill-gotten goods never prosper;" the other— "Happy the child whose father went to the devil." This last he must be supposed to use interrogatively, as disputing the truth of it:— 2 Was it always happy for that son? & c. This interpretation sets the king's reasoning right.— Darraign your battle! i.e., arrange your order of battle.
To make this shameless scallat know herself.—
Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,
Although thy husband may be a Menelaus;
And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother wrong'd
By that false woman, as this king by thee.
His father revell'd in the heart of France,
And tum'd the king, and made the Dauphin stoop;
And, had he match'd according to his state,
He might have kept that glory to this day;
But, when he took a beggar to his bed,
And Grace thy poor sire with his bridal day,
Even then that sunshine brew'd a shower for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd sedition on his crown at home.
For what hath broach'd this tumult, but thy pride?
Hadst thou been meek, our title still had slept,
And we, in pity of the gentle king,
Had slip'd our claim until another age. [spring,
Geo. But when we saw our sunshine made thy
And that thy summer bred us no increase,
We set the axe to thy usurping root:
And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,
Yet, know thou, since we have begun to strike,
We'll never leave, till we have hewn thee down, Or had the growing with our hands the bloods.
Edw. And in this resolution I defy thee:
Not willing any longer conference,
Since thou deni'dst the gentle king to speak.—
Sound trumpets!—let our bloody colors wave,
And either victory, or a welcome grave.
Edw. No, wronging woman; we'll no longer stay;
These words will cost ten thousand lives to-day.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Field of Battle near Towton.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Warwick.

War. 1 Forspent with toil, as runners with a race,
I lay me down a little while to breathe;
For strokes receiv'd, and many blows repay'd,
Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,
And, spite of spirits, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter Edward, running.

Edw. Smile, gentle heaven, or strike, ungentle death,
For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.
War. How now, my lord! what hap? what hope of good?

Enter George.

Geo. Our hap is loss, our hope but sad despair:
Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us.
What counsel give you? whither shall we fly?

Edw. Bootless is flight; they follow us with wings,
And wea press we are, and cannot slink pursuit.

Enter Richard.

Rich. Ah, Warwick! why hast thou withdrawn thyself?
Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Brosch'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance;
And, in the very pangs of death he cried,
Like to a dismal clangor heard from afar,
"Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!"
So, underneath the bellies of their steeds,
That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
The true gentleman gave up the ghost. [blood:

I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

SCENE V.

Why stand we like soft-hearted women here, Wailing our losses, whiles the foe doth rage, And look up, as if the tragedy Were play'd in jest by counterfeiting actors? Here on my knee I vow to God above, [Kneeling. I'll never pause again, never stand still, Till either death last clos'd these eyes of mine, Or fortune given me measure of revenge.

Edw. O Warwick! I do bend my knee with thine; [Kneeling. And in this vow do chain my soul to thine. And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face, I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee, Thou sett'ler up and plucker down of kings; Beseeching thee,—if with thy will it stands, That to my foes this body must be prey, Yet that thy banner great of heaven may ope, And give sweet passage to my sinful soul. [Rising.

Now, lords, take leave until we meet again, Where'er it be, in heaven, or in earth. [Warwick, Rich. Broth'r, give me thy hand;—and, gentle Let me embrace thee in my weary arms. I, that did never weep, now melt with woe, That winter should cut off our spring-time so. War. Away, away! Once more, sweet lords, farewell. Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops, And give them leave to fly that will not stay, And call them pillars that will stand to us; And if we thrive promise them such rewards As victors wore at the Olympic games.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts; For yet is hope of life, and victory. [Exeunt. [Exeunt.}

SCENE IV.—The Same. Another Part of the Field.

Excursions. Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone. Suppose, this arm is for the duke of York, And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge, Wert thou envious'd with a brazen wall. Cliff. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone. This is the hand that stabb'd thy father York, And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland; And this the hand that seizes on their death, And cheereth these hands, that slew thy sire and brother, To execute the like upon thyself: And so, have at thee. [They fight. Warwick enters; Clifford flies. Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase; For I myself will hunt this wolf to death. [Exeunt. [Exeunt.}

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter King Henry.

K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning's war, When dying clouds contend with growing light; What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails, Can neither call it perfect day, nor night. Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea. Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind: Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea. Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind: Sometimes, the flood prevails; and then, the wind; Now, one the better, then, another best; Both tagging to be victors, breast to breast, Yet neither conqueror, nor conquer'd: So is the equal poise of this fell war. Here, on this molehill, will I sit me down. To whom God will, there be the victory; For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too, Have chid me from the battle, swearing both, They prosper best of all when I am thence. I would be dead! if God's good will were so; For what is in this world but grief and wo? O God! methinks, it was a happy life,— To be no better than a homely swain; To sit upon a hill, as I do now, To carve out dignities point by point, Thereby to see the minutes how they run: How many make the hour full complete, How many hours bring about the day, How many days will finish up the year, How many years a mortal man may live. When this is known, then to divide the times: So many hours must I tend my flock; So many hours must I take my rest; So many hours must I contemplate; So many hours must I sport myself; So many days my eyes have been with young; So many weeks ere the poor fools will yeat; So many months ere I shall shear the fleece: So minutes, hours, days, months, and years, Pass'd over to the end they were created, Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely! Gives not the Hawthorn bush a sweeter shade To shepherds looking on their silly sheep, Than doth a rich embroidered canopy To kings that fear their subjects' treachery? O! yes it doth; a thousand fold it doth. And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely curds, His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle, His wanted sleep under a fresh tree's shade, All which secure and sweetly he enjoys, Is far beyond a prince's delicates, His viands sparkling in a golden cup, His body couched in a curious bed, When care, mistrust, and treason wait on him. Alarum. Enter a Son that hath kill'd his Father, with the dead Body.

Son. Ill blows the wind that profits no body. This man whom hand to hand I slew in fight, May be possess'd with some of his own crowns; And I, that haply take them from him now, May yet ere night yield both my life and them To some man else, as this dead man to me. Who's this?—O God! it is my father's face, Whom in this conflict I unwares have kill'd. O heavy times, begetting such events! From London my queen, and Clifford, was I press'd forth; My father, being the earl of Warwick's man, Came on the part of York, press'd by his master; And I, who at his hands receiv'd my life, Have by my hands of life bereaved him. Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did; And pardon, father, for I knew not thee. My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks, And no recorded word shall their fill. K. Hen. O pitious spectacle! O bloody times! Whiles lions war and battle for their dens, Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity. Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee, tear for tear; And let our hearts, and eyes, like civil war, Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd with grief. Enter a Father, who has kill'd his Son, "bearing the Body. Fath. Thou that so stantly last resisted me,
Third Part of King Henry VI.

ACT II.

SCENE VI.—The Same.

A loud Alarm. Enter Clifford, wounded.

Cliff. Here burns my candle out; ay, here it dies, Which, while it lasted, gave king Henry light. O, Lancaster! I fear thy overthrow,

More than my body's parting with my soul. My love, and fear, gashed many friends to thee;
And now I fill thy tough conmexcites melt,

Impairing Henry, strengthening mis-proud York. The common people swarm like summer flies;

And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun? And who shins now but Henry's enemies? O Phebus! hadst thou never given consent

That Philetus should check thy fiery steeds,

Thy burning car never had search'd the earth; And, Henry, hast thou sway'd as kings should do,

Or as thy father, and his father, did,

Giving no ground unto the house of York,

They never, then, had sprung like summer flies; I, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,

Had left no mourning widows for our death; And thou this day hadst kept thy chair in peace: For what doth cherish woes but gentle air? And what makes robbers bold but too much fealty? Bootless are plaints, and careless are my wounds.

No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight: The foe is merciless, and will not pity; For at their hands I have deserv'd no pity.

The air hath got into my deadly wounds, And much effuse of blood doth make me faint. —

Come, York, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest: I stabb'd your fathers' bosoms, split my breast.

[He faints.

Edw. Now breathe we, lords: good fortune bids us pause,

And smooth the frowns of war with peaceful looks. —

Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen,
That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a still, fill'd with a fretting gust,

Command an argosy to stem the waves. But think you, lords, that Clifford fled with them? War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape; For, though before his face I speak the words,

Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave, And whereas'er he is, he's surely dead.

[Clifford groans.

Rich. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave?
A deadly groan, like life and death's departing: See who it is.

Edw. And, now the battle's ended, If friend, or foe, let him be gently used.

[Clifford dies. Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy; for 'tis Clifford; Who not contented that he lopp'd the branch
In hewing Rutland when he leaves put forth, But set his murdering knife unto the root From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring; I mean, our princely father, duke of York. [Head. War. From off the gates of York fetch down the Your father's head, which Clifford placed there; Instead whereof, let this supply the room: Measure of measure must be answered.

Edw. Bring forth that fatal screech-owl to our house, That nothing sung but death to us and ours: Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound, And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.

[Soldiers bring the body forward. ||

delating is used here for separation.

---

War. I think his understanding is bereft.—
Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee?—
Dark cloudy death o'ershades his beams of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears us, what we say.
Rich. O, would he did! and so, perhaps, he doth:
'Tis but his policy to counterfeit,
Because he would avoid such bitter taunts
Which in the time of death lie in our father.
Geo. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.
Rich. Clifford! ask mercy, and obtain no grace.
[They pull him to and fro.
Edw. Clifford! repent in bootless penitence.
War. Clifford! devise excuses for thy faults.
Geo. While we devise fell torts for thy faults.
Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.
Edw. Thou striving Rutland; I will pity thee.
Geo. Where's captain Margaret to fonce thou now?—
War. They mock thee, Clifford; swear as thou wast wont.
[goes hard,
Rich. What! not an oath! may then, the world
When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath.—
I know by that, he's dead; and, by my soul,
If this right hand would buy two such a life,
That I in all despite might rail at him, [blood
This hand should chop it off; and with the issuing
Stifle the villain, whose untaunted thrist
York and young Rutland could not satisfy.
War. Ay, but he's dead. Off with the traitor's head,
And rear it in the place your father's stands.
And now to London with triumphant march,
There to be crowned England's royal king;
From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to France,
And ask the lady Bonn for thy queen.
So shalt thou sinew both these lands together;
And having France thy friend, thou shalt not need
The scatter'd foe that hopes to rise again;
For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
Yet look to have them buzz, 'tis off thine ears.
First, will I see the coronation,
And then to Brittany I'll cross the sea,
To effect this marriage, so please my lord.
Edw. Even as thou wili, sweet Warwick, let it be;
For in thy shoulder do I build my seat,
And never will I undertake the thing,
Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.
Richard, I will create thee duke of Gloster;
And George, of Clarence.—Warwick, as ourself,
Shall do, and undo, as he pleases best.
[ever,
Rich. Let me be duke of Clarence, George of Gloster.
For Gloster's dukedom is too ominous.
War. Tut! that's a foolish observation:
Richard, be duke of Gloster. Now to London,
To see these honors in possession.
[Exeunt.

ACT III.

Enter Two Keepers, with Cross-bows in their Hands.

K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was A man at least, for less I should not be;
[born to
And men may talk of kings, and why not?
2 Keep. Ay, but thou talk'st as if thou wert a king.
K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind; and that's enough.
2 Keep. But, 'tis thou be a king, where is thy crown?
K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my head;
Not deck'd with diamonds, and Indian stones,
Nor to be seen; my crown is call'd, content;
A crown it is, that seldom kings enjoy.
2 Keep. Well, if you be a king crown'd with content,
Your crown is content, and you, must be contented
To go along with us; for, as we think
You are the king, king Edward hath despoil'd;
And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,
Will apprehend you as his enemy.
[Exeunt.

K. Hen. But did you never swear, and break an 2 Keep. No, never such an oath; nor will now.

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.
K. Hen. Where did you dwell when I was king of England?
2 Keep. Here in this country, where we now remain,
K. Hen. I was anointed king at nine months old,
My father and my grandfather, were kings,
And you were sworn true subjects unto me;
And tell me, then, have you not broke your oaths?
1 Keep. No;
For we were subjects, but while you were king.
K. Hen. Why, am I dead? do I not breathe a man?
Ah, simple men! you know not what you swear.
Look, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commaled always by the greater gust,
Such is the lightness of you common men.
But do not break your oaths; for of that sin
My mild entreaty shall not make you guilty.
Go where you will, the king shall be commanded,
And be you kings; command, and I'll obey.
1 Keep. We are true subjects to the king, king Edward.
K. Hen. So would you be again to Henry,
If he were seated as king Edward is. [king's]
1 Keep. We charge you, in God's name, and in the
To go with us unto the officers.
K. Hen. In God's name, lead; your king's name be obey'd;
And what God will, that let your king perform;
And what he will, I humbly yield unto. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter King Edward, in state, crowned, Gloster, Clarence, and Lady Grey.

K. Edw. Brother of Gloster, at Saint Albans' field
This lady's husband, sir John Grey, was slain,
His land then seiz'd on by the conqueror:
Her suit is now to repose those lands,
Which we in justice cannot well deny,
Because in quarrel of the house of York
The worthy gentleman did lose his life.

Glo. Your highness shall do well, to grant her suit;
It were dishonor to deny it her.

K. Edw. Were no less; but yet I'll make a pause.

Glo. Yea; is it so? [Aside.
I see, the lady hath a thing to grant,
Before the king will grant her humble suit.

Clar. He knows the game: how true he keeps the wind!

K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our mind.

L. Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay:
Mey it please your highness to resolve me now,
And what your pleasure is shall satisfy me. [lands,

Glo. Ay, widow? then I'll warrant you all your
An if what pleases him shall please you,
Fight closer, or, good faith, you'll catch a blow.

Clar. I fear her not, unless she chance to fall. [Aside.

Glo. God forbid that, for he'll take vantages. [Aside.

Clar. I think, he means to beg a child of her.

Glo. Nay then, whip me; he'll rather give her two. [Aside.

L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.

Glo. You shall have four, if you'll be rul'd by him. [Aside.

K. Edw. 'Twere pity, they should lose their father's lands.

L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then.

K. Edw. Lords, give us leave: I'll try this widow's wit.
[Aside, give.

Glo. Ay, good leave have you; for you will have Till youth take leave, and leave you to the crutch.

[Gloster and Clarence stand back.

K. Edw. Now tell me, madam, do you love your children?

L. Grey. Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.

K. Edw. And would you not do much, to do them good?

L. Grey. To do them good I would sustain some
K. Edw. Then, get your husband's lands to do them good.

L. Grey. Therefore I came unto your majesty.

K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got.

L. Grey. So shall you bind me to your highness's service?

K. Edw. What service wilt thou do me, if I give
L. Grey. What you command, that rests in me to do.
K. Edw. But you will take exceptions to my boon.

L. Grey. No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.

K. Edw. Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to ask.

L. Grey. Why then, I will do what your grace commands.

Glo. He plies her hard; and much rain wears the marble.

[Aside.

Clar. As red as fire! any then, her wax must melt.

[Aside.

L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?

K. Edw. An easy task: 'tis but to love a king.

L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject.

[Aside, give thee.

K. Edw. Why then, thy husband's lands I freely
L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand thanks.

Glo. The match is made: she seals it with a curt'sy.

[Aside.

K. Edw. But stay thee; 'tis the fruits of love I mean.

L. Grey. The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.

K. Edw. Ay, but I fear me, in another sense.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?

L. Grey. My love till death; my humble thanks, my prayers:

That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants.

K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.

[you did.

L. Grey. Why then, you mean not as I thought
K. Edw. But now you partly may perceive my mind.

L. Grey. My mind will never grant what I perceive
Your highness aims at, if I aim aright.

K. Edw. To tell thou plain, I am to lie with thee.
L. Grey. To tell you plain, I had rather lie in prison.
K. Edw. Why then, thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

[do.

L. Grey. Why then, mine honesty shall be my
For by that loss I will not purchase them.

K. Edw. Therein thou wrong'st thy children mightily.

L. Grey. But in my highness wrongs both them
But, mighty lord, this merry inclination
[and me, Accords not with the sadness of my suit;
Please you dismiss me, either with nay, or no.

K. Edw. Ay, if thou wilt say nay, to my request; *

*Seriousness.
No, if thou dost say no, to my demand.
L. Grey. Then, so, my lord. My suit is at an end.
Glo. The widow likes him not, she knits her brows.
[Aside.
Clar. He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom.
[Aside.
K. Edw. Her looks do argue her replite with modesty.
Her words do show her wit incomparable;
All her perfections challenge sovereignty:
One way, or other, she is for a king,
And she shall be my love, or else my queen.—
Say, that king Edward take thee for his queen?
L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious
I am a subject fit to jest withal;
But far unmeet to be a soverain with thee,
I speak no more than what my soul intends;
And that, is to enjoy thee for my love.
L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto.
I know, I am too mean to be your queen,
And yet too good to be your concubine.
K. Edw. You cavil, widow: I did mean, my queen.
L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious;
I am a subject fit to jest withal;
But far unmeet to be a soverain with thee,
I speak no more than what my soul intends;
And that, is to enjoy thee for my love.

And yet too good to be your concubine.

But far unmeet to be a soverain with thee,
I speak no more than what my soul intends;
And that, is to enjoy thee for my love.
L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto.
Where kings command. I was, I must confess,
Great Albion's queen in former golden days;
But now mischance hath trod my title down,
And with dishonor laid me on the ground,
Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,
And to my humble seat conform myself.

K. Lew. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair? [tears,
Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with
And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.
K. Lew. Whatever it be, be thou still like thyself,
And sit thee by our side; yield not thy neck
[Seats her by kin.]
To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind
Still ride in triumph over all mischance.
Be plain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief.

Q. Mar. Those gracious words revive my drooping thoughts,
And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave to speak.
Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,
That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
Is of a king a banish'd man.
And forced to live in Scotland tall forlorn;
While proud ambitious Edward, duke of York,
Usurps the regal title, and the seat
Of England's true-annointed lawful king.
This is the cause, that I, poor Margaret,
With this my son, prince Edward, Henry's heir,
Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
And if thou fail us all our hope is done.
Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
Our people and our peers are both misled,
Our treasure seiz'd, our soldiers put to flight,
And, as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight.

K. Lew. Renown'd queen, with patience calm the storm,
While we both think a means to break it off. [see,
Q. Mar. The more we stay, the stronger grows our
K. Lew. The more I stay, the more I'll succor thee.
Q. Mar. O! but impatience waiteth on true sorrow:
And see where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter Warwick, attended.
K. Lew. What's he, approacheth boldly to our presence? [friend
Q. Mar. Who is that Earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest
K. Lew. Welcome, brave Warwick. What brings thee to France?
[He descends. Queen MARGARET rises.
Q. Mar. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;
For this is he that moves both wind and tide.
War. From worthy Edward, king of Albion,
My lord and sovereign, and thy vouch'd friend,
I come in kindness, and undisguised love.
First, to do greetings to thy royal person,
And, then, to crave a league of amity;
And, lastly, to confirm that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
That virtuous lady Bona, thy fair sister,
To England's king in lawful marriage.
Q. Mar. If that go forward, Henry's hope is done.
War. And, gracious madam, [To Bona.] in our king's behalf,
I am commanded, with your leave and favor,
Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Whereof, late entering at his headful ears,
 Hath plac'd thy beauty's image, and thy virtue.
Q. Mar. King Lewis, and lady Bona, hear me
Before you answer Warwick. His demand I speak,
Springs not from Edward's well-mean'd honest love,
But from deceit, bred by necessity;
For how can tyrants safely govern home,
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?
To prove him tyrant this reason may suffice,—
That Henry liveth still; but were he dead,
Yet here prince Edward stands, king Henry's son.
Look therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage,
 Thou draw not on thee danger and dishonor;
For though usurpers sway the rule awhile,
Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs.
War. Injurious Margaret!
Prince.
And why not queen?
War. Because thy father Henry did usurp,
And thou no more art prince than she is queen.
Oxf. Then, Warwick disannuls great John of Gaunt,
Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain;
And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the fourth,
Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;
And after that wise prince, Henry the fifth,
Who by his prowess conquered all France;
From these our Henry lineally descends.
War. Oxford, how hap's it, in this smooth discourse,
You told not, how Henry the sixth hath lost
All that which Henry the fifth had gotten?
Methinks, these peers of France should smile at that.
But for the rest,—you tell a pedigree
Of threescore and two years; a silly time
To make prescription for a kingdom's worth.
Oxf. Why, Warwick, cast thou speak against thy liege,
Whom thou obeyedst thirty and six years,
And not 2 betray thy treason with a blush?
War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree?
For shame! leave Henry, and call Edward king.
Oxf. Call him my king, by whose injurious doom
My elder brother, the lord Aubrey Vere,
Was done to death! and more than so, my father,
Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years,
When nature brought him to the door of death?
No, Warwick, no; while life upholdeth this arm,
This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.
War. And I the house of York.
[Oxford,
K. Lew. Margaret, prince Edward, and Vouchsafe at our request to stand aside,
While I use further conference with Warwick.
Q. Mar. Heaven grant, that Warwick's words be with him not!
[They stand apart.
K. Lew. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,
Is Edward your true king? for I were loath,
To link with him that were not lawful chosen.
War. Thereon I pawn my credit, and mine honor.
K. Lew. But is he gracious in the people's eye?
War. The more, that Henry was 3 unfortunate.
K. Lew. Then farther, all dissembling set aside,
Tell me for truth the measure of his love
Unto our sister Bona.
War.
Such it seems,
As may beseem a monarch like himself.
Myself have often heard him say, and swear,
That this his love was an eternal 'plant;
Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground,
The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun,
Exempt from envy, but not from disdain,
Unless the lady Bona quit his pain.
K. Lew. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve.
Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine.
Scene III.

Third Part of King Henry VI.

Yet confess; [To War.] that often are this day,
When have heard thy king's desert recompenced,
Mine own heart tempts judgment to desire.

K. Lew. Then, Warwick, thus:—our sister shall be Edward's;
And of forthwith shall articles be drawn
Touching the jointure that thy king must make,
Which with her dowry shall be counterpoist. —
Draw near, queen Margaret, and be a witness,
That this shall be the will to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king.
Q. Mar. Decentful Warwick! it was thy device
By this alliance to make void my suit:
Before thy coming, Lewis was Henry's friend.

K. Lew. And still is friend to him and Margaret:
But if thy title to the crown be weak,
As may appear by Edward's good success,
Then 'tis but reason, that I be releas'd.

From giving aid which late I promised,
Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand,
That your estate requires, and mine can yield.

War. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his ease,
Where having nothing, nothing can be lose.
And as for you, yourself, our quondam queen,
You have a father able man to elect,
And better were you troubled him than France.

Q. Mar. Peace, incumbent and shameless War-
 Proud setter-up and puller-down of kings, — [wrick! I

Will not hence, till with my talk and tears,
Both full of truth, I make King Lewis behold
Thy sly conveyance, and thy lord's false love;
For both of you are birds of selfsame feather.

K. Lew. Warwick, this is some post to us, or thee.

Enter the Post. Post. My lord ambassador, these letters are for you.

Sent from your brother, marquess Montague.—
These from our king unto your majesty.

And, madam, these for you; from whom I know not.
[They all read their letters.

Oxf. I like it well, that our fair queen and mistress
Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his.

Prince. Nay, mark how Lewis stamps as he were he Hope all's for the best.

K. Lew. Warwick, what are thy news? and yours, fair queen?

Joy.

Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhoped
War. Mine, full of sorrow and heart's discontent.

K. Lew. What! has your king married the lady
And now, to soothe your forgery and his,
[Gray, Seals me a paper to persuade me patience?
Is this th' alliance that he seeks with France?
Dare he presume to scorn us in this manner?

Q. Mar. I told your majesty as much before:
This proveth Edward's love, and Warwick's honesty.

War. King Lewis, I here protest, in sight of heaven,
And by the hope I have of heavenly bliss,
That I can clear from this misdeed of Edward's;
No more my king, for he dishonors me,
But most himself, if he could see his shame.
Did I forget, that by the house of York
My father came uninvited to his death?
Did I let pass th' abuse done to my niece?
Did I impale him with the regal crown?
Did I put Henry from his native right,
And am I guevlon'd at the but with shame?

This is ironical; the poverty of Margaret's father being a frequent topic of reproach. — "Thy sly conveyance," i. e., thy crafty artifices. — The abuse alluded to was an attempt by Edward to violate the chastity of Warwick's niece. — Rewarded.

Shame on himself, for my desert is honor:
And to repair my honor lost for him,
I here renounce him, and return to Henry.

My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
And henceforth I am thy true servitor.

K. Lew. Warwick, these words have turn'd my heart to love:
And I forget, quite forget old faults,
And joy that thou becom'st king Henry's friend.
War. So much his friend, ay, his unfielid friend,
That if King Lewis, now safe, to furnish us
With some few bands of chosen soldiers,
I'll undertake to land them on our coast,
And force the tyrant from his seat by war.

Tis not his new-made bride shall succor him:
And as for Clarence, as my letters tell me,
He's very likely now to fall from him,
For matching more for wanton lust than honor,
Or than for strength and safety of our country.

Bona. Dear brother, how shall Bona be reveng'd,
But by thy help to this distressed queen? — [live,
Q. Mar. Renowned prince, how shall poor Henry
Unless thou dost him from that mad 'ea'?

Bona. My quarrel and this English queen's are one.
War. And mine, fair lady Bona, joins with yours.
K. Lew. And mine, with hers, and thine, and Therefore, at last I firmly am resolv'd — [Margaret's.
You shall have aid.

Q. Mar. Let me give humble thanks for all atonce.
K. Lew. Then, England's messenger, return in post;
And tell false Edward, thy supposed king,
That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
To revel with him and his new bride:
Thou seest what's past; go, fear thy king withal.
Bona. Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower
I'll wear the willow garland for his sake.
[shortly,
Q. Mar. Tell him, my mourning weeds are bidden
And I am ready to put armor on. — [aside,
War. Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong,
And therefore I'll uncurl him ere't be long.
There's thy reward: be gone. — [Exit Post.
K. Lew. But, Warwick, thou
And Oxford, with five thousand, warlike men,
Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle:
And, as occasion serves, this noble queen,
And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.
Yet, ere thou go, but answer me one doubt:
What pledge have we of thy firm loyalty?
War. This shall assure my constant loyalty: —
That if our queen and this young prince agree,
I'll join mine eldest daughter, and my joy,
To him forthwith in holy wedlock bands.
— [tion.
Q. Mar. Yes, I agree, and thank you for your moi-
Son Edward, she is fair and virtuous,
Therefore delay not, give thy hand to Warwick; And with thy hand they faith irrevocable,
That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine.
Prince. Yes, I accept her, for she well deserves it;
And here, to pledge my vow, I give my hand.

[He gives his hand to Warwick.
K. Lew. Why stay we now? These soldiers shall be levied.
And thou, lord Bourbon, our high admiral,
Shall waft them over with our royal fleet.—
I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance,
For mock'ing marriage with a dame of France.
[Exeunt all but Warwick.
War. I came from Edward as ambassador,
* "Fear," i. e., fright.
ACT IV.

Enter Gloster, Clarence, Somerset, Montague.

Glo. Now tell me, brother Clarence, what think you Of this new marriage with the lady Grey? Hath not our brother made a worthy choice? Clar. Alas! you know, 'tis far from hence to France:

How could he stay till Warwick made return? Som. My lords, forbear this talk: here comes the king.

Flourish. Enter King Edward, attended; Lady Grey, as Queen; Pembroke, Stafford, and Hastings.

Glo. And his well-chosen bride. Clar. I'm mind to tell him plainly what I think. K. Edw. Now, brother Clarence, how like you our choice, That you stand pensive, as half malcontent? Clar. As well a Lewis of France, or the earl of Warwick; Which are so weak of courage, and in judgment, That they'll take no offence at our abuse. K. Edw. Suppose they take offence without a cause, They be but Lewis and Warwick: I am Edward, Your king and Warwick's, and must have my will. Glo. And you shall have your will, because our new busy marriage seldom proved well. [king; K. Edw. Yea, brother Richard, are you offended Glo. Not I.]

No; God forbid, that I should wish them sever'd Whom God hath joint'd together: ay, and 'twere pity, To sunder them that yoke so well together. K. Edw. Setting your scorns and your mislike aside, Tell me some reason why the lady Grey Should not become my wife, and England's queen.— And you too, Somerset, and Montague, Speak freely what you think. Clar. Then this is mine opinion—that king Lewis Becomes your enemy, for mocking him About the marriage of the lady Bona.

Glo. And Warwick, doing what you gave in charge, Is now disgraced by this new marriage. [appears'd K. Edw. What, if both Lewis and Warwick be By such invention as I can devise? [ance, Mont. Yet to have joint'd with France in such Alli- Would more have strengthen'd this our common- wealth 'Gainst foreign storms than any home-bred marriage. Hast. Wify, knows not Montague, that of itself English is safe, if true within itself. Mont. But the safer, when 'tis back'd with France. Hast. 'Tis better using France, than trusting France.

Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas, Which he hath given for fence impregnable,

A state here means a stabling horse, a pretence.—"I mind," i. e., I have a mind; I am inclined.

And with their helps only defend ourselves: In them and in ourselves our safety lies. [serves Clar. For this one speech lord Hastings well de-

To have the heir of the lord Hungerford. [grant; K. Edw. Ay, what of that? it was my will, and And for this once my will stand for hw. [well, Glo. And yet, methinks, your grace hath not done To give the heir and daughter of lord Scales Unto the brother of your loving bride: She better would have fitted me, or Clarence; But in your bride you bury brotherhood. [heir Clar. Or else you would not have bestow'd the Of the lord Bouville on your new wife's son, and Leave your brothers to go speed elsewhere. K. Edw. Alas, poor Clarence! 0, is it so, That thou art malcontent? I will provide thee. Clar. In choosing for yourself you show'd your judgment;

Which being shallow, you shall give me leave To play the broker in mine own behalf; And to that end I shortly mind to leave you. K. Edw. Leave me, or tarry, Edward will be king, And he be tied unto his brother's will? Q. Eliz. My lords, before it pleads his majesty To raise my state to title of a queen, Do me but right, and you must all confess That I was not ignoble of descent; And meaner than myself have had like fortune. But as this title honors me and mine, So your denial, to whom I would be pleasing, Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. K. Edw. My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns, What danger, or what sorrow can befal thee, So long as Edward is thy constant friend, And their true sovereign whom they must obey? Nay, whom they shall obey, and love thee too, Unless they seek for hatred at my hands; Which if they do, yet will I keep thee safe, And they shall feel the vengeance of my wrath. Glo. I hear, yet say not much, but think the more. [Aside.

Enter a Messenger.

K. Edw. Now, messenger, what letters, or what From France? [news, Mess. My sovereign liege, no letters, and few words; But such as I, without your special pardon, Dare not relate. [brief, K. Edw. Go to, we pardon thee: therefore, in Tell me their words as near as thou canst guess them. What answer makes king Lewis unto our letters? Mess. At my depart these were his very words:—"Go tell false Edward, thy supposed king, That Lewis of France is sending over maskers, To reveal it with him and his new bride." [Henry. K. Edw. Is Lewis so brave? belike, he thinks me But what said lady Bona to my marriage? Mess. These were her words, utter'd with mild "Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widow shortly, I'll wear the willow garland for his sake." K. Edw. I blame not her, she could say little less; She had the wrong. But what said Henry's queen? For I have heard, that she was there in place. Mess. "Tell him," quoth she, "my mourning weeds were done, And I am ready to put armor on." [Until the Restoration, nobles coming into possession of great estates were in the worship of the king, who bestowed them on his favorites, or in other words gave them up to plunder, and afterwards disposed of them in marriage as he pleased. K. Edw. "There in place," i. e., there present.—"My mourning weeds are done," i. e., my mourning is ended.
K. Edw. Belike, she minds, to play the Amazon.

But what said Warwick to these injuries?

Mes. He, more incensed against your majesty Than all the rest, discharged me with these words:—

"Tell him from me, that he hath done me wrong, And therefore I'll uncrown him ere't be long."

K. Edw. Ha! durst the traitor breathe so proud words?

Well, I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd:

They shall have wars, and pay for their presumption.

But say, in Warwick friends with Margaret?

Mes. Ay, gracious sovereign: they are so link'd in friendship,

That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

[Aside.

Now, brother king, farewell, and sit you fast,

For I will hence to Warwick's other daughter;

That, though I want a kingdom, yet in marriage I may not prove inferior to yourself. —

You, that love me and Warwick, follow me.

[Exit Clarence, and Somerset follows.

Glo. Not I.

My thoughts aim at a farther matter: I

Stay not for the love of Edward, but the crown.

K. Edw. Clarence and Somerset both gone to Warwick!

Yet am I arm'd against the worst can happen,

And haste is needful in this desperate case. —

Pembroke and Stafford, you in our behalf

Go levy men, and make prepare for war;

They are already, or quickly will be band'd:

Myself in person will straight follow you.

[Exit Pembroke and Stafford.

But, ere I go, Hastings, and Montague,

Resolve my doubt: you twain, of all the rest,

Are near to Warwick by blood, and by alliance:

Tell me if you love Warwick more than me?

If it be so, then both depart to him:

I rather wish you foes, than hollow friends;

But, if you mind to hold your true obedience,

Give me assurance with some friendly vow,

That I may never have you in suspect.

Mont. So God help Montague as he proves true!

Hast. And Hastings as he favors Edward's cause!

K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, will you stand by us?

Glo. Ay, in despite of all that shall withstand you.

K. Edw. Why so? then, am I sure of victory.

Now, therefore, let us hence; and lose no hour,

Till we meet Warwick with his foreign power.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Plain in Warwickshire.

Enter Warwick and Oxford with French and English Forces.

War. Trust me, my lord, all hitherto goes well:

The common people by numbers swarm to us.

Enter Clarence and Somerset.

But, see, where Somerset and Clarence come!

Speak suddenly, my lords; are we all friends?

Clar. Fear not that, my lord.

[овой:

War. Then, gentle Clarence, welcome unto War-

And welcome, Somerset.—I hold it cowardice,

To rest mistrustful where a noble heart

Hath paven't an open hand in sign of love;

Else might I think, that Clarence, Edward's brother,

Were but a feigned friend to our proceedings:

But welcome, sweet Clarence; my daughter shall be thine.

SCENE III.—Edward's Camp near Warwick.

Enter certain Watchmen, to guard the King's tent.

1 Watch. Come on, my masters, each man take his stand;

The king by this is set him down to sleep.

2 Watch. What, will he not to bed?

1 Watch. Why, no; for he hath made a solemn vow

Never to lie and take his natural rest,

Till Warwick or himself be quite suppress'd.

2 Watch. To-morrow then, belike, shall be the day,

If Warwick be so near as men report.

3 Watch. Ay, but say, what nobleman is that,

That with the king here resteth in his tent?

1 Watch. 'Tis the lord Hastings, the king's chiefest friend.

[King,

3 Watch. 0! is it so? But why commands the

That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,

While he himself keeps in the cold field?

2 Watch. 'Tis the more honor, because more dan-

3 Watch. Ay, but give me worship and quietness;

I like it better than a dangerous honor.

If Warwick knew in what estate he stands,

'Tis to be doubted, he would waken him.

[Aside.

1 Watch. Unless our halberds did shut up his pas-

2 Watch. Ay; wherefore else guard we his royal

But to defend his person from night-foes?

[tent,

Enter Warwick, Clarence, Oxford, Somerset, and Forces.

War. This is his tent; and see, where stand his Guard. courageous, my masters! honor now, or never!

But follow me, and Edward shall be ours.

1 Watch. Who goes there?

2 Watch. Stay, or thou diest.

[Warwick, and the rest, cry all.—Warwick!

Warwick! and set upon the Guard; who fly, crying—Arm! Arm!

Warwick, and the rest, following them.

Shouts and confusion.

Drums beating, and Trumpets sounding, re-enter

Warwick, and the rest, bringing the King out in his Gown, sitting in a Chair: Gloster and Hasting fly over the stage.

Som. What are they that fly there?

[the duke.

War. Richard, and Hasting: let them go; here's K. Edw. The duke! why, Warwick, when we

Thou call'dst me king?

[parted last,

War. Ay, but the case is alter'd:

When you disgrac'd me in my embassade,

*"She minds," she inclines.

*See the tenth book of the Iliad.
THIRD

Then I degraded you from being king,
And come now to create you duke of York.
Alas! how should you govern any kingdom,
That know not how to use ambassadors,
Nor how to be contented with one wife,
Nor how to use your brothers brotherly,
Nor how to study for the people's welfare,
Nor how to shroud yourself from enemies? [160]
K. Edw. You, brother of Clarence, art thou here
Nay then, I see that Edward needs must descend.
Yet, Warwick, in despite of all mischance,
Of thee thyself, and all thy complices,
Edward will always bear himself as king:
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceed the compass of her wheel.
War. Then, for his mind be Edward England's king:
[Takes off his Crown.
But Henry now shall wear the English crown,
And be true king indeed; thou but the shadow.—
My lord of Somerset, at my request,
See that forthwith duke Edward be convey'd
Unto my brother, archbishop of York.
Why, I have fought with Pembroke and his fellows,
I'll follow you, and tell what answer
Lewis, and the lady Bona, send to him:—
Now, for a while farewell, good duke of York.
K. Edw. What fates impose, that men must needs
It boots not to resist both wind and tide. [abide:
Somerset with him.
Osf. What now remains, my lord, for us to do,
But march to London with our soldiers?
War. Ay, that's the first thing that we have to do;
To free king Henry from imprisonment,
And see him seated in the regal throne. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—London. A Room in the Palace.
Enter Queen Elizabeth and Rivers.
Ric. Madam, what makes in you this sudden change?
Q. Eliz. Why, brother Rivers, are you yet to learn,
What late misfortune is befallen king Edward?
Ric. What! loss of some pitch'd battle against Warwick?
Q. Eliz. No, but the loss of his own royal person.
Ric. Then, is my sovereign slain?
Q. Eliz. Ay, almost slain, for he is taken prisoner;
Either betray'd by falsehood of his guard,
Or by his foe surpris'd at unawares:
And, as I further have to understand,
Is new committed to the bishop of York,
Fell Warwick's brother, and by that our foe.
Ric. These news, I must confess, are full of grief;
Yet, gracious madam, bear it as you may:
Warwick may lose, that now hath won the day.
Q. Eliz. Till then, fair hope must hinder life's decay;
And I the rather wean me from despair,
For love of Edward's offspring in my womb:
This is that makes me bridle passion,
And bear with mildness my misfortune's cross:
Ay, ay, for this I draw in many a tear,
And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs,
Lest with my sighs or tears I blast or drown
King Edward's fruit, true heir to th' English crown.
Ric. But, madam, where is Warwick then become?
Q. Eliz. I am informed that he comes towards London,
To set the crown once more on Henry's head.
Guess thou the rest; king Edward's friends must
But to prevent the tyrant's violence, [down:

["For his mind," i.e., in his mind; as far as his own mind goes.

(For trust not him that hath once broken faith)
I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary,
To save at least the heir of Edward's right:
There shall I rest secure from force and fraud.
Come therefore; let us fly while we may fly:
If Warwick take us we are sure to die. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Park near Middleham Castle in Yorkshire.
Enter Gloster, Hastings, Sir William Stanley,
and others.
Glo. Now, my lord Hastings, and sir William Stanley,
Leave off to wonder why I drew you hither,
Into this chiefest thicket of the park.
[brother,
Thus stands the case. You know, our king, my
Is prisoner to the bishop here, at whose hands
He hath good usage and great liberty,
And often, but attended with weak guard,
Comes hunting this way to dispast himself.
I have advis'd him by secret means,
That if about this hour he make this way,
Under the color of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends, with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity.

Enter King Edward, and a Huntsman.
Hunt. This way, my lord, for this way lies the game.
K. Edw. Nay, this way, man: see, where the huntsmen stand.
Now, brother of Gloster, Hastings, and the rest,
Stand you thus close to steal the bishop's deer?
Glo. Brother, the time and case requireth haste:
Your horse stands ready at the park corner.
K. Edw. But whither shall we then?
Hunt. To Lynn, my lord: and slip from thence to Flanders. [meaning.
Glo. Well guess'd, believe me; for that was my
K. Edw. Stanley, I will requite thy forwardness.
Glo. But whereroe stay we 'tis no time to talk.
K. Edw. Huntsman, what say'st thou? wilt thou go along?
Hunt. Better do so, then tarry and he hang'd.
Glo. Come then; away! let's have no more ado.
K. Edw. Bishop, farewell: shield thee from Warwick's frown,
And pray that I may repose the crown. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—A Room in the Tower.
Enter King Henry, Clarence, Warwick, Somerset, young* Henry of Richmond, Oxford, Montague, Lieutenant of the Tower, and Attendants.
K. Hen. Master lieutenant, now that God and
Have shaken Edward from the regal seat, [friends
And turn'd my captive state to liberty,
My fear to hope, my sorrows unto joys,
At our enlargement what are thy dues fees?
Liev. Subjects may challenge nothing of their
But if an humble prayer may prevail, [sovereigns;
I then crave pardon of your majesty.
K. Hen. For what, lieutenant? for well using me?
Nay, be thou sure, I'll well requite thy kindness,
For that it made my imprisonment a pleasure:
Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds
Conceive, when, after many moody thoughts,
At last by notes of household harmony
They quite forget their loss of liberty. [But, Warwick, after God, thou set'st me free,
And kindly therefore I thank God, and thee;
He was the author, thou the instrument.
Therefore, that I may conquer fortune's spite,
By living low, where fortune cannot hurt me,
And that the people of this blessed land
May not be punished with my thwarting stars,
Warwick, although my head still wear the crown,
I here resign my government to thee,
For thou art fortunate in all thy deeds.

Wor. You are not; to be thus with me is
War. Your grace hath still been fam'd for virtuous,
And now may seem as wise as it would seem
By speaking and avoiding, fortune's malice;
For few men tightly temper with the stars:
Yet in this one thing let me blame your grace,
For choosing me when Clarence is in place.

Clar. No, Warwick, thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heavens in thy nativity
Adjudg'd an olive branch, and laurel crown,
As likely to be blest in peace, and war;
And, therefore, I yield thee my free consent.

Wor. And I choose Clarence only for protector.
K. Hen. Warwick, and Clarence, give me both your lands.
Now join your hands, and with your hands your hearts,
That no dissension hinder government:
I make you both protectors of the realm;
While I myself will lead a private life,
And in devotion spend my latter days,
To sin's rebuke, and my Creator's praise.
[Exit Wor.]

Wor. What answers Clarence to his sovereign's
Clar. That he consents, if Warwick yield consent;
For on thy fortune I repose myself.
[Exeunt Wor. and Clar.]

Wor. Why then, though both, yet must I be con-
We'll yoke together, like a double shadow
To Henry's body, and supply his place;
I mean, in bearing weight of government,
While he enjoys the honor, and his ease.
And, Clarence, now then, it is more than needful,
Fortwith that Edward be pronounced a traitor,
And all his lands and goods confiscated.
[Exeunt Wor. and Clar.
K. Hen. Ay, therein Clarence shall not want his part.
K. Hen. But, with the first of all your chief affairs,
Let me entreat, (for I command no more)
That Margaret your queen, and my son Edward,
Be sent for to return from France with speed;
For, till I see them here, by doubtful fear
My joy of liberty is half eclips'd.
[Enter Messenger.]

Mess. That Edward is escaped from your brother,
And fled, as he hears since, to Burgundy.
Wor. Unsavory news! but how made he escape?
Mess. He was convey'd by Richard duke of Gloster,
And the lord Hastings, who attended him
In secret ambush on the forest side,
And from the bishop's hunters rescued him,
For hunting was his daily exercise.
Wor. My brother was too careless of his charge,—
But let us hence, my sovereign, to provide
A salve for any sore that may betide.

[Exeunt King Henry, Warwick, Clarence,
Lieutenant, and Attendants.]

Som. My lord, I like not of this flight of Edward's,
For, doubtless, Burgundy will yield him help;
And we shall have more wars, before't be long.
As Henry's late presuming prophecy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Rich-
So doth my heart misgive me, in these conflicts
What may befall him, to his harm and ours:
Therefore, lord Oxford, to prevent the worst,
Forthwith we'll send him hence to Britanny,
Till storms be past of civil enmity.
Oxf. Ay; for if Edward repossess the crown,
'Tis like that Richmond with the rest shall down.
Som. It shall be so; he shall to Britanny.
Come therefore; let's about it speedily.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Before York.

Enter King Edward, Gloster, Hastings, and foreign forces.
K. Edw. Now, brother Richard, lord Hastings, and Then thus far fortune maketh us amends,
[the rest,
And says that once more I shall interchange
My waned state for Henry's regal crown.
Well have we pass'd, and now repass'd the seas,
And brought desired help from Burgundy:
What then remains, we being thus arriv'd
From Ravenspurg haven before the gates of York,
But that we enter as into our dukedom?
Glo. The gates made fast.—Brother, I like not this;
For many men, that stumble at the threshold,
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.
K. Edw. That man, abdomet must not now affright us:
By fair or foul means we must enter in,
For either will our friends repair to us.
Hast. My liege, I'll knock once more to summon them.
[Knocks.]
Enter, on the walls, the Mayor of York, and his Brothers.
May. My lords, we were forewarned of your coming,
And shut the gates for safety of ourselves;
For now we owe allegiance unto Henry.
K. Edw. But, master mayor, if Henry be your king,
Yet Edward, at the least, is duke of York.
May. True, my good lord; I know you for no less.
K. Edw. Why, and I challenge nothing but my
As being well content with that alone.
[dukedom,
Glo. But when the fox hath once got in his nose,
He'll soon find means to make the body follow.
[Aside.
Hast. Why, master mayor, why stand you in a doubt?
Open the gates: we are king Henry's friends.
May. Ay, say you so? the gates shall then be open'd.
[Exeunt from above.
Glo. A wise stout captain, he, and soon persuaded.
Hast. The good old man would fain that all were well,
So 'twere not long of him; but, being enter'd,
I doubt not, I, but we shall soon persuade
Both him and all his brothers unto reason.
[Re-enter the Mayor, and Two Aldermen, below.
K. Edw. So, master mayor: these gates must not be shut,
That is, 'The mayor is willing we should enter, so he may not be blamed.'
But in the night, or in the time of war.
What! fear not, man, but yield me the keys,
[ Takes his Keys.]

For Edward will defend the town, and thee,
And all those friends that deign to follow me.

March. Enter Montgomery, and Forces.

Glo. Brother, this is sir John Montgomery.
Our trusty friend, unless I be deceiv'd:
[In arms]
K. Edw. Welcome, sir John; but why come you
Mont. To help king Edward in his time of storm,
As every loyal subject ought to do. [Forget
K. Edw. Thanks, good Montgomery; but we now
Our title to the crown, and only claim
Our dukedom, till God please to send the rest.
Mont. Then fare you well, for I will hence again:
I came to serve a king, and not a duke.—
Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.

[ A March begun.]

K. Edw. Nay, stay, sir John, a while; and we'll debate,
By what safe means the crown may be recover'd.
Mont. What talk you of debating? in few words,
If you'll not here proclaim yourself our king,
I'll leave you to your fortune, and be gone.
To keep them back that come to succor you.
What shall we fight, if you pretend no title?
Glo. Why, brother, wherefore stand you on nice points? [Our claim:
K. Edw. When we grow stronger, then we'll make
Till then, 'tis wisdom to conceal our meaning.

Hast. Away with scrupulous wit, now arms must rule.
Glo. And fearless minds climb soonest unto crowns.
Brother, we will proclaim you out of hand:
The brute thereof will bring you many friends.

K. Edw. Then be it as you will; for 'tis my right,
And Henry but usurps the diadem.

Mont. Ay, now my sovereign speaketh like himself,
And now will I be Edward's champion.

Hast. Sound, trumpet! Edward shall be here proclaim'd.—
Come, fellow-soldier, make thon proclamation.

Sold. [Read's.] "Edward the fourth, by the grace of God, king of England and France, and lord of Ireland, &c."

Mont. And whatsoever gainsays king Edward's right,
By this I challenge him to single fight.

[ Throws down his Gauntlet.

All. Long live Edward the fourth!

K. Edw. Thanks, brave Montgomery, and thanks unto you all:
If fortune serve me, I'll requite this kindness.

Now, for this night, let's harbor here in York,
And when the morning sun shall raise his car Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick, and his mates; For, well I wot, that Henry is no soldier.—
Ah, froward Clarence! how evil it beseems thee,
To flatter Henry, and forsake thy brother! Yet, as we may, we'll meet both thee and Warwick.—
Come on, brave soldiers; doubt not of the day;
And, that once gotten, doubt not of large pay.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—London. A Room in the Palace.

War. What counsel, lords? Edward from Belgin, With lusty Germans, and blunt Hollanders, THIRD PART OF KING HENRY VI.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Coventry.

Enter upon the Walls, Warwick, the Mayor of Coventry, Two Messengers, and others.

War. Where is the post that came from valiant Oxford?

Wor. How far hence is our brother Montague?

War. Where is the post that came from Montague?

Enter Sir John Somerville.

War. Say, Somerville, what says my loving son?

And, by thy guess, how nigh is Clarence now?

Som. At Southam I did leave him with his forces, and do expect him here some two hours hence.

[Drum heard.]

War. Then Clarence is at hand, I hear his drum.

Som. It is not his, my lord; here Southam lies.

War. Who should that be? belike, unlook'd-for friends.

[Know.]

Som. They are at hand, and you shall quickly March. Flourish. Enter King Edward, Gloster, and Forces.

K. Edw. Go, trumpet, to the walls, and sound a parle.

Glo. See, how the early Warwick mans the wall.

War. O, unbid spite! is spott'd Edward come? Where slept our scouts, or how are they secretly that should hear no news of his repair? gates?

K. Edw. Now, Warwick, wilt thou ope the city

Speak gentle words, and humbly bend thy knee,

Call Edward king, and at his hands beg mercy,

And he shall pardon thee these outrages.

War. Nay, rather, wilt thou draw thy forces hence, Confess who set thee up and pledge'll thee down?

Call Warwick patron, and be peaceable,

And thou shalt remaine—his dukedom of York.

Glo. I thought, at least, he would have said the

Or did he make the jest against his will?

War. Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?

Glo. Ay, by my faith, for a poor carl to give:

I'll do thee a service for so good a gift.

brother.

War. 'Twas I, that gave the kingdom to thy

K. Edw. Why then, 'tis mine, if by but Warwick's gift.

War. Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight:

And, weaking, Warwick takes his gift again;

And Henry is my king, Warwick his subject.

K. Edw. But Warwick's king is Edward's pris-

And, gallant Warwick, do but answer this;

oner: What is the body, when the head is off?

Glo. Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,

But, whiles he thought to steal the single ten,

The king was slyly finger'd from the deck!

You left poor Henry at the bishop's palace,

And, ten to one, you'll meet him in the Tower.

K. Edw. 'Tis even so: yet you are Warwick still.

Glo. Come, Warwick, take the time; kneel down, kneel down.

Nay, when I strike now, or else the iron coals.

War. I had rather chop this hand off at a blow,

And with the other fling it at thy face,

SCENE III.—Another Part of the Field.

Flourish. Enter King Edward in triumph; with Clarence, Gloster, and the rest.

_K. Edu._ Thus far our fortune keeps an upward course,
And we are grac'd with wreaths of victory.
But in the midst of this bright shining day,
I spy a black, suspicious, threaten'ing cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his caseful western bed:
I mean, my lords, those powers, that the queen
Hath rais'd in Gallia, have arriv'd our coast,
And, as we hear, march on to fight with us.

_Clar._ A little gale will soon disperse that cloud,
And blow it to the source from whence it came:
Thy very beams will dry those vapors up,
For every cloud engenders not a storm.

_Glo._ The queen is valued thirty thousand strong,
And Somerset, with Oxford, fled to her:
If she have time to breathe, be well assur'd,
Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

_K. Edu._ We are advertis'd by our loving friends,
That they do hold their course toward Tewksbury.
We, having now the beat at Barnett field,
Will there straighten, for willingness' sakes.
And, as we march, our strength will be augmented
In every county as we go along.—
Strike up the drum! cry—Courage! and away.

Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Plains near Tewksbury.

_March._ Enter Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, Somerset, Oxford, and Soldiers.

Q. Mar._ Great lords, wise men ne'er sit and wail their loss,
But cheerily seek how to redress their harms.
What though the must be now blown over-board,
The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
And half our sailors swallow'd in the flood,
Yet lives our pilot still: 'tis meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea,
And give more strength to that which hath too much;
While in his main the ship splits on the rock,
Which industry and courage might have sav'd?
Ah! what a shame, ah! what a fault were this.
Say, Warwick was our anchor; what of that?
And Montague our top-mast; what of him?
Our slaughter'd friends the tackles: what of these?
Why, is not Oxford here another anchor,
And Somerset another goodly mast?
The friends of France our shrouds and tackling's?
And, though unskilful, why not Ned and I
For once allow'd the skilful pilot's charge?
We will not from the helm to sit and weep,
But keep our course, though the rough wind say no
To our sure and rocks that threaten us with wreck.
As good to chide the waves, as speak them fair.
And what is Edward but a ruthless sea?
What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit?
And Richard but a ragged fatal rock?
All these the enemies to our poor bark.
Say, you can swim; alas! 'tis but a while:
Tread on the sand; why, there you quickly sink:
Beside the rock; the tide will wash you off,
Or else you furnish; that's a threefold death.
This speak I, lords, to let you understand,
If case some one of you would fly from us,
That there's no hop'd-for mercy with the brothers.

More than with rudderless waves, with sands, and rocks. Why, courage, then! what cannot be avoided, 'Twere childish weakness to lament, or fear.

Prince. Methinks, a woman of this valiant spirit Should, if a coward heard her speak these words, Infuse his breast with magnanimity, And make him, naked, soil a man at arms. I speak not this, as doubting any here; For, did I but suspect a fearful man, He should have leave to go away betimes, Lest in our need he might infect another, And make him of like spirit to himself. If any such be here, as God forbid! Let him depart before we need his help. Oxf. Women and children of so high a courage, And warriors faint! why, 'twere perpetual shame.— O, brave young prince! thy famous grandfather Doth live again in thee: long may'st thou live, To bear his image, and renew his glories! Som. And he, that will not fight for such a hope, Go home to bed, and, like the owl by day, If he arise, be mock'd and wonder'd at. Q. Mar. Thanks, gentle Somerset:—sweet Oxford, thanks.

Prince. And take his thanks, that yet hath nothing else.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, lords, for Edward is at hand, Ready to fight: therefore, be resolute.

Oxf. I thought no less: it is his policy To haste thus fast, to find us unprovided. Som. But he's deceiv'd: we are in readiness. Q. Mar. This cheers my heart to see your forwardness. [Aside.

Oxf. Here pitch our battle; hence we will not Flourish and March. Enter King Edward, Clarence, Gloucester, and Forces.

K. Edw. Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood, Which, by the heavens' assistance and your strength, Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night. I need your bold might for your noble king. For, well I wot, ye blaze to burn them out. Give signal to the fight, and to it, lords! Q. Mar. Lords, knights, and gentlemen, what I should say, My tears? gainsay; for every word I speak, Ye see, I drink the water of my eye. Therefore, no more but this:—Henry, thy sovereign, Is prisoner to the foe; his state usurp'd, His realm a slaughterhouse, his subjects slain, His statutes cancelld, and his treasure spent; And yonder is the wolf that makes this spoil. You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords, Be valiant, and give signal to the fight. [Exeunt both Armies.

SCENE V.—Another Part of the Same.

Alarums: Excursions: and afterwards a Retreat. Then enter King Edward, Clarence, Gloucester, and Forces; with Queen Margaret, Oxford, and Somerset, Prisoners.

Q. Mar. So part we sadly in this troublous world, To meet with joy in sweet Jerusalem. [Edward

K. Edw. Is proclamation made, that who finds Shall have a high reward, and he his life? Glo. It is: and, lo! where youthful Edward comes. Enter Soldiers, with Prince Edward.

K. Edw. Bring forth the gallant: let us hear him speak. [K. Edward sits

What! can so young a thorn begin to prick? Edward, what satisfaction canst thou make, For bearing arms, for striving up my subjects, And all the trouble thou hast turn'd me to? Prince. Speak like a subject, proud ambitious York. Suppose that I am now my father's mouth: Resign thy chair, and where I stand kneel thou, Whilst I propose the self-same words to thee, Which, traitor, thou wouldst have me answer to. Q. Mar. Ah, that thy father had been so resolv'd! Glo. That you might still have worn the petticoat, And ne'er have slipt the breech from Lancaster. Prince. Let 4 Esop fable in a winter's night; His currish riddles sort not with this place. Glo. By heaven, brat, I'll plague you for that word. Q. Mar. Ay, thou wast born to be a plague to men. Glo. For God's sake, take away this captive scold. Prince. Nay, take away this scolding crook-backed, rather...[longue.

K. Edw. Peace! wifful boy, or I will charm your Cler. Untur'd lad, thou art too malapert. Prince. I know my duty: you are all unfaithful. Lascivious Edward,—and thou perjur'd George, And thou mis-shapen Dick,—I tell ye all, I am your better, traitors as ye are; And thou usurp'st my father's right and mine. K. Edw. Take that, the likeness of this riler here. [Stabs him.

Glo. Swarlap'st thou? take that, to end thy agony. [Stabs him. Cler. And there's for twitting me with perjury. [Clar. stabs him.

Canst thou not speak?—O traitors! murderers! They, that stab'd! Caesar shed no blood at all; Did not offend, nor were not worthy blame, If this foul deed were by to sequel it: He was a man: this, in respect, a child; And men ne'er spend their fury on a child. What's worse than murderer, that I may name it? No, no; my heart will burst, as if I speak; And I will speak, that so my heart may burst. Bouchers and Butchers! bloody cannibals! How sweet a plant have you uncrime; cropp'd! You have no children, butchers! if you last, The thought of them would have stirr'd up remorse: But, if you ever chance to have a child,

4 The prince calls Richard, for his crookedness, Xesp. "The likeness," i. e., 'thy who art the likeness.'—

5 With words," i. e., with dispute, contention.
Look in his youth to have him so cut off,
As, deathsmen, you have *rid this sweet young prince!

K. Edw. Away with her! go, bear her hence
    *performe.
Q. Mar. Nay, never bear me hence, despatch me here;
Here sheath thy sword, I'll pardon thee my death.
What! wilt thou not?—then, Clarence, do it thou.
Clar. By heaven, I will not do thee so much ease.
Q. Mar. Good Clarence, do; sweet Clarence, do thou do it.
Clar. Didst thou not hear me swear I would not do it.
Q. Mar. Ay, but thou used to forswear thyself:
'Twas sin *before, but now 'tis charity.
What! wilt thou not? where is that devil's butcher,
Hard-favor'd Richard? Richard, where art thou? Thou art not here: murder is thy alms-deed;
Petitioners for blood thou ne'er put'st at back.
Q. Mar. So come to you, and yours, as to this prince!
[Exit.
K. Edw. Where's Richard gone?
Clar. To London, all in post; and, as I guess,
To make a bloody supper in the Tower.
K. Edw. He's sudden, if a thing comes in his head.
Now march we hence: discharge the common sort
With pay and thanks, and let's away to London,
And see our gentle queen how well she fures:
By this, I hope, she hath a son for me.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—London. A Room in the Tower.

1 King Henry is discovered reading. Enter Gloster and the Lieutenant.

Glo. Good day, my lord. What, at your book so hard?
    [Rater:
K. Hen. Ay, my good lord: my lord, I should say
'Tis sin to flatter; good was little better:
Good Gloster, and good devil, were alike,
And both preposterous; therefore, not good lord.

Glo. Sirrah, leave us to ourselves: we must confer.

[Exit Lieutenant.
K. Hen. So flies the reckless shepherd from the wolf:
So first the harmless sheep doth yield his fleece,
And next his throat unto the butcher's knife.—
What scene of death hath Roscius now to act?

Glo. Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind:
The thief doth fear each bush an officer.
K. Hen. The bird, that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings *misdoubteth every bush;
And I, the hapless *male to one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
[kill'd.
Where my poor young Lord was, last was caught, and
Glo. Why, what a *preevish fool was that of Crete,
That taught his son the office of a fowl?
And yet, for all his wings, the fool was drown'd.

K. Hen. I. Dacalus; my poor boy, Icarus;
Thy father, Minos, that denied our course;
The sun, that sear'd the wings of my sweet boy,
Thy brother Edward: and thyself, the sea,
Whose envious gulf did swallow up his life.
Ah! I'll kill me with thy weapon, not with words.
My breast can better brook thy dagger's point,
Than can my ears that tragic history.

But wherefore dost thou come? is't for my life?
Glo. Think'st thou I am an executioner?

K. Hen. A persecutor, I am sure, thou art:
If murdering innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner.
Glo. Thy son I kill'd for his presumption.
K. Hen. Hadst thou been kill'd, when first thou didst presume,
Thou hadst not liv'd to kill a son of mine.
And this I prophesy,—that many a thousand,
Which now mistrust no parcel of my fear;
And many an old man's sigh, and many a widow's,
And many an orphan's water-standing eye,—
Men for their sons', wives for their husbands',
Orphans for their parents' timeless death,
Shall me the hour that ever thou wast born.
The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign,
The night-crow cried, a boding luckless *true;
Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempest shook down trees:
The raven b'rock'd her on the chimney's top,
And chattering pies in dismal discord sang.
Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit,—an indigest deformed lump,
Not the fruit of such a goodly tree.

Thou hast'd thy head, when thou wast born,
To signify, thou cam'st to bite the world:
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam'st—

Glo. I'll hear no more.—Die, prophet, in thy speech:

[Stabs him.
K. Hen. Ay, and for much more slaughter after this.
O God! forgive my sins, and pardon thee. [Dies.
Glo. What! will the aspiring blood of Lancaster
Sink in the ground? I thought it would have mounted.
See, how my sword weeps for the poor king's death!
Oh, let my purple tears be always shed,
From those that wish the downfall of our house!—
If any spark of life be yet remaining,
Down, down to hell; and say I sent thee thither,

[Stabs him again.
I, that have neither pity, love, nor fear.
Indeed, 'tis true, that Henry told me of:
For I have often heard my mother say,
I cannot enter into the world with my legs forward.
Had I not reason, think ye, to make haste,
And seek their ruin that usurp'd our right?
The midwife wonder'd; and the women cried,
"O, Jesus bless us! he is born with teeth:"
And so I was; which plainly signified
That I should smart, and bite, and play the dog.
Then, since the heavens have stupid'd my body so,
Let hell make crook'd my mind to answer it.
I have no brother, I am like no brother;
And this word love, which greybeards call divine,
Be resident in men like one another,
And not in me: I am myself alone.—
Charence, beware: thou keep'st me from the light;
But I will sort a pitchy day for thee:
For I will buzz abroad such prophecies
That Edward shall be fearful of his life;
And then, to purge his fear, I'll be thy death.
King Henry, and the prince his son, are gone:
Charence, thy turn is next, and then the rest;
Counting myself but bad, till I be best.—
I'll throw thy body in another room,
And triumph, Henry, in thy day of doom.

[Exit with the Body.

* "Rid," i. e., cut off; *destroyed. — By force; *violently. —

* She alludes to the desertion of Clarence. — *To misdoubt is to suspect danger; *to fear. — Male parent. — *Silly; childish.

"No parcel of my fear," i. e., no part of what my fears

"To rock is to cowem down like a bird at roost." —

Sorts," i. e., select; choose out.
SCENE VII.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

King Edward is discovered sitting on his Throne; Queen Elizabeth; a Nurse with the Infant Prince, Clarence, Hastings, and others.

K. Edw. Once more we sit in England's royal Re-purchas'd with the blood of enemies. [thone. What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn, Have we now'd down, in tops of all their pride? Three dukes of Somerset, threefold renown'd
For hardy and redoubted champions:
Two Cliffords, as the father and the son;
And two Northumberlands; two braver men Ne'er spur'd their courser at the trumpet's sound:
With them, the two brave bears, Warwick and Mont-That in their chains fetter'd the kingly lion, [tague, And made the forest tremble when they ron'd. Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat, And made our footstool of security.—

4 Enter Gloster behind.

Come hither, Bess, and let me kiss my boy.—
Young Ned, for thee, thine uncles, and myself,
Have in our armors watch'd the winter's night;
Went all a-foot in summer's scalding heat,
That thou might'st repossess the crown in peace;
And of our labors thou shalt reap the gain.
Glo. I'll blast his harvest, if your head were laid;

5 [Aside.

For yet I am not look'd on in the world.
This shoulder was ordain'd so thick, to heave;
And heave it shall some weight, or break my back.—

Work thou the way, and that shall execute.
K. Edw. Clarence, and Gloster, love my lovely queen;
And kiss your princely nephew, brothers both.

Clar. The duty, that I owe unto your majesty, I seal upon the lips of this sweet babe.
K. Edw. Thanks, noble Clarence; worthy brother, thanks.

Glo. And, that I love the tree from whence thou sprang'st;

7 [Kissing the infant.

Witness the loving kiss I give the fruit.—

[Aside.] To say the truth, so Judas kiss'd his master,
And cried—all hail! when as he meant—all harm.

K. Edw. Now am I seated as my soul delights,
Having my country's peace, and brothers' loves.

Clar. What will your grace have done with Mar-Reignier, her father, to the king of France [garet? Hath pawn'd the Sicils and Jerusalem,
And hither have they sent it for her ransom.

K. Edw. Away with her, and waft her hence to France.
And now what rests, but that we spend the time
With stately triumphs, mirthful comic shows,
Such as beft the pleasure of the court?
Sound, drums and trumpets!—farewell, sour annoy;
For here, I hope, begins our lasting joy. [Exeunt.

"Work thou the way, and that shall execute!" That refers to Richard's shoulder, before mentioned; and 'work thou the way,' to his head, which we may suppose him to touch, in his speech afofe.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

Enter Gloster.

Glo. Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this ² sun of York;
And all the clouds, that lower'd upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths:
Our bruised arms hang up for monuments:

¹ An allusion to the three sons which are said to have appeared at the battle gained by Edward IV. over the Lancastrians, at Mortimer's Cross.
² "Barbed," i.e., barded, caparisoned for war.

Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful ³ measures,
Grin-visag'd war hath smooth'd ² his wrinkled front;
And now, instead of mounting ² barbed steeds,
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.
But I, that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass;
I, that am rude stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph;
I, that am curtail'd ³ thus of fair proportion,

The jealous o'er-worn widow, and herself, Since that our brother dub'd them gentlewomen, Are mighty gossips in our monarchy.

Brak. I beseech your graces both to pardon me: His majesty in justice will be pitiful; That no man shall have private conference, Of what degree soever, with your brother.

Glo. Even so; an please your worship, Brakenbury, You may partake of anything we say. We speak no treason, man: we say, the king Is wise and virtuous; and his noble queen Well struck in years; fair and not jealous: — We say that Shore's wife hath a pretty foot, A cherry lip, a bonny eye, a passing pleasing tongue; And the queen's kindred are made gentles folks. How say you, sir? can you deny all this?

Brak. With this, my lord, myself have naught to do.

Glo. Naught to do with mistress Shore? I tell thee, fellow, He that doth naught with her, excepting one, Were best to do it secretly, alone.

Brak. What one, my lord? [me?

Glo. Her husband, knave. Would'st thou betray
Brak. I do beseech your grace to pardon me; and withal,

Forbear your conference with the noble duke.

Clar. We know thy charge, Brakenbury, and will obey.

Glo. We are the queen's objects, and must obey. —
Brother, farewell: I will unto the king; And whatso'er you will employ me in,
Were it to call king Edward's widow sister, I will perform it to enchant you.

Mean time, this deep disgrace in brotherhood Touches me deeper than you can imagine.
Clar. I know, it pleases neither of us well.

Glo. Well, your imprisonment shall not be long;
I will deliver you, or else lie for you:

Mean time, have patience. — [Embracing him.

Clar. I must perform: farewell.

Exeunt Clarence, Brakenbury, and Guard.

Glo. Go, read the path that thou shalt ne'er return, Simple, plain Clarence — I do love thee so,
That I will shortly send thy soul to heaven,
If heaven will take the present at our hands.

But who comes here? the new-deliver'd Hastings?

Enter Hastings.

Hast. Good time of day unto my gracious lord.

Glo. As much unto my good lord chamberlain.

Well are you welcome to this open air.

How hath your lordship brook'd your imprisonment?

Hast. With patience, noble lord, as prisoners must; But I shall live, my lord, to give them thanks, That were the cause of my imprisonment.

Glo. No doubt, no doubt; and so shall Clarence too
For they that were your enemies are his,And have prevail'd as much on him as you.

Hast. More pity, that the eagles should be new'd, While kites and buzzards prey at liberty.

Glo. What news abroad?

Hast. No news so bad abroad, as this at home:—
The king is sickly, weak, and melancholy, And his physicians fear him mightily.

Glo. Now, by Saint Paul, that news is bad indeed.
O! he hath kept an evil diet long, And overmuch consum'd his royal person: —
'Tis very grievous to be thought upon.

Where is he? in his bed?

KING RICHARD III.

ACT I.

Hast. He is.

Glo. Go you before, and I will follow you. [Exit HASTINGS.

He cannot live, I hope; and must not die,
Till George be pack'd with posthaste up to heaven.
I'll in, to urge his hatred more to Clarence,
With lies well steel'd with weighty arguments;
And, if I fail not in my deep intent,
Clarence hath not another day to live:
Which done, God take king Edward to his mercy,
And leave the world for me to bustle in,
For then I'll marry Warwick's youngest daughter.

What though I kill'd her husband, and her father?
The readiest way to make the wench amends,
Is to become her husband, and her father:
The which will I; not all so much for love,
As for another secret close intent,
By marrying her which I must reach unto.
But yet I run before my horse to market:
Clarence still breathes; Edward still lives and reigns.
When they are gone, then must I count my gains.

"[Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. Another Street.

Enter the Corpse of King Henry the Sixth, borne in an open Coffin, Gentlemen, bearing Halberds, to guard it; and Lady ANNE as mourner.

Anne. Set down, set down your honorable load,
If honor may be shrouded in a hearse,
Whilst I a while PACK obsequiously lament
The untimely fall of virtuous Lancaster,—
Poor key-cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster!
Thou bloodless remnant of that royal blood,
Be it lawful that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne,
Wife to thy Edward, to thy slaughter'd son,
Stabb'd by the self-same hand that made those wounds!
Lo, in these windows, that let forth thy life,
I pour the helpless balm of my poor eyes:—
O, cursed be the hand that made these holes!
Cursed the heart, that had the heart to do it!
Cursed the blood, that let this blood from hence!
More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
That makes us wretched by the death of thee,
Than gives us wish to ascend, spider's bed,
Or any creeping venom'd thing that lives!
If ever he have child, * abortive be it,
Prodigious, and untimely brought to light,
Whose ugly and unnatural aspect
May fright the hopeful mother at the view;
And that be heir to his unhappiness!
If ever he have wife, let her be made
More miserable by the death of him,
Than I am made by my young lord, and thee!—
Come, now toward Chertsey with your holy load,
Taken from Paul's & to be interred there;
And still, as you are weary of this weight,
Rest you, whiles I lament king Henry's corse.
[The Bearers take up the Corpse and advance.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. Stay you, that bear the corse, and set it down.
Anne. What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds?

Anne. Villains! set down the corse; or, by Saint Paul,
I'll make a corse of him that disobeys.

1 Gent. My lord, stand back, and let the coffin pass.

Glo. Unmann'd dog! stand thou when I command:
Advance thy halberd higher than my breast,
Or, by Saint Paul, I'll strike thee to my foot,
And spur upon thee, beggar, for thy boldness.

[The Bearers set down the Coffin.

Anne. What! do you tremble? are you all afraid?
Alas! I blame you not; for you are mortal,
And mortal eyes cannot endure the devil.
Avast, thou dreadful minister of hell!
The laddest but power over his mortal body,
His soul thou cannot have: therefore, be gone.

Glo. Sweet saint, for charity, be not so curt.
Anne. Paul devil, for God's sake, hence, and trouble us not;
For thou hast made the happy earth thy hell,
Fii'd it with cursing cries, and deep exclamations.
If thou delight to view thy heinous deeds,
Behold this ° pattern of thy butcheries.
O, gentlewomen! see, see! dead Henry's wounds
Open their conceald mouths, and bleed! refresh—
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity.
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells:
Thy deed, inhuman and unnatural,
Provokes this detest most unnatural.
O God, which this blood mad'st, revenge his death!
O earth, which this blood drink'st, revenge his death!
Either, heaven, with lightning strike the murderer dead,
Or, earth, gape open wide, and ent limb quick,
As thou dost swallow up this good king's blood,
Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butchered!
Glo. Lady, you know no rules of charity,
Which renders good for bad, blessings for curses.
Anne. Villain, thou know'st nor law of God nor man:
No beast so fierce, but knows some touch of pity.
Glo. But I know none, and therefore am no beast.
Anne. O wonderful, when devils tell the truth!
Glo. More wonderful, when angels are so angry.
Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
Of these supposed evils to give me leave
By ° circumstance but to acquit myself.
Anne. Vouchsafe, 'dills ° infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me leave
By ° circumstance to curse thy cursed self.
Glo. Fairer than tongue can name thee, let me have Some patient leisure to excuse myself. [make Anne. Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst
No excuse ° current, but to hang thyself.
Glo. By such despair I should accuse myself.
Anne. And, by despairing, shalt thou stand excus'd
For doing worthy vengeance on thyself,
That didst unworthy slaughter upon others.
Glo. Say, that I slew them not?
Anne. Then say they were not slain:
But dead they are, and, devilish slave, by thee.
Glo. I did not kill your husband.
Anne. Why, then he is alive,
Glo. Nay, he is dead; and slain by Edward's hand.
Anne. In thy foul throat thou liest: queen Margaret

* Lady Anne, the betrothed widow of Edward prince of Wales. See King Henry VI. Part II. — b Wench was formerly used in a good sense, as a term of endearment. — c Obscenely. — d i. e., fanatically; mournfully. — e Keycold, i. e., cold as iron. — f Abortive, i. e., born prematurely. — g Countenance. — u Unhappiness, i. e., disposition to miscarry.

° Curest, i. e., malignant; shrivell. — Exclamations. — Example. — It was a tradition very generally received that the wounds of a murdered body bleed afresh when touched by the murderer. — By circumstances, i. e., by circumstantial detail. — Diffused and ignominius unclown, or confused. — No excuse current, i. e., no passable excuse, none that will be allowed or admitted.
Thy murderous falchion smoking in his blood;
The which thou once didst bend against her breast,
But that thy brothers bent aside the point.

Glo. I was provoked by her sordid tongue,
That laid their guilt upon my guiltless shoulders.

Anne. Thou was provoked by thy bloody mind,
That never dreamt on aught but butcheries.
Didst thou not kill this king?

Glo. I grant ye.
[me too
Anne. Dost grant me, hedge-hog? then, God grant
Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed!
O! he was gentle, mild, and virtuous.

[him.
Glo. The fitter for the King of heaven that hath Anne. He is in heaven, where thou shalt never [thither;

Glo. To let him thank me, that hop to send him
For he was fitter for that place than earth.

Anne. And thou unfit for any place but hell. [It.
Glo. Yes, one place else, if you will hear me name
Anne. Some dungeon.
Glo. Your bed-chamber.
Anne. Ill rest beside the chamber where thou liest.
Glo. So will it, madam, till I lie with you.
Anne. I hope so.
Glo. I know so.—But, gentle lady Anne,—
To leave this keen encounter of our wits,
And fill something into a slower method,
Is not the causer of the timeless deaths
Of these Plantagenets, Henry, and Edward,
As blameful as the executioner?

[effect.
Anne. Thou was the cause, and most accur'd
Glo. Your beauty was the cause of that effect;
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So I might live one hour in your sweet bosom.
Anne. If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.
Glo. These eyes could not endure that beauty's reckless.
You should not blemish it, if I stood by:
As all the world is cheered by the sun,
So I by that; it is my day, my life.

[thy life!
Anne. Black night o'ershade thy day, and death
Glo. Curse not thyself, fair creature; thou art beth.
Anne. I would I were, to be reveng'd on thee.
Glo. It is a quarrel most unnatural,
To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee.
Anne. It is a quarrel just and reasonable,
To be reveng'd on him that kill'd my husband.
Glo. He that bereft thee, lady, of thy husband,
Did it to help thee to a better husband.
Anne. His better doth not breathe upon the earth.
Glo. He lives that loves you better than he could.
Anne. Name him.
Glo. Plantagenet.
Anne. Why, that was he.
Glo. The self-same name, but one of better nature.
Anne. Where is he?
Glo. Here: [She spits at him.] Why

[loudly
Anne. 'Wold it were mortal poison, for thy sake!
Glo. Never came poison from so sweet a place.
Anne. Never hung poison on a fouler toad.
Out of my sight! thou dost infect mine eyes.
Glo. Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.
Anne. Would they were 2 basilisks, to strike thee dead!
Glo. I would they were, that I might die at once,
For now they kill me with a living death.
These eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears,
Sham'd their aspects with store of childish drops:

"Their guilt," i.e., the crime of my brothers.—The basilisk was said to destroy its victim by gazing on it.—
I will with all expedient duty see you: For divers unknown reasons, I beseech you, Go me this bearer. —

Anne. With all my heart; and much it joyes me too, To see you are so come penitent.—

Tressel, and Berkley, go along with me. —

Glo. Bid me farewell. —

Anne. 'Tis more than you deserve; But since you teach me how to flatter you, I must, I have said farewell already. —

[Exeunt Lady Anne, Tressel, and Berkley.]

Gent. Towards Chertsey, noble lord! —

Glo. No, to White-Friars; there attend my coming. —

[Exeunt the rest, with the Corse.]

Was ever woman in this humor woul'd? Was ever woman in this humor wou'd? I'll have her, but I will not keep her long. What! I, that kill'd her husband, and his father, To take her in her heart's extremest hate? With curses in her mouth, tears in her eyes, The bleeding witness of my hatred by, [me, Having God, her conscience, and these bars against And I no friends to back my suit within, But the plain devil, and dissembling looks, Are well the world's nothing! Ha! Ha! Hast she forgot already that brave prince, Edward, her lord, whom I, some three months since, Stabb'd in my angry mood at Tewksbury? A sweeter and a lovelier gentleman,— Framed in the prodigality of nature, Young, valiant, wise, and, no doubt, right royal, The spacious world cannot again afford: And will she yet frame her eyes on me? That craft'd the golden pride of this sweet prince, And made her widow to a woful bed? On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety? On me, that halt, and am mis-shapen thus? My dukedom to a beggarly deier, I do make my person all this while: Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot, Myself to be a marvellous proper man. I'll be at charges for a looking-glass; And entertain a score or two of tailors, To study fashions to adorn my body: Since I am crept in favor with myself, I will maintain it with some little cost. But, first, I'll turn you fellow in his grave, And then return basing to my love.—

Shine out, fair sun, till I have bought a glass, That I may see my shadow as I pass. —

[Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter Queen Elizabeth, Lord Rivers, and Lord Grey.

Riv. Have patience, madam: there's no doubt, his majesty Will soon recover his accustom'd health. —

Grey. In that you brook it ill, it makes him worse: Therefore, for God's sake, entertain good comfort, And cheer his grace with quick and merry words. —

Q. Eliz. If he were dead, what would betide on me? Grey. No other harm, but loss of such a lord. —

Q. Eliz. The loss of such a lord includes all harms. Grey. The heavens have bless'd you with a goodly To be your comforter when he is gone. —

[son,

Q. Eliz. Ah! he is young; and his minority Is put unto the trust of Richard Gloster, A man that loves not me, nor none of you.

KING RICHARD III.

ACT I.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Is it concluded, he shall be protector? Q. Eliz. It is determin'd, not concluded yet; But so it must be, if the king miscarry. —

Enter Buckingham and Stanley.

Buck. Good time of day unto your royal grace. Stan. God make your majesty joyful as you have been! —

[Stanley, The countess Richmond, good my lord of To your good prayer will scarcely say amen. Yet, Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife, And loves not me, she, good lord, assure, I hate not you for her proud arrogance. Stan. I do beseech you, either not believe The curious slanders of her false accusers; Or, if she be accus'd on true report, Bear with her weakness, which, I think, proceeds From wayward sickness, and no grounded malice. Q. Eliz. Saw you the king to-day, my lord of Stanley? Stan. But now, the duke of Buckingham, and I, Are come from visiting his majesty. Q. Eliz. What likelihood of his amendment, lords? Buck. Madam, good hope: his grace speaks cheerfully. —

Q. Eliz. God grant him health! Did you eacer Buck. Ay, madam: he desires to make atonement Between the duke of Gloster and your brothers, And between them and my lord chamberlain; And sent to say warn them to his royal presence. Q. Eliz. Would all were well!—But that will I fear, our happiness is at the height. —

Enter Gloster, stamping angrily, with Hastings, and Dorset.

Glo. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it.— Who are they, that complain unto the king, That I, forsooth, am stern, and love them not? By holy Paul, they love his grace but lightly, That fill his ears with such dissentious rumors. Because I cannot flatter, and speak fair, Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and clog, Duck with French noddles and apish courtesy, I must be held a rancorous enemy, Cannot a plain man live, and think no harm, But thus his simple truth must be abused With a great, thy, insinuating Jacks? —

Grey. To whom in all this presence speaks your Glo. To thee, that hast nor honesty, nor grace. When have I injur'd thee? when done thee wrong? — Or thee?—or thee?—or any of your faction? A plague upon you all! His royal grace, (Whom God preserve better than you would wish!) Cannot be quiet scarce a breathing-while, But move with trouble him with lewed complaints. Q. Eliz. Brother of Gloster, you mistake the matter. The king, on his own royal disposition, And not provok'd by any suitor else, Aiming, belike, at your interior hatred, That in your outward action shows itself, Against my children, brothers, and myself, The king does him to send; that thereby he may gather The true from your ill-will, and so remove it. Glo. I cannot tell:—the world is grown so bad, That wren make prey where eagles dare not perch: Since every Jack became a gentleman, There's many a gentle person made a Jack. Q. Eliz.Come, come, we know your meaning, brother Gloster:
KING RICHARD III.

You eny my advancement, and my friends,
God grant, we never may have need of you!
Our brother is imprison’d by your means;
Myself disgrac’d, and the nobility
Heid in contempt; while many great promotions
Are daily given, to enoble those
That sence, some two days since, were worth a noble.
By him that rais’d me to this careful height
From that contented lap which I enjoy’d,
I never did incense his majesty
Against the duke of Clarence; but have been
An earnest advocate to plead for him.
My lord, you do me shameful injury,
Falsely to draw me in these vile suspicions.
Glo. You may deny, that you were not the mean
Of my lord Hastings’ late imprisonment.
Riv. She may, my lord: for—
Glo. She may, lord Rivers,—why, who knows not
She may do more, sir, than denying that:
She may help you to many fair preferments,
And then deny her aiding hand therein,
And lay those honors on your high desert. [she,—
What! that she may,—ay, marry, may Riv.
What, marry, may she?
Glo. What, marry, may she? marry with a king,
A bachelor, and a handsome stripling too.
I wis, your grandam had a worser match.
Q. Eliz. My lord of Gloster, I have too long borne
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs;
By heaven, I will acquaint his majesty,
Of those gross taunts that oft I have endured.
I had rather be a country serving-maid,
Than a great queen, with this condition,
To be thus taunted, scorn’d, and baited at:
Small joy have I in being England’s queen.

Enter Queen Margaret, behind.

Glo. And lessens’d be that small, God, I beseech him! [Aside
Thy honor, state, and seat, is due to me.
Glo. What! threat you me with telling of the king?
Tell him, and spare not: look, what I have said.
I will avouch in presence of the king,
I dare adventure to be sent to the Tower.
’Tis time to speak; my pains are quite forget.
Q. Mar. Out, devil! I do remember them too well. [Aside
Then kill’dst my husband Henry in the Tower,
And Edward, my poor son, at Tewkesbury.
Q. Mar. Ere you were queen, ay, or your husband king,
I was a pack-horse in his great affairs;
A weeder-out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends:
To royalize his blood, I spent mine own.
Q. Mar. Ay, and much better blood than his or thine. [Aside
Glo. In all which time, you, and your husband
Grey,
Were factions for the house of Lancaster;—
And, Rivers, so were you.—Was not your husband
In Margaret’s battle at Saint Alban’s slain?
Let me put in your minds, if you forget,
What you have been eri this, and what you are;
Withal, what I have been, and what I am.
Q. Mar. A murdrous villain, and so still thou art. [Aside
Glo. Poor Clarence did forsake his father Warwick,
Ay, and forsware himself,—which Jesus pardon!—
Q. Mar. Which God revenge! [Aside
Glo. To fight on Edward’s party, for the crown;
And, for his need, poor lord, he is mew’d up.
I would to God, my heart were first like Edward’s,
Or Edward’s soft and pitiful, like mine:
I am too childish-foolish for this world.
Q. Mar. Hie thee to hell for shame, and leave this world,
Thou caddemon! there thy kingdom is.
Riv. My lord of Gloster, in those busy days,
Which here you urge to prove us enemies,
We follow’d then our lord, our sovereign king;
So should we you, if you should be our king.
Glo. If I should be?—I had rather be a pedlar.
Far be it from my heart the thought thereof!
Q. Eliz. As little joy, my lord, as you suppose
You should enjoy, were you this country’s king,
As little joy you may suppose in me,
That I enjoy, being the queen thereof.
Q. Mar. A little joy enjoys the queen thereof; [Aside
For I am she, and altogether joyless.
I can no longer hold me patient.

[Aside
Q. Mar. What! coming forward. They all start.
Hear me, you wrangling pirates, that fall out
In sharing which you have so yield’d from me!
Which of you trembles not, that look on me?
If not, that, I being queen, you bow like subjects,
Yet that, by you depop’d, you quake like rebels!—
Ah! gentle villain, do not turn away. [my sight?
Glo. Fool wrinkled witch, what mas’kst thou in
Q. Mar. But repetition of what thou hast mur’d;
That will I make, before I let thee go.
Glo. Were thou not banished, on pain of death?
Q. Mar. I was; but I do find more pain in banishment,
Than death can yield me here by my abode.
A husband, and a son, thou owst to me,—
And thou, a kingdom—all of you, allegiance:
This sorrow that I have, by right is yours,
And all the pleasure the usurp are mine.
Glo. The curse my noble father laid on thee,
When thou didst crown his warlike brows with paper,
And with thy scorns drew’st rivers from his eyes;
And then, to dry them, gav’st the duke a clout
Steepl’d in the faultless blood of pretty Rutland:—
His curses, then from bitterness of soul
Denou’d against thee, are all fallen upon thee,
And God, not we, hath plag’d all thy blood and
Q. Eliz. So just is God, to right the innocent.
Hast! O! ’twas the foulest deed to slay that babe,
And the most merciless, that e’er was heard of.
Riv. Tyrants themselves wept when it was reported.
Dors. No man but prophesied revenge for it.
Buck. Northumberlander, then present, wept to see it.
Q. Mar. What! were you marling all, before I
Ready to catch each other by the throat, [came,
And turn you all your hatred now on me?
Did York’s dread curse prevail so much with heaven,
That Henry’s death, my lovely Edward’s death,
Their kingdom’s loss, my woful banishment,
Should all but answer for that peevish brat?
Can curses pierce the clouds, and enter heaven?—
Why, then give way, dull clouds, to my quick curses—
Though not by war, by surfeit die your king,
As ours by murder, to make him a king!
Edward, thy son, that now is prince of Wales,
For Edward, our son, that was prince of Wales,
Die in his youth by like untimely violence!
Thyself a queen, for me that was a queen,
Outlive thy glory, like my wretched self!

—A coin rated at Gs. 6d.—Suspicions.—Think.—'My pains'. "t o, my labors."
Long may'st thou live, to wail thy children's death; And see another, as I see thee now, Deck'd in thy rights, as thou art stal'd in mine! Long die thy happy days before thy death; And, after many lengthen'd hours of grief, Die neither mother, wife, nor England's queen! Rivers, and Dorset, you were standers by, And so wast thou, lord Hastings, when my son Was stabb'd with bloody daggers: God, I pray him, That none of you may live his natural age, But by some unluck'd accident cut off! [hag.]

Q. Mar. Have done thy charm, thou hateful wither'd
Q. Mar. And leave out thee? stay, dog, for thou shalt hear me.

If heaven have any grievous plague in store, Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee, O! let them keep it, till thy sins be ripe, And then hurl down their indignation On thee, the trouble of the poor world's peace! The worm of conscience still be-gnaw thy soul! Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou livest, And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends! No show close up that deadly eye of thine, Unless it were to turn thou mourning dream A frights thee with a hell of ugly devils! Thou evisch-mark'd, abortive, rooting *log! Thou that wast seed in thy nativity 'The stain of nature, and the scorn of hell! Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb! Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins! Thou son of honor! thou detested—

[fortune;]

Q. Mar. Poor painted queen, vain flourish of my Why strew'st thou sugar on that b'loate spider, Whose deadly web ensnareth thee about? Fool, fool! thou whet'st a knife to kill thyself. The day's come, that thou shalt wish for me To help thee curse this pois'nous bunch-back'd toad. Hast. Falsely-boding woman, end thy frantic curse, Lost to thy harm thou move our patience.

Q. Mar. Fool shame upon you; you have all mov'd mine. [your duty;]

Rie. Were you so well serv'd, you would be taught Q. Mar. To serve me well, you all should do my duty,

Teach me to be your queen, and you my subjects. O! serve me well, and teach yourselves that duty. Dor. Dispute not with her, she is lunatic. [pert:

Q. Mar. Peace, master marquess! you are *mula-
Your fine new stamp of honor is scarce current. O! that your young nobility could judge, What 'twere to lose it, and be miserable! They that stand high have many blasts to chace them, And if they fall they dash themselves to pieces.

Glo. Good counsel, marry:—learn it, learn it, marquess.

Dor. It touches you, my lord, as much as me.

Glo. Ay, and much more; but I was born so high: Our eyry buildeth in the cedar's top, And dailies with the wind, and scorns the sun.

Q. Mar. And turns the sun to shade,—alas! alas!— Witness my son, now in the shade of death; Whose bright out-shining beams thy cloudy wrath Hath in eternal darkness fold'd up. Your eyry buildeth in our eyry's nest.—

O God! that seest it, do not suffer it: As it was won with blood, last be it so! Buck. Peace, peace! for shame, if not for charity.

Q. Mar. Urge neither charity nor shame to me: Uncharitably with me have you dealt, And shamefully my hopes by you butcher'd. My charity is outrage, life my shame, And in that shame still live my sorrow's rage! Buck. Have done, have done. [hateful;]

Q. Mar. O, princely Buckingham! I'll kiss thy In sign of league and amity with thee: Now, fair befall thee, and thy noble house! Thy garments are not spotted with our blood, Nor thou within the compass of my curse. Buck. Nor no one here; for curses never pass The lips of those that breathe them in the air.

Q. Mar. I will not think but they ascend the sky, And there awake God's gentle-sleeping peace. O Buckingham! I turn this brake heel of yours dream, Look, when he fawns, he bites; and when he bites, His venom tooth will rackle to the death: Have not to do with him, beware of him; Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks on him, And all their ministers attend on him.

Q. Mar. What dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel, And soothe the devil that I warne thee from? O! but remember this another day, When he shall split thy very heart with sorrow, And say, poor Margaret was a prophetess. —Live each of you the subjects to his hate, And be to yours, and all of you to God's! [Exit.

Host. My hair doth stand on end to hear her curses. Riv. And so doth mine. I muse, why she's at liberty.

Glo. I cannot blame her: by God's holy mother, She hath had too much wrong, and I repent My part thereof, that I have done to her.

Q. Eliz. I never did her any, to my knowledge. But you by her had the vanitie of her wrong. I was too hot to do somebody good, That is too cold in thinking of it now. Marry, as for Clarence, he is well requit; He is *frank'd up to fatting for his pains:— God pardon them that are the cause thereof! Riv. A virtuous and a Christian-like conclusion, To pray for them that have done *scath to us.

Glo. So do I ever, being well-advis'd: [Aside; For had I curs'd now, I had curs'd myself. Enter Catesby.

Cates. Madam, his majesty doth call for you,— And for your grace, and you, my noble lords.

Q. Eliz. Catesly, I come.—Lords, will you go Riv. We wait upon your grace. [with me? [Exit all but GLOSTER.

Glo. I do the wrong, and first begin to brawl. The secret mischiefs that I set abroad, I cast unto the good of many others.

Clarence. When I, indeed, have cast in darkness, I do beweep to many simple guls; Namely, to Stanley, Hastings, Buckingham; And tell them, 'tis the queen and her allies, That stir the king against the duke my brother. Now, they believe it; and withal whatc me

KING RICHARD III.

To be reveng'd on Rivers, Vaughan, Grey;
But then I sigh, and, with a piece of scripture,
Tell them, that God bids us do good for evil:
And thus I clothe my naked villainy
With odd old ends stol'n forth of holy writ,
And seem a saint when most I play the devil.

Enter two Murderers.

But soft! here come my executioners.—
How now, my hardy, stout resolved mates!
Are you now going to dispatch this thing?

1 Murd. We are, my lord; and come to have the warrant,
That we may be admitted where he is.

Glo. Well thought upon; I have it here about me.

Scene IV.—London. A Room in the Tower.

Enter Clarence and Brakenbury.

Brak. Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
Clar. O! I have pass'd a miserable night,
So full of fearful dreams, of ugly sights,
That, as I am a Christian faithful man,
I would not spend another such a night,
Though 'twere to buy a world of happy days,
So full of dismal terror was the time.

Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray you, tell me.

Clar. Methought that I had broken from the Tower,
And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy;
And, in my company, my brother Gloster,
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the hatches; thence we look'd toward England,
And citied up a thousand heavy times,
During the wars of York and Lancaster,
That had befal'n us. As we pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought, that Gloster stumbled; and, in falling,
Struck me (that thought to stay him) over-board,
Into the tumbling billows of the main.
O Lord! methought, what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of water in mine ears!
What sights of ugly death within mine eye!
Methought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,
All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea:
Some by in dead men's skulls; and in the holes
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As twere in acorn of eyes) reflecting gems,
That wou'd the slumy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Brak. Had you such leisure, in the time of death,
To gaze upon these secrets of the deep?

Clar. Methought I had, and often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood
Stopt in my soul, and would not let it forth
To find the empty, vast, and wandering sirs;
But smoother'd it within my panting bulk,
Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

Brak. Awak'd you not in this sore agony?
Clar. No, no; my dream was longer'd after life.
O! then began the tempest to my soul!
I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that sour ferryman which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.
The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick,
Who cried aloud:—"What scourg'd for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?" And so he vanish'd. Then, came wandering by
A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood; and he shriek'd out aloud,—
"Clarence is come,—false, 4 fleeting, perjur'd Clarence,—
That stabb'd me in the field by Towkshbury;—
Seize on him, furies! take him unto torment!"
With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that, with the very noise,
I trembling wak'd; and, for a season after,
Could not believe but that I was in hell;
Such terrible impression made my dream.

Brak. No, no; though I thought I was frighten'd you;
I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. Ah, keeper, keeper! I have done these things
That now give evidence against my soul,
For Edward's sake; and, see, how he requires me:
O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute wrath on me alone,
O, spare my guiltless wife and my poor children!—
Keeper, I pr'ythee, sit by me awhile;
My soul is heavy, and I fain would sleep.

[4 Sitting down.]

Brak. I will, my lord: God give your grace good rest.—

[Clarence sleeps.

Brak. What will'st thou, fellow? and how can'st thou lither?

1 Murd. I would speak with Clarence; and I came hither on my legs.

Brak. What! so brief?

2 Murd. 'Tis better, sir, than to be tedious.—
Let him see our commissions; and talk no more.

[4 A Paper delivered to Brakenbury, who reads it.

Brak. I am, in this, commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands.
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless from the meaning:
There lies the duke asleep, and there the keys.
I'll to the king; and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

1 Murd. You may, sir; 'tis a point of wisdom:
Fare you well.

[Exit Brakenbury.}

1 "Vast," i.e. waste; desolate.—
2 "Bulb," i.e. breast.—
3 "Fleeting," i.e. unstable; inconstant.—
4 "The glories of princes are nothing more than empty titles."—
5 "Unfelt imaginations," i.e. unreal gratifications. ---
2 Murd. What, shall we stab him as he sleeps?
1 Murd. No; he'll say, 'twas done cowardly, when he wakes.

2 Murd. Why, he shall never wake until the great judgment day.
1 Murd. Why, then he'll say, we stabb'd him sleeping.
2 Murd. The urging of that word, judgment, hath bred a kind of remorse in me.

1 Murd. What! art thou afraid?
2 Murd. Not to kill him, having a warrant; but to be damn'd for killing him, from the which no warrant can defend me.
1 Murd. I thought, thou hadst been resolute.
2 Murd. So I am, to let him live.
1 Murd. I'll back to the duke of Gloster, and tell him so.

2 Murd. Nay, I pr'ythee, stay a little: I hope, this compassionate humor of mine will change; it was wont to hold me but while one tells twenty.

1 Murd. How dost thou feel thyself now?
2 Murd. 'Faith, some certain drops of conscience are yet within me.

1 Murd. Remember our reward, when the deed's done.

2 Murd. Zounds! he dies: I had forgot the reward.

1 Murd. Where's thy conscience now?
2 Murd. O! in the duke of Gloster's purse.
1 Murd. When he opens his purse to give us our reward, thy conscience flies out.
2 Murd. 'Tis no matter; let it go: there's few or none, will entertain it.

1 Murd. What, if it come to thee again?
2 Murd. I'll not meddle with it; it is a dangerous thing; it makes a man a coward: a man cannot steal, but it accuses him; a man cannot swear, but it checks him; a man cannot lie with his neighbor's wife, but it detects him: 'tis a blushing shame-faced spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom; it fills a man full of obstacles: it made me once restore a purse of gold, that by chance I found: it beggars any man that keeps it: it is turned out of all towns and cities for a dangerous thing; and every man, that means to live well, endeavors to trust to himself, and live without it.

1 Murd. Zounds! it is even now on my elbow, persuading me not to kill the duke.
2 Murd. Take the devil in thy mind, and believe him not: he would insinuate with thee, but to make thee sigh.
1 Murd. I am strong-fram'd; he cannot prevail with me.

2 Murd. Spoke like a tall man, that respects his reputation. Come, shall we fall to work?
1 Murd. Take him on the costard with the hilts of thy sword, and then throw him into the malmsey-butt in the next room.

2 Murd. O, excellent device! and make a sop of him.
1 [him.] Murd. Strike.
2 Murd. No; we'll have reason with him.

Clar. [Waking.] Where art thou, keeper? give me a cup of wine.

[anon.]

1 Murd. You shall have wine enough, my lord, Clar. In God's name, what art thou?
1 Murd. A man, as you are.

Clar. But not, as I am, royal.
1 Murd. Nor you, as we are, loyal.

Clar. Thy voice is thundery, but thy looks are humble.

---

1 Murd. My voice is now the king's, my looks mine own.

Clar. How darkly, and how deadly dost thou speak.

Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?

Who sent you hither? Wherefore do you come?

Both Murd. To, to, to—

Clar. To murder me?

Both Murd. Ay, Ay.

Clar. You scarcely have the hearts to tell me so, and therefore cannot have the hearts to do it.

Wherein, my friends, have I offended you?

1 Murd. Offered us you have not, but the king.

Clar. I shall be reconcil'd to him again. [die.

2 Murd. Never, my lord; therefore, prepare to Clar. Are you drawn forth among a world of men, to slay the innocent? What is my offence?

Where is the evidence that doth accuse me?

What lawful quest have given their verdict up unto the frowning judge? or who pronounce'd the bitter sentence of poor Clarence's death?

Before I be convict by course of law, to threaten me with death is most unlawful.

I charge you, as you hope to have redemption by Christ's dear blood shed for our grievous sins, that you depart, and lay no hands on me:
The deed you undertake is damnable.

1 Murd. What we will do, we do upon command.

2 Murd. And he, that hath commanded, is our king.

Clar. Erroneous vassals! the great King of kings hath in the table of his law commanded, that thou shalt do no murder: will you, then, spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand.

To hurt upon their heads that break his law.

2 Murd. And that same vengeance doth he hurl upon them.

For false forswearing, and for murder too.

Thou didst receive the sacrament, to fight in quarrel of the house of Lancaster.

1 Murd. And, like a traitor to the name of God, Didst break that vow; and, with thy treacherous blade, Unripp'd the bowels of thy sovereign's son.

2 Murd. Whom thou wast sworn to cherish and keep.

To us.

1 Murd. How canst thou urge God's dreadful law when thou hast broke it in such a dear degree?

Clar. Alas! for whose sake did I that ill deed? For Edward, for my brother, for his sake; he sends you not to murder me for this; for in that sin he is as deep as I.

If God will be avenged for the deed, O! know you yet, he doth it publicly.

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arm:

He needs no indirect or lawless course,

To cut off those that have offended him.

1 Murd. Who made thee, then, a bloody minister,

When gallant-springing, brave Plantagenet,

That princely novice, was struck dead by thee?

Clar. By his brother's love, the devil, and my rage

1 Murd. They, their brother's love, our duty, and thy Provoke us lither now to slaughter thee. [faunts,

Clar. If you do love my brother, hate not me;

I am his brother, and I love him well.

If you are bri'd for $meed, go back again,

And I will send you to my brother Gloster,

Who shall reward you better for my life,

Than Edward will for tidings of my death.

2 Murd. You are deceiv'd: your brother Gloster hates you.

Clar. O! no; he loves me, and he holds me dear

Go you to him from me.

40 Quest.” i.e., inquest; jury. = "Dear," i.e., great.—f Youth." Reward.
KING RICHARD III.

Enter King Edward, led in sick, Queen Elizabeth, Dorset, Rivers, Hastings, Buckingham, Grey, and others.

K. Edw. Why, so:—now have I done a good day’s work.—

*Reward.

You peers, continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassy
From my Redeemer to redeem me hence:
And more than peace my soul shall part to heaven,
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth.
Rivers, and Hastings, take each other’s hand;
Dissemble not your bitter hatred, swear your love.
Riv. By heaven, my soul is purd’g’d from grudging hate;
And with this hand I seal my true heart’s love.
Host. So thrive I, as I truly swear the like.
K. Edw. Take heed, you daily not before your king;
Lest He, that is the supreme King of kings,
Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
Either of you to be the other’s end.
Host. So prosper I, as I swear perfect love.
Riv. And I, as I love Hastings with my heart.
K. Edw. Madam, yourself are not exempt from this,—
Nor you, son Dorset,—Buckingham, nor you:
You have been fictitious one against the other.
Wife, love lord Hastings, let him kiss your hand;
And what you do, do it unfeignedly,
[member
Q. Efr. These, Hastings:—I will never more re-
Our former hatred, so thrice—A,mine.
K. Edw. Dorset, embrace him:—Hastings, love lord marquess.
Dor. This interchange of love, I here protest,
Upon my part shall be inviolable.
Host. And so swear I.
[league
K. Edw. Now, princely Buckingham, seal thou this
With thy embracements of my wife’s allies,
And make me happy in your unity.
Buck. Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate
Upon your grace, [To the Queen.] but with all dute-ous love
Doth cherish you, and yours, God punish me
With hate in those where I expect most love.
When I have most need to employ a friend,
And most assured that he is a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he unto me. This do I beg of heaven,
When I am cold in love to you, or yours.
K. Edw. A pleasing cordial, princely Buckingham,
Is this thy vow unto my sickly heart.
There wanteth now our brother Gloster here,
To make the blessed period of this peace. [duke.
Buck. And, in good time, here comes the noble
Enter Gloster.

Glo. Good-morrow to my sovereign king, and
And, princely peers, a happy time of day! [queen.
K. Edw. Happy, indeed, as we have spent the Gloister, we have done deeds of charity; [day.—
Made peace of enmity, fair love of hate,
Between these swelling wrong-incensed peers.
Glo. A blessed labor, my most sovereign lord.—
Among this princely heap, if any here,
By false intelligence, or wrong surmise,
Hold me a foe;
If I unwarily, or in my rage,
Have ought committed that is hardly borne
To say in this presence, I desire
To reconcile me to his friendly peace:
’Tis death to me, to be at enmity;
I hate it, and desire all good men’s love.—
First, madam, I entreat true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my dutious service;
Of you, my noble cousin Buckingham,
If ever any grudge were lodg’d between us;

b "Dissemble not your hatred," etc. i.e., ‘Do not merely cloak and conceal your hatred, but swear to love each other.’
Of you, and you, lord Rivers, and of Dorset,
That all without desert have frown'd on me;
Of you, lord Woodville, and lord Scales, of you;
Dukes, earls, lords, gentlemen; indeed, of all.
I do not know that Englishman alive,
Whom with my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night.

I thank my God for my humility
[Aside.]
Q. Eliz. A holy day shall this be kept hereafter;
I would to God, all strife were so well compounded,
—My sovereign lord, I do beseech your highness
To take our brother Clarence to your grace.

Glo. Why, madam, have I offer'd love for this,
To be so flouted in this royal presence?
Who knows not, that the gentle duke is dead!

You do him injury to scorn his corse.
[he is?]
K. Edw. Who knows not, he is dead! who knows
Q. Eliz. All-seeing heaven, what a world is this!

Buck. Look I so pale, lord Dorset, as the rest?
Dor. Ay, my good lord; and no man in the presence,
But his red or sober hath forsook his cheeks.
K. Edw. Is Clarence dead? the order was rever's'd.
Glo. But he, poor man, by your first order died,
And that a winged Mercury did bear;
Some tardy cripple bare the countermand,
That came too late to see him buried.

God grant, that some, less noble, and less loyal,
Nearer in bloody thoughts, and not in blood,
Deserve not worse than wretched Clarence did,
And yet go current from suspicion.

Enter STANLEY.

Stan. A boon, my sovereign, for my service done!
[Knelt.
K. Edw. I pr'ythee, peace: my soul is full of sorrow.
Stan. I will not rise, unless your highness hear me.
K. Edw. Then say at once, what is it thou requestest.

Stan. The *forfeit, sovereign, of my servant's life;
Who slew to-day a riotous gentleman,
Lately attendant on the duke of Norfolke.
[death, K. Edw. Have I a tongue to doom my brother's
And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave?
My brother kill'd no man, his fault was thought,
And yet his punishment was bitter death.
Who sued to me for him? who, in my wrath,
Kneel'd at my feet, and bade me be advis'd?
Who spoke of brotherhood? who spoke of love?
Who told me, how the poor soul did forsake
The mighty Warwick, and did fight for me?
Who told me, in the field at Tewksbury,
When Oxford had me down, he rescu'd me,
And said, "Dear brother, live, and be a king!"
Who told me, when we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did tap me
Even in his garments; and did give himself,
All this and asked, to the numb-cold night?
All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind.

But when your carters, or your waiting-vassals,
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight grant on your knees for pardon, pardon;
And I, unjustly too, must gruit in you.
But for my brother not a man would speak,
Nor I, ungracious, speak unto myself.
For him, poor soul,—The proudest of you all
Have been beholding to him in his life,

Yet none of you would once beg for his life.—
O God! I fear, thy justice will take hold
On me, and you, and mine, and yours, for this.—
Come, Hastings, Sprithee help me to my closet.
Ah, poor Clarence!
[Exeunt King, Queen, Hastings, Rivers, Dorset, and GREIT.

Glo. This is the fruit of rashness,—Mark'd'ly you not,
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence's death? O!
they did urge it still unto the king:
God will revenge it. Come, lords; will you go,
To comfort Edward with our company?
Buck. We wait upon your grace. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—London.

Enter the Duchess of York, with a Son and Daughter of CLARENCE.

Son. Good grandam, tell us, is our father dead?
Duch. No, boy.
Dawh. Why do you weep so? and oft beat your
And cry,—"O Clarence, my unhappy son!"

Son. Why do you look on us, and shake your head
And say,—"Children, children, wretches, castaways.
If that our noble father were alive?"

Duch. My pretty 'cousins, you mistake me both,
I do lament the sickness of the king,
As loath to lose him, not your father's death.
It was lest sorrow to wait one that's lost.

Son. Then you conclude, my grandam, he is dead,
The king mine uncle is to blame for it:
God will revenge it: whom I will importune
With earnest prayers all to that effect.

Dawh. And so will I.

[whell.
Duch. Peace, children, peace! the king doth hear
Incapable and shallow innocents,
You cannot guess who canus'd your father's death.
Son. Grandam, we can; for my good uncle GLOTER
Told me, the king, provok'd to it by the queen,
Devil's impeachments to imprison him:
And when my uncle told me so, he went,
And pitted me, and kindly kiss'd my cheek;
Bade me rely on him, as on my father,
And he would love me dearly as a child.
[shape.
Duch. Ah! that deceit should steal such gentle
And with a virtuous visor hide deep vice!
He is my son, ay, and therein my shame,
Yet from my dugs he drew not this deceit.
Son. Think you, my uncle did dissemble, grandam?
Duch. Ay, boy.
Son. I cannot think it.—Hark! what noise is this:
Enter Queen Elizabeth, distraetedly; Rivers and Dorset, following her.

Q. Eliz. Ah! who shall hinder me to wait and
To chide my fortune, and torment myself?
[weep, I'll join with black despair against my soul,
And to myself become an enemy.

Duch. What cause can this scene of rude impatience?
Q. Eliz. To make an act of tragic violence.
Edward, my lord, thy son, our king, is dead!
—Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves, that wait their sap?
If you will live, lument; if die, be brief;
That our swift-winged souls may catch the king's
Or, like the cast-aways, for ever lost?
To his new kingdom of ever-changing light?
Duch. Ah! so much interest have I in thy sorrow,
As I had title in thy noble husband.

c 'Cousin was used formerly as a general term of kindred.
The duchess is here addressing her grandchildren.—d "In capable," c. e, unintelligent.—c Mask.—Feign.
Now cheer each other in each other’s love:
Though we have spent our harvest of this king,
We are to reap the hardship of his son.
The broken lance of your high-swinden’s hate,
But lately splinter’d, knit, and join’d together,
Must gently be preserve’d, cherish’d, and kept:
So seemeth good, that, with some little train,
Forthwith from Ludlow the young prince be set
Hither to London, to be crown’d our king.

Buck. Marry, my lord, lost, by a multitude,
The new-heel’d wound of malice should break out;
Which would be so much the more dangerous,
By how much the estate is green, and yet ungovern’d;
Where every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself,
As well the fear of harm, as harm apparent,
In my opinion, ought by the prevented.

Glo. I hope the king made peace with all of us;
And the compact is firm and true in me.

Ric. And so in me; and so, I think, in all:
Yet, since it is but green, it should be put
To no apparent likelihood of breach,
Which, haply, by much company might be urg’d,
Therefore, I say with noble Buckingham,
That it is meet so few should fetch the prince.

Hast. And so say I.

Glo. Then be it so; and go we to determine
Who they shall be that shall straight shall post to Ludlow
Madam,—and you my sister,—will you go
To give your censures in this business?

[Exeunt all but BUCKINGHAM and GLOSTER.

Buck. My lord, whoever journeys to the prince,
For God’s sake, let us two stay at home;
For by the way I’ll sort occasion,
As index to the story we late talk’d of,
To part the queen’s proud kindred from the prince.

Glo. My other self, my counsel’s consistory,
My oracle, my prophet,—My dear cousin,
As a child, will go by the prevention
Towards Ludlow then, for we’ll not stay behind.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Street.

Enter two Citizens, meeting.

Cit. 1. Good morrow, neighbor: whither away so fast?

Cit. 2. I promise you, I scarcely know myself.

Hear you the news abroad?

Cit. 1. Yes; that the king is dead.

Cit. 2. Ill news, by’r lady; seldom comes the better:
I fear, I fear, ’twill prove a gloidy world.

Enter another Citizen.

Cit. 3. Neighbors, God speed!

Cit. 1. Give you good morrow, sir.

Cit. 3. Dost the news hold of good king Edward’s death?

Cit. 2. Ay, sir, it is too true; God help, the while!

Cit. 3. Then, masters, look to see a troublesome world.

Cit. 1. No, no; by God’s good grace, his son shall reign.

Cit. 3. Woe to that land that’s govern’d by a child!

Cit. 2. In him there is a hope of government.

With, in his young, council under him;
And, in his full and ripest years, himself,
No doubt, shall then, and till then, govern well.

Cit. 1. So stood the state, when Henry the Sixth
Was crown’d in Paris at nine months old.

[As Index.]}
Enter the Archbishop of York, the young Duke of York, Queen Elizabeth, and the Duchess of York.

Arch. Last night, I heard, they lay at Stony-Stratford; and at Northampton they do rest to-night: for, to-morrow, or next day, they will be here.

Duch. I long with all my heart to see the prince: I hope, he is much grown since last I saw him.

Q. Eliz. But I hear, no; they say, my son of York hath almost overtaken him in his growth.

York. Ay, mother, but I would not have it so.

Duch. Why, my young cousin? it is good to grow. For, when I am Grandam, one night, as I did sit at supper, my uncle Rivers, told how I did grow. More than my brother; "Ay," quoth my uncle Gloucester, "small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow space!"

And since, me-thinks, I would not grow so fast, because sweet flowers are slow, and weeds make haste.

Duch. 'Good faith, good faith, the saying did not In him that did object the same to thee: He was the wretched'st thing when he was young, so long a growing, and so leisurely, That, if his rule were true, he should be gracious.

Arch. And so, no doubt, he is, my gracious madam.

Duch. I hope, he is; but yet let mothers doubt.

York. Now, by my troth, if I had been remember'd, I could have given my uncle's grace a flow. To touch his growth nearer than he touch'd mine.

Duch. How, my young York? I pray thee, let me hear it.

York. Marty, they say, my uncle grew so fast, That he could gnaw a crust at two hours old: "Pans full two years ere I could get a tooth."

KING RICHARD III. ACT III.

Enter a Messenger.

Arch. Here comes a messenger: what news 1 with you?

Mess. Such news, my lord, as grieveth me to report.

Q. Eliz. How doth the prince?

Mess. Well, madam, and in health.

Duch. What is thy news?

Mess. Lord Rivers and lord Grey are sent to Pom-Pom, and with them sir Thomas Vaughan, prisoners.

Duch. Who hath committed them?

Mess. The mighty dukes, Gloucester and Buckingham.

Arch. For what offence?

Mess. The sum of all I can I have disclosed:
Why, or for what, the nobles were committed, Is all under Heaven to me, my gracious lady.

Q. Eliz. Ah me! I see the ruin of my house.

The tiger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind; Insulting tyranny begins to set

Upon the innocent and aweless throne:
Welcome, destruction, blood, and massacre!
I see, as in a map, the end of all.

Duch. Accursed and unquiet wrangling days, How many of you have mine eyes beheld? My husband lost his life to get the crown; Too often up and down my sons were tossed, For me to joy, and weep, their gain, and loss: And being seated, and domestic broils Clean over-blown, themselves, the conquerors, Make war upon themselves; brother to brother.

Blood to blood, self against self:—O! preposterous And frantic outrage, and thy damned spleen; Or let me die, to look on death no more. [Tears.—

Q. Eliz. Come, come, my boy; we will to sanctuary, farewell.

Duch. Stay, I will go with you.

Arch. My gracious lady, go, [To the Queen. And thither bear your treasure and your goods. For my part, I'll resign unto your grace The seal I keep: and so betide to me, As well I tender you, and all of yours.

Go; I'll conduct you to the sanctuary. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—London. A Street.

The Trumpets sound. Enter the Prince of Wales, Gloucester, Buckingham, Cardinal Bourchier, and others.

Buck. Welcome, sweet prince, to London, to your chamber. [Sign:

Glo. Welcome, dear cousin, my thoughts' sover.
The weary way hath made you melancholy.

Prince. No, uncle; but our crosses on the way Have made it tedious, wearisome, and heavy: I want more uncles here to welcome me.

--"Parlows," i.e., parlous; amazing—"To jet," i.e., to embroil—London was anciently called Camera Regis, the King's Chamber.
Scene 1. King Richard III.

Glo. Sweet prince, the untainted virtue of your heart yet div'd into the world's delight: [years
No more can you distinguish of a man,
Than of his outward show; which, God he knows,
Seldom, or never, jumps with the heart.
Those uncles, which you want, were dangerous;
Your grace attended to their sugar'd words,
But look'd not on the poison of their hearts:
God keep him from them, and from such false friends!
Prince. God keep me from false friends! but they were none. [you.
Glo. My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet
Enter the Lord Mayor, and his Train.
May. God bless your grace with health and happy days!
Prince. I thank you, good my lord; and thank you all. [Exeunt Mayor, &c.
I thought my mother, and my brother York,
Would long ere this have met us on the way:
Fie! what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not to tell us whether they will come or no.

Enter Hastings.

Buck. And in good time here comes the sweating lord. [com.
Prince. Welcome, my lord. What, will our mother
Hast. On what occasion, God he knows, not I,
The queen your mother, and your brother York,
Have taken sanctuary: the tender prince
Would fain have come with me to meet your grace,
But by his mother was prevented.
Buck. Fie! what an indirect and peevish course
Is this of hers.—Lord cardinal, will your grace
Pernahde the queen to send the duke of York
Unto his princely brother presently?
If she deny, lord Hastings, go with him,
And from her jealous arms pluck him perforce.
Card. My lord of Buckingham, if my weak oratory
Can from his mother win the duke of York,
Anon expect him here; but if she be obdurate
To mild entreaties, God in heaven forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of blessed sanctuary! not for all this land,
Would I be guilty of so great a sin.
Buck. You are too strict and abstinent, my lord,
Too ceremonious, and *traditional.
Weigh it but with the *goodness of his age,
You break not sanctuary in seizing him.
The benefit thereof is always granted to those whose dealings have deserve'd the place,
And those who have the wit to claim the place;
This prince hath neither claim'd it, nor deserve'd it;
Therefore, in mine opinion, cannot love it;—
Then, taking him from thence, that is not there,
You break no privilege nor charter there.
Of't have I heard of sanctuary men,
But sanctuary children, ne'er till now. [once.—
Card. My lord, you shall o'er-rule my mind for Come on, lord Hastings; will you go with me?
Hast. I go, my lord.
Prince. God help lords, make all the speedy haste you may. [Exeunt Cardinal and Hastings.
Say, uncle Gloster, if our brother come,
Where shall we sejourn till our coronation?
Glo. Where it seems best unto your royal self.
If my counsel you, some day, or two,
Your highness shall repose you at the Tower:
Then, where you please, and shall be thought most fit
For your best health and recreation.
Prince. I do not like the Tower, of any place.

* "Jumps," i. e., discreet. — "Perforce," i. e., by force.
* "Too ceremonious and traditional," i. e., too superstitious and adherent to old customs.
* Recounted.—" "The formal Vice," i. e., the sensible Vice, the bulwark in the old plays.—" Lightly," i. e., commonly.
* Lately. "I shall weigh it lightly," &c., &c., "I care but little for it, even were it heavier than it is."
KING RICHARD III.

ACT III.

He thinks that you should bear me on your shoulders.

Buck. With what a sharply pointed wit he reasons: To mitigate the scorn he gives his uncle, He gently and to the point antaunts himself. So cunning, and so young, is wonderful.

Glo. My lord, will't please your grace to pass along?

Myself, and my good cousin Buckingham,
Will to your mother, to entreat of her
To meet you at the Tower, and welcome you.

York. What if I will you go unto the Tower, my lord?

Prince. My lord protector needs will have it so.

York. I shall not sleep in quiet at the Tower.

Glo. Why, what should you fear?

York. Marry, my uncle Clarence angry ghost:

My granddad told me, he was murder'd there.

Prince. I fear no uncle's dead.

Glo. Nor none that live, I hope,

Prince. An if they live, I hope, I need not fear.

But, come, my lord, and, with a heavy heart,
Thinking on them, go I unto the Tower.

[A scatet. Excunl Prince. York, Hastings, Cardinal, and Attendants.

Buck. Think you, my lord, this little prating York Was not increased by his noble manner,
To keep and screen you thus oppressiously?

Glo. No doubt, no doubt. O! 'tis a perilous boy:

Bold, quick, ingenious, forward,

He's all the mother's from the top to toe.

Buck. Well, let them rest.—Come hither, Catesby. Thou art sworn as deeply to effect what we intend,
As closely to conceal what we impart.

Thou knowest our reasons urg'd upon the way:—

What think'st thou? is it not an easy matter
To make William lord Hastings of our mind,
For the instalment of this noble duke
In the seat royal of this famous isle?

Cate. He for his father's sake so loves the prince,

That he will not be won to aught against him.

Buck. What think'st thou then of Stanley? will not he?

Cate. He will do all in all as Hastings doth.

Buck. Well then, no more but this. Go, gentle Catesby,

And, as it were afar off, sound thou lord Hastings,

How he doth stand affected to our purpose;

And summon him to-morrow to the Tower,

To sit about the coronation.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,

Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:

If he be loden, icy, cold, unwilling,

Be then so too, and so break off the talk,

And give us notice of his inclination;

For we to-morrow hold divided councils,

Wherein thyself shalt highly be employ'd.

Glo. Command me to lord William: tell him, Catesby—

His ancient knot of dangerous adversaries

To-morrow are let blood at Pomfret-castle;

And bid my lord, for joy of this good news,

Give mistress Shore one gentle kiss the more.

Buck. Good Catesby, go: effect this business speedily.

Cate. My good lords both, with all the heed I can.

Glo. Shall we hear from you, Catesby, ere we sleep?

Cate. You shall, my lord.

Glo. At Crosby-place, there shall you find us both.

Buck. Now, my lord, what shall we do, if we perceive

Lord Hastings will not yield to our compacts?

"Incensed," i.e., incited; instigated.—"Capable," i.e., intelligent.—"Divided," i.e., separate.

Glo. Chop off his head, man:—somewhat we will, will we not?

And, look, when I am king, claim thou of me The earldom of Hereford, and all the moveables, Whereof the king, my brother, was possess'd.

Buck. I'll claim that promise at your grace's hand.

Glo. And look to have it yielded with all kindness.

Come, let us sup betimes, that afterwards
We may digest our 4 compacts in some form.

Excunl.

SCENE II.—Before Lord Hastings' House.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord! my lord!—

[Knocking at the door.

Hast. [Within]. Who knocks?

Mess. One from the lord Stanley.

Hast. [Within]. What is 't o'clock?

Mess. Upon the stroke of four.

Enter Hastings.

Hast. Cannot 2 lord Stanley sleep these tedious nights?

Mess. So it appears by that I have to say.

First, he commends him to your noble self.

Hast. What then?

Mess. Then certify's thy lordship, that this night He drew the 3 hour had rais'd off his helm:

Besides, he says, there are two councils kept;

And that may be determin'd at the one,

Which may make you and him to rue at the other.

Therefore, he sends to know your lordship's pleasure.

If you will presently take horse with him, [are,—

And with all speed post with him toward the north,

To shun the danger that his soul diverses.

Hast. Go, follow, go; return unto thy lord.

Bid him not fear the separated council:

His 'honor and myself are at the one,

And at the other is my good friend Catesby;

Where nothing can proceed that toucheth us,

Whereof I shall not have intelligence.

Tell him, his fears are shallow, without 6 instance:

And for his dreams—I wonder he's so simple

To trust the mockery of unquiet shimmers.

To fly the boar, before the boar pursues,

Wore to incense the boar to follow us,

And make pursuit, where he did mean no chase.

Go, bid thy master rise and come to me;

And we will both together to the Tower,

Where, he shall see, the boar will use us kindly.

Mess. I'll go, my lord, and tell him what you say.

Exil.

Enter Catesby.

Cate. Many good morrows to my noble lord!

Hast. Good morning, Catesby: you are early stirring.

What news, what news, in this our tottering state?

Cate. It is a reeling world, indeed, my lord;

And, I believe, will never stand upright,

Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

Hast. How? wear the garland! dost thou mean

Cate. Ay, my good lord.

The crown?

Hast. I'll have this crown of mine cut from my shoulders,

Before I'll see the boar so foul misplace'd.

But canst thou guess that he doth aim at it? [ward

Cate. Ay, on my life; and hopes to find you for—

Upon his party for the gain thereof:

4 Conspiracies.—By the boar, throughout this scene is meant Glorster, in allusion to his crest.—His honor, was the usual address to noblemen in Shakespeare's time.—Without instance, i.e., without cause, motive.
And thereupon he sends you this good news,—
That this same very day your enemies,
The kindred of the queen, must die at Pomfret.

Host. Indeed, I am no mourner for that news,
Because they have been still my adversaries;
But, that I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
To lan my master's heirs in true descent,
God knows, I will not do it, to the death.

Cate. God keep your lordship in that gracious mind.

Host. But I shall laugh at this a twelve-month hence.

That they which brought me in my master's hate,
I live to look upon their tragedy.
Well, Catesby, ere a fortnight make me older,
I'll send some packing that yet think not on't.

Cate. 'Tis a vile thing to die, my gracious lord,
When men are unprepar'd, and look not for it.

Host. O monstrous, monstrous! and so falls it out
With Rivers, Vaughan, Grey; and so 'twill do
With some men else, who think themselves as safe
As thou, and I; who, as thou know'st, are dear
To princely Richard, and to Buckingham.

Cate. The princes both make high account of you;
For they account his head upon the bridge. [Aside.

Host. I know they do, and I have well deserv'd it.

Enter STANLEY.

Come on, come on; where is your bon-spear, man?
Fear you the bear, and go so unprouv'd?

Stem. My lord, good morrow.—good morrow,
You may jest on, but, by the holy Cross, [Catesby.—
I do not like these several councils, I.

Host. My lord, I hold my life as dear as yours;
And never, in my days, I do protest,
Was it so precious to me as 'tis now.

Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am? [London.

Stem. The lords at Pomfret, when they rode from
Were founc'd, and suppos'd their states were sure,
And they, indeed, had no cause to mistrust;
But yet, you see, how soon the day o'er-cast.

This sudden stab of rurcer I misdoubt:
Pray God, I say, I prove a needless coward!

What, shall we toward the Tower? the day is spent.

Host. Come, come, come, have with you.—Wot you not, my lord, my lord?

To-day, the lords you talk of are beheaded. [heads.

Stem. They for their truth might better wear their Than some that have accus'd them wear their hats.

But come, my lord, let's away.

Enter a Pursuivant.

Host. Go on before; I'll talk with this good fellow.

[Exeunt STANLEY and CATESBY.

How now, sirrah! how goes the world with thee?

Purs. The better, that your lordship please to ask.

Host. I tell thee, man, 'tis better with me now,
Than when thou met'st me last, where now we meet;
Then, was I going prisoner to the Tower,
By the suggestion of the queen's allies;
But now, I tell thee, (keep it to thyself!)
This day those enemies are put to death,
And I in better state than ere I was.

Purs. God keep it to your honor's good content.

Host. Granercy, fellow. There, drink that for me.

Purs. I thank your honor.

[Exeunt Pursuivant.

Enter a Priest.

Pr. Well met, my lord; I am glad to see your honor.

Host. I thank thee, good sir John, with all my

I'm in your debt for your last *exercise;
Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.

Pr. I'll wait upon your lordship.

Enter Buckingham.

Buck. What, talking with a priest, lord chamberlain?

Your friends at Pomfret, they do need the priest:
Your honor hath no striving work in hand.

Host. 'Good faith, and when I met this holy man,
The men you talk of came into my mind,
What, go you toward the Tower?

Buck. I do, my lord; but long I cannot stay there:
I shall return before your lordship thence.

Host. Nay, like enough, for I stay dinner there.

Buck. And supper too, although thou know'st it not.

Come, will you go?

Host. I'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Pomfret. Before the Castle.

Enter Rattcliff, with a Guard, conducting Rivers,
Grey, and Vaughan, to execution.

Riv. Sir Richard Rattcliff, let me tell thee this:
To-day shalt thou behold a subject die
For truth, for duty, and for loyalty.

[you! Grey. God bless the prince from all the pack of
A knot you are of damned blood-suckers. [after.

Vaug. You live, that shall cry woe for this here-
Ret. Despatch! the limit of your lives is out.

Riv. O Pomfret, Pomfret! O, thou bloody prison,
Fatal and ominous to noble peers!
Within the guilty closure of thy walls,
Richard the Second here was hack'd to death:
And, for more slander to thy dismal seat,
We give to thee our guiltless blood to drink.

Grey. Now Margaret's curse is fallen upon our heads.

When she exclaimed on Hastings, you, and me,
For standing by when Richard stabb'd her son.

Riv. Then curs'd she Richard, then curs'd she Buckingham,
Then curs'd she Hastings.—O, remember, God,
To hear thy prayer for them, as now for us!

And for his sister, and her princely sons,
Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be split.

Ret. Make haste: the hour of death is expir'd.

Riv. Come, Grey,—come, Vaughan;—let us here embrace:

Farewell, until we meet again in heaven. [Exeunt.

Buckingham, STANLEY, HASTINGS, the Bishop of ELY, CATESBY, LORD, and others, sitting at a
Table: Officers of the Council attending.

Host. Now, noble peers, the cause why we are met
Is to determine of the coronation:
In God's name, speak, when is this royal day?

Buck. Are all things ready for the royal time?

Stem. They are; and want but *nomination.

Ely. To-morrow, then, I judge a happy day.

Buck. Who knows the lord protector's mind herein?

Ely. Who is most *inward with the noble duke?

Ely. Your grace, we think, should soonest know his mind.

Buck. We know each other's faces; for our hearts,
He knows no more of mine, than I of yours.

* Exercise probably means religious exhortation or lecture.
   * Throwing his Purse. i. e., i suspect it of danger.
   * Know. d = Hold. i.e., continue.
   * Threw. i.e., the naming of a day for the coronation. — * Inward, i.e., intimate; confidential.
Chat's thou to me of its? — Thou art a traitor:—
Off with his head! — now, by Saint Paul I swear,
I will not dine until I see the same.—

Loved, and Ratcliff, look that it be done:
The rest, that love me, rise, and follow me.

[Exit Council, with Gloster and Buckingham.

Hast. Woe, woe, for England! not a whiff for me;
For I, too, fond, might have prevented this.
Stanley did dream the bear did raise his helm;
And I did scorn it I the pursuivant,
As too triumphant, how mine enemies,
To-day at Ponsfret bloodily were butcher'd,
And I myself secure in grace and favor.
O, Margaret, Margaret! now thy heavy curse
Is lighted on poor Hastings' wretched head.

Rad. Come, come; despatch, the duke would be at dinner.

Make a short shrift; he longs to see your head.

Hast. O, momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your good looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast;
Ready with every nod to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Lov. Come, come, despatch; 'tis bootless to exclaim.

Hast. O, bloody Richard! — miserable England!
I prophesy the fearful'st time to thee,
That ever wretched age hath look'd upon.

Come, lead me to the block; bear him my head:
They smile at me, who shortly shall be dead.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V. — The Same. The Tower Walls.

Enter Gloster and Buckingham, in dusty armor, mourning, ill-favored, 1 and in haste.

Glo. Come, cousin, canst thou quench, and change thy color,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin, and stop again,
As if thou wast distraught, and mad with terror?

Buck. Tut! I can counterfeit the deep tragedian;
Speak and look back, and pry on every side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion; ghastly looks
Are at my service, like enforced smiles;
And both are ready in their offices,
At any time to grace my stratagems.
But what, is Catesby gone?

Glo. He is: and, see, he brings the mayor along.

Enter the Lord Mayor and Catesby.

Buck. Lord Mayor,—

Glo. Look to the drawbridge there!

Buck. Hark! a drum.

Glo. Catesby, o'erlook the walls.

Buck. Lord Mayor, the reason we have sent,—

Glo. Look back, defend thee: here are enemies.

Buck. God and our innocency defend and guard us!

Enter Lovel and Ratcliff, with Hastings' Head, on a Spear.

Glo. Be patient, they are friends; Ratcliff, and Lovel.

Lor. Here is the head of that ignoble traitor,
The dangerous and unsuspected Hastings.

1 A foot-cloth horse was a paltry covered with housings —

Confession.— Distracted.— * "Intending," i. e., pretending.
SCENE VII. — The Same. The Court of Baynard's Castle.

Enter GLOSTER at one Door, and BUCKINGHAM at another.

Glo. How now, how now! what say the citizens? Buck. Now by the holy mother of our Lord, the citizens are mum, say not a word. [Exit.

Glo. Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's child? Buck. I did; with his contract with Lady J. Lucy. And his contract by deputy in France: Th' insatiate greediness of his desires, and his b' enforcement of the city wives; His tyranny for titles; his own bastardy, As being got, your father then in France; And dis-resemblance, being not like the duke. Withal I did infer your lineaments, Being the right idea of your father, Both in your form and nobleness of mind: Laid open all your victories in Scotland, Your discipline in war, wisdom in peace, Your hours of virtue, fair humility of soul. Indeed, left nothing fitting for your purpose Untouch'd, or slightly handled in discourse: And, when my oratory drew toward end, I bade them that did love their country's good, Cry — 'God save Richard, England's royal king!' Glo. And did they so? Buck. No; so, God help me, they spake not a word; But, like dumb statues, or breathing stones, Being nothing like the noble duke my father. Yet touch this sparingly, as 'twere for off? Because, my lord, you know, my mother lives.

Buck. Doubt not, my lord, I'll play the orator, As if the golden fee, for which I plead, Were for myself; and so, my lord, adieu. [Exit.

Glo. If you thrive well, bring them to Baynard's Where you shall find me well accompanied, With reverend fathers, and well-learned bishops.

Buck. I go; and, towards that hour o'clock, Look for the news that the Guildhall affords.

[Exit BUCKINGHAM.

Glo. Go, Lovel, with all speed to doctor Shaw;—
Go thou [To CAT.] to friar Penker:—bid them both Meet me within this hour at Baynard's castle.

[Exit LOVEL and CATESBY.

Now will I go, to take some privy order, To draw the brats of Clarence out of sight; And to give order, that no manner person Have any time recourse unto the princes. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—A Street.

Enter a Scrivener, 2 with a writing.

Scrie. Here is the indictment of the good lord Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd; [Hastings; That it may be to-day read o'er in Paul's: And mark how well the sequel hangs together. Eleven hours I have spent to write it over, For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me. The precedent was full as long a doing; And yet this now shows how high a liv'd, Untainted, unexamin'd, free, at liberty.

Here's a good world the while!—Who is so gross, That cannot see this palpable device? Yet who so bold, but says he sees it not? Bad is the world; and all will come to nought, When such ill dealing must be seen for thought. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Baynard's Castle.

Enter Buckingham. Buckingham.

Glo. So dear I lov'd the man, that I must weep. I took him for the plainest harmless creature, That breath'd upon the earth a Christian; Made him my book, wherein my soul recorded The history of all her secret thoughts: So smooth he daub'd his vice with show of virtue, That, his apparent open guilt omitted, I mean his conversation with Shore's wife, He liv'd from all attainder of suspects. [traitor Buck. Well, well, he was the covent'st shelter'd That ever liv'd. Would you imagine, or almost believe, Were't not by great preservation We live to tell it, that the subtle traitor This day had plotted, in the council house, To murder me, and my good lord of Gloster? May. Had he done so? Glo. What I think you we are Turks, or infidels? Or that we would, against the form of law, Proceed thus rashly in the villain's death, But that the extreme peril of the case, The peace of England, and our persons' safety, Enforce'd us to this execution? May. Now. Fair beseal you! he deserv'd his death; And good the public hopes both these cases have well proceeded, To warn false traitors from the like attempts. Buck. I never look'd for better at his hands, After he once fell in with mistress Shore; Yet had we not determin'd he should die, Until your lordship came to see his end, Which now the loving haste of these our friends, Something against our meanings, hath prevented: Because, my lord, I would have had you 1 hear The traitor speak, and timorously confess The manner and the purpose of his treasons; That you might well have signified the same Unto the citizens, who, haply, may Misconstrue us in him, and wait his death. [serve, May. But, my good lord, your grace's words shall As well as I had seen, and heard him speak; And do not doubt, right noble princes both, But I'll acquaint our dutious citizens With all your just proceedings in this case. Glo. And to that end we wish'd your lordship here, To avoid the censures of the carping world. Buck. But since you come too late of our intent, Yet witness what you hear we did intend, And so, my good lord mayor, we bid farewell. [Exeunt Mayor and Lord. Glo. Go, after, after, cousin Buckingham.

The mayor towards Guildhall bies him in all post: There, at your meetest 4 vanage of the time, Infer the bastardy of Edward's children: Tell them, how Edward put to death a citizen, Only for saying—he would make his son Heir to the crown; meaning, indeed, his house, Which by the sign thereof was term'd so. Moreover, urge his hateful luxurty, And bestial appetite in change of lust; Which stretch'd unto their servants, daughters, wives, Even where his raving eye, or savage heart, With uncontrol lust, in his courses run. Nay, for a need, thus far come near my person: Tell them, when that my mother went with child Of that insatiate Edward, noble York, My princely father, then bad wars in France; And by true computation of the time, Found that the issue was not his begot; Which well appeared in his lineaments,

"Conversation," i. e., familiar intercourse. — Suspension.
"Too late of our intent," i. e., too late for the purpose we intended. — "Advantages," i. e., opportunity. — "Infer," i. e., allege; show. — "Luxury," i. e., lewdness.
"The precedent," i. e., the original draft. — "Gross," i. e., stupid; dull. — "Lady Elizabeth Lucy." — "Enforcement," i. e., violation.
Star'd each on other, and look'd deadly pale. Which when I saw, I reprehended them. And said, the mayor, what meant this wilful silence? His answer was, the people were not us'd To be spoke to, but by the recorder. Then, he was urg'd to tell my tale again:—
"Thus smite the duke, thus hath the duke inferred;}"
But nothing spoke in warrant from himself. When he had done, some followers of mine own, At every nod of the bell, bust'd up their caps. And some ten voices cried, "God save king Richard!" And thus I took the vantage of those few,—
"Thanks, gentle citizens, and friends," quoth I;
"This general applause, and cheerful shout, Argues your wisdom, and your love to Richard;"
And even here brake off, and came away.
Glo. What tongueless blocks were they! would they not speak?
Will not the mayor, then, and his brethren, come?
Buck. The mayor is here at hand. Intend some
Be not you spoke with, but by mighty suit: [fear;
And look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll make a holy descant:
And you not easily won to our requests.
Play the maid's part, still answer nay, and take it.
Glo. I go; and if you plead as well for them,
As I can say 'nay' to thee for myself,
No doubt we bring it to a happy issue.

[Knocking heard.]

Enter the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens.
Welcome, my lord: I dance attendance here;
I think the duke will not be spoke withal.

[Exit Gloster.

Now, Catesby! what says your lord to my request?
Cate. He doth entreat your grace, my noble lord,
To visit him to-morrow, or next day.
He is within, with two right reverend fathers,
Divinely bent to meditation;
And in no worldly suits would he be mov'd,
To draw him from his holy exercise.

Buck. Return, good Catesby, to the gracious duke:
Tell him, my lord, you are his firm foundation.
In deep designs, in matter of great moment,
No less import than our general good,
Are come to have some conference with his grace.
Cate. I'll signify so much unto him straight.

[Exit.

Buck. Ah, ha! my lord, this prince is not an Ed-
He is not lulling on a ledge love-bed, [ward:
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtzanens,
But meditating with two deep divine souls;
Not sleeping to engross his idle body,
But praying to enrich his watchful soul.
Happy were England, would this virtuous prince
Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof;
But since I fear, we shall not win him to it.

May, Marry, God defend his grace should say us nay!
Buck. I fear, he will. Here Catesby comes again.—

Re-enter CATESBY.

Now, Catesby, what says his grace?

Cate. He wonders to what end you have assem-
Such troops of citizens to come to him:
His grace not being war'd thereof before, he

He fears my lord, you mean no good to him.
Buck. Sorry I am, my noble cousin should Suspect me, that I mean no good to him:
By heaven, we come to him in perfect love;
And so once more return, and tell his grace.

[Exit CATESBY.

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their beads, 'tis much to draw them thence;
So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Enter GLOSTER, 2 with a book, in a Gallery above, between two Bishops. CATESBY returns.

May. See, where his grace stands 'twixt two elders,
Buck. Two props of virtue for a Christian prince,
To stay him from the fall of vanity;
And, see, a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornament to know a holy man.—
Famous Plantagenets, most gracious prince,
Lend favorable ear to our requests,
And spare us the interruption
Of thy devotion, and right-Christian zeal.
Glo. My lord, there needs no such apology;
I do beseech your grace to pardon me,
Who, earnest in the service of my God,
Defer'd the visitation of my friends.
But, leaving this, what is your grace's pleasure!
Buck. Even that, I hope, which pleaseth God above,
And all good men of this ungod'ned isle.
Glo. I do suspect, I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye;
And that you come to reprehend my ignorance.
Buck. You have, my lord; would it might please
On our entreaties to amend your fault. [your grace,
Glo. Else wherefore breathe I in a Christian land?
Buck. Know then, it is your fault that you resign
The supreme seat, the throne majestical,
The scepter'd office of your ancestors,
Your state of fortune, and your due of birth,
The lineal glory of your royal house,
To the corruption of a blemish'd stock;
Whiles, in the midst of your sleepy thoughts,
Which here we waken to our country's good,
This noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her face defac'd with scars of infancy,
Her royal stock grafted with ignoble plants,
And almost should'r'd in the swallowing gulf
Of dark forgetfulness, and deep oblivion.
Which to relieve, we heartily solicit
Your august self to take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land:
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain;
But as successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.
For this, consorted with the citizens,
Your very worshipful and loving friends,
And by their vehement instigation,
In this just cause come I to move your grace.
Glo. I cannot tell, if to depart in silence,
Or bitterly to speak in your reproof,
Best fitteth my degree, or your condition:
If, not to answer,—you might haply think,
Tongue-tied ambition, not reply'g, yielded
To bear the golden yoke of sovereignty,
Which fondly you would here impose on me:
If to reprove you for this suit of yours,
So season'd with your faithful love to me,
Then, on the other side, I check'd my friends.
Therefore, to speak, and to avoid the first,
And then, in speaking, not to incur the last.
SCENE I.

KING RICHARD III.

Definitely thus I answer you.
Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert,
Unmeritable, slays your high request.
First, if all obstacles were cut away,
And that my path were even to the crown,
As the ripe revenue and due of birth;
Yet so much is my poverty of spirit,
So mighty, and so many, my defects,
That I would rather hide me from my greatness,
Behold a back to break no mightier head,
Than in my greatness covet to be lid,
And in the vapor of my glory smother'd.
But, God be thank'd, there is no need of me;
And much I need to help you, were there need:
The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which, mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty,
And make, no doubt, us happy by his reign.
On him I lay that you would lay on me,
The right and fortune of his happy stars;
Which God b defend that I should wring from him.

Buck. My lord, this argues conscience in your grace;
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial,
All circumstances well considered.
You say, that Edward is your brother's son:
So say we too, but not by Edward's wife;
For first was he contract to lady Lucy;
Your mother lives a witness to his vow:
And afterward by substitute bethroth'd
To Bonal, sister to the king of France.
These both put off, a poor petitioner,
A care-craz'd mother to a young prince,
A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye,
Seduce'd the pitch and height of his degree
To base declension and lown'dl bigamy.
By her, in his unlawful bed, he got
This Edward, whom our manners call the prince.
More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that, for reverence to some alive,
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Then, good my lord, take to your royal self
This proffer'd benefit of dignity;
If not to bless us and the land withal,
Yet to draw forth your noble ancestry
From the corruption of abusing times,
Unto the illustrious-true-derived course.
May. Do, good my lord; your citizens entreat you.
Buck. Refuse not, mighty lord, this proffer'd love.
Cate. O! make them joyful: grant their lawful suit.
Glo. Alas! why would you heap this care on me?
I am unfit for state and majesty:
I do beseech you, take it not amiss;
I cannot, nor I will not, yield to you.
Buck. If you refuse it, as in love and zeal,
Loath to depose the child, your brother's son;
As well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle, kind, effeminate 4 remorse,
Which we have noted in you to your kindred,
And equally, indeed, to all estates,
Yet know, wher'e you accept our suit or no,
Your brother's son shall never reign our king;
But we will plant some other in your throne,
To the disgrace and downfall of your house.
And, in this resolution, here we leave you.

1 Zounds, Citizens! we will entreat no more.
2 Glo. O! do not swear, my cousin Buckingham.

[Exit Buckingham.]

Cate. Call him again, sweet prince; accept their
If you deny them, all the land will me it.
[Exit.

Glo. Will you enforce me to a world of cares?
Call thin again; I am not made of stone,
But penetrable to your kind entreaties,
[Exit Catesby.

Albeit against my conscience, and my soul.—
Re-enter Buckingham.

Cousin of Buckingham, and sage, grave men,
Since you will buckle fortune on my back,
To bear her burden, wher'e I will, or no,
I must have patience to endure the load:
But if black scoundrel, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquaintance me
From all the impure blot's and stains thereof;
For God doth know, and you may partly see,
How far I am from the desire of this.
[Say it.

May. God bless your grace! we see it, and will
Glo. In saying so, you shall but say the truth.
Buck. Then I salute you with this royal title,
Long live king Richard England's worthy king!
All. Amen.
Buck. To-morrow may I please you to be crown'd?
Glo. Even when you please, for you will have it so.
Buck. To-morrow, then, we will attend your grace:
And so, most joyfully, we take our leave.
Glo. Come, let us to our S-'ly work again.
[To the Bishops.

Glo.

[To the Bishops.

Farewell, my cousin:—farewell, gentle friends.
[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before the Tower.

Enter, on one side, Queen Elizabeth, Duchess of York, and Margaret of Dorset: on the other, Anne, Duchess of Gloucester, leading Lady Margaret Plantagenet, Clarence's young Daughter.

Duch. Who meets us here?—my *niece Plantagenet,
In the land of her kind aunt of Gloucester!
Now, for my life, she's wandering to the Tower,
In pure heart's love, to greet the tender prince.—

Daughter, well met.

Anne. God give your grace both
A happy and a joyfull time of day.
[Away?
Q. Eliz. As much to you, good sister: whither
Anne. No farther than the Tower; and, as I guess,
Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there.
[Gether:
Q. Eliz. Kind sister, thanks: we'll enter all to—[Enter Brakenbury.

And in good time here the lieutenant comes.—
Master lieutenant, pray you, by your leave,
How doth the prince, and my young son of York?
Brak. Right well, dear madam. By your patience,
I may not suffer you to visit them:
The king hath strictly charg'd the contrary.
Q. Eliz. The king? who's that?
Brak. I mean the lord protector.
Q. Eliz. The Lord protect him from that kingly

Hath he set bounds between their love, and me?
I am their mother; who shall bar me from them?
Duch. I am their father's mother; I will see them.
Anne. Their aunt! I am in law, in love their mother:
Then, bring me to their f'sights; I'll bear thy blame,

* Grand-daughter.—"To their sights," i. e., to the sight of them.

34
And take thy office from thee, on my peril.

Break. No, madam, no; I may not leave it so:
I am bound by oath, and therefore pardon me.

[Exit Brakenbury.

Enter Stanley.

Stan. Let me but meet you, ladies, one hour hence;
And I'll salute your grace of York as mother,
And reverence looker-on of two fair queens. —
Come, madam, you must straight to Westminster,
[To the Duchess of Gloucester.

There to be crowned Richard's royal queen.

Q. Eliz. Ah! canst cut my eye asunder,
That same sweet heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dead-killing news.

Anne. Detestable tidings! O, unpleasing news!

Dor. Be of good cheer — mother, how fares your grace?

Q. Eliz. O Dorset! speak not to me, get thee gone;
Death and destruction dog thee at thy heels;
Thy mother's name is ominous to her children.
If thou wilt outstrip death, go cross the seas,
And live with Richmond from the reach of hell.
Go, hive thee, hive thee, from this slaughter-house,
Lest thou increase the number of the dead,
And make me die the 2nd thrall of Margaret's curse,—
Nor mother, wife, nor England's counted queen.

Stan. Full of wise care is this your council, madam.
Take care for the advantage of the hours; [am.
You shall have letters from me to my son
In your behalf, to meet you on the way:
Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay.

Duch. O ill-dispensing winds of misery!—
O, my accursed womb, the bed of death!
A cockatrice hast batch'd to the world,
Whose unavowed eye is murderer's kin.

Stan. Come, madam, come: I in all haste was sent.

Anne. And I with all unwillingness will go.—
O! would to God, that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain!
Anointed let me be with deadly venom;
And die, ere men may say — God save the queen!

Q. Eliz. Go, go, poor soul, I envy not thy glory;
To feed my humor, wish thyself no harm. [now.

Anne. No! why?—When he, that is my husband
Came to me, as I follow'd Henry's course; [hands,
When scarce the blood was well wash'd from his
Which issu'd from my other angel husband,
And that dear saint which, then, I weeping follow'd; O! when, I say, I look'd on Richard's face,
This was my wish,— Be thou, quot I, 'accurs'd,
For making me, so young, so old a widow!
And, when thou wold'st, let sorrow haunt thy bed;
And be thy wife (if any be so mad)
More miserable by the life of thee,
Than thou last made me by my dear lord's death!—
Lo! ere I can repeat this curse in vain,
Within so small a time, my woman's heart
Grossly grew captive to his honey words,
And proved the subject of mine own soul's curse:
Which hitherto hath mine eyes from rest;
For never yet one hour in his bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his timorous dreams was still awak'd.
Business he leaves me for my father Warwick;
And will, no doubt, shortly be rid of me.

Q. Eliz. Poor heart, adieu; I pity thy complaining.

Anne. No more than with my soul I mourn for yours.

Dor. Farewell, thou woeful welcomer of glory.

Anne. Adieu, poor soul, that tak'st thy leave of it.

Duch. Go thou to Richmond, and good fortune guide thee!—
[To Dorset.

Go thou to Richard, and good angel's tend thee:—
[To Anne. Go thou to sanctuary, and good thoughts possess thee! —
[To Queen Elizabeth.

I to my grave, where peace and rest lie with me!
Eighty old years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wrack'd with a week of teene.
Q. Eliz. Stay yet; look back, with me, unto the Tower.

Fifty, thy ancient stones, those tender babes,
Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls;
Rough cradle for such little pretty ones!
Rude ragged nurse, old sullen play-fellow
For tender princes, use my babies well!
So foolish sorrow bids your stones farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room of State in the Palace.

Sound a Sennet. Richard, crowned upon his Throne; Buckingham, Catesby, a Page, and others.

K. Rich. Stand all apart.—Cousin of Buckingham! Buckingham. My gracious sovereign.
K. Rich. Give me thy hand. Thus high, by thy advice, —
[Trumpets sound.

And thy assistance, is king Richard seated:
But shall we wear these glories for a day,
Or shall they last, and we rejoice in them?
Buck. Still live they, and for ever let them last!
K. Rich. Ah! Buckingham, now do I play the
To try them be current gold, indeed,— Touch, Young Edward lives.—Think now what I would Buck. Say on, my loving lord. [speak.
Buck. Why, so you are, my thrico-renowned lord.
K. Rich. Ha! am I king? 'Tis so; but Edward Buck. True, noble prince.
K. Rich. —
Buck.——

K. Rich. O bitter consequence! —
That Edward still should live, — true, noble prince,— Cousin, thou wanst not to be so dull!—
Shall I be plain? —I wish the bastards dead;
And I would have it suddenly perform'd.
What say'st thou now? speak suddenly; be brief.
Buck. Your grace may do your pleasure.
K. Rich. Tut, tut! thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes.

Soy, have I thy consent that they shall die?
Buck. Give me some little breath, some pause,
Before I positively speak in this: —
[dear lord,
I will resolve you herein presently.

[Exit Buckingham.

Cate. The king is angry: see, he gnaws his lip.

[Aside.

K. Rich. I will converse with iron-witted fools, [Descends from his Throne.

And to respective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with considerate eyes.
High-reaching Buckingham grows circumference.
Boy: —

Gold. K. Rich. Know'st thou not any, whom corrupting Will tempt unto a close exploit of death?

S. Sorrow.—I "Whom envy hath immur'd," I. e., whom malice hath confined.—"The touch," I. e., the touchstone.
[Odd; indifferent; inconsiderate.—"A close exploit," I. e., a secret act.
K. Rich. I do remember me,—Henry the sixth
Did prophesy that Richmond should be king,
When Richmond was a little 4peevish boy.
A king!—perhaps—

Buck. My lord,—

[that time]

K. Rich. How chance, the prophet could not be
Have told me, I being by, that I should kill him?
Buck. My lord, your promise for the earldom,—

K. Rich. Richmond!—When last I was at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy show'd me the castle,
And call'd it—Rouge-mont: at which name I started,
Because a bard of Ireland told me once,
I should not live long after I saw Richmond.

Buck. My lord,—

K. Rich. Ay; what's o'clock?

Buck. I am thus bold to put your grace in mind
Of what you promis'd me.

K. Rich. Well, but what's o'clock?

Buck. Upon the stroke of ten.

K. Rich. Well, let it strike.

Buck. Why, let it strike?

K. Rich. Because that, like a *Jack, then keep'st the stroke.

Betwixt thy begging and my meditation.
I am not in the giving vein to-day.

[no.

Buck. Why then, resolve me whether you will, or
K. Rich. Thou troublest me: I am not in the vein.

[Exit King Richard 4Angry, and his Train.

Buck. And is it thus? repays be my deep service
With such contumelies? made I him king for this?
O! let me think on Hastings, and be gone.
To Brecknock, while my fearful head is on. [Exit.

cy

KING RICHARD III.

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter Tyrell.

Tyr. The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most 4arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.
Dighton and Forrest, whom I did suborn
To do this piece of ruthless butchery,
Albeit they were flesh'd villains, 4blooded dogs,
Melted with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wep't like two children in their death's sad story.
'O! thus," quoth Dighton, "lay the gentle babes."
"Thus, thus," quoth Forrest, "girlling one another
Within their abashed innocent arms:
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other.
A book of prayers on their pillow lay; [mind
Which once," quoth Forrest, "almost chang'd my
But, O! the devil!—there the villain stopp'd;
When Dighton thus told on,"—we smothered
The most 4replenished sweet work of nature,
Tint, from the prime creation, e'er she fram'd." 4
Hence both are gone: with conscience and remorse,
They could not speak; and so I left them both,
To bear this tidings to the bloody king.

Enter King Richard.

And here he comes.—All health, my sovereign lord! 4
K. Rich. Kind Tyrell, am I happy in thy news?

Tyr. If to have done the thing you gave in charge
Begot your happiness, be happy then,
For it is done. I being kill
K. Rich. But didst thou see them dead?

Tyr. I did, my lord.

K. Rich. And buried, gentle Tyrell?

Tyr. The chapel of the Tower hath buried them;
But where, to say the truth, I do not know.

4An image of one page of a document, as well as some extracted text. Just return the natural text representation as if you were reading it. Do not hallucinate.

Page. I know a discontented gentleman,
Whose humble means match not his haughty spirit:
Gold were as good as twenty orates,
And will, no doubt, tempt him to any thing.

K. Rich. What is his name?

Page. His name, my lord, is Tyrell.

K. Rich. I partly know the man: go, call him

[Exit Page.

The deep-revolving, *witty Buckingham
No more shall be the neighbor to my counsels.

Hath he so long held out with me untir'd,
And stops he now for breath?—Well, be it so.—

Enter Stanley.

How now, lord Stanley! what's the news 4with you?

Stan. Know, my loving lord,
The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled
To Richmond, in the parts where he abides.

K. Rich. Come hither, Catesby; rumor it around,
That Anne, my wife, is very grievous sick;
I will 4order for her keeping close.

Inquire me out some mean poor gentleman,
Whom I will marry straight to Clarence's daughter:—

The boy is foolish, and I fear not him.—

Look how thou dream'st!—I say again, give out,
That Anne my queen is sick, and like to die:
About it; for it stands me much 4upon,
To stop all hopes whose growth may damage me.—

[Exit Catesby.

I must be married to my brother's daughter,
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass.—

Murder her brothers, and then marry her?
Uncertain way of gain! But I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin.

Tear-failing pity dwells not in this eye.—

Re-enter Page, with Tyrell.

Is thy name Tyrell?

Tyr. James Tyrell, and your most obedient subject.

K. Rich. Art thou, indeed?

Tyr. Prove me, my gracious lord.

K. Rich. Dar'st thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?

Tyr. Please you; but I had rather kill two enemies.

K. Rich. Why, then thou hast: two deep enemies,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers,
Are they that I would have thee deal upon.

Tyrell, I mean those bastards in the Tower.

Tyr. Let me have open means to come to them,
And soon I'll rid you from the fear of them.

[Kneeling.

K. Rich. Thou sing'st sweet music. Hark, come hither, Tyrell:

Go, by this token.—Rise, and lend thine ear.

[4Tyrell rises, and Richard whispers.

There is no more but so:—say, it is done,
And I will love thee, and prefer thee for it.

Tyr. I will despatch it straight.

[Exit.

Re-enter Buckingham.

Buck. My lord, I have consider'd in my mind
The late demand that you did sound me in.

K. Rich. Well, let that rest. Dorset is fled to Buck. I hear the news, my lord. [Richmond.

K. Rich. Stanley, he is your wife's son: well look unto it.

Buck. My lord, I claim the gift, my due by promise,
For which your honor and your faith 4arc pawn'd;
Th' earldom of Hereford, and the moveabes,
Which you have promised I shall possess.

K. Rich. Stanley, look to your wife: if she convey Letters to Richmond, you shall answer it. [guest?

Buck. What says your highness to my just re-
K. Rich. Come to me, Tyrrel, soon, and after supper,
When thou shalt tell the process of their death.
Mean time, but think how I may do thee good,
And be inheritor of thy desire.
 Farewell, till then.

Tyr. I humbly take my leave. [Exit.

K. Rich. The son of Clarence have I pent up close;
His daughter meanly have I match’d in marriage;
The sons of Edward sleep in Abraham’s bosom,
And Anne my wife hath bid this world good night.
Now, for I know the Bretagne 1 Richard nims
At young Elizabeth, my brother’s daughter,
And by that knot looks proudly on the crown,
To her go I, a jolly thriving wozer.

Enter Catley, in haste.

Cat. My lord!—

Cat. Bad news, my lord: a Morton is fled to Rich-
And Buckingham, back’d with the hardly Welsmen,
Is in the field, and still his power increaseth.
K. Rich. Ely with Richmond troubles me more near;
Thun Buckingham and his rash-leved strength.
Come; I have learn’d, that fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac’d beggary:
Then, fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove’s Mercury, and herald for a king.—
Go, master men: my counsel is my shield;
We must be brief, when traitors brave the field.

[Sitting down.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter Queen Margaret.

Q. Mar. So, now prosperity begins to mellow,
And drop into the rotten mouth of death.
Here in these confuses silly have I lurk’d,
To watch the wunning of mine enemies.
A dire 2 induction am I witness to,
And will to France; hoping, the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.
Withdraw thee, wretched Margaret: who comes here?

[She stands back.

Enter Queen Elizabeth and the Duchess of York.

Q. Eliz. Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix’d in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother’s lamentation.

Q. Mar. Hover about her; say, that right for right
Hath dimm’d your infant mourn to aged night.

Duch. So many miseries have eaz’d my voice,
That my woe-wearied tongue is still and mute.

Edward Plantagenet! why art thou dead?
Q. Mar. Plantagenet doth quit Plantagenet;

Edward for Edward pays a dying debt.

Q. Eliz. Wilt thou, O God! fly from such gentle
And throw them in the entrails of the wolf?
When didst thou sleep, when such a deed was done?
Q. Mar. When holy Harry died, and my sweet

Duch. Dead life, blind sight, poor mortal living ghost,

Bishop of Ely. — Introduction; prefix.

Brief abstract and record of tedious days, —
Rest thy unrest on England’s lawful earth,

Unlawfully made drunk with innocent blood.

Q. Eliz. Ah! that thou would’st so soon afford a
As thou canst yield so melancholy a grave.
Then would I hide my bones, not rest them here.
Ah! who hath any cause to mourn, but we?

Q. Mar. If ancient sorrow be most reverent,
Give me the benefit of seniory,
And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.
If sorrow can admit society,

Tell o’er thy woes again by viewing mine:—
I had an Edward, till a Richard kill’d him;
I had a husband, till a Richard kill’d him.
Thou hadst an Edward, till a Richard kill’d him;
Thy other Edward dead, to trust my Richard.

Duch. I had a Richard too, and thou didst kill him.
I had a Watland too; thou holp’st to kill him.

Q. Mar. Thou hadst a Clarence too, and Richard kill’d him.

From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
A hell-hound, that doth hunt us all to death:
That dog, that had his teeth before his eyes,
To thee he turns, and lap their gentle blood:
That foul defacer of God’s handy-work,
That reigns in galled eyes of weeping souls,
That excellent grandeur of the earth
Thy womb let loose, to chase us to our graves.—
O! upright, just, and true-disposing God,
How do I thank thee, that this carnal cur
Crees on the issue of his mother’s body.

And makes her a pew-fellow with others’ mawn!

Duch. O, Harry’s wife! triumph not in my woes:
God witness with me, I have wept for thine.

Q. Mar. Bear with me: I am hungry for revenge,
And now I cloy me with beholding it.
Thy Edward he is dead, that kill’d my Edward;
Thy other Edward dead, to trust my Richard.
Young York he is but 1 foot, because both they Match not the high perfection of my loss.
Thy Clarence he is dead, that stabb’d my Edward;
And the beholders of this frantic play,
Th’ adulterate Hasting, Rivers, Vaughan, Grey,
Un timely smoother’d in their dusky graves.

Richard yet lives, he’ll black intelligence,
Only reserved their factor, to buy souls.
And send them thither: but at hand, at hand,
Ensues his piteous and unpitied end:
Earth gapes, hell burns, fiends roar, saints pray,
To have him suddenly convey’d from hence.
Cancel his bond of life, dear God! I pray,
That I may live and say, the dog is dead.

Q. Eliz. O! thou didst prophesy, the time would
That I should wish for thee to help me curse
That bottle spider, that soon bough-back’d tond.

Q. Mar. I call’d thee then, vain flourish of my fortune;
I call’d thee then, poor shadow, painted quccu.
The presentation of but what I was,
The flattering index of a direful pageant,
One head’d so high, to be hurl’d down below:
A mother only mock’d with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast; a garish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot;
A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene.

SCENE IV.  KING RICHARD III.  553

Where is thy husband now? where be thy brothers? Where be thy two sons? wherein dost thou joy? Where, as in days past, dost thou know the queen? Where be the bending pears that flattet's thee? Where be the throning troops that follow'd thee? Decline all this, and see what now thou art. For happy wife, a most distressed widow; For joyful mother, one that wails the name; For one being said to, one that humbly sues; For queen, a very cautiff crown'd with care; For one that scar'd at me, now bent of me; For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one; For one commanding all, obey'd of none. Thus hath the course of justice whirld about, And left thee but a very prey to time; Having no more but thought of what thou wast To torture thee the more, being what thou art. Thou didst usurp my place, and dost not Usurp the just proportion of my sorrow? Now, thy proud neck bears half my burden'd yoke; From which, even here, I slip my weary head, And leave the burden of it all on thee. Farewell, York's wife, and queen of sad mischance: These English woes shall make me smile in France. Q. Eliz. O! thou well skill'd in curses, stay a And curse me no more, to curse mine enemies. Q. Mar. Forbear to sleep the night, and fast the Compare dead happiness with living woe; [day] Think that thy babies were fairer than they were, And he that slew them fouler than he is: Better thy loss makes the bad-causer worse: Revolve this will teach thee how to curse. Q. Eliz. My words are dull; O! quicken them with this. Q. Mar. Thy woes will make them sharp, and pierce like mine. [Exit Queen MARGARET.

Duch. Why should calamity be full of words? Q. Eliz. Windy attorneys to their client woes, Airy succeders of intaste joys, Poor breathing octors of miseries! Let them have scope: through what they do impart Help nothing else, yet do they ease the heart. Duch. If so, then be not tongue-t'ly'd: go with me, And in the breath of bitter words let's smother My dammed son, that thy two sweet sons smother'd. [A Trumpet heard. The trumpet sounds: be copious in exclam's.

Enter King Richard, and his Train, marching. K. Rich. Who intercepts me in my expedition? Duch. O! she, that might have intercepted thee, By strangling thee in her accursed womb, From all the slaughters, wretch, that thou hast done.

Q. Eliz. Hid'st thou that forehead with a golden crown, Where't should be branded, if that right were right, For slaughter of the prince that 'cwd that crown, And the dire death of my poor sons, and brothers? Tell me, thou villain-slave, whom are my children? Duch. Thou told, thou told, where is thy brother And little Ned Plantagenet, his son? [Clarence, Q. Eliz. Where is the gentle Rivers, Vaughan, Duch. Where is kind Hastings? [Grey? K. Rich. A flourish, trumpets!—strike alarums, drums! Let not the heavens hear these tell-tale women Rail on the Lord's anointed. Strike, I say,— [Flourish. Alarums. Either be patient, and entreat for quarter, Or with the clamorous report of war Thus will I drown your exclamations. Duch. Art thou my son? K. Rich. Ay; I thank God, my father, and yourself. Duch. Then patient ly]° bear my impatience, K. Rich. Madam, I have a touch of your condition, That cannot brook the accent of reproof. Duch. 0! let me speak. K. Rich. Do, then; but I'll not hear. Duch. I will be mild and gentle in my words. K. Rich. And brief, good mother, for I am in haste. Duch. Art thou so hasty! 1 once stay'd for thee, God know'st the wrong and in agony. K. Rich. And came I not at last to comfort you? Duch. No, by thy holy rood, thou know'st it well; Thou cam'st on earth to make the earth my hell. A grievous burden was thy birth to me; 'Tetey and wayward was thy infancy: [ous; Thy school-days, frightful, desperate, wild, and furth Thy prime of manhood, daring, bold, and ventourous: Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtile, sly, and bloody. More mild, but yet more harmful, kind in hatred: What comfortable hour canst thou name, That ever grace'd me with thy company? K. Rich. 1 Faith, none, but Humphrey Hour, that call'd thy grace To break fast once forth of my company. If I be so injurious in thy eye, Let me march on, and not offend you, madam.— Strike up the drum! Duch. I pr'ythee, hear me speak. K. Rich. You speak too bitterly. Duch. Hear me a word; For I shall never speak to thee again. K. Rich. So. Duch. Either thou wilt die by God's just ordinance, Ere this war thou turn a conqueror; Or I with grief and extreme age shall perish, And never look upon thy face again. Therefore, take with thee my most grievous curse; Which in the day of battle tire thee more, Than all the complete armor that thou wear'st. My prayers on the adverse party fight; And there the little souls of Edward's children Whisper the spirits of thine enemies, And promise them success and victory. Bloody thou art, bloody will be thy end; Shame serves thy life, and doth thy death attend. [Exit. Q. Eliz. Though far more cause, yet much less spirit to curse Abides in me: I say amen to her. [Going. K. Rich. Stay, madam; I must talk a word with you. Q. Eliz. I have no more sons of the royal blood, For thee to slaughter: for my daughters, Richard, They shall be praying nuns, not weeping queens; And there shall be level not to hit their lives. K. Rich. You have a daughter call'd Elizabeth, Virtuous and fair, royal and gracious. [live. Q. Eliz. And must she die for this? O! let her And I'll corrupt her manners, stain her beauty; Slander myself as false to Edward's bed; Throw over her the veil of infamy; So she may live unacc'd of bleeding slaughter, I will confess she was not Edward's slaughter. K. Rich. Wrong not her birth; she is a royal princess. Q. Eliz. To save her life, I'll say she is not so. K. Rich. Her life is safest only in her birth. Q. Eliz. And only in that safety died her brothers. K. Rich. Lo! at their birth good stars were op- poste.

Q. Eliz. No, to their lives ill friends were contrary.
K. Rich. All *unavoided is the doom of destiny.
Q. Eliz. True; when avoided grace makes destiny.
My babes were destin'd to a fairer death,
If grace had bless'd thee with a fairer life. [Ins.

No doubt the murderous knife was dull and blunt,
Till it was whetted on thy stone-hard heart.
To revel in the entrails of my lambs.
But that 'still use of grief makes wild grief tame,
My tongue should to thy ears not name my boys,
Till that my nails were anchor'd in thine eyes;
And I, in such a desperate bay of death,
Like a poor bark, of sail and tackling lost,
Rush all to pieces on thy rocky bosom.
K. Rich. Madam, so thrive I in my enterprise,
And dangerous *success of bloody wars,
As I intend more good to you and yours,
Than ever you or yours by me were harmed!*

K. Rich. Even all I have; ay, and myself and all,
Will I withal endow a child of thine;

So, from thy soul's love distil thou love her brothers;
And from my heart's love I do thank thee for it.
K. Rich. Be not so hasty to confound my meaning.
I mean, that with my soul I love thy daughter,
And do intend to make her queen of England.
Q. Eliz. Well then, who dost thou mean shall be

K. Rich. Even so: how think you of it?
Q. Eliz. How canst thou woo her?

Q. Eliz. But how long fairly shall her sweet life last?

K. Rich. As long as heaven, and nature, strengthen
Q. Eliz. As long as hell, and Richard, like of it.

Q. Eliz. But she, your subject, lusts such sovereignty.
K. Rich. Be eloquent in my behalf to her. [told.
Q. Eliz. An honest tale speeds best, being plainly
K. Rich. Then, plainly to tell my loving tale.
Q. Eliz. Plain, and not honest, is too harsh a style.
K. Rich. Your reasons are too shallow and too quick.

Q. Eliz. O! no, my reasons are too deep and Too deep and dead, poor infants, in their graves.

Q. Eliz. Harp on it still shall I, till heart-strings K. Rich. Now, by my George, my garter, and my krown,
Q. Eliz. Profan'd, dishonor'd, and the third usurp'd.
K. Rich. I swear—
Q. Eliz. By nothing; for this is no oath.
Thy George, profan'd, hath lost its lordly honor;
Thy garter, blemisht, pawn'd his knightly virtue;
Thy crown, usurp'd, disgrac'd his kingly glory.
If something thou would'st swear to be believ'd,
Swear then by something that thou hast not wrong'd.
K. Rich. Now by the world,
Q. Eliz. 'Tis full of thy soul wrongs.
K. Rich. My father's death,—
Q. Eliz. Thy life hath it dishonor'd.
K. Rich. Then, by myself,—
Q. Eliz. Thyself is self-mis-us'd.
K. Rich. Why then, by God,
Q. Eliz. God's wrong is most of all.
If thou hast fear'd to break an oath with him,
The unity, the king my husband made,
Thou hast not broken, nor my brothers died.
If thou hast fear'd to break an oath by him,
The imperial metal, circling now thy head,
Had grac'd the tender temples of my child;
And both the princes had been breathing here,
Which now, two tender bed-fellows for dust,
Thy broken faith hath made the prey for worms.
What canst thou swear by now?
K. Rich. The time to come.
Q. Eliz. That thou hast wrong'd in the time o'er.
For I myself have many tears to wash
[past;
Hereafter time, for time past wrong'd by thee.
The children live whose fathers thou hast slaughter'd,
Ungovern'd youth, to wall it with their age:
The parents live, whose children thou hast butcher'd,
Old barren plants, to wall it with their age.
Swear not by time to come; for that thou hast
Misus'd ere us'd, by times ill-us'd o'er-past.
K. Rich. As I intend to prosper, and repent,
So thrive I in my dangerous attempt
Of hostile arms! myself myself confound!
Heaven and fortune bar me happy hours!
Day, yield me not thy light, nor, night, thy rest!
Be opposite all planets of good luck.
To my proceeding, if, with pure heart's love,
When thou may'st tell thy tale the nearest way?  Once more, what news?

Stan. Richmond is on the seas.
K. Rich. There let him sink, and be the seas on him, White-livered runagate! what doth he there?

Stan. I know not, mighty sovereign, but by guess.
K. Rich. Well, as you guess? [1on,

Is the king dead? is the empire unpossess'd?
What heir of York is there alive, but we,
And who is England's king, but great York's heir?
Then, tell me, what makes he upon the seas?

Stan. Unless for that, my liege, I cannot guess.
K. Rich. Unless for that he comes to be your liege,
You cannot guess wherefore the Welshman comes.

Thou wilt revolt, and fly to him, I fear.

[not.
Stan. No, my good lord; therefore, mistrust me.
K. Rich. Where is thy power, then, to beat him
Where be thy tenants, and thy followers? [back?
Are they not now upon the western shore,
Safe-conducting the rebels from their ships?

Stan. No, my good lord, my friends are in the north.
K. Rich. Cold friends to me: What do they do in the north,
When they should serve their sovereign in the west?

Stan. They have not been commanded, mighty

Pleaseth your majesty to give me leave, [king,
I'll muster up my friends, and meet your grace,
Where, and what time, your majesty shall please.

K. Rich. Ay, thou wouldest be gone to join with But I'll not trust thee.

Stan. Most mighty sovereign,
You have no cause to hold my friendship doubtful.
I never was, nor never will be false.

K. Rich. Go, then, and muster men: but leave be-
Your son, George Stanley.

Look your heart be firm,
Or else his head's assurance is but frail.

Stan. So deal with him, as I prove true to you.

[Exit Stanley.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My gracious sovereign, now in Devonshire,
As I by friends am well advertised,
Sir Edward Courtney, and the haughty prelate
Bishop of Exeter, his elder brother,
With many more confederates, are in arms.

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. In Kent, my liege, the Guildfords are in
And every hour more competitors [arms; Flock to the rebels, and their power grows strong.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My lord, the army of great Buckingham—
K. Rich. Out on ye, owls! nothing but songs of death?

[He strikes him.

There, take thou that, till thou bring better news.

3 Mess. The news I have to tell your majesty

Is that by sudden floods and fall of waters,
Buckingham's army is dispers'd and scatter'd;
And he himself wander'd away alone,
No man knows whither.

K. Rich. I cry thee mercy:

There is my purse, to cure that blow of thine.

[2Rising.

Hath any well-advised friend proclam'd
Reward to him that brings the traitor in?

3 Mess. Such proclamation hath been made, my lord.

Enter a fourth Messenger.

4 Mess. Sir Thomas Lovel, and lord Marquess

Dorset,
'Tis said, my liege, in Yorkshire are in arms; But this good comfort bring I to your highness,— The Bretagne navy is dispers'd by tempest.
Richmond, in Dorsetshire, sent out a boat
Unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,
If they were his assistants, yea, or no; Who answer'd them, they came from Buckingham Upon his party: he, mistrusting them,

b Hois'd sail, and made his course again for Bretagne.
K. Rich. March on, march on, since we are up in

If not to fight with foreign enemies, [arms; Yet to best down these rebels here at home.

Enter Catesby.

Cate. My liege, the duke of Buckingham is taken;

That is the best news: that the earl of Richmond Is with a mighty power landed at Milford, Is colder news, but yet they must be told. [son here,
K. Rich. Away towards Salisbury! while we rea-
A royal battle might be won and lost.—
Some one take order, Buckingham be brought To Salisbury; the rest march on with me. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—A Room in Lord Stanley's House.

Enter Stanley and Sir Christopher Urswick.

Stan. Sir Christopher, tell Richmond this from
That, in the sty of the most bloody bear, [me:—
My son George Stanley is 4 frank'd up in hold:
If I revolt, off goes young George's head:

The fear of that holds off my present aid.
So, get thee gone: commend me to thy lord.

Withal, say that the queen hath heartily consented,
He should espouse Elizabeth her daughter.

But, tell me, where is princely Richmond now?

Chris. At Pembroke, or at Ha'ford-west, in Wales.
Stan. What men of name3 and mark resort to him?
Chris. Sir Walter Herbert, a renowned soldier;
Sir Gilbert Talbot, sir William Stanley;
Oxford, redoubted Pembroke, sir James Blunt,
And Rice ap Thomas, with a valiant crew,
And many other of great name and worth;
And towards London do they bend their power,
If by the way they be not fought withal.

Stan. Well, hee thce to thy lord; I kiss his hand:
My letter will resolve him of my mind.

Farewell.

[Giving Papers to Sir Christopher. Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Salisbury. An open Place.

Enter the Sherif, and Guard, with Buckingham, led to Execution.

Buck. Will not king Richard let me speak with him?

Sher. No, my good lord; therefore, be patient.

Buck. Hastings, and Edward's children, Grey, and Holy King Henry, and thy fair son Edward, [Rivers, Vaughan, and all that have miscarried By undershad corrupted foul injustice, If that your moody discontented souls Do through the clouds behold this present hour, Even for revenge mock my destruction! This is All-Souls' day, fellow, is it not?

b Hoisted.—Chaplain to the Countess of Richmond.
4 "Frank'd up," i.e., closely confined.
SCENE III.—Bosworth Field.

Enter King Richard, and Forces; the Duke of Norfolk, Earl of Surrey, and others.

K. Rich. Here pitch our tent, even here in Bosworth field.

My lord of Surrey, why look you so sad?

Sur. My heart is ten times lighter than my looks.

K. Rich. My lord of Norfolk—

Nor. Here, most gracious liege.

K. Rich. Norfolk, we must have knockers; ha! must we not?

Nor. We must both give and take, my loving lord.

K. Rich. Up with my tent! here will I lie to-night;

[Soldiers begin to set up the King's Tent.]

But where to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that. Who hath described the number of the traitors?—Nor. Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.

K. Rich. Why, our battalia terrors that account: Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength, Which they upon the adverse faction want. Up with the tent!—Come, noble gentlemen, Let us survey the vantage of the ground.—Call for some men of sound direction.—Let's lack no discipline, make no delay, For, lords, to-morrow is a busy day.

[Exeunt.]

Enter, on the other side of the Field, Richmond, Sir William Brandon, Oxford, and other Officers.

Rich. The weary sun hath made a golden set, And by the bright track of his fiery car, Gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.—Sir William Brandon, you shall bear my standard. Give me some ink and paper in my tent: I'll draw the form and model of our battle,

^2 Limit each leader to his several charge, And part in just proportion our small power. My lord of Oxford, —you, Sir William Brandon, —And you, Sir Walter Herbert, stay with me. The earl of Pembroke keeps his regiment: Good captain Blunt, bear my good night to him, And by the second hour in the morning Desire the earl to see me in my tent.—Yet one thing more, good captain, do for me: Where is lord Stanley quartered? do you know?—Blunt. Unless I have mist'en his colors much, (Which, well I am assur'd, I have not done) His regiment lies half a mile, at least, South from the mighty power of the king.

Richm. If without peril it be possible, [him, Sweet Blunt, make some good means to speak with And give him from me this most needful note. Blunt. Upon my life, my lord, I'll undertake it; And so, God give you quiet rest to-night. Richm. Good night, good captain Blunt.—Come, gentlemen, Let us consult upon to-morrow's business. In to my tent, the dew is raw and cold. [They withdraw into the Tent.]

Enter, to his Tent, King Richard, Norfolk, Ratcliff, and Catesby.

K. Rich. What is't o'clock? Cates. It's seven, my lord; it's nine o'clock. K. Rich. I will not sup to-night.—Give me some ink and paper.—What, is my beaver easier than it was, And all my armor laid into my tent?—[ness. Cates. It is, my liege; and all things are in readiness. K. Rich. Good Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge. Use careful watch; choose trusty sentinels. Nor. I go, my lord.—[Norfolk, K. Rich. Stir with the lark to-morrow, gentle Nor. I warrant you, my lord. [Exeunt. K. Rich. Ratcliff! Rat. My lord! K. Rich. Send out a pursuivant at arms To Stanley's regiment: bid him bring his power Before surprising, lest his host George fall Into the blind cave of eternal night. Fill me a bowl of wine.—Give me a watch: Saddle while white Surrey for the field to-morrow.—Look that my staves be sound, and not too heavy.

"Of sound direction," i.e., of tried judgment; of approved soldiers, i.e., of tried men;—"Make some good means," i.e., contrive; take measures.—A "watch," i.e., a watch-light. The staves mentioned were the poles or wood of the lances.

KING RICHARD III.

Scene III.

Dream on, dream on, of bloody deeds and death:
Fainting, despair; despairing, yield thy breath.—
I died for hope ere I could lend the seal.

[to Richmond.]

But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd:
God, and good angels fight on Richmond's side;
And Richard fall in height of all his pride.

[The Ghosts vanish. King Richard starts out of his dream.

K. Rich. Give me another horse!—bind up my wounds!
Have mercy, Jesu!—Soft! I did but dream.
O, coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me?—
The lights burn blue.—It is now dead midnight.
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh.

K. Rich. Why?—myself? there's none else by:
Richard loves Richard; that is, I am I.
Is there a murderer here? — No; yes; I am:
Then fly,—What, from myself? Great reason: why?
Let me revenge. What! Myself upon myself?
Alack! I love myself. Wherefore? for any good,
That I myself have done unto myself?
O! no: nay: I rather hate myself,
For hateful comfort doth I commitment by myself.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain.

Perjury, 4 soul perjury, in the high'st degree;
Murder, stern murder, in the driest degree;
All several sins, all us'd in each degree,
Throng to the bar, crying all,—Guilty! guilty! I shall despair.—There is no creature loves me;
And if I die, no soul shall pity me:—
Nay, wherefore should they? since that I myself
Find in myself no pity to myself.
Methought, the souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent; and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard.

Enter Ratcliff.

Rat. My lord.—
Rat. Ratcliff, my lord; 'tis I. The early village
Hath promised one salutation to the morn:
Your friends are up, and buckler on their armor.

K. Rich. O Ratcliff! I have dream'd a fearful dream.

What think'nest thou? will our friends prove all true?
Rat. No doubt, my lord.
K. Rich. O Ratcliff! I fear, I fear.—
Rat. Nay, good my lord, be not afraid of shadows.
K. Rich. By the apostle Paul, shadows to-night
Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers,
Armed in proof, and led by shallow Richmond.
It is not yet near day. Come, go with me:
Under our tents I'll play the eaves-dropper,
To hear if any mean to shrink from me.

[Exeunt King Richard and Ratcliff.

Enter Oxford and others.

Lords. Good morrow, Richmond. [gentlemen,
Rich. Cry mercy, lords; [Waking] and watchful
That you have taken a tardy shaggy herd.
Lords. How have you slept, my lord? [dreams,
Rich. The sweetest sleep, and fairest-boding
That ever entered in a drowsy head,
Have I since your departure had, my lords. [der'd,
Methought, their souls, whose bodies Richard mur-
Came to my tent, and cried—Oh! I victory!

K. Rich. I promise you, my heart is very joyous
In the remembrance of so fair a dream.
Call up lord Stanley, bid him bring his power.
I will lead forth my soldiers to the plain,
And thus my battle shall be ordered.
My forward shall be drawn out all in length,
Consisting equally of horse and foot.
Our Archers shall be placed in the midst.
John duke of Norfolk, Thomas earl of Surrey,
Shall have the leading of the foot and horse.
They thus directed, we will foment them
In the main battle; whose puissance on either side
Shall be well winged with our cheifest horse.
This, and Saint George to boot! — What think'st
Then, Norfolk? Nor.
A good direction, warlike sovereign.
This found I on my tent this morning.

[Reading a paper.
For "Dickon thy master is bought and sold."
A thing devised by the enemy.
Go, gentlemen; every man to his charge.
Let not our babbling dreams affright our souls;
For conscience is a word that cowards use,
Devis'd at first to keep the strong in awe:
Our strong arms be our conscience, swords our law.
March on, join bravely, let us to' t'pell-mell;
If not to heaven, then hand in hand to hell.
What shall I say more than I have infer'd?
Remember whom you are to cope withal —
A sort of vagabonds, rascals, and run-aways,
A scum of Bretons, and base lackey peasants,
Whom their o'er-cloy'd country vomits forth
To desperate ventures and assur'd destruction.
You sleeping safe, they bring you to unrest;
You having lands, and blessed with beauteous wives,
They would distress the one, distress the other.
And who doth lead them, but a paltry fellow,
Long kept in Bretagne at our mother's cost;
A milk-sop, one that never in his life
Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow?
Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash these over-wearing ragges of France,
These famish'd beggars, weary of their lives.
Who, but for dreaming on this fond exploit,
For want of means, poor rabs, had hang'd them —
If we be conquer'd, let men conquer us, [selves.]
And not these bastard Bretons; whom our fathers
Have in their own land beaten, stabb'd, and thump'd,
And, on record, left them the heirs of shame.
Shall these enjoy our lands? lie with our wives?
Ravish our daughters? —Harck, I hear their drum.

[Dreadful music.
Fight, gentlemen of England! fight, bold yeomen! Draw, archers, draw your arrows to the head; Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood: Amaze the welkin with your broken staves! —

Enter a messenger.
What says lord Stanley? will he bring his power? Mess. My lord, he doth deny to come.
K. Rich. Off with his son George's head.
Nor. My lord, the enemy is pass'd the march; at the battle let George Stanley die. [besom.
K. Rich. A thousand hearts are great within my Advance our standards! set upon our foes!

Vanguard. "This, and Saint George to boot," i. e., "and Saint George on our side. In addition to this," "Dickon," the ancient familiarization of Richard. — Company. — Beatt —several. — Blood, broken staves," i. e., the shivers of your lance. — There was a march in Bosworth plain, between the two armies.

Our anciant word of courage, fair Saint George,
Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons!
Upon them! Victory sits on our helmets.

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarums: Excursions. Enter Norfolk, and Forces; to him Catesby.
Cate. Rescue, my lord of Norfolk! rescue, rescue! The king-elect draws more wonds than he,
During an opposite to every danger.
His horse is slain, and all on foot he fights,
Seeking for Richmond in the throat of death.
Rescue, fair lord, or else the day is lost!

Alarums. Enter King Richard.
K. Rich. A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!
Cate. Withdraw, my lord; I'll help you to a horse.
K. Rich. Slave! I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die,
I think there be six Richmonds in the field;
Five have I shun to-day, instead of him.—
A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse!

Alarums. Enter King Richard and Richmond; and exult, fighting. Retreat and flourish.
Then enter Richmond, Stanley bearing the Crown, with divers other Lords, and Forces.
Richm. God, and your arms, be pairs! victorious
This day is ours, the bloody dog is dead, etc.
Stan. Courageous Richmond, well hast thou acquit
Lot! here, this long-aspired royalty,
From the dead temples of this bloody wretch
Have I pluck'd oft, to grace thy brows withal:
Wear it, enjoy it, and make much of it.

Richm. Great God of heaven, say, amen, to all! —
But, tell me, is young George Stanley living?
Stan. He is, my lord, and safe in Leicester town;
Whither, if you please, we may withdraw us.
Richm. What men of name are slain on either side?
Richm. Inter their bodies us becomes their births.
Proclaim a pardon to the soldiers fled,
That in submission will return to us;
And then, as we have ta'en the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose and the red: —
Smile heaven upon this fair conjunction,
That long hath frown'd upon their calamity: —
What traitor hears me, and says not, amen?
England hath long been mad, and scorn'd herself;
The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,
The father rashly slaughter'd his own son,
The son, compell'd, been butcher to the sive:
All this divided York and Lancaster,
Divided in their dire division.
O! now, let Richmond and Elizabeth,
The true successors of each royal house,
By God's fair ordinance conjoin together:
And let their heirs (God, if they live so) Enrich that time to come with smooth-faced peace,
With smiling plenty, and fair prosperous days! —
 Rebate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord,
That would reduce these bloody days again,
And make poor England weep in streams of blood!
Let them not live to taste this land's increase.
That would with treason wound this fair land's peace!
Now civil wounds are stopp'd, peace lives again:
That she may long live here, God say, amen!

Exeunt.
KING HENRY VIII.

Act IV.—Scene 2.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

King Henry the Eighth.
Capuicis, Ambassador from Charles V.
Duke of Norfolk. Earl of Surrey.
Lord Chamberlain. Lord Chancellor.
Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester.
Bishop of Lincoln. Lord Abergavenny.
Lord Sands.
Sir Henry Guildford. Sir Thomas Lovell.
Sir Anthony Denny. Sir Nicholas Vaex.
Secretaries to Wolsey.
Cromwell, Servant to Wolsey.
Several Lords and Ladies in the Dumb Shows; Women attending upon the Queen; Spirits, which appear to her; Scribes, Officers, Guards, and other Attendants.

SCENE, chiefly in London and Westminster; once, at Kimbolton.

PROLOGUE.

I come no more to make you laugh: things now,
That bear a weighty and a serious brow,
Sad, high, and working, full of state and woe,
Such noble scenes as draw the eye to flow,
We now present. Those that can pity, here
May, if they think it well, let fall a tear;
The subject will deserve it: such, as give
Their money out of hope they may believe,
May here find truth too: those, that come to see
Only a show or two, and so agree
The play may pass, if they be still and willing,
I'll undertake, may see away their shilling
Richly in two short hours. Only they,

That come to hear a merry, bawdy play,
A noise of targets, or to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd; for, gentle hearers, know,
To rank our chosen truth with such a show
As fool and fight is, beside forfeiting
Our own brains, and the opinion that we bring,
To make that only true we now intend,
Will leave us never an understanding friend.
Therefore, for goodness' sake, and as you are known
The first and happiest hearers of the town,
Be sad as we would make ye: think, ye see

"Guarded," i. e., faceted; trimmed.—"Opinion," i. e., character; reputation.—*"Happiest," i. e., most favored.
The very persons of our noble story,
As they were living: think, you see them great,
And follow'd with the general throng, and sweat
Of thousand friends; then, in a moment, see
How soon this mightliness met misery:
And, if you can be merry then, I'll say,
A man may weep upon his wedding-day.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter the duke of NORFOLK, at one door; at the other, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord
ABERGAVENNY.

Buck. Good morrow, and well met. How have Since last we saw in France? [you done],
Nor. I thank your grace,
Healthful; and ever since a fresh admirer
Of what I saw there.

Buck. An untimelyague
Stay'd me a prisoner in my chamber, when
Those suns of glory, those two lights of *men,
Met in the vale of Andren.

Nor. Twixt Guynes and Arde:
I was then present, saw them salute on horseback;
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung,
In their embracement, *as they grew together;
Which had they, what four throne'd ones could have Such a compounded one? [I weigh'd
Buck. All the while time
I was my chamber's prisoner.

Nor. Then you lost
The view of earthly glory: men might say,
Till this time, pomp was single; but now married
To one above itself. Each following day
Became the next day's master, till the last
Made former wonders it's: to-day the French
All cliquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,
Shone down the English; and to-morrow they Made Britain, India: every man that stood Show'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubins, all gift: the modams, too,
Nor'd to tell, did almost sweat to be heard
The pride upon them, that their very labor
Was to them as a painting: now this mask
Was cried incomparable; and the ensuing night
Made it a fool, and beggar. The two kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst,
As prescuse did present them; him in eye,
Still him in praise; and, being present both,
'Twas said, they say but one: and no discern Durst wag his tongue in *censure. When these suns
(For so they phrase 'em) by their heralds challeng'd
The noble spirits to arms, they did perform
Beyond thought's compass; that former fabulous story,
Being now seen possible enough, got credit,
That *Bevis was believ'd.

Buck. O! you go far.
Nor. As I belong to worship, and affect
In honest homage, the tract of every thing
Would by a good discourser lose some life,
Which action's self was tongue to. All was royal:
To the disposing of it nought rebell'd;
Order gave each thing view.

Buck. The office did

*That is, Henry VIII. and Francis I, King of France.—
"As," i. e., as if —*Glittering; shining.—*In censure,"
i. e., in opinion which was most noble.—*Sir Bevis, an old romance.

Distinctly his full function. *Who did guide,
I mean, who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
Nor. One, *certes, that promises no *element
In such a business.
Buck. I pray you, who, my lord?
Nor. All this was order'd by the good discretion
Of the right revered cardinal of York.
Buck. The devil speed him! no man's pie is freed
From his ambitious finger. What had he
To do in these fierce vanities! I wonder,
That such a *keech can, with his very bulk,
Take up the rays o' the beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth.

Nor. Surely, sir,
There's in him stuff that puts him to these ends;
For, being not propp'd by ancestry, whose grace
Chalks successors their way, nor call'd upon
For high feats done to the crown; neither allied
To eminent assistants, but, spider-like,
Out of his self-drawing web, he gives us note,
The force of his own merit makes his way;
A gift that heaven gives *him, and which buys
A place next to the king.
Aber. I cannot tell
What heaven hath given him: let some graver eye
Fiercely to that; but he can see his pride
Peep through each part of him: whence has he that
If not from hell, the devil is a niggard;
Or has given all before, and he begins
A new hell in himself.

Buck. Why the devil,
Upon this French going-out, took he upon him,
(Without the privity of the king) to appoint
Who should attend on him? He makes up the file
Of all the gentry: for the most part such
Too, whom as great a charge as little honor
He meant to lay upon: and his own letter,
The honorable board of council out,
Must fetch him in he *papers.
Aber. I do know
Kinsmen of mine, three at the least, that have
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never
They shall abound as formerly.

Buck. O! many
Have broke their backs, with laying manors on them
For this great journey. What did this vanity,
But minister *the consumption of
A most poor issue?
Nor. Grievingly I think,
The peace between the French and us not values
The cost that did conclude it.

Buck. Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke
Into a general prophecy,—that this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, abodes
The sudden breach on.'t
Nor. Which is будded out;
For France hath flow'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchants' goods at Bordeaux.
Aber. Is it therefore
Their ambassador is silenc'd?
Nor. Marry, is't.
Aber. A proper title of a *peace, and purchas'd
At a superfluous rate.
Buck. Why, all this business

*Certainly.—"No element," l. e., no previous practice;
no initiation in the elements.—*Fiercely," l. e., proud.—
*Keech; l. e., a lump of fat.—*Fetch him in he *papers," l. e.,
"fetch in him whom he papers, or note down,"
"a proper title of a peace," l. e., ironically, 'a fine name of a peace'
Our reverend cardinal* carried.

Nor. To the state takes notice of the private difference Between you and the cardinal. I advise you, (And take it from a heart that wishes toward you Honor and plenteous safety) that you read The cardinal's malice and his potency Together: to consider farther, that What his high hatred would effect wants not A minister in his power. You know his nature, That he's revengeful; and, I know, his sword Hath a sharp edge: it's long, and 't will be said, It reaches far; and where 'twill not extend, Thither he darts it. Bosom up my counsel; You'll find it wholesome. Lo! where comes that rock, That I advise your shunning.

Enter Cardinal WOLSEY (the Purse borne before him), certain of the Guard, and two Secretaries with Papers. The Cardinal in his passage shall his eye on BUCKINGHAM, and Buckingham on him, both full of disdain.

Wol. The duke of Buckingham's surveyor? ha! Where's his examination?

1 Secr. Here, so please you. Wol. Is he in person ready?

1 Secr. Ay, please your grace. Wol. Well, we shall then know more; and BUCKINGHAM Shall lessen this big look.

[Exeunt WOLSEY, and Train.]

Buck. This butcher's cur is venom-mouth'd, and I Have not the power to muzzle; therefore, best Not wake him in his slumber. A beggar's brood Out-worths a noble's blood.

Nor. What, are you chaf'd?

Ask God for temperance: that's th' appliance only, Which your disease requires.

Buck. I read in look's looks Matter against me; and his eye revil'd Me, as his abject object: at this instant He bores me with some trick. He's gone t' the king: I'll follow, and out-stare him.

Nor. Stay, my lord, And let your reason with your choleric question What 'tis you go about. To climb steep hills, Requires slow pace at first: educate him, A full-hot horse, who being allow'd his way, Self-nettle tires him. Not a man in England Can advise me like you: be to yourself, As you would to your friend.

Buck. I'll go to the king; And from a mouth of honor quite cry down This Ipawich fellow's insolence, or proclaim There's difference in no person.

Nor. Be advis'd; Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot That it do singe yourself: we may outrun By violent swiftness that which we run at, And lose by over-running. Know you not, The fire, that mounts the lipor till't run o'er, In seeming to augment it wastes it? Be advis'd: I say again, there is no English soul More stronger to direct you than yourself, If with the sap of reason you would quench, Or but allay, the fire of passion.

Buck. Sir, I am thankful to you, and I'll go along By your prescription: but this top-proud fellow, Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but

From sincere motions, by intelligence, And proofs as clear as taints in July, when We see each grain of gravel, I do know To be corrupt and treasonous. So not, treasonous. Buck. To the king I'll say't, and make my vouch as strong As shore of rock. Attend: this holy fox, Or wolf, or both, (for he is equal ravenous, As he is subtle, and as prone to mischief, As able to perform't, his mind and place Infecting one another, yea, reciprocally) Only to show his pomp, as well in France As here at home, suggests the king, our master, To this last costly treaty, th' interview That swallowed so much treasure, and like a glass Did break t' the rising.

Nor. Faith, and so it did. Buck. Pray, give me favor, sir. This cunning The articles o' the combination drew, [cardinal As himself pleas'd; and they were ratified, As he cried, "Thus let be," to as much end, As give a crutch t' the dead. But our count-cardinal Has done this, and 'tis well; for worthy Wolsey, Who cannot, he's done it. Now this followeth, (Which, as I take it, is a kind of puppy) To the old dam, treason Charles the emperor, Under pretence to see the queen, his aunt, (For 'twas, indeed, his color, but he came To whisper Wolsey) here makes visitation: His fears were, that the interview betwixt England and France might, through their anity, Breed him some prejudice: for from this league, Pop'd harms that menace'd him. He privily Deals with our cardinal, and, as I trow, Which I do well: for, I am sure, the emperor Paid ere he promis'd, whereby his suit was granted, Ere it was ask'd: but when the way was made, And pav'd with gold, the emperor thus desir'd:— That he would please to alter the king's course, And break the foresaid peace. Let the king know, (As soon he shall by me) that thus the cardinal Does buy and sell his honor as he pleases, And for his own advantage.

Nor. I am sorry To hear this of him; and could wish he were Something mistaken in.

Buck. No, not a syllable: I do pronounce him in that very shape, He shall appear in proof.

Enter BRANDON; a Sergeant at arms before him, and two or three of the Guard.

Serg. Sir, My lord the duke of Buckingham, and earl Of Hereford, Stafford, and Northampton, I Arrest thee of high treason, in the name Of our most sovereign king.

Buck. Lou, you, my lord The net has fall'n upon me: I shall perish Under device and practice.

Serg. Sir, I am sorry To see you ta'en from liberty, to look on The business 'present. 'Tis his highness' pleasure, You shall to the Tower.

Buck. It will help me nothing To plead mine innocence: for that die is on me,

KING HENRY VIII.

ACT I.

Which makes my whit’s part black. The will of Be done in this and all things.—I obey. — [heaven O’ my lord Abergavenny, fare you well.

Bran. Nay, he must bear you company. —The king [To ABERGAVERN.

Is pleas’d you shall to the Tower, till you know How he determines farther.

Aber. As the duke said, The will of heaven be done, and the king’s pleasure By me obey’d.

Bran. Here is a warrant from The king ’t attack lord Montague; and the bodies Of the duke’s confessor, John de la Car, And Gilbert Peck, his chancellor,—

Deck. So, so;

These are the limbs o’ the plot.—No more, I hope. A monk o’ the Charterreux.

Buck. O!Nicholas Hopkins?

Bran. He.

Buck. My surveyor is false: the o’er-great cardinal Hath show’d him gold. My life is span’d already: I am the shadow of poor Buckingham, Whose figure even this instant cloud puts on, By darkening my clear sun.—My lord, farewell. [Execut.

SCENE II.—The Council-Chamber.

Cornets. Enter King Henry, leaning on the Cardinal’s shoulder; 2 Wolsey, the Lords of the Council, Sir Thomas Lovell, Officers, 3 Secretary.

K. Hen. My life itself, and the best heart of it, Thanks for you this great care. I stood 1 the level Of a full charg’d confidence, and give thanks To you that chock’d it.—Let be call’d before Us That gentleman of Buckingham’s: in person I’ll hear him his confessions justify, And point by point the treasons of his master He shall again relate.

The King takes his State. The Lords of the Council occupy their several Places: the Cardinal places himself under the King’s Foot on his right Side. A Noise within, crying Room for the Queen! Enter the Queen, usher’d by the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk: she kneels. The King rises from his State, takes her up, kisses her, and places her by him.

Q. Kath. Nay, we must longer kneel: I am a tutor.

K. Hen. Arise, and take place by us.—Half your suit Never name to us; you have half our power: The other majesty, ere you ask, is given; Repeat your will, and take it.

Q. Kath. Thank your majesty. That you would love yourself, and in that love Not unconsider’d leave your honor, nor The dignity of your office, is the point Of my petition.

K. Hen. Lady mine, proceed.

Q. Kath. I am solicited not by a few, And those of true condition, that your subjects Are in great grievance. There have been commissions Sent down among them, which hath flaw’d the heart Of all their loyalties: wherein, although, My good lord cardinal, they vent reproaches Most bitterly on you, as putter-on Of these exactions, yet the king our master, [not Whose honor heaven shield from soul! even he escapes Language unmannerly: yea, such which breaks

The tides of loyalty, and almost appears In lord rebellion.

Nor. Not almost appears, It doth appear; for upon these exactions, The clotheshers all, not able to maintain The many to them ’longing, have put off The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers, who, Unfit for other life, compell’d by hunger And lack of other means, in desperate manner During th’ event to the teeth, are all in uproar, And which serves among them.

K. Hen. Taxation! Wherein, and what taxation? —My lord cardinal You that are blem’d for it alike with us, Know you of this taxation?

Wol. Please you, sir, I know but of a single part, in ought Pertains to the state; and from but in that file Where others tell steps with me. 4

Q. Kath. No, my lord, You know no more than others; but you frame Things, that are known, 5 belike, which are not whole-some To those which would not know them, and yet must Performe be their acquaintance. These exactions, Whereof our sovereign would have been aware, They, most pestilent to the hearing; and, to bear them, The back is sacrifice to the load. They say, They are devis’d by you, or else you suffer Too hard an exclamation.

K. Hen. Still exaction! The nature of it? In what kind, let’s know, Is that exaction?

Q. Kath. I am much too venturesome In tempting of your patience; but am bolden’d Under your promis’d pardon. The subjects’ grief Comes through commissions, which compel from each The sixth part of his substance, to be levied Without delay; and the pretence for this [mouths: Is nam’d, your wars in France. This makes bold Tongues spur their duties out, and cold hearts freeze Allegiance in them: their curses now, Live where their prayers did; and it’s come to pass, 6 Their tractable obedience is a slave To each incensed will. I would, your highness Would give it quick consideration, for There is no 7 primer business.

K. Hen. By my life, This is against our pleasure.

Wol. And for me, I have no farther gone in this, than by A single voice, and that not pass’d me but By learned approbation of the judges. If I am Traduc’d by ignorant tongues, which neither know My faculties, nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doing, let me say, ‘Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake That virtue must go through. We must not stint Our necessary actions, in the fear To cope malicious censurers; which ever, As ravenous fishes, do a vessel follow That is new trimm’d, but benefit no farther The greater part long’s. What we can do, not By such interpreters (once weak ones) is Not ours, or not allow’d; but worst, as oft, Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up For our best act. If we shall stand still, In fear our motion will be mock’d or car’d at, We should take root here, where we sit, or sit

4 "That is, ‘I am but one among the other counsellors.’—
5 "‘Primer,’ i. e., more important.—6 ‘Brake,’ i.e., thickest of thorns.—7 ‘To cope,’ i.e., to engage with; to encounter.
6 ‘Guilty,’ i.e., sometime.—9 Approved.—10 Motive.
Scene II.

KING HENRY VIII.

State statues only.

K. Hen. Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from fear:
Things done with an example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Have you a precedent
Of this commission? I believe, not any.
We must not rend our subjects from our laws,
And stick them in our will. Sixth part of each?
A trebling contribution! Why, we take,
From every tree, lop, bark, and part of the timber;
And, though we leave it with a root, thus lack'd,
The tree will drink the sap. To every county
Where this is question'd send our letters, with Free pardon to each man that has denied
The force of this commission. Pray, look to't;
I put it to your care.

Wol. A word with you. [To the Secretary. Let there be letters writ to every shire,
Of the king's grace and pardon. The griev'd commons
Hardly conceive of me: let it be nois'd,
That through our intercession this revokement
And pardon comes. I shall anon advise you
Further in the proceeding. [Exit Secretary.

Enter Surveyor.

K. Kath. I am sorry that the duke of Buckingham
Is run in your displeasure.

K. Hen. It grieves many:
The gentleman is learn'd, and a most rare speaker;
To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
And never seek for sid out of himself: yet see,
When these so noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind growing once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. This man so complete,
Who was enrol'd mostong wonders, and when we,
Almost with ravish'd list'ring, could not find
His hour of speech a minute; he, my lady,
Hath into monstrous habits put the grace
That once was her, and is become as black
As if beam'd in hell. Sit by us; you shall hear
(This was his gentleman in trust) of him
Things to strike honor sad.—Bid him recount
The fore-recollected practices, whereof
We cannot feel too little, hear too much.

[You, you, you, you, you, you, you, you,
Wol. Stand forth; and with bold spirit relate what Most like a careful subject, have collected
Out of the duke of Buckingham.

K. Hen. Speak freely.

Surv. First, it was usual with him, every day
It would infect his speech, that if the king
Should without issue die, he'd carry it so,
To make the sceptre his. These very words
I've heard him utter to his son-in-law,
Lord Abergavenny, to whom by oath he menac'd
Revenge upon the cardinal.

Wol. Please your highness, note
This dangerous conception in this point.
Not friend'd by his wish, to your high person
His will is most malignant; and it stretches
Beyond you, to your friends.

Q. Kath. My learn'd lord cardinal,
 Deliver all with charity.

K. Hen. Speak on.

How ground'd he his title to the crown,
Upon our fall? To this point hast thou heard him
At any time speak aught?

Surv. He was brought to this
By a vain prophecy of Nicholas Hopkins.

K. Hen. What was that Hopkins?

Surv. Sir, a Chartreux friar,
His confessor; who fed him every minute
With words of sovereignty.

K. Hen. How know'st thou this?

Surv. Not long before your highness sped to France,
The duke being at the Rose, within the parish
Saint Lawrence Poulney, did of me demand
What was the speech among the Londoners
Concerning the French journey? I replied,
Men fear'd the French would prove persecutors,
To the king's danger. Presently the duke
Stid, 'twas the fear, indeed; and that he doubted,
'Twould prove the verity of certain words
Spoke by a holy monk; "that oft," says he,
"Hath sent to me, wishing me to permit
John de la Car, my chaplain, a choice hour
To hear from him a matter of some moment:
Whom alter, under the confession's seal,
He solemnly had sworn, that what he spoke
My chaplain to no creature living, but
To me, should utter, with demure confidence
This passingly eas'd.—Neither the king, nor's heir,
(Tell you the duke) shall prosper: bid him strive
To gain the love o' the commonality: the duke
Shall govern England.

Q. Kath. If you know well,
You were the duke's surveyor, and lost your office
On the complaint o' the tenants. Take good heed,
You charge not in your spleen a noble person,
And spoil your nobler soul: I say, take heed;
Yes, heartily beseech you.

K. Hen. Lot him on.—

Go forward.

Surv. On my soul, I'll speak but truth.
I told my lord the duke, by the devil's illusions
The monk might be deceiv'd; and that 'twas danger-
'From this to ruminate on it so far, until
It forg'd him some design, which, being believ'd,
It was much like to do: He answered, "Tush!
It can do me no damage:" adding farther,
That had he king's heart with him, he,
The cardinal's and sir Thomas Lovell's heads
Should have gone off.

K. Hen. Ha! what, so rank? Ah, ha! ha!

Surv. There's mischief in this man.—Canst thou say farther?

Surv. I can, my liege.

K. Hen. Proceed.

Surv. Being at Greenwich,
After your highness had reprov'd the duke
About sir William Blomer,—

K. Hen. I remember,
Of such a time: being my sworn servant,
The duke retain'd him his.—But on : what hence?

Surv. "I," quoth he, "I for this had been com-mitted;
As, to the Tower, I thought, I would have play'd
The part my father meant to act upon
Th' usurper Richard; who, being at Salisbury,
Made suit to come in's presence, which if granted,
As he made semblance of his duty, would
Have put his knife into him."

K. Hen. A giant traitor!

Wol. Now, madam, may his highness live in free
And this man out of prison? [Dom, Q. Kath.
God mend all!

K. Hen. There's something more would out of thee:
what say'st? [Knife]

Surv. After "the duke his father," with "the
He stretch'd him, and, with one hand on his dagger,
Another spread on's breast, mounting his eyes,
He did discharge a horrible oath; whose tenor
Was,—were he evil us'd, he would out-go
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose.

K. Hen. There's his period,
To sheathe his knife in us.—He is attach'd;
Call him to present trial: if he may
Find mercy in the law, 'tis his; if none,
Let him not seek't of us. By day and night,
He is a daring traitor to the height. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, and Lord Sands.

Cham. Is't possible, the spells of France should Men into such strange mysteries? [Juggle Sands.

Though they be never so ridiculous,
Nay, let 'em be unnanly, yet are follow'd.
Cham. As far as I see, all the good our English
Have got by the late voyage is but merely
A fit or two o' the face; but they are shrewd ones,
For when they hold 'em, you would swear directly,
Their very noses had been counsellors
To Pepin or Clotharitus, they keep state so.
Sands. They have all new legs, and lame ones;
one would take it,
That never saw 'em pace before, the spavin,
Or springhalt reign'd among them.
Cham. Death! my lord,
That, sure, they've worn out Christendom. —How What news, sir Thomas Lovell? [now!

Enter Sir Thomas Lovell.

Lov. Faith, my lord,
I hear of none, but the new proclamation
That's clapp'd upon the court-gate.
Cham. What is't for?
Lov. The reformation of our trull'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and tailors.
Cham. I am glad 'tis there: now, I would pray our monsieurs
To think an English courtier may be wise,
And never see the Louvre.

Lov. They must either
(For so run the conditions) leave those remnant
Of fool, and feather, that they got in France,
With all their honorable points of ignorance
Pertaining thereunto, as lights and fireworks;
Abusing better men than they can be.
Out of a foreign wisdom; renouncing clean
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short blister'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understand again like honest men,
Or pack to their old playfellows: there, I take it,
They may, cum privilegio, wear away
The leg end of their lowness, and be laugh'd at.
Sands. 'Tis time to give 'em physic, their diseases
Are grown so catching.

Cham. What a loss our ladies
Will have of these trim vanities.

Lov. Ay, marry,
There will be woe indeed, lords: the shy whoresons
Have got a speeding trick to lay down ladies;
A French song and a fiddle: have no fellow: I going,
Sands. The devil fiddle them! I am glad they're
For, sure, there's no converting of them: now,
An honest country lord, as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plain-song,
And have an hour of hearing, and, by'rady,
Hold current music too.

Notes:
- "Mysteries," i.e., arts; artificial fashions.
- "A fit," i.e., a spell.
- Springhalt: a disease incident to horses.
- Short blister'd breeches, i.e., breeches pulled out like blisters.

Act 1, Scene IV. —The Presence-Chamber in York-Place.

Hautboys. A small Table under a State for the Cardinal, a longer Table for the Guests; then enter Anne Bullen, and divers Lords, Ladies, and Gentlewomen, as Guests, at one door; at another door, enter Sir Henry Guildford.

Guild. Ladies, a general welcome from his grace
Salutes you all: this night he dedicates
To fair content, and you. None here, he hopes,
In all this noble bevy, has brought with her
One care abroad: he would have all as merry
As, first, good company, good wine, good welcome
Can make good people.—O, my lord! 'tis tardy;

Enter Lord Chamberlain, Lord Sands, and Sir Thomas Lovell.

The very thought of this fair company
Charm'd wings to me.

Cham. You are young, sir Harry Guildford.

Sands. Sir Thomas Lovell, had the cardinal
But half my lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should find a running banquet ere they rested,
I think, would better please 'em: by my life,
They are a sweet society of fair ones.

Lov. O! that your lordship were but now confess'd
To one or two of these.

Sands. I would, I were;
They should find easy penance.

Lov. Faith, how easy?

Sands. As easy as a down-bed would afford it.

Cham. Sweet ladies, wilt it please you sit? Sir Harry,

Place at this side, I'll take the charge of this.

His grace is entering.—Nay, you must not freeze;
Two women plac'd together makes cold weather:
My lord Sands, you are one will keep 'em waking;
Pray, sit between these ladies.

Sands. By my faith,

---

End of Scene IV.
SCENE IV.

KING HENRY VIII.

And thank your lordship.—By your leave, sweet ladies:

[Seats himself between Anne Bullen and another Lady.

If I chance to talk a little wild, forgive me;

I had it from my father.

Anne. Was he mad, sir?

Sands. O! very mad, exceeding mad; in love too;

But he would bite none: just as I do now,

He would kiss you twenty with a breath. [Kisses her.

Cham. Well said, my lord.—

So, now you are fairly seated.—Gentlemen,

The pennance lies on you, if these fair ladies

Pass away frowning.

Sands. For my little cure,

Let me alone.

Hautboys. Enter Cardinal Wolsey, attended, and takes his State.

Wol. Y'are welcome, my fair guests: that noble lady,

Or gentleman, that is not freely merry,

Is not my friend. This, to confirm my welcome;

And to you all good health. [Drinks.

Sands. Your grace is noble:

Let me have such a bowl may hold my thanks,

And save me so much talking.

Wol. My lord Sands,

I am beholding to you: cheer your neighbors.—

Ladies, you are not merry:—gentlemen,

Whose fault is this?

Sands. The red wine first must rise

In their fair cheeks, my lord; then, we shall have 'em

Talk us to silence.

Anne. You are a merry gamester,

My lord Sands.

Sands. Yes, if I make my play.

Here's to your ladyship; and pledge it, madam,

For 'tis to such a thing.—

Anne. I told your grace, how they would talk anon.

[Drum and Trumpets within; Chambers discharged.

Wol. What's that?

Cham. Look out there, some of you. [Exit a Servant.

Wol. What warlike voice,

And to what end is this?— Nay, ladies, fear not;

By all the laws of war y're privileg'd.

Re-enter Servant.

Cham. How now! what is't?

Serv. A noble troop of strangers,

For so they seem: they've left their large, and landed;

And hotter make, as great ambassadors

From foreign princes.

Wol. Good lord chamberlain,

Go, give them welcome; you can speak the French tongue:

And, pray, receive them nobly, and conduct them

Into our presence, where this heaven of beauty

Shall shine at full upon them.—Some attend him.—

[Exit Chamberlain attended. All arise, and Tables removed.

You have now a broken banquet; but we'll mend it.

A good digestion to you all; and, once more,

I shower a welcome on ye.—Welcome all.

Hautboys. Enter the King, and others, as Maskers, habited like Shepherds, ushered by the Lord Chamberlain. They pass directly before the Cardinal, and gracefully salute him.

A noble company! what are their pleasures?

Cham. Because they speak no English, thus they pray'd me

To tell your grace:—That, having heard by fame

Of this so noble and so fair assembly

This night to meet here, they could do no less,

Out of the great respect they bear to beauty,

But leave their flocks, and under your fair conduct,

Great leave to view these ladies, and esteem

An hour of revels with them.

Wol. Say, lord chamberlain,

They have done my poor house grace; for which I pay them [ures.

A thousand thanks, and pray them take their pleas-

[Ladies chosen for the Dance. The King takes Anne Bullen.

K. Hen. The fairest hand I ever touch'd. O, beauty!

Wol. My lord!—

Cham. Your grace?

Wol. Pray tell them thus much from me.

There should be one amongst them, by his person,

More worthy this place than myself; to whom,

If I but knew him, with my love and duty

I would surrender.

Cham. I will, my lord.

[Cham. 3 whistles the Maskers, and returns.

Wol. What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confess,

There is, indeed; which they would have your grace

Find out, and he will take it.

Wol. Let me see then. [Comes from his State.

By all your good leaves, gentlemen, here I'll make

My royal choice.

K. Hen. You have found him, cardinal.

[Unmasking.

You hold a fair assembly; you do well, lord;

You are a churchman, or, I'll tell you, cardinal,

I should judge now unhappily.

Wol. I am glad,

Your grace is grown so pleasant.

K. Hen. My lord chamberlain,

Pr'ythee, come hither. What fair lady's that?—

Cham. A'nt please your grace, sir Thomas Bul- len's daughter.—

The viscount Rochford,—one of her highness' women.

K. Hen. By heaven, she is a dainty one.—Sweet-

I was unmanly to take you out, [heart,

And not to kiss you.—[Kisses her.] A health, gen-

Let it go round. [lemen !

Wol. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the banquet ready?

I the privy chamber?

Lov. Yes, my lord.

Wol. Your grace,

I fear, with dancing is a little heated.

K. Hen. I fear, too much.

Wol. There's fresher air, my lord,

In the next chamber. [partner, K. Hen. Lead in your ladies, every one.—Sweet

I must not yet forsake you.—Let's be merry;

Good my lord cardinal! I have half a dozen healths

To drink to these fair ladies, and a measure

To lead them once again; and then let's dream

Who's best in favor.—Let the music knock it.

[Exeunt, with Trumpets.

*Unhappily," i.e., waggishly; mischievously.—*Dance.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—A Street.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. Whither away so fast?
2 Gent. O!—God save you,
E'en to the hall, to hear what shall become
Of the great duke of Buckingham.

1 Gent. I'll save you that labor, sir. All's now done, but the ceremony
Of bringing back the prisoner.
2 Gent. Were you there?
1 Gent. Yes, indeed, was I.
2 Gent. Pray, speak what has happen'd.
1 Gent. You may guess quickly what.
2 Gent. Is he found guilty?
1 Gent. Yes, truly is he, and condemn'd upon it.
2 Gent. I am sorry for't.
1 Gent. So are a number more.
2 Gent. But, pray, how pass'd it?
1 Gent. I'll tell you in a little. The great duke
Came to the bar; where, to his accusations
He pleaded still not guilty, as alleg'd
Many sharp reasons to defend the law.
The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on the examinations, proofs, confessions
Of divers witnesses, which the duke desir'd
To have brought, did'd, to his face:
At which appeared against him, his surveyor;
Sir Gilbert Peck his chancellor; and John Car,
Confessor to him; with that devil-monk, Hopkins,
That made this miscar'd.
2 Gent. That was he,
That fed him with his prophecies?
1 Gent. The same.
All these accuss'd him strongly; which he finn
Would have flung from him, but, indeed, he could not:
And so his peers, upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high treason. Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten.
2 Gent. After all this, how did he bear himself?
1 Gent. When he was brought again to the bar, to hear
His kneel rung out, his judgment, he was stirred
With such an agony, he swoon'd extremely,
And something spoke in choler, ill, and hastily:
But he fell to himself again, and sweetly,
In all the rest show'd a most noble patience.
2 Gent. I do not think, he fears death.
1 Gent. Sure, he does not;
He was never so womanish: the cause
He may a little grieve at.
2 Gent. Certainly,
The cardinal is the end of this.
1 Gent. 'Tis likely
By all conjectures: first, Kildare's attinder,
Then deputy of Ireland; who remov'd,
Earl Surrey was sent thither, and in haste too,
Lest he should help his father.
2 Gent. That trick of state
Was a deep envious one.
1 Gent. At his return,
No doubt, he will require it. This is noted,
And generally;—whoever the king favors,
The cardinal instantly will find employment,
And enough from court too.
2 Gent. All the commons
Hate him perversically, and, o' my conscience,
Wish him ten fathom deep: this duke as much

* "Forgotten," i. e., made no impression.

ACT II.

They love and dote on; call him, bounteous Buck:
The mirror of all courtesy—[ingham,
1 Gent. Stay there, sir;
And see the noble ruin'd man you speak of.

Enter Buckingham from his Arraignment; Tip-stores before him; the Ace with the edge towards him; Halberds on each side; accompanied with Sir Thomas Lovell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir
William Sands, and common People.
2 Gent. Let's stand close, and behold him.
Buck. All good people,
You that thus far have come to pity me,
Hear what I say, and then go home and lose me.
I have this day receiv'd a tritor's judgment,
And by that name must die; yet, heaven bear witness,
And if I have a conscience let it sink me,
Even as the axe falls, if I be not faithful.
The law I hear no malice for my death,
It has done upon the premises but justice;
But those that sought it I could wish more Christians:
Be what they will, I heartily forgive them.
Yet let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For they carry guiltless blood must cry against them.
For farther lies in this world I ne'er hope,
Nor will I sue, although the king have mercies
More than I dare make faults. You few that lov'd me,
And dare be bold to weep for Buckingham,
His noble friends and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to him, only dying,
God save me, like good angels, my end;
And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heaven.—Lead on, o' God's name.

Lov. I do beseech your grace, for charity,
If ever any malice in your heart
Were laid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all;
There cannot be those numberless offences [*envy 'Guinst me, that I cannot take peace with: no black Shall make my grace. Commend me to his grace;
And, if he speak of Buckingham, pray, tell him,
You met him half in heaven. My vows and prayers
Yet are the king's; and, till my soul forsake,
Shall all the blessings on him be far longer
Than I have time to tell his years.
Ever belov'd, and loving, may his rule be:
And when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness and he fill up one monument!

Lov. To the water side I must conduct your grace;
Then, give my charge up to sir Nicholas Vaux,
When undertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there!
The duke is coming: see, the barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture, as suits
The greatness of his person.

Buck. Nay, sir Nicholas,
Let it alone: my state now will but mock me.
When I came hither I was lord high constable,
And Duke of Buckingham; now, poor sapless Bohun:
Yet I am richer than my base accusers,
That never knew what truth meant. I now seal it;
And with that blood will one day make them groan
My noble father, Henry of Buckingham, [for't.
Who first rais'd head against usurping Richard,
Flying for succor to his servant Banister,
Being distrest, was by that wrong betray'd,
And without trial fell: God's peace be with him!
Henry the seventh succeeding, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd me to my honors, and out of ruins
Made my name once more noble. Now, my son,
Henry the eighth, life, honor, name, and all
That made me happy, at one stroke has taken
For ever from the world. I had my trial,
And, must needs say, a noble one; which makes me
A little happier than my wretched father:
Yet thus far we are one in fortunes.—both
Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most:
A most unnatural and faithless service.
Heaven has an end in all; yet, you that hear me,
This from a dying man receive as certain
Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels,
Be sure, you be not loose; for these you make friends, and give your hearts to, when they once perceive
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again
But when they mean to sink ye. All good people,
Pray for me. I must now forsake ye: the last hour
Of my long weary life is come upon me. [is sad,
 Farewell:] and when you would say something that Speak how I fell.—I have done, and God forgive me!
[Exit BUCKINGHAM, &c.

1 Gent. O! this is full of pity.—Sir, it calls,
I fear, too many curses on their heads
That were the authors.

2 Gent. If the duke be guiltless,
'Tis full of vae: yet I can give you inkling
Of an ensuing evil, if it fall,
Greater than this.

1 Gent. Good angels keep it from us!
What may it be? You do not doubt my faith, sir

2 Gent. This secret is so weighty, 'twill require
A strong faith to conceal it.

1 Gent. Let me have it: I do not talk much.

2 Gent. I am confident:
You shall, sir. Did you not of late days hear
A buzzing of a separation
Between the king and Katharine?

1 Gent. Yes, but it hold not;
For when the king once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the lord mayor straight
To stop the rumor, and alay those tongues
That durst disperse it.

2 Gent. But that slander, sir,
Is found a truth now: for it grows again
Fresher than e'er it was, and held for certain
The king will venture at it. Either the cardinal,
Or some about him near, have out of malice
To the good queen possess'd him with a scruple,
That will undo her: to confirm this, too,
Cardinal Campeius is arriv'd, and lately,
As all think, for this business.

1 Gent. 'Tis the cardinal;
And mercifully to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
The archbishopric of Toledo, this is purpos'd.

2 Gent. I think, you have hit the mark: but isn't
Not cruel,
That she should feel the smart of this? The cardinal
Will have his will, and she must fall.

1 Gent. We are too open here to argue this;
Let's think in private more. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—An Ante-chamber in the Palace.

Enter the Lord Chamberlain, reading a Letter.

Cham. "My lord,—The horses your lordship sent
* "Loose," i. e., over-reaching.—" A strong faith," i. e., great fidelity.—" It held not," i. e., it did not prove true.—
for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. They were young, and handsome, and of the best breed in the north. When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my lord cardinal's, by commission and main power, took them from me; with this reason,—his master would be served before a subject, if not before the king; which stopped our mouths, sir." I fear, he will, indeed. Well, let him have them:
He will have all, I think.

Enter the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk.

Nor. Well met, my lord chamberlain.

Cham. Good day to both your grace.

Suf. How is the king employ'd?

Cham. He left him private,
Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What's the cause?

Cham. It seems, the marriage with his brother's
Has crept too near his conscience.

Suf. No; his conscience
Has crept too near another lady.

Nor. 'Tis so.
This is the cardinal's doing, the king-cardinal:
That blind priest, like the eldest son of fortune,
Turns what he list. The king will know him one day.

Suf. Pray God, he do: he'll never know himself else.

Nor. How holily he works in all his business.
And with what zeal; for now he has crack'd the league
Of nephew, between us and the emperor, the queen's great
He dives into the king's soul; and there scatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the conscience,
Fears, and despair; and all these for his marriage:
And, out of all these, to restore the king,
He counsels a divorce; a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre;
Of her, that loves him with that excellence
That angels love good men with; even of her
That when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
Will bless the king. And is not this course pious?
Cham. Heaven keep me from such counsel! 'Tis most true.
Cham. These news are every where; every tongue speaks
And every true heart weeps for't. All, that dare
Look into these affairs, see this main end,—
The French king's 4 sister. Heaven will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
This bold bad man.

Suf. And free us from his slavery.

Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliverance,
Or this imperious man will work us all
From princes into pages. All men's honors
Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
Into what pitch he 5 please.

Suf. For me, my lords,
I love him not, nor fear him; there's my creed.
As I am made without him, so I'll stand,
If the king please: his curses and his blessings
Touch me alike, they're breath I not believe in.
I knew him, and I know him; so I leave him
To him that made him proud, the pope.

Nor. Let's in,
And with some other business put the king
From these sad thoughts, that work too much upon
My lord, you'll bear us company? [him.—

4 The main end of Welsey was to effect a marriage between Henry and "the French king's sister," the Duchess of Alengon.—" Into what pitch he please," i. e., either high or low.
K. Hen. Two equal men. The queen shall be acquainted
Fortwith for what you come.—Where's Gardiner? Wol. I know, your majesty he's always lov'd her
So dear in heart, not to deny her that
A woman of less place might ask by law,
Scholars, allow'd freely to argue for her. [favor
K. Hen. Ay, and the best, she shall have; and my
To him that does best: God forbid else. Cardinal,
Feythorne, call Gardiner to me, my new secretary:
I find him a fit fellow. [Exit Wolsey.
Re-enter WOLSEY, with GARDINER.
Wol. Give me your hand: much joy and favor to
You are the king's now. [you
Gard. But to be commanded
For ever by your grace, whose hand has mis'd me.
K. Hen. Come hither, Gardiner.
[They walk and whisper.
Cam. My lord of York, was not one doctor Place
In this man's place before him?
Wol. Yes, he was.
Cam. Was he not held a learned man?
Wol. Yes, surely.
Cam. Believe me, there's an ill opinion spread, then, even of yourself, lord cardinal.
Wol. How! of me?
Cam. They will not stick to say, you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him in a foreign man still; which so grieved him,
That he ran mad, and died.
Wol. Heaven's peace be with him!
That Christian care enough: for living murmurers
There's places of rebuke. He was a fool,
For he would needs be virtuous: that good fellow,
If I command him, follows my appointment:
I will have none so near else. Learn this, brother,
We live not to be gird'd by meaner persons.
K. Hen. Deliver this with modesty to the queen.
[Exit Gardiner.
The most convenient place that I can think of,
For such receipt of learning, is Black-Friars:
There ye shall meet about this weighty business.
My Wolsey, see it furnish'd.—O my lord!
Would it not grieve an able man, to leave
So sweet a bedfellow? But, conscience, conscience,—
O! 'tis a tender place, and I must leave her.
[Exeunt.
SCENE III.—An Ante-chamber in the Queen's Apartments.
Enter ANNE BULLEN, and an old Lady.
Anne. Not for that neither:—here's the pang that pinches;
His highness having liv'd so long with her, and she
So good a lady, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonor of her:—by my life,
She never knew harm-doing,—O! now, after
So many courses of the sun enthr'd
Still growing in a majesty and pomp, the which
To leave's a thousand-fold more bitter, than Sweet at first t' acquire,—after this process,
To give her the 4'avant! it is a pity
Would move a monster.
Old L. Hearts of most hard temper
Most inlament for her.
Anne. O, God's will! much better,
She ne'er had known pomp: though it be temporal,
Yet, if that 4'eryl fortune do divorce
SCENE IV.

KING HENRY VIII.

It from the bearer, 'tis a sufficiency, a panging
As soul and body's severing.

Old L. Alas, poor lady!
She's a stranger now again?

Anne. So much the more
Must pity drop upon her. Verily, I swear, 'tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.

Old L. Our content
Is our best having.

Anne. By my troth, and maidenhead,
I would not be a queen.

Old L. Bedrew me, I would,
And venture maidenhead for't; and so would you,
For all this spice of your hypocrisy.
You that have so fair parts of woman on you,
Have, too, a woman's heart; which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty;
Which, to say sooth, are blessings, and which gifts
(Saving your mincing) the capacity
Of your soft cherifel conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it.

Anne. Nay, good troth.
Old L. Yes, troth, and troth.—You would not be a queen!

Anne. Not for all the riches under heaven.

Old L. 'Tis strange: a three-pence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it.
But, I pray you,
What think you of a Duchess? have you limbs
To bear that load of title?

Anne. No, in truth. [little:
Old L. Then you are weakly made: Pluck off a
I would not be a young count in your way,
For more than blushing comes to. If your back
Cannot vouchsafe this burden, 'tis too weak
Ever to get a boy.

Anne. How you do talk!
I swear again, I would not be a queen
For all the world.

Old L. In faith, for little England
You'd venture an embulling: I myself
Would for Carnarvonshire, although there long'd
No more to the crown but that. Lo! who comes here?

Enter the Lord Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, ladies. What were't worth
The secret of your conference? [To know
Anne. My good lord,
Not your demand: it values not your asking.
Our mistresses' sorrows we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle business, and becoming
The action of good women: there is hope
All will be well.

Anne. Now, I pray God, amen!

Cham. You bear a gentle mind, and heavenly blessings
Follow such creatures. That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, and high notes
Tale of your many virtues, the king's majesty
Commends his good opinion of you to you, and Does purpose honor to you, no less flowing
Than marchionsess of Pembroke; to which title
A thousand pound a year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds.

Anne. I do not know,
What kind of my obedience I should render:
More than my all is nothing; nor my prayers
Are not words duly hallowed, nor my wishes
More worth than empty vanities: yet prayers, and wishes,
Are all I can return. Beseech your lordship,
Vouchsafe to speak my thanks, and my obedience,
As from a blushing handmaid, to his highness;
Whose health, and royalty, I pray for.

Cham. Lady, I shall not fail t' improve the fair conceit,
The king hath of you.—I have perus'd her well:

Anne. Beauty and honor in her are so mingled,
That they have caught the king; and who knows yet,
But from this lady may proceed a gem
To lighten all this isle!—[To her.] I'll to the king,
And say, I spoke with you.

Anne. My honor's lord. [Exit Lord Chamberlain.

Old L. Why, this it is; see, see!
I have been begging sixteen years in court,
(And yet a courtier beggarly) nor could Come pat betwixt early and too late
For any suit of pounds; and you, O fate!
A very fresh-fish here, (fie, fie, fie upon
This compell'd fortune!) have your mouth fill'd up,
Before you open it.

Anne. This is strange to me.
Old L. How tastes it? is it bitter? forty pence, no.
There was a lady once, ('tis an old story)
That would not be a queen, that would she not,
For all the mad in Egypt;—have you heard it?

Anne. Come, you are pleasant.
Old L. With your theme I could
O'ermount the lark. The marchionsess of Pembroke!
A thousand pounds a year for pure respect;
No other obligation. By my life,
That promises more thousands: honor's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. By this time,
I know, your back will bear a duchess.—Say,
Are you not stronger than you were?

Anne. Good lady,
Make yourself mirth with your particular fancy,
And leave me out on't. Would I had no being,
If this slate my blood a jot: it faints me,
To think what follows.
The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Pray, do not deliver
What here you've heard, to her.

Old L. What do you think me? [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Hall in Black-Friars.

Trumpets, 3 Sennet, and Cornets. Enter two Verger, with short silver Wands; next them, two Scribes, in the habit of Doctors; after them, the Archbishop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Bishops of Lincoln, Ely, Rochester, and Saint Asaph; next them, with some small distance, follows a Gentleman bearing the Purse, with the Great Seal, and a Cardinal's Hat; then two Priests, bearing each a silver Cross; then a Gentleman-Usher, bare-headed, accompanied with a Sergeant at Arms, bearing a silver Mace; then two Gentlemen, bearing two great silver a Pillars;
after them, side by side, the two Cardinals Wolsy.

3 "Parching," i.e., infecting as severe a pang—"A stranger," i.e., reduced to the condition of an unfriended stranger.
"Perk'd up," i.e., pranked, dressed up—"Possession.
"Chelveril," i.e., kid-skin—"Crooked." —"Pluck off a little part of your many virtues, the king's majesty
Bald's, to be distinguished by the ball, the ensign of royalty, used at coronations.

1 "Conceit," i.e., opinion.—Forty pence was the proverbial expression for a small wager.—Egypt owes its fertility to the mud of the Nile.—The sennet was a signal given by sound of trumpets.—Eights of dignity carried before cardinals.
and Campeius; two Noblemen with the Sword and Mace. The King takes place under the cloth of state; the two Cardinals sit under him as judges. The Queen takes place at some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the court, in manner of a consistory; below them, the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the stage.

Wol. Whilst our commission from Rome is read, Let silence be commanded.
K. Hen. What's the need?
It hath already publicly been read, And on all sides th' authority allow'd;
You may, then, spare that time.
Wol. Be so.—Proceed.
K. Hen. Here. [into the court.
[The Queen makes no answer, rises out of her chair, goes about the court, in manner of the King, and kneels at his feet; then speaks.]
Q. Kath. Sir, I desire you, do me right and justice, And to bestow your pity on me; for
I am a most poor woman, and a stranger, Born out of your dominions; having here
No judge indifferent, nor no more assurance Of equal friendship and proceeding. Alas! sir
In what have I offended you? what cause
Hath my behavior given to your displeasure, That you should proceed to put me off, And take your good grace from me? Heaven witness, I have been to you a true and humble wife, At all times to your will conformable;
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike, Yea, subject to your countenance; gird, or sorry, As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour
I ever: unadvisedly your desire, Or made it not mine too? or which of your friends Have I not strove to love, although I knew He were mine enemy? what friend of mine, That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice He was from thence discharg'd. Sir, call to mind That I have been your wife, in this obedience, Unto your time, and have been bad With many children by you: if in the course
And process of this time you can report, And prove it too, against mine honor aught, My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty, Against your sacred person, in God's name, Turn me away; and let the foulst contempt Shut door upon me, and so give me off, To the sharpest knife of justice. Please you, sir, The king, your father, was reputed for A prince most prudent, of an excellent And unmatch'd wit and judgment: Ferdinand, My father, king of Spain, was reckon'd one The wisest prince, that there had reign'd by many A year before: it is not to be question'd That the king and queen'd a wise counsel to them Of every realm, that did debate this business, Who deem'd our marriage lawful. Wherefore I hum- Beseech you, sir, to spare me, till I may [bly
Be by my friends in Spain advis'd, whose counsel I will implore: if not, if the name of God, Your pleasure be fulfill'd!
Wol. You have here, lady, (And of your choice) these reverend fathers; men Of singular integrity and learning, Yea, the elect o' the land, who are assembled To plead your cause. It shall be therefore bootless, That longer you 'd defer the court, as well For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsatisfied in the king.
Cam. His grace
Hath spoken well, and justly: therefore, madam.
It's fit this royal session do proceed, And that, without delay, their arguments Be now produce'd and heard.
Q. Kath. Lord cardinal, To you I speak.
Wol. Your pleasure, madam?
Q. Kath. Sir, I am about to weep; but, thinking that We are a queen, (or long have dream'd so) certain The daughter of a king, my drops of tears I'll turn to sparks of fire.
Wol. Be patient yet.
Q. Kath. I will, when you are humble; nay, before, Or God will punish me. I do believe, Induc'd by potent circumstances, that You are mine enemy, and make my challenge: You shall not be my judge; for it is you Have blown this coals betwixt my lord and me, Which with most ease may be blown out.—Therefore, I say again, I utterly abhor, yea, from my soul, Refuse you for my judge; whom, yet once more, I hold my most malicious foe, and think not At all a friend to truth.
Wol. I do profess, You speak not like yourself; who ever yet
Have took to charity, and display'd th' effects Of disposition gentle, and of wiser gen. [wrong] O'topping woman's power. Madam, you do me I have no spleen against you; nor injustice For you, or any: how far I have proceeded, Or how far farther shall, is warranted By a commission from the consistory, Yea, the whole consistory of Rome. You charge me, That I have blown this coal: I do deny it. The king is present: if it be known to him, That I gain'd my deed, how may he wound, And worthily, my falsehood; yea, as much As you have doe my truth. If he know That I am free of your report, he knows, I am not of your wrong: therefore, in him It lies to curse me; and the curse is, to Remain these thoughts from you: the which, before His highness shall speak in, I do beseech You, gracious madam, to unthiink your speaking, And to say no more.
Q. Kath. My lord, my lord, I am a simple woman, much too weak [mouth'd; To oppose your cunning. Y'are meek, and humble- You sign your place and calling in full 'minding, With meekness and humility; but your heart Is cram'd with arrogance, spleen, and pride. You have, by fortune and his highness' favors, Gone slightly o'er low steps, and now are mounted Where powers are your retainers; and your words, Domestics to you, serve your will, as' tis please Yourself pronounce their office. I must tell you, You have these thoughts from you: the which, before Your high profession spiritual; that again I do refuse you for my judge, and here, Before you all, appeal unto the pope, To bring my whole cause 'fore his holiness, And to be judged by him.
[She curties to the King, and offers to depart.
Cam. The queen is obstinate,
Subborn to justice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainful to be tried by’t: 'tis not well.
She's going away.

K. Hen. Call her again. [court.]

Crier. Katherine, queen of England, come into the Gent. Usk. Madam, you are call’d back;
Q. Kath. What need you note it? pray you, keep your way:
When you are call’d, return.—Now the Lord help!
They vex me past my patience.—Pray you, pass on.
I will not tarry; no, nor ever more,
When this business, my appearance make
In any of their courts.

[Exeunt Queen, and her Attendants.

K. Hen. Go thy ways, Kate:
That man if the world who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in nought be trusted, For speaking false in that. Thou art alone (I’th’ rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saintlike, wife-like government,
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could speak thee out)
The queen of earthly queens. — She’s a nobly born;
And, like her true nobility, she has Carried herself towards me.

Wald. Most gracious sir,
In humblest manner I require your highness,
That it shall please you to declare, in hearing
Of all these ears, (for where I am robb’d and bound,
There must be a thief, although not there
At once, and fully satisfied) whether ever I Did broach this business to your highness, or Laid any scruple in your way, which might Induce you to the question out? or ever
Have to you, but with thanks to God, for such A royal lady, speake one the least word, that might Be to the prejudice of her present state,
Or touch of her good person?

K. Hen. My lord cardinal,
I do excuse you; yea, upon mine honor,
I free you from’t. You are not to be taught
That you have many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but, like to village curs,
 Bark when their fellows do: by some of these
The queen is put in anger. Y‘ere excuse’d;
But will you be more justified? You ever
Have wish’d the sleeping of this business; never Desire it to be stirr’d; but oft have hinder’d, oft,
The passages made toward it.—On my honor,
I speak my good lord cardinal to this point,
And thus far clear him. Now, what move’d me to’t,
I will be bold with time, and your attention:
Then, mark th’ inducement. Thus it came; —
Give my conscience first receive’d a tenderness, [heed to’t.]
Scriple, and prick, on certain speeches utter’d
By the bishop of Bayonne, then French ambassador,
Who had been kither sent, on the debating
And carrying twice the duchess of Orleans and
Our daughter Mary. I the progress of this business,
Ere a determinate resolution, he
(I mean, the bishop) did require a respite;
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise
Whether our daughter were legitimate,
Respecting this our marriage with the dowager,
Sometimes our brother’s wife. This respite shook
The bottom of my conscience, enter’d me,
Yea, with a splitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my breast; which fore’d such way,
That many mad considerations did throng,
And press in with this caution. First, methought,
I stood not in the smile of Heaven; who had

"Could speak thee out," i. e., could do justice to thy merits.

Commanded nature, that my lady’s womb,
If it conceiv’d a male child by me, should Do no more offices of life to’t, than
The grave does to the dead; for her male issue
Or died where they were made, or shortly after
This world had us’d them. Hence I took a thought,
This was a judgment on me; that my kingdom,
Well worthy the best heir o’ the world, should not Be gladd’t in by me. Then follows, that I weigh’d the danger which my realms stood in
By this my issue’s fall; and that gave to me
Many a grinding throe. Thus, bulling in
The wild sea of my conscience, I did steer
Toward this remedy, whereupon we are Now present here together; that’s to say,
I meant to rectify my conscience,—which
I then did feel full sick, and yet not well,—
By all the reverend fathers of the land,
And doctors learn’d. First, I began in private
With you, my lord of Lincoln; you remember
How under my oppression I did e’reck,
When I first mov’d you.

Lin. Very well, my liege.
K. Hen. I have spoke long: be pleas’d yourself
How far you satisfied me.

[To say Lin. So please your highness,
The question did at first so stagger me,—
Bearing a state of mighty moment in’,
And consequence of dread,—that I committed
The daring’st counsel which I had to doubt,
And did entreat your highness to this course,
Which you are running here.

K. Hen. I then mov’d you,
My lord of Canterbury: and yet I do leave
To make this present summons. — Unsolicited
I left no reverend person in this court;
But by particular consent proceeded,
Under your hands and seals: therefore, go on;
For no dislike i’ the world against the person
Of the good queen, but the sharp thorny points
Of my alleged reasons drive this forward.
Prove but our marriage lawful, by my life,
And kingly dignity, we are contented
To wear our mortal state to come with her,
Katharine our queen, before the primest creature
That’s a paradigm o’ the world.

Cam. So please your highness,
The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness
That we adjourn this court till farther day:
Meanwhile must be an earnest motion
Made to the queen, to call back her appeal
She intends unto his holiness.

K. Hen. I may perceive, [Aside.
These cardinals trifle with me: I abhor
This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome.
Mylearn’d and well-beloved servant, Cranmer,
Pry’thee, return! with thy approach, I know,
My comfort comes along. [Adovd.]—Break up the court:
I say, set on. [Exeunt, in manner as they entered.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Palace at Bridewell.
A Room in the Queen’s Apartment.

The Queen, and her Women, as at work.

Q. Kath. Take thy lute, wenches: my soul grows sad with troubles;

"Hulling," i. e., floating without guidance.—"Rock," i. e., waste, or wear away.—"Paragon'd," i. e., without comparison.
Sing, and disperse them, if thou canst. Leave working.

SONG.

Orpheus with his lute made trees, and the mountain-tops, that freeze, do blote themselves, when he did sing:
To his music, plants, and flowers, ever spring; as sun, and showers, there had made a lasting spring.

Every thing that heard him play,
even the billows of the sea;
hung their heads, and then lay by.
In sweet music is such art,
Killing care and grief of heart.

Enter a Gentleman.

Q. Kath. How now.

Gent. An't please your grace, the two great car-wait in the presence. [dinals Q. Kath. Would they speak with me?

Gent. They will'd me say, madam.

Q. Kath. Pray their graces to come near. [Eziz Gent.] What can be their business?

With me, a poor, weak woman, fallen from favor? I do not like their coming, now I think not. They should be good men, their affairs as righteous; but all hoods make not monks.

Enter Wolsey and Campeius.

Wol. Peace to your highness.

Q. Kath. Your graces find me here part of a housewife. I would be here, against the worst may happen.

What are your pleasures with me, reverend lords? Wol. May it please you, noble madam, to withdraw into your private chamber, we shall give you the full cause of our coming.

Q. Kath. Speak it here. There's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience, deserves a corner; would all be women could speak this with as free a soul as I do! My lords, I care not, (so much I am happy) above a number if my actions were tried by every tongue, every eye saw them, envy and base opinion set against them, I know my life so even. If your business seek me out, and that way I am wise in, out with it boldly: truth loves open dealing.

Wol. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas, regina serenissima,

Q. Kath. O, good my lord, no Latin: I am not such a trunk since my coming, as not to know the language I have liv'd in: a strange tongue makes my cause more strange, suspicious.

Pray, speak in English. Here are some will thank if you speak truth, for their poor mistress' sake: Believe me, she has had much wrong. Lord cardinal, the willing'st sin I ever yet committed may be absolv'd in English.

Wol. Noble lady, I am sorry, my integrity should be breed, and service to his majesty and you.

So deep suspicion, where all faith was meant. We come not by the way of accusation, to taint that honor every good tongue blesses, nor to betray you any way to sorrow;

*Presence chamber. * Affair, i. e. professions.
And that way I am wise in, i. e. and concerns my conjugal relations.

Q. Kath. To betray me. [Aside. My lords, I thank you both for your good wills, ye speak like honest men, (pray God, ye prove so!) but how to make ye suddenly an answer, in such a point of weight, so near mine honor, (More near my life, I fear,) with my weak wit, and to such men of gravity and learning, in truth, I know not. I was set at work among my mists; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men, or such business. For her sake that I have been, for I feel the last fit of my greatness, good your graces, let me have time and counsel for my cause. Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless. [ tears: Wol. Madam, you wrong the king's love with these your hopes and friends are infinite.

Q. Kath. In England, but little for my profit: can you think, lords, that any Englishman dare give me counsel? Or be a known friend, 'gainst his highness' pleasure, (Though he be grown so desperate to be honest) and live a subject? Nay, forsooth, my friends, they that must weigh out my afflictions, they that my trust must grow to, live not here: They are all my other comforts, far hence, in mine own country, lords.

Cam. Would I, your grace, would leave your griefs, and take my counsel.

Q. Kath. How, sir? Cam. Put your main cause into the king's protection; he's loving, and most gracious: 'twill be much both for your honor better, and your cause: for if the trial of the law en'reke me, you'll part away disgrac'd.

Wol. He tells you rightly. Q. Kath. Ye tell me what ye wish for both,—my Is this your Christian counsel? out upon ye! Trun. Heaven is above all yet: there sits a Judge That no king can corrupt.

Cam. Your rage mistakes us.

Q. Kath. The more shame for ye! holy men I thought ye, upon my soul, two reverend cardinal virtues; but cardinal sins, and hollow hearts, I fear ye. Mend them for shame, my lords. Is this your com- The turns that ye bring a wretched Judy? I got! A woman lost among ye, laugh'd at, scorn'd? I will not wish ye half my miseries, I have more charity; but say, I war'd ye: Take heed, for heaven's sake, take heed, lest at once The burden of my sorrows fall upon ye.

Wol. Madam, this is a mere distraction; You are the good we offer into trust. Q. Kath. Ye turn me into nothing. Woe upon ye, and all such false professors! Would ye have me (If ye have any justice, any pity, If ye be any thing but churchmen's habits)

*Fort her sake that I have been," i. e., for the sake of the royalty I have possessed. * Weigh out is used for weigheth.

*Malice; malignity.
Put thy sick cause into his hands that hates me!
Alas! he has banish'd me his bed already;
His love, too long ago: I am old, my lord,
And all the fellowship I hold now with him
Is only my obedience. What can happen
To me above this thankless case? all thy studies
Make me a curse like this.

Cam. Your fears are worse.

Q. Kath. Have I liv'd thus long,—(let me speak myself, Since virtue finds no friends,)—a wife, a true one?
A woman (I dare say without vain-glory)
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affections [him?]
Still met the king? lov'd him next heaven? obey'd
Been, out of fondness, a superstitious to him?
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'tis not well, lords,
Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure,
And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet will I add an honor,—a great patience.

Wil. Madam, you wander from the good we aim at.

Q. Kath. My lord, I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities.

Wil. Pray, hear me.

Q. Kath. Would I had never trod this English
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it! [earth,
Ye have angels' faces, but heaven knows your hearts.
What will become of me now, wretched lady?
I am the most unhappy woman living—
Ahs! poor wenches, where are now your fortunes!
Shipwreck'd, upon a kingdom, where no pity,
No friends, no hope, no kindred weep for me,
Almost no grave allow'd me.—Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head, and perish.

Wil. If your grace
Could but be brought to know my ends are honest,
You'd feel more comfort. Why should we, good lady,
Upon what cause, wrong you? alas! our places,
The way of our profession is against it:
We are to cure such sorrows, not to sow them.
For goodness sake, consider what you do;
How you may hurt yourself, ay, utterly
Grow from the king's acquaintance, by this carriage.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell, and grow as terrible as storms.
I know, you have a gentle, noble temper,
A soul as even as a calm: pray, think us [vants.
Those we profess, peace-makers, friends, and ser-

Cam. Madam, you'll find it so. You wrong your turces
With these weak women's fears: a noble spirit,
As yours was put into you, ever costs [you;
Such doubts, as false coin, from it. The king loves
Beware, you lose it not: for, if you please
To trust us in your business, we are ready
To use our utmost studies in your service.

Q. Kath. Do what ye will, my lords: and pray,
If I have us'd myself unmanners, [forgiven me,
You know I am a woman, lacking wit.
To make a seemly answer to such persons.
Pray do my service to his majesty:
He has my heart yet, and shall have my prayers,
While I shall have my life. Come, reverend fathers;

*"Been . . . superstitious to him." i.e., served him with superstitious attention. "Used," i.e., behaved.

Bestow your counsels on me: she now begs,
That little thought, when she set footing here,
She should have bought her dignities so dear.

SCENE II.—Auto-chamber to the King's Apartment.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, the Duke of Suffolk,
the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.

Nor. If you will now unite in your complaints,
And force them with a constancy, the cardinal
Cannot stand under them: if you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustain more new disgraces,
With these you bear already.

Sur. I am joyful
To meet the least occasion, that may give me
Remembrance of my father-in-law, the duke,
To be reveng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the peers
Have contented? I mean, by or at least
Strangely neglected? when did he regard
The stamp of nobleness in any person,
Out of himself?

Cham. My lords, you speak your pleasures
What he deserves of you and me, I know;
What we can to him, (though now the time Gives way to us) I much fear. If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt
Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft
Over the king in's tongue.

Nor. * O! fear him not;
His spell in that is out: the king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever more
The honey of his language. No, he act'd,
Not to come off, in his displeasure.

Sur. Sir, I should be glad to hear such news as this Once every hour.

Nor. Believe it, this is true.
In the divorce his contrary proceeding
Are all unfolded: wherein he appears,
As I could wish mine enemy.

Sur. How the
His practices to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Sur. O! how! how?

Suf. The cardinal's letter to the pope miscurried,
And came to the eye o' the king: wherein was read,
How that the cardinal did entreat his holiness
To stay the judgment o' the divorce; for if
It did take place, "I do," quoth he, "perceive,
My king is tangled in affection to
A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen."

Sur. Has the king this?

Suf. Believe it.

Sur. Will this work?

Cham. The king in this perceives him, how he coasts,
And hedges, his own way. But in this point
All his tricks founder, and he brings his physic
After his patient's death: the king already
Hath married the fair lady.

Sur. Would he had!

Suf. May you be happy in your wish, my lord;
For, I profess, you have it.

Sur. Now may all joy
eTrace the conjunction!

Suf. My amen too.'
KING HENRY VIII.

ACT III.

KING TO MARRY, you and I.

You would 'twere something that would fret the
The master-chord on its heart!

Enter Wolsey and Cromwell.

Come abroad?

Crom. I think, by this he is.

Wol. Leave me awhile. — [Exit Cromwell.

It shall be to the duchess of Alençon,
The French king's sister: he shall marry her.

Anne Bullen? No; I'll no Anne Bullens for him:
There's more in't than fair visage.—Bullen! No, we'll no Bullens.—Speedily I wish
To hear from Rome.—The marchioness of Pembroke!

He's discontented.

Suf. May be, he hears the king
Does what his anger to him.

Sar. Sharp enough,
Lord! for thy justice.

Wol. The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's
To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's queen!—
This candle burns not clear; 'tis I must snuff it;
Then, out it goes.—What though I know her virtues,
And well deserving, yet I know her for A sly spleeny Lutheran; and not whole-some to —Our cause, that she should lie 't the bosom of

Our hard-ru'd king. Again, there is sprung up
An heretic, an arch one, Crommer; one
Hath crawl'd into the favor of the king,
And is his oracle.

He is vex'd at something.

Suf. I would, 'twere something that would fret the Enter the King, reading a Schedule; and Lovell.

The king, the king! K. Hen. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated,
To his own portion! and what expense by the hour
Seems to flow from him! How, 'tis the name of thrift,
Does he raise this together?—Now, my lords;
Saw you the cardinal?

K. Hen. My lord, we have 't Comming forward.
Stood here observing him. Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then, lays his finger on his temple; straight,
Springs out into fast gait; then, stops again,
 Strikes his breast hard; and anon he casts
His eye against the moon. In most strange postures
We have seen him set himself.

It may well be:

There is a mutiny in's mind. This morning
Papers of state he sent me to peruse,
As I requir'd; and, ", I found, what I found
There, on my conscience, put unwittingly!
Forsoch an invention; thus importing, —
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household: which
I find at such proud rate, that it out-speaks
Possession of a subject.

K. Hen. It's heaven's will:
Some spirit put this paper in the packet,
To bless your eye withal.

K. Hen. If we did think
His contemplation were above the earth,
And ", on spiritual object, he should still
Dwell in his musings; but, I am afraid,
His thinkings are below the moon, not worth
His serious considering.

He takes his seat, and whispers Lovell, who Goes to Wolsey.

Wol. Heaven forgive me! — Amazedly.
Ever God bless your highness.

K. Hen. Good my lord,
You are full of heavenly stuff, and hear the inventory
Of your best graces in your mind, the which
You were now running o'er; you have scarce time
To steal from spiritual labor a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Sure, in that
I deem you an ill husband, and am glad
To have you therein my companion.

Wol. Sir,
For holy offices I have a time; a time
To think upon the part of business, which
I hear 'tis the state; and nature does require
Her time of preservation, which, perforce,
I her fruit son, amongst my brethren mortal,
Must give my tendance to.

K. Hen. You have said well.

Wol. And ever may your highness yoke together,
As I will lend you cause, my doing well
With my well saying?

K. Hen. Tis well said again;
And 'tis a kind of good deed to say well:
And yet words are no deeds. My father lov'd you;
He said he did, and with his deed did crown
His word upon you: since I had my office,

Know.
I have kept you next my heart; have not alone
Employ'd you where high profits might come home,
But par'd my present havings, to bestow
My bounties upon you.

Wol. What should this mean? [Aside.
Sur. The Lord increase this business! [Aside.
K. Hen. The prime man of the state? I pray you, tell me,
If what I now pronounce you have found true;
And, if you may confess it, say wthin,
If you are bound to us, or no. What say you?

Wol. My sovereign, I confess, your royal graces,
Show'd on me daily, have been more than could
My studied purposes repel; which went Beyond all man's endeavors: my endeavors
Have ever come too short of my desires,
Yet fill'd with my abilities. Mine own ends
Have been mine so, that evermore they pointed
To the good of your most sacred person, and
The profit of the state. For your great graces
Heap'd upon me, poor underserver, I
Can nothing render but alleging thanks;
My prayers to heaven for you; my loyalty,
Which ever has, and ever shall be growing,
Till death, that winter, kill it.

K. Hen. FAIRLY ANSWER'D:
A loyal and obedient subject is Therein illustrated. The honor of it
Does pay the act of it; as, 't is the contrary,
The foulness is the punishment. I presume,
That as my hand has open'd bounty to you,
My heart dropp'd love, my power rain'd honor, more
On you than any; so your hand, and heart,
Your brain, and every function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in love's particular, be more
To me, your friend, than any.

Wol. I do profess,
That for your highness' good I ever labor'd
More than mine own: that am, have, and will be—(Though all the world should crack their duty to you,
And throw it from their soul; though perils did Abound, as thick as thought could make them, and Appear in forms more horrid) yet my duty,
As with a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.

K. Hen. 'Tis nobly spoken.
Take notice, lords, he has a loyal breast,
For you have seen him open'd:—Read o'er this:
"Giving him Papers."

And, after this, and then to breakfast,
With what appetite you have.

[Exit King, frowning upon Cardinal Wolsey:
the Nobles throng after him, smiling, and whis-
poring.

Wol. What should this mean?
What sudden anger's this? how have I reap'd it?
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the cloven fawn
Upon the daring huntsman that has gull'd him,
Then, makes him nothing. I must read this paper;
I fear, the story of his anger.—'Tis so:

[Opens the Paper, and reads, trembling.
This paper has undone me!—'Tis th' account
Of all that world of wealth I have drawn together
For mine own ends; indeed, to gain the popedom,
And fee my friends in Rome. O negligence!
Fit for a fool to fall by. What cross devil
Made me put this main secret in the packet
I sent the king? Is there no way to cure this?
No new device to beat this from his brains?
I know 'twill stir him strongly; yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spite of fortune
Will bring me off again. What's this?—"To the Pope!"
The letter, as I live, with all the business
I write to his holiness. Nay then, farewell?
I have touch'd the highest point of all my greatness,
And from that full meridian of my glory,
I haste now to my setting: I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more. [*'Sticks in a chair.
Re-enter the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, the Earl of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlain.
Nor. Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal; who commands you
To render up the great seal presently
Into our hands, and to confine yourself
To Asher-house, my lord of Winchester's,
Till you hear farther from his highness.

Wol. Stay: [Rising.
Where's your commission, lords? words cannot carry
Authority so weighty.

Sur. Who dare cross them?

Sur. Stephn. What is he, that would cross the king's will from his mouth expressly?
Wol. Till I find more than will, or words, to do it,
(I mean your malice) know, officious lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now, I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded,—envy;
How eagerly yo follow my disgraces,
As if it feel ye; and how sleek and wanton
Ye appear in every thing may bring my ruin!
Follow your curious courses, men of malice;
You have Christian warrant for them, and, no doubt,
In time will find their fit rewards. That soul,
You ask with such a violence, the king,
(Mine, and your master) with his own hand gave me;
Bade me enjoy it, with the place and honors,
During my life, and to confirm his goodness,
Tied it by letters patent. Now, who'll take it?

Sur. The king that gave it.

Wol. It must be himself, then.

Sur. Thou art a proud traitor, priest.

Wol. Proud lord, thou liest:
Within these forty hours Surrey durst better
Have burnt that tongue, than said so.

Sur. Thy ambition, thou scarlet sin, rob'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham, my father-in-law:
The heads of all thy brother cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together)
Weigh'd not a hair of his. Pлагue of your policy!
You sent me deputy for Ireland,
Far from his succor, from the king, from all
That might have mercy on the fault thou gav'st him;
Whilst your great goodness, out of holy pity,
Absolv'd him with an axe.

Wol. This, and all else
This talking lord can lay upon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The duke by law
Found his deserts: how innocent I was
From any private malice in his end,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.
If I lov'd many words, lord, I should tell you,
You have as little honesty as honor,
That in the way of loyalty and truth.
Toward the king, my ever royal master,
Dare *mate a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And all that love his follies.

Sur. By my soul,
Your long coat, priest, protects you: thou should'st feel
My sword? the life-blood of thee else.—My lords,

* "M ate," L. C. equal.
Can ye endure to hear this arrogance?
And from this fellow? If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility; let his grace go forward,
And dare we with his cap, like larks.

Vol. All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.
Yes, that goodness
Of cleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion;
The goodness of your intercepted packets, [ness,
You writ to the pope, against the king; your good-
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.—
My lord of Norfolk,—as you are truly noble,
And you respect the common good, the state
Of our despis'd nobility, our issues
(Who, if he live, will scarce be gentlemen)
Produce the grand sum of his sins, the articles
Collected from his life.—I'll startle you
Worse than the sacring bell, when the brown wench
Lay kissing in your arms, lord cardinal. [man,
Vol. How much, methinks, I could despise this
But when I am found in charity against it.
Nor. Those articles, my lord, are in the king's hand;
But, thus much, they are foul ones.

Vol. So much fairer,
And spotless, shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.

Sur. This cannot save you.
I think my memory, I yet remain
Some of these articles; and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and cry guilty, cardinal,
You'll show a little honesty.

Vol. Speak on, sir;
I dare your worst objections: if I blush,
It is to see a nobleman want manners.

Sur. I had rather want those, than my head.
Have at you.—
First, that without the king's assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You mim'd the jurisdiction of all bishops.

Nor. Then, that in all you writ to Rome, or else
To foreign princes, ego et Rex meus
Was still inscrib'd; in which you brought the king
To be your servant.

Sur. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of king or council, when you went
Ambassador to the emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders the great seal;

Sur. Item, you sent a large commission
To Gregory de Cassalis, to conclude,
Without the king's will or the state's allowance,
A league between his highness and Ferrara.

Sur. That out of mere ambition you have caus'd
Your holy hat to be stamp'd on the king's coin.

Sur. Then, that you have sent innumerable substance,
(By what means got I leave to your own conscience)
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities; to the great undoing
Of all the kingdom. Many more there are;
Which, since they are of you, and odious,
I will not touch my mouth with.

Cham. O my lord!
Press not a falling man too far; 'tis virtue.
His faults lie open to the laws: let them
Not you, correct him. My heart weeps to see him
So little of his great self.

Sur. Lord cardinal, the king's further pleasure is,— Because all these things, you have done of late
By your power of legatine within this kingdom,
Fall into the compass of a praemunire,—
That therefore such a writ be sued against you;
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Chattels, and whatsoever, and to be held
Out of the king's protection.—This is my charge.

Nor. And so we'll leave you to your meditations,
How to live better. For your stubborn answer,
About the giving back the great seal to us, [you.
The king shall know it, and, no doubt, shall thank
So, fare you well, my little good lord cardinal.

[Exeunt all but Wolsey.

Vol. So, farewell to the little good you bear me.
Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness!
This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honors thick upon him:
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And,—when he thinks, good man, fast surely
His greatness is a ripening,—rips his root.
And then he falls, as I do. I have ventured,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory,
But far beyond my depth: my high blown pride
At length broke under me; and now has left me,
Weary and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that mongodbles me.
Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate ye:
I feel my heart new open'd. O! how wretched
Is that poor man, that hangs on princes' favors.
There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
That sweet aspect of princes, and their 555
More pangs and fears than wars or women have;
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope again.

[Enter Cromwell, amazedly.

Why, how now, Cromwell! I have no power to speak, sir.

Crom. Why what amaz'd
At my misfortunes? can thy spirit wonder,
A great man should decline? Nay, as you weep,
I am fallen indeed.

Crom. How does your grace?

Wol. Why, well;
Never so truly happy, my good Cromwell.
I know myself now; and I feel within me
A peace above all earthly dignities,
A still and quiet conscience. The king has cur'd me,
I humbly thank his grace, and from these shoulders,
These ruin'd pillars, out of pity, taken
A load would sink a navy—too much honor.
O! 'tis a burden, Cromwell, 'tis a burden,
Too heavy for a man that hopes for heaven.

Crom. I am glad your grace has made that right use of it.

Wol. I hope I have: I am able now, methinks,
(Out of a fortitude of soul I feel)
To endure more miseries, and greater far,
Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.

Wol. What news abroad?

Crom. The heaviest, and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the king.

Wol. God bless him! Crom. The next is, that sir Thomas More is chosen
Lord Chancellor in your place.

Wol. That's somewhat sudden;
SCENE I. A Street in Westminster.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting.

1 Gent. You're well met once again.

2 Gent. I so are you. [behold

1 Gent. You come to take your stand here, and
The lady Anne pass from her coronation?

2 Gent. 'Tis all my business. At our last encounter,
The duke of Buckingham came from his trial.

1 Gent. 'Tis very true; but that time offer'd sorrow,
This, general joy.

2 Gent. 'Tis well: the citizens,
I am sure, have shown at full their royal minds;
As, let 'em have their rights, they are ever forward
In celebration of this day with shows,
Pageants, and sights of honor.

1 Gent. Never greater;
Nor, I'll assure you, better taken, sir.

2 Gent. May I be bold to ask what that contains,
That paper in your hand?

1 Gent. Yes: 'tis the list
Of those that claim their offices this day,
By custom of the coronation.
The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims
To be his highest: next, the duke of Norfolk,
He to be earl marshal. You may read the rest.

2 Gent. I thank you, sir; had I not known those customs,
I should have been beholding to your paper.
But, I beseech you, what's become of Katharine,
The princess dowager! how goes her business?

1 Gent. That I can tell you. The archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned and reverend fathers of his order,
Held a late court at Dunstable, six miles off
From Ampthill, where the princess lay: to which
She was often cited by them, but appear'd not:
And, to be short, for not appearance,
And the king's late scruple, by the main asent
Of all these learned men she was divorce'd,
And the late marriage made of none effect:
Since which she was removed to Kimbolton,
Where she remains now, sick.

2 Gent. Alas, good lady!— [Trumpets.
The trumpets sound: stand close, the queen is coming.

[Hautboys.

the order of the coronation.

A lively flourish of Trumpets.

1. Then, two Judges.

2. Lord Chancellor, with purse and mace before him.

4. Mayor of London bearing the mace. Then, Gar- ter in his coat of arms; and on his head
He wore a gilt crown column.

5. Marques Dorset, bearing a sceptre of gold: on His head a demi-crown of Gold. With him
The Earl of Surrey, bearing the rod of silver
With the dove; crowned with an earl's coronet.
Collars of SS.

6. Duke of Suffolk, in his robe of estate, his coronet
On his head, bearing a long white wand, as High-steward. With him, the Duke of Nor- folk, with the rod of marshalship; a coronet
On his head. Collars of SS.

7. A canopy borne by four of the 4 Cinque-ports;

4 "Four of the Cinque-ports," i. e., four bars of the Cinque-ports.

*The chancellor is the guardian of orphans.— "In open," 1 c. openly.— "Make use," i. e., make interest. under it, the Queen in her robe; in her hair, richly adorned with pearl, crowned. On each side her, the Bishops of London and Winchester.

8. The old Duchess of Norfolk, in a coronal of gold, wrought with flowers, bearing the Queen's train.

9. Certain Ladies or Countesses, with plain circles of gold without flowers.

2 Gent. A royal train, believe me.—These I know:
Who's that, that bears the sceptre?
1 Gent. Marquess Dorset:
And that the earl of Surrey, with the rod.
2 Gent. A bold brave gentleman. That should be
The duke of Suffolk.
1 Gent. 'Tis the same; high-steward.
2 Gent. And that my lord of Norfolk?
1 Gent. Yes.
2 Gent. Heaven bless thee! [Looking on the Queen.]
Then last the sweetest face I ever look'd on.—
Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel:
Our king has all the Indies in his arms,
And more, and richer, when he straights that lady.
I cannot blame his conscience.
1 Gent. They, that bear
The cloth of honor over her, are four barons
Of the cinque-ports. [near her.
2 Gent. Those men are happy; and so are all, are
1 take it, she that carries up the train
Is that old noble lady, duchess of Norfolk.
1 Gent. It is; and all the rest are countesses.
2 Gent. Their coronets say so. These are stars, And sometimes falling ones. [indeed;
1 Gent. No more of that.
[Exit Procession, with a great flourish of Trumpets.

Enter a third Gentleman.

God save you, sir! Where have you been broiling?
3 Gent. Among the crowd! the abbey; where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more: I am stifled
With the mere rankness of their joy.
2 Gent. You saw the ceremony?
3 Gent. That I did.
1 Gent. How was it?
3 Gent. Well worth the seeing.
2 Gent. Good sir, speak it to us.
3 Gent. As well as I am able. The rich stream, Of lords and ladies, having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
A distance from her; while her grace sat down to rest a while, some half an hour or so;
In a rich chair of state, opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people.
Believe me, sir, she is the goodwill'st man
That ever lay by man: which when the people
Had the full view of, such a noise arose
As the shrunds make at sea in a stiff tempes't,
As loud, and to as many tunes: lutes, cloaks, (Doublets, I think) flew up; and had their faces
Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such joy
I never saw before. Great-bellied women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams
In the old time of war, would shake the press,
And make them reel before them. No man living
Could say, "This is my wife," there; all were woven
So strangely in one piece.

2 Gent. But, what follow'd?
3 Gent. At length her grace rose, and with modest Come to the altar; where she kneel'd, and saunter like

* Battering-rams.

Cast her fair eyes to heaven, and pray'd devoutly.
Then rose again, and bow'd her to the people:
When by the archbishop of Canterbury
She had all the royal makings of a queen;
As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems
Laid nobly on her: which perfumed, the choir,
With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,
And with the same full state pace'd back again
To York-place, where the feast is held.

1 Gent. Sir,
You must no more call it York-place, that's past;
For, since the cardinal fell, that title's lost:
'Tis now the king's, and call'd—Whitehall.

3 Gent. I know it;
But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name
Is fresh from me.

2 Gent. What two reverend bishops
Were those that went on each side of the queen?
3 Gent. Stokesley and Gardiner; the one of Winchester, Newly prefer'd from the king's secretary;
The other, London.

2 Gent. He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the archbishop's,
The virtuous Cranmer.

3 Gent. All the land knows that,
However, yet there's no great breach; when it comes,
Cranmer will find a friend will not shrink from him.

2 Gent. Who may that be, I pray you?

3 Gent. Thomas Cromwell;
A man in much esteem with the king, and truly
A worthy friend.—The king has made him
Master of the jewel-house, And one, already, of the privy-council.

2 Gent. He will deserve more.

3 Gent. Yes, without all doubt.

Come, gentlemen, ye shall go my way, which
Is to the court, and there ye shall be my guests:
Something I can command. As I walk thither,
I'll tell ye more.

Both. You may command us, sir. [Execut.

SCENE II.—Kimbolton.

Enter Katharine, Dowager, sick; led between Griffith and Patience.

Griff. How does your grace?
Kath. O, Griffith! sick to death:
My legs, like loaden branches, bow to the earth,
Willing to leave their burden. Reach a chair,—
[They sit.

So,—now, methinks, I feel a little case.
Didst thou not tell me, Griffith, as thou lovest me,
That the great child of honor, cardinal Wolsey,
Was dead?

Griff. Yes, madam; but, I think, your grace,
Out of the pain you suffer'd, gave us ear to.

Kath. Fr'ythee, good Griffith, tell me how he died:
If well, he sopp'd before me, I happily,
For my example.

Griff. Well, the voice goes, madam:
For utter the stout ester Northumberland
Arrested him at York, and brought him forward,
As a man sorely tainted, to his answer,
He fell sick suddenly, and grew so ill,
He could not sit his mule.

Kath. Alas, poor man!

Griff. At last, with easy roads, he came to Leicester;

* Haply; perhaps.—" Roads," I e., stages; journeys.
The Vision. Enter, solemnly tripping one after another, six Personages, clad in white robes, wearing on their heads garlands of boys, and golden wands in their faces; branches of bay, or palm, in their hands. They first congrege unto her, then dance; and, at certain changes, the first two hold a spere garland over her head; at which, the other four make reverend curtsies: then, the two that held the garland deliver the same to the other next two, who observe the same order in their changes, and holding the garland over her head. Which done, they deliver the same garland to the last two, who likewise observe the same order: at which, (as it were by inspiration) she makes in her sleep signs of rejoicing, and holdeth up her hands to heaven. And so in their dancing they vanish, carrying the garland with them. The music continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone? [Waking]
And leave me here in wretchedness behind ye?

Kath. Madam, we are here.

Kath. It is not you I call for.

Kath. Saw ye none enter, since I slept?

Kath. None, madam.

Kath. No! Saw you not, even now, a blessed troop Invite me to a banquet; whose bright faces Cast thousand beams upon me, like the sun! They promised me eternal happiness, And brought me garlands, Griffith, which I feel I am not worthy yet to wear: I shall, assuredly.

Grif. I am most joyful, madam, such good dreams Possess your fancy.

Kath. Bid the music leave,
They are harsh and heavy to me. [Music ceases.

Pat. Do you note, How much her grace is alter’d on the sudden! How long her face is drawn? How pale she looks, And of an earthly coldness? Mark her eyes!

Grif. She is going, wrench. Pray, pray.

Pat. Heaven comfort her.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. An’t like your grace,—

Kath. You are a saucy fellow:

Describe we more reverence?

Grif. You are to blame Knowing she will not lose her wonted greatness, To use so rude behavior: go to; know better.

Mess. I humbly do entreat your highness’ pardon; [Kneeling.
My haste made me unmanners. There is staying A gentleman, sent from the king to see you. Kath. Admit him entrance, Griffith: but this fellow Let me ne’er see again.

[Exeunt Griffith and Messenger.

Re-enter Griffith, with Capucius.

Kath. If my sight fail not, You should be lord ambassador from the emperor, My royal nephew; and your name Capucius.

Cap. Madam, the same, your servant.

Kath. O my lord!

The times, and titles, now are alter’d strangely With me, since first you knew me. But, I pray you, What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble lady, First, mine own service to your grace; the next, The king’s request that I would visit you; Who grieves much for your weakness, and by me Sends you his princely commendations, And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. O! my good lord, that comfort comes too late:
'Tis like a pardon after execution.
That gentle physic, given in time, had cur'd me;
But now I am past all comforts here, but prayers.
How does his highness?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he ever do; and ever flourish,
When I shall dwell with worms, and my poor name
Banish'd the kingdom.—Patience, is that letter,
I caus'd you write, yet sent away?

Pat. No, madam. [Giving it to Katharine.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliver
This to my lord the king.

Cap. Most willing, madam.

Kath. In which I have commended to his goodness
The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter:

The deus of heaven fall thick in blessings on her!
Beseeching him to give her virtuous breeding.
She is young, and of a noble modest nature,
I hope, she will deserve well; and a little
To love her for her mother's sake, that lov'd her,
Heaven knows how dearly. My next poor petition
Is, that his noble grace would have some pity
Upon my wretched women, that so long,
Have follow'd both my fortunes faithfully:
Of which there is not one, I dare avow,
(And now I should not lie) but will deserve,
For virtue, and true beauty of the soul,
For honesty, and decent carriage,
A right good husband, let him be a noble;
And, sure, those men are happy that shall have them.
The last is, for my men:—they are the poorest,
But poverty could never draw them from me:—
That they may have their wages duly paid them,
And something over to remember me by:
If heaven had pleas'd to have given me longer life,
And able means, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole contents:—and, good my lord,
By that you love the dearest in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to souls departed,
Stand these poor people's friend, and urge the king
To do me this last right.

Cap. By heaven, I will,
Or let me lose the fashion of a man!

Kath. I thank you, honest lord. Remember me
In all humility unto his highness:
Say, his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world: tell him, in death I bless'd him,
For so I will.—Mine eyes grow dim.—Farewell,
My lord.—Griffith, farewell.—Nay, Patience,
You must not leave me yet: I must to bed;
Call in more women.—When I am dead, good wench,
Let me be us'd with honor: strew me over
With maiden flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste wife to my grave. Embalm me;
Then lay me forth: although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me.
I can no more. [Exit Katharine.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A Gallery in the Palace.

Enter GARDINER, Bishop of Winchester, a Page
With a Torch before him; met by Sir Thomas Lovell.

Gar. It's one o'clock, boy, is't not?

Boy. It hath struck.

Gar. These should be hours for necessaries,
SCENE I.

KING HENRY VIII.

Nor shall not when my fancy's on my play.—

Now, Lovell, can't personally deliver to her

What you commanded me, but by her woman

I sent your message; who return'd her thanks

In the greatest humbleness, and desir'd your highness

Most heartily to pray for her.

K. Hen. What sayst thou? ha! To pray for her? what! is she crying out? [made

Lov. So said her woman; and that her sufferance

Almost each pang a death.

K. Hen. Alas, good lady!

Suf. God safely quell her of her burden, and

With gentle travail, to the gladding of

Your highness with an heir!

K. Hen. [Tis midnight, Charles: Pr'ythee, to bed; and in thy prayers remember

Th' estate of my poor queen. Leave me alone,

For I must think of that, which company

Would not be friendly to.

Suf. I wish your highness

A quiet night; and my good mistress will Remember in my prayers.

K. Hen. [Exeunt.

Lov. This is about that which the Bishop spoke:

[Aside.

I am happily come hither.

Re-enter Denny with Cranmer.

K. Hen. Avoid the gallery.

[LOVELL seems to stay.

Ha!—I have said.—Be gone, What I—

[Exit Lovell and Denny.

Cran. I am fearful.—Wherfore frowns he thus?

K. Hen. [Aside.

'Tis his aspect of terror: all's not well. [know

K. Hen. How now, my lord! You do desire to Wherefore I sent for you.

Cran. It is my duty? [Kneeling.

To attend your highness' pleasure.

K. Hen. Pray you, arise,

My good and gracious lord of Canterbury.

Come, you and I must walk a turn together; [hand.

I have news to tell you. Come, come, give me your

Ah, my good lord, I grieve at what I speak,

And am right sorry to repeat what follows.

I have, and most unwillingly, of late

Heard many grievous, I do say, my lord,

Grievous complaints of you; which being consider'd

Have mov'd us and our council, that you shall

This morning come before us: where, I know,

You cannot with such freedom purge yourself;

But that, till further trial in those charges

Which will require your answer, you must take

Your patience to you, and be well contented

To make your house our Tower: 2 to a brother of us,

It: fits me thus proceed, or else no witness

Would come against you.

Cran. I humbly thank your highness, And am right glad to catch this good occasion

[Aside.

Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff

And corn shall fly asunder; for, I know,

There's none stands under more calumnious tongues

Than I myself, poor man.

K. Hen. Stand up, good Canterbury: Thy truth, and thy integrity, is rooted

In us, thy friend. Give me thy hand, stand up:

Rising.

Pr'ythee, let's walk. Now, by my holy dame,

What manner of man are you? My lord, I look'd

You would have given me your petition, that

I should have ta'en some pains to bring together

Yourself and your accusers; and to have heard you,

Without 2 indurance, farther.

Cran. Most dread liege,

The 3 ground I stand on, is my truth, and honesty:

If they shall fall, I, with mine enemies,

Will triumph o'er my person, which I 2 weigh not,

Being of those virtues vacant. I fear nothing

What can be said against me.

K. Hen. Know you not [world? How your state stands? 2 the world, with the whole

Your enemies are many, and not small; their practices

Must bear the same proportion: and not 2 ever

The justice and the truth o' the question carries

The due o' the verdict of it. At what ease

Might corrupt minds procure knaves, as corrupt,

To swear against you: such things have been done:

You are potently oppos'd, and with a malice

Of as great size. 4 Ween you of better luck,

I mean in pejr'd witness, than your Master,

Whose minister you are, whiles he liv'd

Upon this naughty earth? Go to, go to

You take a preceptice for no leap of danger,

And woo your own destruction.

Cran. God, and your majesty,

Protest mine innocence, or I fall into

The trap is laid for me!

K. Hen. Be of good cheer;

They shall no more prevail, than we give way to.

Keep comfort to you; and this morning, see

You do appear before them. If they shall chance,

In charging you with matters, to commit you.

The best persuasions to the contrary

Fail not to use, and with what vehemency

The occasion shall instruct you: if entreaties

Will render you no remedy, this ring

Deliver them, and your appeal to us 5 weeps:

There make before them.—Look, the good man

He's honest, on mine honor. God's blessed mother!

I swear, he is true-hearted; and a soul

None better in my kingdom.—Get you gone,

And do as I have bid you. [Exit Cranmer.] He

His language in his tears. [has strangled

Enter an old Lady, in haste.

Gent. [Within.] Come back; what mean you? Lady.

I'll not come back; the tidings that I bring

Will make my boldness manners.—Now, good angels

Fly o'er thy royal head, and shade thy person

Under their blessed wings!

K. Hen. Now, by thy looks

I guess my tongue. Is the queen deliver'd?

Say, ay; and of a boy.

Lady. Ay, ay, my liege;

And of a lovely boy: the God of heaven

Both now and ever bless her!—Tis a girl,

Promises boys hereafter. Sir, your queen

Desires you visitation, and to be

Acquainted with this stranger: 'tis as like you

As cherry is to cherry.

K. Hen. Lovell!
Re-enter Lovell.

Lov. Sir. K. Hen. Give her an hundred marks, I'll to the queen.

[Exit King]

Lady. An hundred marks! By this light, I'll ha' an ordinary grooms for such payment: I more. I will have more, or scold it out of him. Said I for this the girl was like to him? I will have more, or else unsay'd; and now, While it is hot, I'll put it to the issue. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Lobby before the Council-Chamber.

Enter Cranmer; Servants, Door-keeper, &c. attending.

Cran. I hope, I am not too late; and yet the gentleman,
That was sent to me from the council, pray'd me
To make great haste. All fast! what means this?
Who waits there?—Sure, you know me? [Ho!]
D. Keep. Yes, my lord; But yet I cannot help you. Cran.

D. Keep. Your grace must wait, till you be call'd
Enter Doctor Butts.

Cran. Butts. This is a piece of malice. I am glad,
I came this way so happily: the king
Shall understand it presently. [Exit Butts.

Cran. 'Tis Butts,2
The king's physician. As he past along,
How earnestly he cast his eyes upon me.
Pray heaven, he sound not my disgrace! For certain,
This is of purpose laid by some that hate me,
(God turn their hearts! I never sought their malice) To quench mine honor: they would shame to make me
Wait else at door, a fellow counsellor
'Mong boys, grooms, and lackeys. But their pleasures
Must be full'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King and Butts, at a window above.

Butts. I'll show your grace the strangest sight,—
K. Hen. What's that, Butts? Butts. I think, your highness saw this many a day.
K. Hen. Body o' me, where is it? Butts. There, my lord: The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury;
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst pursuivants, Pages, and footboys. K. Hen. Ha! 'Tis he, indeed. Is this the honor they do one another?
'Tis well, there's one above 'em yet. I had thought, They had parted so much honestly among 'em, (At least good manners) as not thus to suffer.
A man of his place, and so near our favor,
To dance attendance on their lordships' pleasures,
And at the door too, like a post with packets.
By holy Mary, Butts, there's knavery:
Let 'em alone, and draw the curtain close;
We shall hear more anon.—[Exeunt.

THE COUNCIL-CHAMBER.

Enter the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Suffolk, Earl of Surrey, Lord Chamberlain, Gardiner, and Cromwell. The Chancellor places himself at the upper end of the table on the left hand; a seat being left void above him, as for the Archbishop of Canterbury. The rest seat themselves in order on each side. CROMWELL at the lower end, as secretary.

D. Keep. My lord archbishop; And have done half an hour, to know your pleasures. Chan. Let him come in.
D. Keep. Your grace may enter now. [Cranmer approaches the Council-table.
Chan. My good lord archbishop, I am very sorry To sit here at this present, and behold That chair stand empty: but we all are men, In our own natures frail, and 2 culpable. Of our flesh; few are angels: out of which frailty, And want of wisdom, you, that best should teach us, Have misdeem'd yourself, and not a little, Toward the king first, then his laws, in filling The whole realm, by your teaching, and your counsels,
(For so we are inform'd) with new opinions, Divers and dangerous; which are heresies, And, not reform'd, may prove pernicious.
Gar. Which reformation must be sudden too, My noble lords; for those that tame wild horses Pacem them not in their hands to make them gentle, But stop their mouths with stubborn bits, and spur Till they obey the manage. If we suffer, [them, Out of our caseness and childish pity.
To one man's honor, this contagious sickness, Farewell all physic: and what follows then? Commotions, uproars, with a general taint Of the whole state: as, of late days, our neighbors, The upper Germany, can dearly witness, Yet freshly pitted in our memories.

Cran. My good lords, hitherto, in all the progress Both of my life and office, I have labored, And with no little study, that my teaching, And the strong course of my authority, Might go one way, and safely; and the end Was ever, to do well: nor is there living (I speak it with a single heart, my lords,) A man, that more detests, more strives against, Both in his private conscience and his place, Defenders of the public peace, than I do.
Pray heaven, the king may never find a heart With less allegiance in it! Men, that make Envy and crooked malice nourishment, Dare bite the best. I do beseech your lordships, That in this case of justice, my accusers, Be what they will, may stand forth face to face, And freely urge against me.

Suf. Nay, my lord, That cannot be: you are a counsellor, And by that virtue no man dare accuse you. Gar. My lord, because we have business of more moment, [Sure, We will be short with you. 'Tis his highness' pleas— And our consent, for better trial of you, From hence you be committed to the Tower: Where, being but a private man again, You shall know many dark accuse you boldly, More than, I fear, you are provided for. [you; Cran. Ah! my good lord of Winchester, I thank You are always my good friend: if you will pass,
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Now, have at ye.

Enter the King, frowning on them: he takes his seat.

Gar. Dread sovereign, how much are we bound to heaven
In daily thanks, that gave us such a prince;
Not only good and wise, but most religious:
One that in all obedience makes the church
The chief aim of his honor; and, to strengthen
That holy duty, out of dear respect,
His royal self in judgment comes to hear
The cause between him and this great offender.

K. Hen. You were ever good at sudden commendations,
Bishop of Winchester; but know, I come not
To hear such flattery now, and in my presence:
They are too thin and base to hide offences.
To me you cannot reach. You play the spangled,
And think with wagging of your tongue to win me;
But, whatsoever thou tak'st me for, I'm sure,
Thou hast a cruel nature, and a bloody.—
Good man, [To Cranmer.] Sit down. Now, let me see the proudest,
[CRANMER SITS.
He that dares most, but wag his finger at thee:
By all that's holy, he had better starve,
Than but once think this place becomes thee not.

Sur. May it please your grace.

K. Hen. No, sir; it does not please me.
I had thought, I had had men of some understanding
And wisdom of my council; but I find none.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This good man, (few of you desire that title)
This honest man, wait like a lousy footboy
At chamber door? and one as great as you are?
Why, what a shame was this! Did my commission
Bid ye so far forget yourselves? I gave ye power,
As he was a counsellor to try him,
Not as a groom. There's some of ye, I see,
More out of malice than integrity,
Would try him to the utmost, had ye mean;
Which ye shall never have 1 the while I live.

Cham. Thus far, my most dread sovereign, may it like your grace
To let my tongue excuse all. What was purpos'd Concerning his imprisonment, was rather (If there be faith in mea) meant for his trial,
And fair purgation to the world, than malice,
I'm sure, in me.

K. Hen. Well, well, my lords, respect him:
Take him, and use him well; he's worthy of it.
I will say thus much for him: if a prince
May be beholding to a subject, I
Am, for his love and service, so to him.
Make me no more ado, but all embrace him:

[They embrace him: Gardiner last.
Be friends, for shame, my lords!—My lord of Canterbury,

I have a suit which you must not deny me;
That is, a fair young maid that yet wants baptism,
You must be godfather, and answer for her.

Cran. The greatest monarch now alive may glory
In such an honor: how may I deserve it,
That am a poor and humble subject to you?

K. Hen. Come, come, my lord, you'd spare your [SPONS.

You shall have two noble partners with you;
The old duchess of Norfolk, and lady marquess
Will these please you? [DOSET:
Once more, my lord of Winchester, I charge you.
Embrace, and love this man.

1 Words and weakness," i. e., empty talk and false reason.

2 It was an ancient custom for sponsors to present silver or silver-gilt spoons to their god-children.
Gar. With a true heart,
And brother's love, I do it.
Cran.
Witness, how dear I hold this confirmation.
K. Hen. Good man! those joyful tears show thy common voice, I see, is verified. [true heart. Of thee, which says thus, "Do my lord of Canterbury A shrewd turn, and he is your friend for ever."—
Come, lords, we trifle time away; I long To have this young one made a Christian. As I have made ye one, lords, one remain; So I grow stronger, you more honor gain. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Palace Yard.

Noise and Tumult within. Enter Porter and his Man.

Port. You'll leave your noise anon, ye rascals: do you take the court for a Paris-garden? ye rude slaves, leave your gaping.

[Within,] Good master porter, I belong to the border.

Port. Belong to the gallows, and be hanged, you rogue! Is this a place to roar in?—Fetch me a dozen crab-tree staves, and strong ones: these are but switches to them.—I'll scratch your heads: you must be seeing christenings? Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rascal rascals? [Tumult within.

Pray, sir, be patient: 'tis impossible, Unless we sweep 'em from the door with cunnins, To scatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em sleep On May-day morning; which will never be.

We may as well push against Paul's, as stir 'em.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man. Alas, I know not: how gets the tide in? As much as one sound cudgel of four foot. (You see the poor remainder) could distribute, I made no spare, sir.

Port. You did nothing, sir.

Man. I am not Samson, nor sir Gay, nor Colbrand, To mow 'em down before me; but if I spared any, That had a head to hit, either young or old, He or she, cuckold or cuckold-maker, Let me never hope to see a 'queen again; And that I would not for a crown, God save her. [Within] Do you hear, master Porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good master puppy.—Keep the door close, sirrah.

Man. What would you have me do?

Port. What should you do, but knock 'em down by the dozens? Is this Moorfields to maste in? or have we some strange Indian with the great tool come to court, the women so besiege us? [Noise.] Bless me, what a fry of fornication is ut door! On my Christian conscience, this one christening will beget a thousand: here will be father, godfather, and all together.

Man. The spoons will be the bigger, sir. There is a fellow down here who should be a brazier by his face, for, 'o my conscience, twenty of the dog-days now reign in's nose: all that stand about him are under the line; they need no other pannace. That fire-drake did hit three times on the head, and three times was his nose discharge'd against me; he stands there, like a mortise-piece, to blow us. There was a hubbardasher's wife of small wit near him, that railed upon me till her pink'd porringer fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the state. I miss'd the meteor once, and hit that woman, who cried out, chubs! when I might see from far some stately tuncheoned draw to her succor, which were the hope o' the Strand, where she was quartered. They fell on; I made good my place; at length they came to the brouns-staff with me: I defied 'em still; and suddenly a file of boys behind 'em, loose shot, delivered such a slower of pebbles, that I was fain to draw mine honor in, and let 'em win the work. The devil was amongst 'em, I think, surely. [Shouts.

Port. These are the youths that thunder at a play-house, and fight for bitter apples; that no audience, but the Tritiation of Tower-hill, or the limbs of Limhouse, their dear brothers, are able to endure. I have some of 'em in Limbo Patram, and there they are likely to dance these three days, besides the running banquet of two 'headles, that is to come.

Cham. Mercy o' me, what a multitude are here! They grow still, too; from all parts they are coming, As if we kept a fair? Where are these porters?

These are your porters?—Ye have made a fine band, fel. There's a trim rabble let in. Are all these [lows: Your faithful friends o' the suburbs? We shall Have great store of room, no doubt, left for the ladies, When they pass back from the christening.

Port. An't please your honor We are but men; and what so many may do, Not being torn a pieces, we have done:

An our's is not the rule o' the man.

Cham. As I live, If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all By the heels, and suddenly; and on your heads Clap round lines for neglect. Y'are lazy knaves; And here ye lie bating of 9 bombs, when 10 Trumpets.

Ye should do service. Hack! the trumpets sound; They're come already from the christening, Go, break among the pess, and find a way out To let the troop pass freely, or I'll find A Marshalsea shall hold ye play these two months. Port. Make way there for the princess.

Man. You great fellow, [2] Tumult and confusion. Stand close up, or I'll make your head ache.

Port. You can camblet, get up o' the mail: I'll pack you o'er the 11 pole 12.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Palace at Greenwich.

Enter Trumpets, sounding; then two Aldermen, Lord Mayor, Garder, Cranmer, Duke of Norfolk, with his Marshal's staff, Duke of Suffolk, two Noblemen bearing great standing 13 bowls for the christening gifts: then four Noblemen bearing a canopy, under which the Duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the child richly habited in a mantle, &c. Train borne by a Lady: then follows the Merchantson of Dorset, the other godmother, and Ladies. The Troop pass once about the stage, and Garder speaks.

Gard. Heaven,
From thy endless goodness, send prosperous life, Long, and ever happy, to the high and mighty Princess of England, Elizabeth!

1° Paris-garden, l. e., the bear-garden on the Bank-side. — Roaring; shouting.—"Nor Sir Gay, nor Colbrand," l. e., neither Gay of Warrington, nor Colbrand the Danish giant.—"Pink'd porringer," l. e., pink'd cap, which looked as if moulded on a porringer. — The meteor," l. e., the breezer—"Loose shot," l. e., loose or random showers.— 2° The work," l. e., the fortress. — 3° In Limbo Patram," l. e., in confinement.— 4° The banquet of two headless," l. e., a dessert of whipping. — Bombards were black leather vessels to hold beer. — 5° Pock," l. e., pitch.— 6° Standing bowls were bowls elevated on pedestals.
KING HENRY VIII.

SCENE IV.

King to his council.

KING. Amen. Though the sun be up, yet I beseech you all to continue in that happy time that was the dawn to the chosen infant. Shall this be his, and like a vine grow to him: Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine, His honor and the greatness of his name Shall be, and make new nations: he shall flourish, And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches To all the plains about him. Our children's children Shall see this, and bless heaven.

K. Hen. Thou speakest wonders.

Cran. She shall be, to the happiness of England, An aged princess; many days shall see her, And yet no day without a deed to crown it. Would I had known no more! but she must die: She must; the saints must have her: yet a virgin, A most unpolluted sly shall she pass To the ground, and all the world shall mourn her.

K. Hen. O, lord archbishop! Thou hast made me now a man: never, before This happy child, did I get any thing, This oracle of comfort has so pleased me, That when I am in heaven I shall desire To see what this child does, and praise my Maker.—I thank ye all. —To you, my good lord mayor, And you, good brethren, I am much beholding: I have receiv'd much honor by your presence, And ye shall find me thankful. —Lead the way, lords! —Ye must all see the queen, and she must thank ye; She will be sick else. This day, no man think He has business at his house, for all shall stay: This little one shall make it holiday. [Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

'Tis ten to one, this play can never please All that are here. Some come to take their ease, And sleep an act or two; but those, we fear, We have frighted with our trumpets; so, 'tis clear, They'll say, 'tis naught: others, to hear the city Abus'd extremely, and to cry,—'that's witty,' Which we have not done neither: that, I fear, All the expected good we're like to hear For this play, at this time, is only in The merciful construction of good women; For such a one we show'd 'em. If they smile, And say, 'twill do, I know, within a while All the best men are ours; for 'tis ill hap, If they hold, when their ladies bid 'em clap.
THE PROLOGUE (in Armor.)

In Troy, there lies the scene. From isles of Greece
The princes’ orgulous, their high blood chaf’d,
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war: sixty and nine, that wore
Their crownets regal, from th’ Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia; and their vow is made,
To ransom Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish’d Helen, Menelaus’ queen,
With wanton Paris sleeps; and that’s the quarrel.
To Tenedos they come,
And the deep-drawing barks do there disgorge

Their warlike fraughtage: now on Dardan plains
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavilions: Priam’s six-gated city,
Dardan, and Tymbria, Ilas, Chetas, Trojan,
And Antenorides, with mussy staples
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Sperr up the sons of Troy.
Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits
On one and other side, Trojan and Greck,
Sets all on hazard.—And hither am I come
A Prologue arm’d—but not in confidence
Of author’s pen, or actor’s voice, but suited
In like conditions as our argument,—
To tell you, fair beholders, that our play a “Orgulous” (Fr. orgueilleux), i.e., proud; disdainful.

b “Fraughtage,” i.e., freight.—To sperr is to fasten, shut, or close.
ACT I.

Enter Troilus armed, and Pandarus.

Tro. Call here my varlet; I'll warn again: Why should I war without the walls of Troy, That find such cruel battle here within? Each Trojan, that is master of his heart, Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none. Pand. Will this gear ne’er be mended?

Tro. The Greeks are strong, and skilful to their strength, Fierce to their skill, and to their fereaces valiant; But I am weaker than a woman’s tear, Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance; Less valiant than the virgin in the night, And skillless as unpractis’d infancy. Pand. Well, I have told you enough of this; for my part, I’ll not meddle nor make no farther. He that have a cake out of the wheat must tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tardied?

Pan. Ay, the grinding; but you must tarry the bolting.

Tro. Have I not tardied?

Pan. Ay, the bolting; but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tardied.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening: but here’s yet, in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating the oven, and the baking: nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e’er she be, Doth lesser flench at sufferance than I do. At Priam’s royal table do I sit; And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,— So, tritor!—when she comes!—When is she thence? Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than Ever I saw her look, or my woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—when my heart, As wedged with a sigh, would erse in twain, Lest Hector or my father should perceive me, I have (as when the sun doth light a storm) Bury’d this sigh in wrinkle of a smile; But sorrow, that is couch’d in seeming gladness, Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness. Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen’s, (well, go to) there were no more comparison between the women,—but, for my part, she is my kinswoman: I would not, as they term it, praise her,—but I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did: I will not disparage your sister Cassandra’s wit, but—

Tro. O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus,— When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown’d, Reply not in low my fateful deep They lie indrench’d. I tell thee, I am mad In Cressid’s love: thou answer’st, she is fair; Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice; Handlest in thy discretion, O that her hand, In whose comparison all whites are ink, Writing their own reproach: to whose soft seizure The cygnet’s down is harsh, and spirit of sense Hard as the palm of ploughman! This thou tell’st me, As true thou tell’st me, when I say,—I love her; But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm, Thou lay’st in every gash that love hath given me The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. ‘Faith, I’ll not meddle in. Let her be as she is: if she be fair, ’tis the better for her; an she be not, she has the ‘mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus. How now, Pandarus!

Pan. I have had my labor for my travail; ill-thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you: gone between and between, but small thanks for my labor.

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus? what, with me?

Pan. Because she’s kin to me, therefore, she’s not so fair as Helen: an she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not, an she were a black-a-moor; ’tis all one to me.

Tro. Say I, she is not fair?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or no. She’s a fool to stay behind her father: let her to the Greeks; and so I’ll tell her the next time I see her. For my part, I’ll meddle nor make no more i’ the matter.

Tro. Pandarus,—

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me: I will leave all as I found it, and there an end.

[Tro. Pandarus. An Alarm.]

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamors! peace, rude sounds! Fools on both sides! Helen must needs be fair, When with your blood you daily paint her thus. I cannot fight upon this argument; It is too starv’d a subject for my sword. But Pandarus,—O gods, how do you plague me! I cannot come to Cressid, but by Pandar; And he’s as tetchy to be woo’d to woo, As she is stubborn-chaste against all suit. Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne’s love, What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we? Her bed is Ilium; there she lies, a pearl: Between our Ilium, and where she resides, Let it be call’d the wild and wandering flood; Usurped the merchant, and this sailing Pandar, Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bark. [Exit Pandarus.

Tro. Enter Eneas.

Ene. How now, prince Troilus! wherefore not afield?

Tro. Because not there: this woman’s answer For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Eneas, from the field to-day?

Ene. That Paris is returned home, and hurt. Tro. By whom, Eneas?

Ene. Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed: ’tis but a scar to scorn; Paris is gor’d with Menelaus’ horn. [Eneas. Hark, what good sport is out of town to-day! Tro. Better at home, if ’twould I might,” were “may.”]
But to the sport abroad:—are you bound thither?

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT I.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Street.

Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.

Cres. Who were those who by?

Alex. Queen Hecuba, and Helen. Who are whither go they?

Alex. Up to the eastern tower, whose height commands as subject all the vale, To see the battle. Hector, whose patience Is as a virtue fix'd, to-day was mov'd: He chid Andromache, and struck his armorer; And, like as there were husbandry in war, Before the sun rose he was harness'd light, And to the field goes he; where every flower Did, as a prophet, weep what it foresaw In Hector's wrath.

Cres. What was his course of anger?

Alex. The noise goes, 'thus: there is among the Greeks A lord of Trojan blood, nephew to Hector; They call him, Ajax. Cres.

Good; and what of him?

Alex. They say he is a very man per se. And stands alone.

Cres. So do all men; unless they are drunk, sick, or have no legs.

Alex. This man, lady, hath robbed many beasts of their particular additions: he is as valiant as the lion, curtieous as the bear, slow as the elephant; a man into whose nature hath so crowded humors, that his valor is crushed into folly, his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a virtue that he hath not a glimpse of, nor any man an attain but he carries some stain of it. He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair: he hath the joints of every thing but every thing so out of joint, that he is a gouty Briareus, many hands and no use; or publick Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cres. But how should this man, that makes me smile, make Hector angry?

Alex. They say, he yesterday compassed Hector in the battle, and struck him down; the disdain and shame when hath ever since kept Hector fasting and waking.

Enter PANADRUS.

Cres. Who comes here?

Alex. Madam, your uncle Pandarus.

Cres. Hector's a gallant man.

Alex. As may be in the world, lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cres. Good morrow, uncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow, cousin Cressida. What do you talk of?—Good morrow, Alexander.—How do you, cousin? When were you at Ilium?

Cres. This morning, uncle.

Pan. What were you talking of, when I came?

Was Hector armed, and gone, ere ye came to Ilium? Helen was not up, was she?

Cres. Hector was gone; but Helen was not up.

Pan. For so: Hector was stirring early.

Cres. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cres. So he says, here.

Pan. True, he was so; I know the cause too. He'll lay about him to-day, I can tell them that; and there's Troilus will not come far behind him; let them take heed of Troilus, I can tell them that too.

Cres. What, is he angry too?

Pan. Who, Troilus? Troilus is the better man of them.

Cres. O, Jupiter! there's no comparison.

Pan. What, not between Troilus and Hector? Do you know a man if you see him?

Cres. Ay; if I ever saw him before, and knew him.

Pan. Well, I say, Troilus is Troilus.

Cres. Then you say as I say; for, I am sure, he is not Hector.

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees.

Cres. 'Tis just to each of them; he is himself.

Pan. Himself? Alas, poor Troilus! I would, he were,—

Cres. So he is.

Pan. His condition, I had gone bare-foot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself? no, he's not himself.—Would 'a were himself! Well, the gods are above; time must friend, or end. Well, Troilus, well.—I would, my heart were in her body!—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. Th' other's not come to't; you shall tell me another tale, when th' other's come to't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities.

Cres. Nor his power.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. Twould not become him; his own's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece. Helen herself swore th' other day, that Troilus, for a brown favor, (for so 'tis, I must confess)—not brown neither—

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath color enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then, Troilus should have too much: if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his: he having color enough, and the other higher, is too charming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she's a merry Greek, indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him th' other day into the compassed window; and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particular therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young; and yet will he, within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter?

Pan. But, to prove to you that Helen loves him;

---

*a "compassed window" is a circular or bow window.

*b "Lifter," l. e., thief.
——she came, and puts me her white hand to his cheek as he approaches.

Cres. Juno have mercy! How came it cloven?

Pan. Why, you know, 'tis dimpled. I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. O! he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not?

Cres. O yes, an 'twere a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go then.——But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus._

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if it will prove it so.

Pan. Troilus? why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin:——indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

Cres. Cheap, poor chin! many a wart is richer.

Pan. But, there was such laughing: queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran over.

Cres. With a mill-stones.

Pan. And Cassandra laughed.

Cres. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes: did her eyes run over too?

Pan. And Hector laughed.

Cres. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.

Cres. An't had been a green hair I should have laughed too.

Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair, as at his pretty answer.

Cres. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth she, "Here's but two and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white."

Cres. This is her question.

Pan. That's true; make no question of that.

"Two and fifty hairs," quoth he, "and one white: that white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons. But, why, go tell her, "which of these hairs is Paris, my husband?" '——The forked one," quoth he; "pluck't out, and give it him." But there was such laughing, and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chaffed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.

Pan. So let it now, for it has been a great while going by.

Cres. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on't.

Pan. So I do.

Pan. I'll be sworn, 'tis true: he will weep you, an 'twere a man born in April.

Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an 'twere a nettles against May. [A retreat sounded.

Pan. Hark! they are coming from the field. Shall we stand up here, and see them, as they pass toward Ilium? good niece, do; sweet niece, Cressida.

Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here; here's an excellent place: here we may see most bravely. I'll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by, but mark Troilus above the rest.

Cres. Speak not so loud.

1. Exeas passes over the Stage.

Pan. That's Exeas: is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you: but mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

Cres. Who's that?

2. Antenor passes over.

Pan. That's Antenor: he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one o' the soundest judgment in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of 2his person.—When comes Troilus?

—'ll show you Troilus anon: if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.

Pan. Will he give you the nod?

Cres. You shall see.

Pan. If he do, the rich shall have more.

3. Hector passes over.

Pan. That's Hector; that, that, look you, that; there's a fellow!—Go thy way, Hector.—There's a brave man, niece.—O brave Hector!—Look how he looks; there's a countenance. Is't not a brave man?

Cres. O! a brave man.

Pan. Is't not? It does a man's heart good—Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you wonder, do you see? look you there. There's no jesting: there's laying on, tak't off who will, as they say; there be hacks?

Cres. Be those with swords?

Paris passes over.

Pan. Swords? any thing, he cares not; an the devil come to him, it's all one: by god's lid, it does one's heart good.——Yonder comes Paris; yonder comes Paris! look ye yonder, niece: is't not a gallant man too? Why, this is brave now.—Who said he came hurt home to-day? he's not hurt; why, this will do Helen's heart good now. Ha! would I could see Troilus now.—You shall see Troilus anon.

Cres. Who's that?

4. Helenus passes over.

Pan. That's Helenus.—I marvel, where Troylus is. That's Helenus.—I think he went not forth to-day.—That's Helenus.

Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?

Pan. Helenus? no;—yes, he'll fight indifferent well.—I marvel, where Troylus is.—Hark! do you not hear the people cry, Troylus?—Helenus is a priest.

Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Troilus passes over.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus.—'Tis Troylus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!—Brave Troylus, the prince of chivalry.

Cres. Peace! for shame! peace!

Pan. Marry him; spare him.—O brave Troylus!—look well upon him, niece; look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helmet more hack'd than Hector's; and how he looks, and how he goes!—O admirable youth! he ne'er saw three and twenty. Go thy way, Troylus, go thy way: had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to him; and, I warrant, Helen, to change, would give an eye to boot.

3. Soldiers pass over the Stage.

Cres. Here comes more.

Pan. Asses, fools, dolts, chaff and bran, chaff and

4. To "give the nod" was a term in the game at cards called Noddy.—Helmet.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

ACT I.

bra: porridge after meat. I could live and die in the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look: the eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws. I had rather be such a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greeks Achilles, a better man than Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a very camel.

Cres. Well, well?—Why, have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue, youth, liberality, and such like, the spice and salt that season a man?

Cres. Ay, a ministered man; and then to be baked with no *date in the yere,—for then the man's date's out.

Pan. You are such a woman! one knows not at what *word you lie.

Cres. Upon my back, to defend my belly; upon my wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; upon my mask, to defend my beauty; and upon you, to defend all these: and at all these ends I lie, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and that's one of the chiefest of them too: if I cannot ward what I would not have hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow, unless it swell past hiding, and then it's post watching.

Pan. You are such another!

Enter Troilus' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your own house; there he unarms him.

Pan. Good boy, tell him I come. [Exit Boy.

I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good niece.

Cres. Adieu, uncle.

Pan. I'll be with you, niece, by and by.

Cres. To bring, uncle,—

Pan. Ay, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token, you are a bawd.—

[Exit PANDARUS.

Words, vows, gifts, tears, and love's full sacrifice, He offers in another's enterprise.

But more in Troilus thousand fold I see,

Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be.

Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooling:

Things won are done, joy's soul lies in the doing:

That she belov'd knows nought, that knows not this,

Men prize the thing ungain'd more than it is:

That she was never yet, that ever knew

Love got so sweet as when desire did sue.

Therefore, this maxim out of love I teach,—

Achieved men's still command; ungain'd, beseech:

Those, though my heart's content firm love doth bear,

Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. [Exit.

Senet. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Ulysses, Menelaus, and others.

Agam. Princes, What grief last set the jaundice on your cheeks? The ample proposition, that hope makes In all designs begun on earth below, Fails in the promis'd largeness: checks and disasters Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd; As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap, Infect the sound pine, and divers his grain Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

Nor, princes, is it matter new to us, That we come short of our suppose so far, That after seven years' siege yet Troy walls stand; Sith every action that has gone before, Where we have recovered, trial by draw Bias and thwart, not answering the aim, And that unbody'd figure of the thought That gav't surmise shaped. Why then, you princes, Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our wretches, And call them shames, which are, indeed, nought But the protractive trials of great Jove, To find persistive constancy in men? The fineness of which metal is not found In fortune's love; for then, the bold and coward, The wise and fool, the artist and unread, The hard and soft, seem all affin'd and kin: But, in the wind and tempest of her frown, Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan, Fufiling at will, winnows the light away; And what that fain of: matter, or matter, Lies rich in virtue, and unmingled.

Nest. With due observance of thy godlike fete, Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply Thy latest words. In the reproof of chance Lies the true proof of men. The sea being smooth, How many shallow bauble boats dare soil Upon her patient breast, making their way With those of nobler bulk:

But let the ruffian Boreas once enrage The gentle Thetis, and, anon, behold, The strong-ribb'd bark through liquid mountains cut, Bounding between the two moist elements, Like Perseus' horse: where's then the saucy boat, Whose weak untimely sides but even now Co-rival'd greatness? either to harbor fled, Or made a toast for Neptune. Even so Douth valor's show, and valor's worth, divide In storms of fortune: for, in her ray and brightness The herd hath more annoyance by the brize, Than by the tiger; but when the splitting wind Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks, And flies fled under shade, why then, the thing of courage,

As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize, And with an accent tun'd in self-same key, Replies to chiding fortune.

Ulyss. Agamemnon, Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece, Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit, In whom the temperes and the minds of all Should be shut up, hear what Ulysses speaks. Besides the applause and approbation The which,—most mighty for thy place and sway,—

[To Agamemnon.

And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,—

[To Nestor.

I give to both your speeches, which were such, As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece Should hold up high in brass; and such again, As Venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver, Should with a bond of air (strong as the axleter On which heaven rides) knot all the Greekish ears To his experience'd tongue,—yet let it please both,—

Date were an ingredient in nearly every kind of ancient pastry.—"Warchy" i. e. guard.—"That she," i. e. that woman.

"Tortive and errant," i. e. twisted and wandering.—

"Sincere?" i. e. "Afford," i. e. joined by affinity.—"Thy godlike seat," i. e. the throne.—"Apply," i. e. give special attention to.—"The brize," i. e. the galely, that swims stable, fast.—"Hatch'd in silver," i. e. silver-hair'd; gray-haired.
Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

_Agam._ Speak, prince of Thessalia; and be't of less _that matter needless, of importune burden,

Divide thy lips, than we are confident,
When rank Thersites opes his massif jaws,
We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

_Ulyss._ Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,
And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master,
But for these instances.
The specialty of rule hath been neglected:
And look, how many Grecian tents do stand
Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.
When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the forgers shall all repair,
What honey is expected? Degree being "vizarded,
Th' unworthiest shows as fairly in the mask.

• Insisture, course, proportion, season, form, Office, and custom, in all line of order:
And therefore is the glorious planet, Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
Amidst the other; whose med'cimable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
And posts, like the commandment of a king,
'Sans check, to good and bad. But when the planets,
In evil mixture, to disorder wander,
What plagues, and what portents! what mutiny!
What raging of the sea, shaking of earth,
Commotion in the winds, frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and 2 deracinate

The unity and married calm of states
Quite from the figure! Of what degree is shak'd,
Which is the ladder to all high designs,
The enterprise is sick. How could communities,
Degrees in schools, and 3 brotherhoods in cities,
Peaceful commerce from 4 divisible shores,
The primogenitive and due of birth,
Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,
But that degree stand in nullity place?
Take but degree away, untain that string,
And, hark, what discord follows! each thing meets
In mere oppugnancy: the bounded waters
Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a zop of all this solid globe;
Strength should be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son should strike his father dead:
For, if a thing, what be the right and wrong,
(Between whose endless jail justice resides)
Should lose their names, and so should justice too.

• Mixtures, deacons, mm.: 1. King's; 2. King's.

Then every thing includes itself in power,
Power into will, will into appetite;
And appetite, an universal will,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perfuse an universal prey,
And last eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
This chaos, when degree is suffocated,
Follows the choking:
And this neglect ion of degree it is,
That by a pace goes backward, with a purpose
It hath to climb. The general's disdain'd
By him one step below; he, by the next;
That next, by him another step,
Exampled by the first pace that is sick
Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
Of pale and bloodless emission:

• Tyrants, roaring.

—that the fever this that keeps Troy on foot,

_Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weakness stands, not in her strength.

• Multiplication, m.:

_Nest._ Most wisely hath Ulysses have discover'd
The fever whereon all our power doth sick.

_Agam._ The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,
What is the remedy?

_Ulyss._ The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns
The sinew and the forehand of our host,
Having his car full of his airy 3 fame,
Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
Lies mounting on our designs. With him, Patroclus,
Upon a lazy bed the livelong day,
Breaks scurril jests;
And with ridiculous and awkward action
(Which, slanderer, he imitation calls),
He 4 pageants us: sometime, great Agamemnon,
Thy topless deputation he puts on;
And, like a strutting player,—whose conceit
Lies in his hamming, and doth think it rich
To hear the wooden 5 dialogue and sound
'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the 6 scagli—
Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested 7 seeming
He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,
'Tis like a chime a mending; with terms 8 unsqu'rd,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd,
And a thin piping (to whose melody of 9 crowns,
The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
Cries—"Excellent!"—'tis Agamemnon 10 right.
Now play me Nestor;—hem, and stroke thy beard
As he, being 'drest to some oration."
That's none;—as near as the extremest ends
Of 11 various, as like a Vulcan and his wife:
Yet god Achilles still cries, "Excellent!
'Tis Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night alarm."

And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
Must be the scene of mirth; to cough, and spit,
And with a palsey, fumbling on his gorget,
Shake in and out the rivet:—and at this sport,
Sir Valor dies; crying, "O! 12 enough, Patroclus,
Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all
In pleasure of my spleen." And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Several and generals, 2 all grace extract,
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Success, or loss, what is, or is not, serves
As stiff up, these two make paradoxes.

• Multiplication, m.:

_Nest._ And in the imitation of these twain,
(Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
With an imperial voice) many are infect.
Ajax is grown self-will'd; and bears his head
In such a 3 rein, in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him;
Makes factions feasts; rules on our state of war,
Bold as an orle; and sets Thersites,
A slave whose gall coin slaughter like a mint,
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How rank sover 13 rounded in with danger.

_Ulyss._ They tax our policy, and call it cowardice;
Count wisdom as no member of the war;
Forestall prescience, and esteem no act
But that of hand: the still and mental parts,
That do contrive how many hands shall strike,

1_Amy; force.— "Airy fame," i.e., mouth honor.—
2 He personifies on all, he takes us in, we are ingenuous; sovereign.—
3 "The wooden dialogue, i.e., the dialogue between the player's foot and the board.—Stage.—"O'er-
4 Created.—We men.—Having our designs.—" Parallels on a map.—" In such a rein, i.e., as haughtily.—
5 How rank sover rounded in," i.e., how strongly sover encompassed.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA

ACT I.

When fitness calls them on, and know, by measure
Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,—
Why, this hath not a finger's dignity.
They call this bed-work, mappery, close-war:
So that the man, that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poised,
They place before his hand that made the engine,
Or those that with the fineness of their souls
By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse
Makes many Thetis' sons.

Enter AENEAS.

Men. From Troy.

Aeneas. What would you 'fore our test?

Aeneas. Is this Great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you?

Aeneas. Even this.

Aeneas. May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kindly ears?

Aeneas. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm,
'Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
Call Agamemnon head and general.

Aeneas. Examples, and large security. How may
A stranger to those most imperial looks
Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Aeneas. How?

Aeneas. Ay; I ask, that I might waken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush,
Moderate as morning when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phœbus.

Aeneas. Which is that god in office, guiding men?
Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Aeneas. This Trojan scorns us, or the men of Troy
Are ceremonious courtiers.

Aeneas. Courtiers as free, as debaron, unarm'd,
As bending angels: that's their fame in peace;
But when they would seem soldiers, they have galls,
Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and, Jove's

Aeneas. Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Aeneas!
Peace, Trojan! hy thy finger on thy lips.
The worthiness of praise distains his worth,
If that the prince's himself bring the praise forth;
That the replying enemy commend, [scends.
That breath fame blows: that praise, soul-pure, true.

Aeneas. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Aeneas?

Aeneas. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Aeneas. What's your affair, I pray you?

Aeneas. Pardon: 'tis for Agamemnon's ears.

Aeneas. He hears not sounds privately that comes from This Trojan.

Aeneas. Nor I from Troy came not to whisper him:
I bring a trumpet to awake his ear;
To set his sense on the attentive bent,
And then to speak.

Aeneas. Speak frankly as the wind.
It is not Agamemnon's sleeping hour:
That thou shalt know, Trojan, he is awake,
He tells thee so himself.

Aeneas. Trumpet, blow loud,
Send thy brass voice through all these lazy tents;
And every Greek of mettle, let him know,
What Troy means fairly shall be spoken aloud.

[Trumpet sounds.

We have, great Agamemnon, here in Troy,
A prince call'd Hector, Priam is his father,
Who in this dull and long-cont'd truce
Is rusty grown: he lade me take a trumpet,
And to this purpose speak. — Kings, princes, lords,
If there be one among the fair'st of Greece,

* "Jove's accord," i. e., with Jove's consent.—Fr. Freely.

That holds his honor higher than his ease;
That seeks his praise more than he fears his peril;
That knows his valor, and knows not his fear;
That loves his mistress more than in confusion
With truant vows to her own lips he loves;
And dare avow her beauty and her worth
In other arms than hers,—to him this challenge.
Hector, in view of Trojans and of Greeks,
Shall make it good, or do his best to do it.
He hath a lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
Than ever Greek did couple in his arms;
And will to-morrow with his trumpet call,
Mid-tents, between your tents and walls of Troy,
To rouse a Grecian that is true in love.

If any come, Hector shall honor him;
If none, he'll say in Troy, when he retires,
The Grecian dames are sun-burnt, and not worth
The splinter of a lance. Even so much.

Aeneas. This shall be told our lovers, lord Aeneas:
If none of them have soul in such a kind,
We left them all at home; but we are soldiers,
And may that soldier a more recenter prove,
That means not, hath not, or is not in love!
If then one is, or hath, or means to be,
That one meets Hector; if none else, I am he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
When Hector's grandsire suck'd he: he is old now;
But if it be not in our Grecian host,
One noble man that hath one spark of fire,
To answer for his love, tell him from me,
I'll hide my silver beard in a g old beaver,
And in my 4 vanbracte put this witter'd brawn;
And, meeting him, will tell him, that my lady
Was farer than his grandam, and as chaste
As may be in the world. His young heart shall,
I'll prove this truth with my three drops of blood.

Nest. Now heavens forbid such scarcity of youth!
Ulysses. Amen.

Aeneas. Fair lord Aeneas, let me touch your hand;
To our pavilion shall I lead you, sir.

Achilles shall have word of this intent,
So shall each lord of Greece, from tent to tent;
Yourself shall feast with us before you go,
And find the welcome of a noble foe.

[Exeunt all but ULYSSES and NESTOR.

Ulysses. Nestor! Nestor!

Nest. What says Ulysses?

Ulysses. I have a young conception in my brain;
Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is't?

Ulysses. This 'tis,
Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seeded pride,
That hath to this maturity grown up
In rank Achilles, must or now be crop'd,
Or, shedding, breed a nursery of like evil,
To overbuild us all.

Nest. Well, and how?

Ulysses. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,
However it is spread in general name,
Relates in purpose only to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
Whose grossness little characters sum up:
And in the publication make no strain,
But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
As banks of Libya (though Apollo knows,
'Tis dry enough) will, with great speed of judgment,
Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

Ulysses. And wake him to the answer, think you?

Nest. 'Tis most meet: whom may you else
Than can from Hector bring his honor off. [oppose,

Why, then we did our main opinion crush

We’ll dress him up in voices: if he fail,

Yet go we under our opinion still,

That we have better men. But, hit or miss,

Our project’s life this shape of sense assumes,—

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another Part of the Grecian Camp.

Enter Ajax and Thersites.

Ajax. Thersites! Ther. Agamemnon—how if he had boils? full, all over, generally? Ajax. Thersites!

* * * Scantling, i.e., measure; proportion.—* Points, Estimation; reputation.—* Lot, Urge; stimulate.
"Deliver Helen, and all damage else—
As honor, loss of time, travail, expense,
Wounds, friends, and all that else dear that is consumed
In hot digestion of this comorant war,—
Shall be struck off!"—Hector, what say you to't?

Hec. Though no man lessers the Greeks than I,
Yet, dread Priam,
There is no lady of more softer bowels,
More spagy to suit in the sense of fear,
More ready to cry out—"Who knows what follows?"—
Than Hector is.
The wound of peace is surety,
Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches
To the bottom of the worst. Let Helen go:
Since the first sword was drawn about this question,
Every tithe soul, 'mongst many thousand dismes,
Hath been as dear as Helen; I mean, of ours:
If we have lost so many tenths of ours,
To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to us,
Had it our name, the value of one ten,
What merit's in that reason which denies
The yielding of her up?

Tro. Fie, fie! my brother
Weigh ye the worth and honor of a king,
So great as our dread father, in a scale
Of common ounces? will you with counters sum
The past-proportion of his infinite?
And buckle in a waist most fathomless,
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons? fie, for godly shame!

Hel. No marvel, though you bite so sharp at reasons,
You are so empty of them. Should not our father
Beaten away of his affairs with reasons,
Because your speech hath none, that tells him so?

Tro. You are for dreams and slumber, brother priest:

[reasons:
You fur your gloves with reason. Here are your
You know, an enemy intenders you harm,
You know, a sword employ'd is perilous,
And reason flies the object of all harm.
Who marvels, then, when Helenus beholds
A Grecian and his sword, if he do set
The very wings of reason to his heels,
And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove,
Or like a star dis-or'd!—Nay, if we talk of reason.
Let's shut our gates, and sleep; manhood and honor
Should have bare hearts, would they but fat their

Ach. And such thoughts
With this cram'd reason: reason and respect
Make lives pale, and lustihood defect.

Hec. Brother, she is not worth what she doth cost
The holding.

Tro. What is aught, but as 'tis valued?

Hec. But value dwells not in particular will;
It holds his estimate and dignity,
As well wherein 'tis precious of itself,
As in the prizer. 'Tis mad idolatry,
To make the service greater than the god;
And the will dotes, that is inclinable
To what infectious itself affects,
Without some image of th' affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election
Is led on in the conduct of my will;
My will eskindled by mine eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. How may I avoid,
Although my will distaste what it elected,
The wife I chose? there can be no evasion
To 'french from this, and to stand firm by honor.

We turn not back the silks upon the merchant, When we have sold them; nor the remainder viands We do not throw in unrespective * sieve, Because we now are full. It was thought meet, Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks: Your breath of full consent bellied his sails; The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce, And did him service: he touch'd the ports desir'd; And for an old aunt, whom the Greeks held captive, He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes pale the morning. Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt. Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl, Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships, And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants. If you'll avouch *twas wisdom Paris went, As you must need, for you all cry'd—"Go, go;" If you'll confess, he brought home noble prize, As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands, And cry'd—"Inestimable!" why do you now The issue of your proper wisdom rate, And do a deed that fortune never did, Beggar the estimation which you prize'd Richer in the latter, and the most base, That we have stolen what we do fear to keep! But, thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen, That in their country did them that disgrace, We fear to warrant in our native place! Cas. [Withk.] Cry, Trojans, cry! Pri. What noise! what shriek is this! Tvo. 'Tis our mad sister: I do know her voice. Cas. [Withk.] Cry, Trojans! Hect. It is Cassandra. Enter Cassandra, raving. Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! I lend me ten thousand eyes, And I will fill them with prophetic tears. Hect. Peace, sister, peace! Cas. Virgins and boys, mid-age and wrinkled old, Soft infancy, that nothing cast but cry, Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes A moality of that mass of moan to come. Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears: Troy must not be, nor goody Hector stand; Our fire-brand brother, Paris, burns us all. Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen, and a woo! Cry, cry! Troy burns; or else let Helen go. [Exit. Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high Of divination in our sister work strains Some touches of remorse; or is your blood So madly hot, that no discourse of reason, Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause, Can qualify the same? Tvo. Why, brother Hector, We may not think the justness of each act Such and no other than event doth form it; Nor once deject the courage of our minds, Because Cassandra's mad: her brain-sick raptures Cannot, *distaste the goodness of a quarrel, Which hath our several honors and the stand: To make it gracious. For my private part, I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons; And Jove forbid, there should be done amongst us Such things as might offend the weakest spleen To fight for, and maintain. Par. Else might the world *conceive of levity, As well my undertakings, as your counsel; But, I attest the gods, your full consent.

Gave wings to my *propension, and cut off All fears attending on so dire a project: For what, alas! can these my single arms? What *propagation is in one man's valor, To stand the push and enmity of those This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest, Were I alone to *poise the difficulties, And had as ample power as I have will, Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done, Nor faint in the pursuit. Pri. Paris, you speak Like one besotted on your sweet delights: You have the honey still, but these the gall. So to be valiant is no praise at all. Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself The pleasures such a beauty brings with it, But I would have the soil of her fair rape With'd off in honorable keeping her. What treason were it to the ransack'd queen, Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me, Now to deliver her possession up, On terms of base compulsion? Can it be, That so degenerate a 'strain as this, Should once set footing in your generous bosoms? There's not a breath, or spirit on our party, Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw, When Helen is defended; nor none so noble, Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unsum'd, Where Helen is the subject: then, I say, Well may we fight for her, whom, we know well, The world's large spaces cannot parallel, Hect. Paris, and Troilus, you have both said well; And on the cause and question now in hand Have 5 glo'd,—but superficially; not much Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought Unfit to hear moral philosophy. The reasons you allege do more conceive To the hot passion of distemper'd blood, Than to make up a free determination 'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure, and revenge, Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice Of any true decision. Nature craves, All due be render'd to their owners: now, What nearer debt in all humanity Than wife is to the husband? if this law Of nature be corrupted through affections, And that great minds, of partial indulgence To their heemnumed wills, resist the same, There is a law in each well-order'd nation, To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. If Helen, then, be wife to Spart's king, As it is known she is, these moral laws Of nature, and of nation, speak aloud To have her back return'd: thus to persist In doing wrong extenuates not wrong, But makes it much more heavy. Hector's opinion Is this, in way of truth: yet, ne'ertheless, My sprightly brethren, I *propend to you In resolution to keep Helen still; For 'tis a cause that hath no mean dependence Upon our joint and several dignities. Tvo. Why, there you touch'd the life of our design. Were it not glory that we more affected, Than the performance of our heaving spleens, I would not wish a drop of Trojan blood Spent more in her defence. But, worthy Hector, She is a theme of honor and renown; A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds; Whose present courage may beat down our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize us:
For, I presume, brave Hector would not lose
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this action,
For the wide world's revenue.

Hec. I am yours,
You valiant offspring of great Priam:
I challenge you to a contest sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Greeks,
Will strike amazement to their drowsy spirits.
I was advertis'd, their great general slept,
Whillet b emulation in the army crept:
This, I presume, will wake him.

Ther. How now, Therites! what! lost in the labyrinth of thy folly? Shall the elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beats me, and I rail at him: O worthy satisfaction! would it were otherwise; that I could beat him, whilst he railed at me. 'Soot, I'll learn to conjure and raise devils, but I'll see some issue of my spirituous excursions. Then, there's Achilles,—a rare engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two undermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselves. [Kneels.] O, thou hast thundered at Olympus! I forget that thou art Jove the king of gods; and, Mercury, lose all the serpentine craft of thy Caduceus, if ye take not that little, little, less-than-little wit from them that have; which short-armed ignorance itself knows is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumvention deliver a fly from a spider, without drawing their massy irons and cutting the web. After this, the vengeance on the whole camp! or, rather the Neapolitan bone-ache; for that, methinks, is the curse dependent on those that war for a placet. [Rises.] I have said my prayers, and devil, envy, say Amen. What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter Patroclus.
Ther. If I could have remembered a gilt counterfeit, thou wouldst not have slipped out of my contemplation; but it is no matter: thyself upon thyself! The common curse of mankind, folly and ignorance, be thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee from a tutor, and discipline come not near thee! Let thy blood be thy direction till thy death! then, if she, that lays thee out, says thou art a fair corse, I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but [lazars. Amen. Where's Achilles?
Patr. What's that thou devout? want thou in prayer?
Ther. Ay; the heavens hear me!

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who's there?
Patr. Therites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come? Why, my cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not served thyself in to my table so many meals? Come; what's Agamemnon?
Ther. Thy commander, Achilles. Then, tell me, Patroclus, what's Achilles?
Patr. Thy lord, Therites. Then, tell me, I pray thee, what's thyself?

* Blustering.—b "Emulation," i. e., envious rivalry; faction contention.—c "Caduceus," i. e., the wand of Mercury, which is wreathed with serpents.—d "Thy blood," i. e., thy passions; thy natural propensities.—e Leprous persons.

Ther. Thy knowe, Patroclus. Then tell me, Patroclus, what art thou?
Patr. Thou must tell, that knowest.

Achil. O! tell, tell.
Ther. I'll decline the whole question. Agamemnon commands Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Patroclus' knower; and Patroclus is a fool.
Patr. You rashly!

Ther. Peace, fool! I have not done.

Achil. He is a privileged man.—Proced, Theresites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool; Therites is a fool; and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.

Achil. Derive this: come.

Ther. Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command Achilles; Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Agamemnon; Therites is a fool to serve such a fool; and Patroclus is a fool positive.
Patr. Why am I a fool?
Ther. Make that demand of thy Creator.—It suffices me, thou art. Look, you who comes here?

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Nestor, Diomedes, and Ajax.

Achil. Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody.—Come in with me, Therites.

[Exit.

Ther. Here is such patchery, such juggling, and such knavery! all the argument is a cuckold, and a whore; a good quarrel, to draw embittered factions, and bleed to death upon. Now, the dry serpigo on the subject, and war and leechery confound all!

[Exit.

Agam. Where is Achilles?
Patr. Within his tent; but ill-disposed, my lord.

Agam. Let it be known to him that we are here.

5 We sent our messengers: and we lay by Our apprehensions visiting of him:
Let him be told so, lest, perchance, he think
We dare not move the question of our place,
Or know not what we are.
Patr. I shall say so to him.

[Exit.

Ulyss. We saw him at the opening of his tent:
He is not sick.

Ajax. Yes, lion-sick, sick of proud heart; you may call it melanchoily, if you will favor the man; but, by my head, 'tis pride: but why? why? let him show us a cause.—A word, my lord.

[Taking Agamemnon aside.

Nest. Who? Therites?

Ulyss. He.

Nest. Then will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost his argument.

Ulyss. No; you see, he is his argument, that has his argument, Achilles.

Nest. All the better; their fraction is more our wish, than their faction: but it was a strong composite, a fool could disunite.

Ulyss. The amity that wisdom knits not, folly may easily unite. Here comes Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him.

6 Re-enter Patroclus.

Ulyss. The elephant hath joined, but none for courtesy: his legs are legs for necessity, not for fleuret.

Ther. Achilles bids me say, he is much sorry,
If any thing more than your sport and pleasure
Did move your greatness, and this noble estate,

*Envious; containing.—a Letter; scab.—Appendages of neck or dignity.—b "This noble state," i. e., this stately train of attending nobles.
To call upon him: he hopes, it is no other,
But, for your health and your digestion sake,
An after-dinner's breath.

Agam.
Hear you, Patroclus.
We are too well acquainted with these answers;
But, in his vision, wing'd thus swift with scorn,
Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Much attribute he hath, and much the reason
Why we ascribe it to him; yet all his virtues,
Not virtuously on his own part beheld,
Do in our eyes begin to lose their gloss;
Yes, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish,
Are like to rot mutated. Go and tell him,
We come to speak with him; and you shall not sin.

If you do say, we think him over-proud,
And under-honest; in self-assumption greater,
Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself.

Here 'tend the savage strangeness he puts on,
Disguise the holy strength of their command,
And 'underwrite in an observing kind.

His humorous predominaence; yea, watch
His pettish fumes, his ebbs, his flows, as if
The passage and whole carriage of this action
Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this: and add,
That, if he overhold his price so much,
We will let none of him; this is like an engine
Not portable, he under this report—
Bring action hitter, this cannot go to war.
A stirring dwarf we do allowance give
Before a sleeping giant:—tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently.
[Exit.
Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied,
We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter you.
[Exit Ulysses.
Ajax. What is he more than another?
Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.
Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think,
he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.
Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say
he is?

Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.
Agam. Your mind is the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud, eats up himself: pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads.
Nest. Yet he loves himself: it's not strange.
[Aside.
Re-enter Ulysses.
Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.
Agam. What's his excuse?

Ulyss. He doth rely on none;
But carres on the stream of his dispose Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar, and in self-admission;
Agam. Why will he not, upon our fair request,
Unteat his person, and share the air with us? [only,
Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake
He makes important. Possess'd he is with greatness;
And speaks not to himself, but with a pride

That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth
Holds in his blood such sullen and hot discourse,
That, 'twixt his mental and his active parts,
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
And batters down himself: What should I say?
He is so playous proud, that the death's tokens of it
Cry:—"No recovery."

Agam.
Let Ajax go to him.—
Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent:
'Tis said, he holds you well; and will be led,
At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamennon! let it not be so:
We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes
When they go from Achilles, Shall the proud lord,
That bastes his arrogance with his own beam;
And never suffers matter of the world
Enter his thoughts,—save such as doth resolve
And runnate himself,—shall he be worshipp'd
Of that we hold an idol more than he?
No, this thrice worthy and right valiant lord
Must not so stile his palm, nobly accept'd;
Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is, by going to Achilles:
That were to enchant his fat-already pride;
And add more coals to Cancer, when he burns
With entertaining great Hyperion.
This lord go to him? Jupiter forbid;
And say in thunder:—"Achilles, go to him."

Nest. O! this is well; he rubs the vein of him.
[Aside.
Dis. And how his silence drinks up this applause!
[Aside.
Ajax. If I go to him, with my armed fist
I'll push him o'er the face.
Agam. O, no! you shall not go.
Ajax. An a' be proud with me, I'll pheeze his pride.
Let me go to him.
Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.
Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow!
Nest. How he describes himself!
[Aside.
Ajax. Can he not be sociable?
Ulyss. The raven Chides blackness.
[Aside.
Ajax. I'll let his humors blood.
Agam. He will be the physician, that should be the patient.
[Aside.
Ajax. An all men were o' my mind,—
Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion.
[Aside.
Ajax. 'A should not bear it so,
'A should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?
Nest. An 'twould, you'd carr' half.
[Aside.
Ulyss. 'A would have ten shares.
[Aside.
Ajax. I will knead him; I will make him supple.
Nest. He's not yet thorough warm: force him with praises.

Pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry.
[Aside.
Ulyss. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.
[To Agamemnon.
Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.
Dis. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.
Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does him harm.
Here is a man—but 'tis before his face;
I will be silent.
Nest. Wherefore should you so?
He is not 'emulous, as Achilles is.
Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as valiant.

Praise him that got thee: her that gave thee such:
Pan'd thy tutor, and thy parts of nature
Thrice-fam'd, beyond all censure;
But he that disciplin'd thine arms to fight,
Let Mars divide eternity in twain,
And give him half: and for thy vigor,
Bull-bearing Milo his *addition yield
To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,
Which, like a *bourn, a pale, a shore, confines
Thy spacious and dilated parts; here's Nestor,
Instructed by the antiquary times,
He must, he is, he cannot but be wise;
But pardon, father Nestor, were your days
As green as Ajax, and your brain so temper'd,
You should not have the eminence of him,
But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Nest. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be rol'd by him, lord Ajax.

Ul. There is no tarrying here: the hurt Achilles
Keeps thicket.—Please it our great general
To call together all his state of war:
Fresh kings are come to Troy; to-morrow,
We must with all our main of power stand fast:
And here's a lord,—come knights from east to west,
And call their flower, Ajax shall cope the best.

Agam. Go we to council: let Achilles sleep.

Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks draw deep.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter Pandarus and a Servant.

Pan. Friend you; pray you, a word. Do not you follow the young lord Paris?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You depend upon him, I mean?

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.

Pan. You depend upon a noble gentleman: I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!

Pan. You know me, do you not?

Serv. Faith, sir, superficially.

Pan. Friend, know me better. I am the lord
Pandarus.

Serv. I hope, I shall know your honor better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace.

[Music within.

Pan. Grace! not so, friend: honor and lordship are my titles.—What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir: it is music in parts.

Pan. Know you the musicians?

Serv. Wholly, sir.

Pan. Who play they to?

Serv. To the hearers, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, sir; and theirs that love music.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another: I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whose request do these men play?

Serv. That's to't, indeed, sir. Marry, sir, at the request of Paris, my lord, who is there in person; with him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of beauty, love's invisible soul—

Pan. Who? my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Cressida? could you not find out that by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast not seen the lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris from the prince Troilus: I will make a compliment assault upon him, for my business *seeths.

Serv. Sudden business: there's a strewed phrase, indeed.

Enter Paris and Helen, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all this fair company! fair desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide them; especially to you, fair queen: fair thoughts be your fair pillow!

Helen. Dear lord, you are full of fair words.

Pan. You speak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.

—Fair prince, here is good broken music.

Pan. You have broke it, cousin; and, by my life, you shall make it whole again: you shall piece it out with a piece of your performance. —Nell, he is full of harmony.

Pan. Truly, lady, no.

Helen. O, sir!—

Pan. Rude, in sooth; in good sooth, very rude.

Par. Well said, my lord. Well, you say so in *fits.

Pan. I have business to my lord, dear queen.—

My lord, will you vouchsafe me a word?

Helen. Nay, this shall not hedge us out: we'll hear you sing, certainly.

Pan. Well, sweet queen, you are pleasant with me.
But, marry, thus, my lord.—My dear lord, and most esteemed friend, your brother Troilus—

Helen. My lord Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,—

Pan. Go to, sweet queen, go to:—commends him self most affectionately to you.

Helen. You shall not bob us out of our melody: if you do, our melancholy upon your head.

Pan. Sweet queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet queen,—I *faith—

Helen. And to make a sweet lady sad is a sort offence.

Pan. Nay, that shall not serve your turn; that shall it not, in truth, la! Nay, I care not for such words: no, no. —And, my lord, he desires you, that if the king call for him at supper, you will make his excuse.

Helen. My lord Pandarus,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen,—my very very sweet queen?

Par. What exploit's in hand? where sups he tonight?

Helen. Nay, but my lord,—

Pan. What says my sweet queen?—My cousin will fall out with you. You must not know where he sups.

Pan. I'll lay my life, with my *dispraiser Cressida.

Pan. No, no; no such matter, you are wide.
Come, your *dispraiser is sick.

Par. Well, I'll make excuse.

Tro. No, Pandarus! I stalk about her door,

Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks

Staying for waftage. O! be thou my Charm,

And give me swift transportance to those fields,

Where I may swallow in the lily beds

Propos'd for the deserver. O, gentle Pandarus!

From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,

And fly with me to Cressid.

[Exit Pandarus.

Tro. I am giddy: expectation whirls me round.

Th' imaginary relish is so sweet

That it enchanteth my sense; what will it be,

When that the watery palate tastes indeed

Love's three-reasured nectar! death, I fear me;

Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine,

Too subtle-potent, that it would sooth in sweetness,

For the capacity of my ruder powers.

I fear it much; and I do fear besides,

That I shall lose distinction in my joys,

As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps

The enemy flying.

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pan. She's making her ready; she'll come straight:

you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were frayed with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain: she fetches her breath so short as a new-t'en sparrows.

[Exit Pandarus.

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:

My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse,

And all my powers do their bestowing lose,

Like vassalage at unwares encountering

The eye of majesty.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush! shame's a baby.—Has she is now: when she is sweet to her,

that you have sworn to me.—What! are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the

Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. [Unveiling

her.] Alas the day, how loath you are to offend day-

Nay, you shall fight your hearts out, ere I part you.

Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts, give her debts; but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What! billing again? Here's

Troilus and Cressida

ACT III

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O Cressida! how often have I wished me thus!

Cres. Wished, my lord?—The gods grant!—O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption? What too curious drag espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils of cherubins; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason, stumbling without fear: to fear the worst, oft cures the worse.

Tro. O! let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither.

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers: thinking it harder for our mistress to devise impositions enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstruity in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless, and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are there such? such are not we. Praise as we are tasted; allow us as we prove: our head shall go bare, till merit crown it. No perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert, before his birth; and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what envy can say worst, shall be a mock for his truth; and what truth can speak truer, not truer than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter Pandarus.

Pan. What? blushing still? have you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thank you for that: if my lord get a boy of you, you'll give him mine. Be true to my lord; if he flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; your uncle's word, and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her too. Our kindred, though they be long ere they are wood, they are constant, being won: they are burs, I can tell you; they'll stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and brings me heart.

—Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and day For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid, then, so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won, my lord, With the first glance that ever—Pardon me,— If I confess much, you will play the tyrant. I love you now; but not, till now, so much But I must make it.—In faith, I lie: My thoughts were like unbridled children, grown Too headstrong for their mother; see, we look! Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to us, When we are so unsecret to ourselves?

* Titles.

But, though I lov'd you well, I wou'd you not; And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man, Or that we women had men's privilege Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my tongue; For, in this capture, I shall surely speak. The thing I shall repeat. See, see! your silence, Cunning in dullness, from my weakness draws My very soul of counsel. Stop my mouth.

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issues thence. [Kissing her.

Pan. Pretty, 'tis faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon me; 'Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kiss. I am ashamed:—O heavens! what have I done?— For this time will I take my leave, my lord.

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till to-morrow morning;

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends you, lady?

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You cannot shun yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try. I have a kind of state that resides with you; But an unkind self, that itself will leave To be the burthen of the other. I would be gone:— Where is my wit? I know not what I speak.

Tro. Well know they what they speak, that speak so wisely. [To Cressid,]

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I shew more craft than And told so roundly to a large confession, To augle for your thoughts; but you are wise, Or else you love not, for to be wise, and love, Exceeds the power of the earth's might; that which can take with gods above. Tro. O! that I thought it could be in a woman, (As, if it can, I will presume in you) To feed for aye her lamp and flame of love; To keep her constancy in plight and youth, Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind That doth renew swifter than blood decays: Or, that persuasion could but thus convince me, That my integrity and truth to you Might be as suffrond with the match and weight Of such a winnow'd purity in love; How were I then uplifted! but, alas! I am as true as truth's simplicity, And simpler than the infancy of truth.

Cres. In that I'll war with you.

Tro. O, virtuous fight! When right with right wars who shall be most right. True swains in love shall, in the world to come, Approve their truths by Troilus: when their rhymes, Full of protest, of oath, and big c-compare, Want similes, truth tir'd with iteration,— As true as steel, as 2-plantage to the moon, As sun to day, as turtle to her mate, As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre,— Yet, after all comparisons of truth, As truth's authentic author to be cited, As true as Troilus shall crown up the verse, And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may ye be!

If I be false, or were a hair from truth, When time is old and hath forgot itself, When watersdrops have worn the stones of Troy, And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up, And mighty states characterless are graved To dusty nothing; yet let memory, From false to false among falsemaids in love, Upbraid my falsehood. When they have said—as false

"Be suffrond," i. e. be met with and equalled.—* Comparisons.—* Herbage. —"Crown'd up," i. e. conclude.
As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind, or stepdame to her son;
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
As false as Cressida. [Troilus kisses her.
Pam. Go to, a bargain made; seal it, seal it: I'll be the witness.—Here I hold your hand; here, my cousin: if ever you prove false one to another, since I have taken such pains to bring you together, let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all.—Pandars: let all constant men be Troiluses, all false women Cressiads, and all brokers between Pandars! say, amen.
Tro. Amen.
Cress. Amen.
Pam. Amen. Whereupon I will show you a chamber; which bed, because it shall not speak of your pretty encounters, press to death: away! [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp.

Enter Agamemnon, Ulysses, Diomedes, Nestor, Ajax, Menelaus, and Calchas.

Cal. Now, princes, for the service I have done you.
Th' advantage of the time prompts me, aloud
To call for recompense. 2 Appeal it to your mind,
That, through the sight I bear in things above,
I have abandon'd Troy, left my possession,
Incur'd a traitor's name; expos'd myself,
From certain and possess'd conveniences, 3 To do this end, and many more; 4
To doubtless purposes: sequestering from me all
That time, acquaintance, custom, and condition,
Made tame and most familiar to my nature;
And here, to do you service, am become
As new 5 into the world, strange, unacquainted:
I do beseech you, as in way of taste,
To give me now a little benefit,
Out of those many register'd in promise,
Which, you say, live to come in my behalf.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor,
Yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear.
Oft have you, (often have you thanks therefore) 6
Don't, in a more important case, aslant,
Whom Troy hath staid denied; but this Antenor,
I know, is such a 7 wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slack,
Wanting his manage; and they will almost
Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,
In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,
And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence
Shall quite strike off all service I have done.
In most accepted pain.
Agam. Let Diomedes bear him,
And bring us Cressid hither: Calchas shall have
What he requests of us.—Good Diomed,
Furnish you fairly for this interchange:
Withal, being word, if Hector will to-morrow
Bear without a charitable face, 8 Ajax is ready.
Dio. This shall I undertake; and 'tis a burden
Which I am proud to bear.
[Exit Diomedes and Calchas.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus, before their Tent.

Ulyss. Achilles stands 'tis the entrance of his tent:
Please it our general to pass 's strangely by him,
As if he were forgot; and, princes all,
Lay negligent and loose regard upon him.
I will come last: 'tis like, he'll question me,
Why such unpleasing eyes are bent, why turn'd on
Of so, I have rend his heart? [Him? To use between your strangeness and his pride,
Which his own will shall have desire to drink.
It may do good: pride hath no other glass
To show itself, but pride; for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.
Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on
A form of strangeness as we pass along:
To do each lord; and either give him not,
Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more
Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.
Achil. What! comes the general to speak with me?
You know my mind: I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.
Agam. What says Achilles! I would he aught with Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?

Achil. No.
Nest. Nothing, my lord.
Agam. The better.
[Exit Agamemnon and Nestor.

Achil. Good day, good day.
Men. How do you? how do you?

Achil. What! does the cuckold scorn me?
Aja. How now, Patroclus!
Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.
Aja. Has? 9
Achil. Good morrow.
Aja. Ay, and good next day too. [Exit Ajax.
Achil. What mean these fellows! Know they not Achilles? [Read, Pair. They pass by strangely: they were us'd to
To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
To come as humbly, as they us'd to creep to holy altars.
Achil. What! am I poor of late?
'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune,
Must fall out with men too: what the declin'd is,
He shall as soon rend in the eyes of others,
As feel in his own fall; for men, like butterflies,
Show not their mean wings but to the summer,
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honor; but honor for those honors
That are without him, as place, riches, favor,
Prizes of ancient men; and these, Achilles,
Which, when they fall, as being slippery standers,
The love that seem'd on them, as slippery too,
Doth one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. But 'tis not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends: I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess,
Save these men's looks; who do, me thinks, find out
Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses:
I'll interrupt his reading.—
How now, Ulysses!

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son! 10 [Looking up from his book.
Achil. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here
Writes me, that man—how dearly ever parted,
How much in having, or without in,—
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes, but by reflection;
As when his virtues shining upon others
Heat them, and they return that heat again
To the first giver.

4 "How dearly ever parted," i. e. however excellently endowed.
This is not strange, Ulysses. The beauty that is borne here, in the face, The bearer knows not, but commends itself To others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself, That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself, Not going from itself but eye to eye opp'd Salutes each other with each other's form: For speculation turns not to itself, Till it hath travell'd, and is mirror'd there Where it may see itself. This is not strange at all. Ulyss. I do not strain at the position, It is familiar, but at the author's drift; What he's expressed in this place, and that, That no man is the lord of anything, Though in and of him there be much consisting, Till he communicate his parts to others: Nor doth he of himself know them for aught Till he behold them form'd in the applause Where they are extended; which, like an arch, receives The voice again; or like a gate of steel, Fronting the sun, receives and renders back His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in this; And apprehended here immediately The unknown Ajax. Heaven, what a man is there! a very horse; That he knows not what. Nature! what things Multiply itself in regard, and do opp're: [There are, What things, again, most dear in the esteem, And poor in worth. Now, shall we see to-morrow, An act that very chance doth throw upon him, Ajax renowned. O heavens! what some men do, While some men leave to do, How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall, While others play the idiots in her eyes! How some men do the most men and are, While pride is feasting in his wantonness! To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder, As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast, And great Troy shrieking. Achil. I do believe it; for they pass'd by me, As mages do the beggars, neither gave to me, Good word, nor look. What are my deeds forgot? Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back, Wherein he puts aims for oblivion; A great-sized monster of ingratiations: Those scraps are good deeds past; which are devour'd As fast as they are made, forgot as soon As done. Perseverance, dear my lord, Keeps honor bright: to have done, is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail In monumental mockery. Take the instant way; For honor travels in a strait so narrow, Where one but goes abreast: keep, then, the path, For emulation hath a thousand sons, That one by one pursue: if you give way, Or stagger aside from the direct fortiright, Like to an enter'd side, they all rush by, And leave you hindoost; Or, like a gallant horse fallen in first rank, Lie there for pavement to the abject rear, O'er-run and trampled on. Then, what they do in present, Though less than yours in past, must o'ertop yours; For time is like a fashionable hand That slightly shakes his parting guest by the hand, And with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly, Grasps-in the corner: welcome ever smiles, And farewell goes out sighing.

Speculation, l. c., interior thought. — Circumstance, l. c., detail of argument.

High birth, vigor of bone, desert in service, Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all To envious and calamitizing time.

One touch of nature makes the whole world kin,— That all, with one consent, praise new-born gauds, Though they are made and moulded once of things past, And give to dust, that is a little gift, More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.

The present eye praises the present object: Then, marvell not, thou great and complete man, That all the Greeks begin to worship Ajax, Since things in motion sooner catch the eye, Than things at rest: the express of this, on thee, And still it might, and yet it may again, If thou woul'st not entomb thyself alive, And case thy reputation in thy tent; Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late, Made emulous missions amongst the gods themselves, And drave great Mars to faction.

Of this my privacy I have strong reasons.

Ulyss. But 'gainst your privacy

The reasons are more potent and heretical. *'Tis known, Achilles, that you are in love With one of Priam's 5 daughters.

Achil. Ha! known?

Ulyss. Is that a wonder? The evidence that's in a watchful state Knows almost every grum of Plutus' gold, Finds bottom in th' uncomprehensive deeps, Keeps pace with thought, and almost, like the gods, Does thought unveil in their dumb crudities. There is a mystery (with whom relation Durst never meddle) in the soul of state, Which hath an operation more divine Than death, or passion, can give an answer to. All the commerce that you have had with Troy As perfectly is ours, as yours, my lord; And better would it fit Achilles much To throw down Hector, than Polyxena: But it must grieve young Pyrrhus, now at home, When fame shall in our islands sound her trump, And all the Grecian girls shall transport sing,— "Great Hector's sister did Achilles win, But our great Ajax bravely beat down him." Farewell, my lord: I as your 'liver speak: The foolagas o'er the ico that you should break. Exit.

Patr. To this effect, Achilles, have I mov'd you. A woman impudent and mannish grown Is not more lorth'd, than an effeminate man In time of action. I stand condemn'd for this: They think, my little stomach to the war, And your great love to me, restrains you thus. Swift, rouse yourself; and the weak wanton Cupid Shall from your neck unloose his amorous hold, And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane, Be shooed to air.

Achil. Shall Ajax fight with Hector?

Patr. Ay: and, perhaps, receive much honor by Achil. I see, my reputation is at stake: [him. My fame is shrewdly gor'd.

Patr. O! then beware: Those wounds heal ill that men do give themselves. Omission to do what is necessary Seals a commission to a blank of danger;

New-fashioned toys.— Dust, that is a little gill, l. c., ordinary performances which have the glass of novelty; Gilt o'er-dusted, l. c., splendid actions of past ages, the remembrance of which is obscured by time.—*The illusion to actions of this sort, is to combat on other side.—Polynxena.— With whom relation durst never meddle, l. c., which history was never able to discover.—Friend.
TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

And danger, like an ague, subtly taints,
Even when, we sit idly in the sun.

Achil. Go call Thersites hither, sweet Patroclus.
I'll send the fool to Ajax, and desire him
To invite the Trojan lords, after the combat,
To see us here warm'd. I have a woman's longing,
An appetite that I am sick withal.
To see great Hector in his weeds of peace;
To talk with him, and to behold his visage,
Even to my full of view.—A labor sun'd!

Enter Thersites.

Ther. A wonder!

Achil. What?

Ther. Ajax goes up and down the field asking for himself.

Achil. How so?

Ther. He must fight singly to-morrow with Hector;
and is so prophetically proud of his heroical cudgelling, that he raves in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why, he stalks up and down like a peacock;
a stride, and a stand: ruminates, like an hostess, that hath no arithmetic but her brain to set down her reckoning: bites his lip with a politic regard, as who should say—"there were wit in this head, an 'twould out!" and so there is; but it lies as coldly in him as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking. The man's undone for ever; for if Hector break not his neck i' the combat, he'll break 't himself in vain-glory. He knows not me: I said, "Good-morrow, Ajax;" and he replies, "Thanks, Agamemnon." What think you of this man, that takes me for the general? He's grown a very land-fish, languageless, a monster. A plague of opinion! a man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my ambassador to him, Thersites.

Ther. Who, I? why, he'll answer nobody; he professes not answering: speaking is for beggars; he wears his tongue in his arms. I will put on his presence: let Patroclus make his demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: tell him,—I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valiant Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe conduct for his person of the magnanimous, and most illustrious, six-or-seven-times-honored, captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax.

Ther. Humph!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent.—

Ther. Humph!

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to't?

Ther. God be wi' you with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other: howsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains, I know not; but, I am sure, none, unless the fiddler Apollo get his sinews to make 'em playing on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me bear another to his horse, for that's the more 4 capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd; And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exit Thersites.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Troy: a Street.

Enter, at one side, Ajax, and Sarcent, with a Torch; at the other, Paris, Diomedes, Antenor, Diomede, and others, with Torches.

Par. See, ho! who is that there?

Aeue. Is the prince there in person?

Patr. Had I so good occasion to lie long, As you, prince Paris, nothing but heavenly business Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Aeue. That's my mind too.—Good-morrow, lord Par. A valiant Greek, Aeues, take his hand, Witness the process of your speech, wherein You told how Diomed, a whole week by days, Did haunt you in the field.

Aeue. Health to you, valiant sir; During all question of the gentle trace; But when I meet you arm'd, as black defiance, As heart can think, or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces.

Our bloods are now in calm, and so long health; But when contention and occasion meet, By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life, With all my fierce pursuit, and policy.

Aeue. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly With his face backward.—In humane gentleness, Welcome to Troy: now, by Achilles' life, Welcome, indeed. By Venus' hand I swear, No man alive can love, in such a sort, The thing he means to kill, more excellently.

Dio. We sympathize.—Jove, let Aeues live, If to my sword his fate be not the glory, A thousand complete courses of the sun! But, in mine emulous honor, let him die With every joint a wound, and that to-morrow!

Aeue. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despiteful gentle greeting, The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—

Aeue. But, I am emulous honor, let him die With every joint a wound, and that to-morrow!

Aeue. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despiteful gentle greeting, The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—

Aeue. What business, lord, so early? [not.

Aeue. I was sent for to the king; but why, I know For his purpose meets you; 'twas to bring this Greek To Calchas' house; and there to render him, For the enfeebled Antenor, the fair Cressida. Let's have your company; or, if you please, Haste there before us. I constantly do think,

My brother Troilus lingers there to-night:

Than Cressid borne from Troy.

[ne'er be good,

Pan. Ha, ha! Alas, poor wretch! a poor capocchio—has not slept to-night? would he not, a naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him!

Knocking.

Cres. Did not I tell you?—would he be knocked of the head—

Who's that at door? good uncle, go and see.—

My lord, come you again into my chamber:

You smile, and mock me, as if I meant naughtily.

Tro. Ha, ha!

Cres. Come, you are deceiv'd; I think of no such thing.

[Knocking.

How earnestly they knock.—Pray you, come in:

I would not for half Troy have you seen here.

[Exeunt Troilus and Cressida.

Pan. [Going to the door.] Who's there? what's the matter? will you beat down the door? How now! what's the matter?

3 [Opening it.

Enter Æneas.

Ænc. Good morrow, lord, good morrow.

Pan. Who's there? my lord Æneas! By my troth,
I knew you not: what news with you so early?

Ænc. Is not prince Troilus here?

Pan. Here! what should he do here?

Ænc. Come, he is here, my lord; do not deny him:

It doth import him much to speak with me.

Pan. Is he here, say you? 'tis more than I know,
I'll be sworn:—for my own part, I came in late.

What should he do here?

Ænc. Who—nay, then:—come, come, you'll do him wrong ere y'are ware. You'll be so true to him, to be false to him. Do not you know of him, but yet go fetch him hither: go.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. How now! what's the matter?

Ænc. My lord, I scarce have leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash. There is at hand
Paris your brother, and Deiphobus,
The Grecian Diomed, and our Antenor
Deliver'd to us; and for him, forthwith,
Ere the first sacrifice, within this hour,
We must give up to Diomedes' hand
The lady Cressida.

Tro. Is it so concluded?

Ænc. By Priam, and the general state of Troy:
They are at hand, and read to effect it.

Tro. How my achievements mock me!
I will go meet them:—and, my lord Æneas,
We met by chance; you did not find me here.

Ænc. Good, good, my lord; the secret laws of nature
Have not more gift in taciturnity.

[Exeunt Troilus and Æneas.

SCENE IV.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Tro. Is't possible? no sooner got, but lost! The devil take Antenor! the young prince will go mad. A plague upon Antenor! I would, they had broke 's neck!

Enter Cressida.

Cres. How now! What is the matter? Who was Pan. Ah! ah! [Here! Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? where's my lord? gone!]
Tell me, sweet uncle, what's the matter?
Pan. Would I were as deep under the earth as I am above!

Enter Troilus.

Cres. O the gods!—what's the matter?
Pan. Pr’ythee, get thee in. Would thou hast never been born! I know, thou wouldst be his death.—O poor gentleman!—A plague upon Antenor!
Cres. Good uncle, I beseech you, on my knees I beseech you, what's the matter?
Pan. Thou must be gone, wench; thou must be gone; thou art changed for Antenor. Thou must to thy father, and be gone from Troilus: 'twill be his death; 'twill be his bane; he cannot bear it.
Cres. O, you immortal gods!—I will not go.
Pan. Thou must.
Cres. I will not, uncle: I have forgot my father; I know no touch of consanguinity;
No kin, no love, no blood, no soul so near me, As the sweet Troilus.—O, you gods divine!
Make Crescidi's name the very crown of falsehood,
If ever she leave Troilus! Time, force, and death,
Do to this body what extremities you can,
But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very centre of the earth,
Drawing all things to it.—I'll go in, and weep.

Pan. Do, do.
Cres. Troilus, my bright hair, and scratch my praised Cruck my clear voice with sobs, and break my heart With sounding Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Same. Before Pandar's House.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Aeneas, Deiphobus, Antenor, and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning, and the hour prefix'd Of her delivery to this valiant Greek Comes fast upon.—Good my brother Troilus, Tell you the lady what she is to do, And write her to the purpose.

Tro. I'll bring her to the Grecian presently; And to his hand when I deliver her, Think it an altar, and thy brother Troilus A priest, there offering to it his own heart.

[Exit. Par. I know what 'tis to love; And would, as I shall pity, I could help!— Please you, walk in, my lords.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Room in Pandar's House.

Enter Pandar and Cressida.

Par. Be moderate, be moderate.
Cres. Why tell you me of moderation? The grief is fine, full, perfect, that I taste And a violentness in a sense as strong As that which causeth it: how can I moderate it?

If I could temporize with my affection, Or bow it to a weak and colder palate, The like allayment could I give my grief: My love admits no qualifying dress, No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Enter Troilus.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes,—a sweet duck! Cres. O Troilus! Troilus! [Embracing him. Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too. O heart,—as the goosy saying is,— O heart, O heart, O heavy heart! Why night'st thou without breaking? where he answers again.

There was never a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse: we see it, we see it.—How now, lords! Tro. Cresci, I love thee in so strange a purity That the bless'd gods—as angry with my fancy, More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities,—take thee from me.
Cres. Have the gods envy!
Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay: 'tis too plain a case.
Cres. And is it true, that I must go from Troy? Tro. A hateful truth.
Cres. What! and from Troilus too? Tro. From Troy, and Troilus.
Cres. Is it possible?
Tro. And suddenly; where injury of chance Puts buck leave-taking, justices roughly by All time of pause, rudely hegirles our lips Of all injustice, forcibly prevents Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows Even in the birth of our own labouring bone. We two, that with so many thousand sighs Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves With the rude brevity and discharge of one. Injurious time, now, with a robber's haste, Crans his rich thievry up, he knows not how: As many grief's falls as stars in heaven. With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to him, He fumbles up into 'one loose adien; And scants us with a single famish'd kiss, Distasting with the salt of broken tears.

Aene. [Within.] My lord! Is the lady ready! Tro. Hark! you are call'd: some say, the Grecian so Cres. * 'Come!' to him that instantly must die.— Bid them have patience; she shall come anon. Pan. Where are my tears? ruin, to lay this wind, Or my heart will be blown up by the root!

[Exit Pandar.

Cres. I must then to the Grecians?
Tro. No remedy.
Cres. A woeful Cressida, 'mongst the merry Greeks! When shall we see again?
Tro. Hear me, my love. Be thou but true of heart— Cres. I true? how now! what wicked deem is this?
Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly, For it is parting from us. I speak not, "be thou true," as fearing thee; For I will throw my glove to death himself, That there's no mixture in thy heart; But, "be thou true," say I, to fashion in Mysequent protestation. Be thou true, And I will see thee.
Cres. O! you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers As infinite as imminent: but I'll be true.

[Sealed.]—Sir Burnio,—* "Throw my glove to," i. e., challenge.—* Sibb; spot; snift.
Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.

But yet, be true.

Cres. O heavens!—be true, again?

Tro. Hear why I speak it, love.

The Grecian youths are full of * quality; Their loving well composed with gift of nature, Flowing and swelling o'er with arts and exercise: How novelties may move, and parts with person, Alas! a kind of goodly jocoseness. (Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin.) Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.

Tro. Die I a villain, then?

In this I do not call your faith in question, So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,
Nor hec! the high *lavor, nor sweteen talk, Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,
To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:

But I can tell, that in each grace of these There lurks a still and dumb-discursive devil, That tempts most cunningly. But be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think, I will?

Tro. No;

But nothing may be done, that we will not: And sometimes we are devils to ourselves, When we will tempt the frailty of our powers, Presuming on their *chaffin poteney.

Enc. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,—

Tro. Come, kiss; and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Cres. A good brother, come you hither; And bring Exeas, and the Grecian, with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who, 1 alas, is it my vice, my fault: Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion, I with great truth catch mere simplicity; Whilst some with cunning glid their copper crowns, With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare. Fear not my truth: the *moral of my wit Is plain, and true,—there's all the reach of it.

Enter EXEAS, PARIS, ANTENOR, DEIPHOBUS, and DIOMEDES.

Welcome, sir Diomed. Here is the lady, Which for Antenor we deliver you:

At the 4 port, lord, I'll give her to thy hand, And by the way *possess thee what she is. Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek, If o'er thou stand at mercy of my sword, Name Cressida, and thy life shall be as safe, As Piam is in Ilium.

Dio. Fair lady Cressid, So please you, save the thanks this prince expects: The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek, PLEADS your fair usage; and to Diomed You shall be mistress, and command him wholly. Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously, To shame the zeal of my petition to thee, In praising her. I tell thee, lord of Greece, She is so far high-soaring o'er thy praises, As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant. I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge; For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not, Though the great bulk Achilles by thy guard, I'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O! be not mov'd, prince Troilus.

Let me be privil'd by my place, and message, To be a speaker free: when I am hence, I'll answer to thy last; and know you, lord, I'll nothing do on charge. To her own worth She shall be priz'd; but that you say—be't so, I'll speak it in my spirit and honor.—no.

Tro. Come to the port.—I'll tell thee, Diomed, This brave shall oft make thee to hide thy head. —
Lady, give me your hand; and, as we walk, To our own seelze bend we our needful talk.

[Exeunt Tro., Cres., and Diom. Trumpet sounds.

Par. Hawk! Hector's trumpet.

Enc. How have we spent this morning! The prince must think me tardy and remiss, That awore to ride before him to the field. [him.

Par. 'Tis Troilus' fault. Come, come, to field with

Del. Let us make ready straight.

Enc. Yea, with a bridegroom's fresh alacrity, Let us address to tend on Hector's heca.

The glory of our Troy doth this day lie
On his fair worth, and single chivalry. [Exeunt.

Enter Ajax, armed: Agamemnon, Achilles, Patroclus, Menelaus, Ulysses, Nestor, and others.

Agam. Here art thou in an appointment fresh and Anticipating time. With startling courage [fair, Give with thy trumpet a loud note to Troy, Thou dreadful Ajax; that the appalled air May pierce the head of the great combatant, And hal's him hither.

Ajax. Thou, trumpet, there's my purse. Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen pipe: Blow, villain, till thy sphere'd check sound out-swell the colic of puff'd Aquilon. Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy spouts blood; Thou blow'st for Hector. [Trumpet sounds.

Ulyss. No trumpet answers.

Ajax. 'Tis but early 5 day.

Agam. Is not yond? Diomed with Calchas' daughter?

Ulyss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait; He raises on the toe: that spirit of his In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Enter DIOMED, with CRESSIDA.

Agam. Is this the lady Cressid?

Dio. Even she.

Agam. Most dearly welcome to the Greeks, sweet lady. [Kissing her.

Nest. Our general doth salute you with a kiss.

Ulyss. Yet is the kindness but particular; To worse better she were kiss'd in general.—

Nest. And very courteously counsel: I'll begin,—

[Kissing her.

So much for Nestor.

Achil. I'll take that winter from your lips, fair lady: Achilles bids you welcome. [Kissing her.

Men. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patr. But that's no argument for kissing now: [Putting him back. For thus peird's Paris in his 2 bardiment, And parted thus you and your argument.

[Kissing her.

Ulyss. O! deadly gall, and theme of all our scorn, For which we lose our heads, to gild his horns.

Patr. The first was Menelaus' kiss;—this, mine; Patroclus kisses you. [Kissing her again.

Preparation.—"Bias check," i. e., cheek swelling out like the bias or weight lodged on one side of a bowl. — Audacity; bravery.
Scene V.

Troilus and Cressida. 589.

Men. O! this is trim.

Men. I'll have my kiss, sir.—Lady, by your leave.

Cres. In kissing do you render or receive?

Patr. Both take and give.

Men. I'll make my match to live.

The kiss you take is better than you give;
Therefore no kiss.

Men. I'll give you boot; I'll give you three for one.

Cres. You're an odd man: give even, or give none.

Men. An odd man, lady! every man is odd.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for, you know, 'tis true,
That you are odd, and he is even with you.

Men. You filip me o' the head.

Cres. No, I'll be sworn.

Ulys. It were no match, your nail against his.

May I, sweet lady, beg a kiss of you? [horn.—

Cres. You may.

Ulys. I do desire it.

Cres. Why, beg then.

Ulys. Why then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,
When Helen is a maid again, and his.

Cres. I am your debtor: claim it when 'tis due.

Ulys. Never's my day, and then a kiss of you.

Dio. Lady, a word:—I'll bring you to your father.

[Diodem leads out Cressida.

Nest. A woman of quick senseness.

Ulys. Fie, fie upon her! There's a language in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
Nay, her foot speaks; she wanton spirits look out
At every joint and motive of her body.
O! these encounters, so glib of tongue,
That give occasion welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every tickling reader, set them down
For shallow spoils of opportunity,
And daughters of the game. [Trumpet within.

All. The Trojans' trumpet.

Agam. Yonder comes the troop.

Enter Hector, armed; Enneas, Troilus, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

Enec. Hail, all you state of Greece! what shall be done
To him that victory commands? or do you purpose,
A vector shall be known? willing the, the knights
Shall to the edge of all extremity
Pursue each other; or shall be divided
By any voice or order of the field?

Hector bade ask.

Agam. Which way would Hector have it?

Enec. He cares not: he'll obey conditions.

Achill. 'Tis done like Hector; but surely done,
A little proudly, and great deal misprizing
The knight oppos'd.

Enec. If not Achilles, sir,

What is your name?

Achill. If not Achilles, nothing.

Enec. Therefore Achilles; but, what'ever, know
In the extremity of great and little,
This vale and pride exceed themselves in Hector;
The one almost as infinite as all
The other blank as nothing. Weigh him well,
And that which looks like pride is courtesy.
This Ajax is half made of Hector's blood:
In love whereof half Hector stays at home;
Half heart, half hand, half Hector comes to seek
This bleded knight, half Trojan, and half Greek.

Achill. A maiden battle, then!—O! I perceive you.

Rec-enter Diodem.

Agam. Here is sir Diomed.—Go, gentle knight,

Stand by our Ajax: as you and lord Enneas
Consent upon the order of their fight,
So be it; either to the utterance,
Or else a breach: the combatants being kin,
Half's stints their strike before their strokes begin.

[Agam and Hector enter the lists.

Ulys. They are oppos'd already.

Agam. What Trojan is that same that looks so

Ulys. The youngest son of Priam, a true knight;
Not yet mature, yet matchless; firm of word,
Spoken in deeds, and deedless in his tongue;
Not soon provok'd, nor being provok'd soon calm'd:
His heart and hand he open, and all free;
For what he has, he gives, what thinks, he shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impair thought with breath.
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender subjects; but he, in heat of action,
Is more violent than jealous love.

They call him Troilus; and on him erect
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.

Thus says Enneas; one that knows the youth,
Even to his inches, and with private soul
Did in great Ilion thus translate him to me.

[Alarum. Hector and Ajax fight.

Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own.

Tro. Hector, thou sleepest:

Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well disposed:—there, Ajax!

Dio. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.

Enec. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet: let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then, will I no more.

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation twixt us twain.

We are the communion Greek and Trojan so,
That thou couldst say—'This hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Binds in my father's'" by Jove multipotent,
Thou should'st not bear from me a Greekish member,
Wherein my sword had not impressed made
Of our rank feud. But the just gods gainsay,
That any drop thou borrow'dst from thy mother,
My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword
Be drain'd. Let me embrace thee, Ajax—
By him that thunders, thou hast lawful arms.
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:

Cousin, all honor to thee!—

If [They embrace.

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:

Thou art too gentle, and too free a man,
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence
A great addition earned in thy death.

Hect. Not ! Neoptolemus so mirable
On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st Oyez
Cries, "This is he!" could promise to himself
A thought of honored horn torn from Hector.

Enec. There is expectancy here from both the sides,
What farther you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it.

The issue is embracement.—Ajax, farewell.

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,
As said I have the chance, I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.

[exit.

Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,
As said I have the chance, I would desire
My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.
Dido. 'Tis Agamemnon's wish; and great Achilles doth long to see unarmed the valiant Hector.
Hec. Amens, call my brother Troilus to me;
And signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part:
Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my cousin;
I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.
Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.
Hec. The worthiest of them tell me, name by name;
But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes
Shall find him by his large and portly size.
Agam. He is worthily of all welcome, as welcome to one
That would be rid of such an enemy.
But that's no welcome: understand more clear.
What's past, and what's to come, is strew'd with husks
And formless ruin of oblivion;
But in this extant moment, faith and truth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow brows-drawing,
Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
Firm in heart of very heart, great Troy, welcome.
Hec. I think thee, most imperious Agamemnon.
Agam. My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less to you.
[To Troilus.
Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting:
You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.
Hec. Whom must we answer?
TROILUS. The noble Menelaus.
Hec. O! you, my lord! by Mars his guaranty,
Mock not, that I affect thy untraded oath: [thanks
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove;
She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.
Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.
Hec. O! pardon; I offend.
Hec. I have thence gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,
Laboring for destiny, make cruel way [thee,
Through runs of Greekish youth: and I have seen
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Despising many forfeits and subduements,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' th' air,
Not letting it decline on the 'declin'd;
That I have and unto my stand is joy,
"Lo! Jupiter is yonder, dealing life."
And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hem'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling: this have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grand sire,
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars the captives of us all,
Never like thee. Let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.
TROILUS. 'Tis the old Nestor.
Hec. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time.
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to chesp thee.
Nest. I would, my arms could match thee in con-friendship, As they contend with thee in courtesy.
Hec. I would they could. [to-morrow.
Nest. Ha! By this white beard, I'd fight with thee
Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time.
Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by us.
Hec. I know your favor, lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir! there's a Greek of Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy.
Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that portly from your town,
Yond' towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Mist kiss their own feet.
Hec. I must not believe you.
There they stand yet: and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: the end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.
Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome.
After the general, I besiege you next
To feast with me, and see me at my tent.
Achil. I shall forestall thee, lord Ulysses. [to Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee:
I have with exact view persus'd thee, Hector,
And *quoted joint by joint.
Hec. Is this Achilles?
Achil. I am Achilles.
Hec. Stand fair, I pray thee: let me look on thee.
Achil. Behold thy skill.
Hec. Nay, I have done already.
Achil. Thou art too brief: I will the second time,
As I would buy thee, view thee limb by limb.
Hec. O! like a book of sport thou'n't read me o'er;
But there's more in me than thou understand'st.
Why dost thou so oppress me with thine eye?
Achil. Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body
Shall I destroy him, whether there, there, or there?
That I may give the local wound a name,
And make distinct the very break, whereon
Hector's great spirit flew. Answer me, heavens!
Hec. It would discredit the bless'd gods, proud
To answer such a question. Stand again: [man
Then at thee to catch my life so pleasantly,
As to suprenome in nice conjecture,
Where thou wilt hit me dead?
Achil. I tell thee, yea.
Hec. Wert thou an oracle to tell me so,
I'd not believe thee. Henceforth guard thee well,
For I'll not kill thee there, nor there, nor there;
But, by the forge that s'tipulated Mars his helm,
I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er.—
You, wisest Grecians, pardon me this bug:
His insolence draws folly from my lips;
But I'll endeavor deeds to match these words,
Or may I never—
Ajax. Do not chase thee, cousin:
And you, Achilles, let these threats alone,
Till ye, or purpose, bring you to't;
You may have every day enough of Hector,
If you have 4 stomach. The general state, I fear,
Can scarce entreat you to be 'odd with him.
Hec. I pray you, let us see you in the field:
We have had 6 petting wars, since you refus'd
The Grecians' cause.
Achil. Dost thou entreat me, Hector?
To-morrow, do I meet thee, fell as death;
To-night, all friends.
Hec. Thy hand upon that match.
Agam. First, all you peers of Greece, go to my tent;
There in the full 'convive we: afterwards,
As Hector's leisure and your honours shall Concur together, severely entreat him.—
Best load the "soldiers", let the trumpets blow,
That this great soldier may his welcome know.
[Exeunt all but TROILUS and ULYSSES.
Tro. My lord Ulysses, tell me, I beseech you,
In what place of the field doth Calchas keep it?
Ulyss. At Menelaus' tent, most princely Troilus:
*Imperil'd.—Uncommon; unusual.—"The declined," I. e., the fallen.—Laomedon.
There Diomed doth feast with him to-night;
Who neither looks upon the heaven, nor earth,
But gives all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the fair Cressid.

Tro. Shall I, sweet lord, be bound to you so much,
After we part from Agamemnon's tent,
To bring me thither?

Ulys. You shall command me, sir.
As gentle tell me, of what honor was
This Cressida in Troy? Had she no lover there
That wist her absence?
Tro. O, sir! to such as boasting show their scars,
A mock is due. Will you walk on, my lord?
She was belov'd, she lov'd; she is, and doth;
But still sweet love is food for fortune's tooth.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Grecian Camp. Before
Achill's Tent.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus.

Achill. I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.—
Patroclus, let us feast him to the height.

Patr. Here comes Therites.

Enter Therites.

Achill. How now, thou 'cur of envy!
Thou crusty batch of nature, what's the news?

Ther. Why, thou picture of what thou seemest, and idol of idiot-worshippers, here's a letter for thee.

Achill. From whence, fragment?

Ther. Why, thou full dish of fool, from Troy.

Patr. Who keeps the tent now?

Ther. The surgeon's box, or the patient's wound.

Patr. Well said, war adversary! and what need these tricks?

Ther. Pr'ythee be silent, boy; I profit not by thy talk; thou art thought to be Achilles' male sarit.

Patr. Male villain, you rogue! what's that?

Ther. Why, his masculine whore. Now the rotten toisons of the south, the guts-gripping, ruptures, catarrhs, loads of gravel in the back, lethargies, cold
palsies, raw eyes, dirt-rotten livers, wheezing lungs, bladders full of imposthume, sciatics, lime-kilns in the palm, incurable bone-ache, and the reviled fest simple of the tetter, take and take again such postumus discoloursers.

Patr. Why thou damnable box of envy, thou, what meanest thou to curse thus?

Ther. Do I curse thee?

Patr. Why no, you ravenous butt; you wheresoever indistinguishable cur, no.

Ther. No I why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skin of sleeve silk, thou green sacrent flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou? Al! how the poor world is pestered with such waterflees, diminutives of nature!

Patr. Out, gall!

Ther. Finch egg!

Achill. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite
From my great purpose in to-morrow's battle.
Here is a letter from queen Hector:
A token from her daughter, my fair love;
Both taxing me, and 'gaging me to keep
An oath that I have sworn. I will not break it:
Fall Greeks, fall fame, honor, or go, or stay,

My major vow lies here; this I'll obey.—
Come, come, Therites, help to trim my tent;
This night in banqueting must all be spent.—

Away, Patroclus.

[Exeunt Achilles and Patroclus.

Ther. With too much blood, and too little brain, these two may run mad; but if with too much brain, and too little blood, they do, I'll be a curer of madmen. Here's Agamemnon,—an honest fellow enough, and one that loves easy; but he has not so much brain as ear-wax: and the goodly transformation of Jupiter there, his brother, the bull,— the primitive statue, and oblique memorial of cuckolds, a thieving-shoe-born in a clinin, bagging at his brother's leg,—to what form, but that he is, should vit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turn him to? To an ass, were nothing:
he is both ass and ox: to an ox were nothing; he is both ox and ass. To be a dog, a male, a cat, a *fitchew, a toad, a lizard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring without a row, I would not care; but to be Menelaus,—I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be, if I were not Therites, for I care not to be the house of a *lazar, so I were not Menelaus.—Hey-day! spirits and *sires!

Enter Hector, TROILUS, AJAX, AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, MENELAUS, and DIOMEDES, with lights.

Agam. We go wrong; we go wrong.

Ajas. No, yonder 'tis;
There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajas. No, not a whit.

Ulys. Here comes himself to guide you.

Enter Achill's.

Achill. Welcome, brave Hector: welcome, princes all.
[night.

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good
Ajax command the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks, and good night, to the Greeks gen-
Men. Good night, my lord.

Hect. Good night, sweet lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet *draught: sweet, quoth 'a! sweet sick, sweet sewer.

[Acuse

Achill. Good night, and welcome, both at once to
That go, or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

[Exit Agam. and Men.

Achill. Old Nestor tarries; and you too, Diomed,
Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business,
The tide whereof is now.—Good night, great Hector.

Hect. Give me your hand.

Ulys. Follow his torch, he goes
To Calchas' tent: I'll keep you company.

[Aside to TROILUS.

Tro. Sweet sir, you honor me.

Hect. And so good night.

[Exeunt DIOMEDES, ULYSSES and TROILUS following.

Achill. Come, come; enter my tent.

[Exeunt Achilles, Hector, Ajax, and Nestor.

Ther. That some Diomed's a fake-hearted rogue,
A most unjust knave: I will no more trust him when he leers, than I will a serpent when he hisses.
He will spend his mouth, and promise, like Bauder
the hound; but when he performs, astronomers foreset it;
it is 'prodigious, there will come some change: the sun-bowings of the moon when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector, than not to see him.

1 Harlots.—Menel¬aus.—Stuffed.—Pock¬eat.—Dis¬eased beggar.—* This is the explanation of Therites upon the first sight of the distant lights.—* Privy.—Portentous; omis-sus.
to dog him: they say, he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Calchas' tent. I'll after.—Nothing but lechery: all incontinent varieties. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. Before Calchas' Tent.

Enter Diomedes.

Dio. What are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within.] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think.—Where's your daughter?

Cal. [Within.] She comes to you.

Enter Troilus and Ulysses, at a distance; after them Thebistes.

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us.

Enter Cressida.

Tro. Cressid comes forth to him.

Dio. How now, my charge! Cress. Now, my sweet guardian.—Hark! a word with you. [Whispers.]

Tro. Yea, so familiar!

Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may find her key, if he can take her cleft; she's noted.

Tro. What should she remember?

Ulyss. List. Cress. Sweet honey Greek, tempts me no more to Ther. Roguery!

Dio. Nay, then,—

Cress. I'll tell you what—

Dio. Pho! pho! come tell, a pin: you are fore- sworn. [me do? Cress. In faith, I cannot. What would you have Ther. A juggling trick,—to be secretly open. Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me? Cress. I pr'ythee, do not hold me to mine oath; Bid me do any thing but that, sweet Greek.

Dio. Good night.

Tro. Hold, patience!

Ulyss. How now, Trojan? Cress. Diomed!— Dio. No, no; good night: I'll be your fool no more.

Tro. Thy better must.

Cress. Hark! one word in your ear. Dio. O, plague and madness! [you, Ulyss. You are mov'd, prince: let us depart, I pray Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself To wrathful terms. This place is dangerous; The time right deadly: I beseech you, go.

Ulyss. You have not patience; come. Dio. I pr'y thee, stay. By hell, and all hell's tor- wers,

I will not speak a word. [ments, Dio. And so, good night.

Cress. Nay, but you part in anger.

Tro. Dio. Doth that grieve thee?

Ulyss. O, wittier'd truth!

Cress. Why, how now, lord! Dio. By Jove, I will be patient.

Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something: will you You will break out. [Exit.

Dio. She strokes his cheek. [Exit.

Tro. Fear me not, sweet lord; I will not be myself, nor have & cognition Of what I feel! I am all patience. [Re-enter Cressida.

Ther. Now the pledge! now, now, now! Cress. Here, Diomed, keep this 'sleeve. [Giving it. Dio. O beauty! where is thy faith? Ulyss. My lord,— Tro. I will be patient; outwardly I will. Cress. You look upon that sleeve; behold it well.— He lov'd me—O false wench!—Give't me again. Dio. Whose was it? Cress. It is no matter, now I have it again: I will not meet with you to-morrow night. I pr'ythee, Diomed, visit me no more. Ther. Now she sharpens.—Well said, whetstone Dio. I shall have it.

Cress. What, this?

Dio. Ay, that.

Cress. O, all you gods!—O pretty, pretty pledge! Thy master now lies thinking in his bed Of thee, and me; and sighs, and takes my glove, And gives memorial dainty kisses to it, As I kiss thee.—Nay, do not snatch it from me; He that takes that doth take my heart withall.

Dio. I had your heart before; this follows it.

Tro. I did swear patience. [shall not: Cress. You shall not have it, Diomed; 'tis faith you I'll give you something else. [They strive. Dio. I will have this. Whose was it?

Cress. Tis no matter.

Dio. Come, tell me whose it was. [will. Cress. 'Twas one's that lov'd me better than you But, now you have it, take it.

Dio. Whose was it?

Cress. By all Diana's waiting-women yond'; And by herself, I will not tell you whose. Dio. To-morrow will I wear it on my helm, And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it. Ther. Wert thou the devil, and wert'st it on thy horn, It should be challeng'd. [is not: Cress. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past;—and yet it I will not keep my word.

Dio. Why then, farewell. Thou never shalt mock Diomed again.

Cress. You shall not go.—One cannot speak a word, But it straight starts you.

Dio. I do not like this fooling.

Ther. Nor I, by Pluto: but that that likes not you, Please me best. Dio. What! shall I come? the hour? Cress. Ay, come!—O Jove!—Do come:—I shall be plagu'd.

Dio. Farewell till then.

As An Think By For Was Bi-folcld

If Bi-folkled

Sith this there is a credence in my heart, An an esperauce so obstinately strong, That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears; As if those organs had deceptions functions, Created only to calumniate.

If beauty have a soul, this is not she: If souls guide vows, if vows be sanctianny, If sanctianny be the gods' delight, If there be rule in unity b itself, This is not she. O madness of discourse, That cause sets up with and against itself! Bi-fold authority! where reason can revolt Without perfition, and loss assume all reason Without revolt: this is, and is not, Cressid. Within my soul thee doth conducce a fight Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparable Divides more wider than the sky and earth; And yet the spacious breadth of this division Admits no office for a point, as subtle As Arachne's broken woof, to enter. Instance! O instance! strong as Pluto's gates! Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heaven: Instance! 0 instance! strong as heaven itself; The bonds of heaven are slipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd; And with another knot, five-finger-tied, The fractions of her faith, orts of her love, The fragments, scraps, the bits, and grievous reliques Of her o'er-eaten faith, are given to Diomed.

Ulyss. May worthy Troilus be half attach'd With that which here his passion dotr express? *That is, she could not publish a stronger proof. — Remembrance. — Since. — An esperauce, i. e., a hope. — That is, turns the very testimony of seeing and hearing against themselves. — For the sake of womankind. — Cynics. — That is, if it be true that one individual cannot be two distinct persons. — A thing inseparable. — That is, Does Troilus feel half of what he utters?

Tro. Ay, Greek; and that shall be divulged well In characters as red as Mars his heart Inflam'd with Venus: never did young man fancy With so eternal and so fix'd a soul.

Hark, Greek: —as much as I do Cressid love, So much by weight hate I her Diomed.

That sleeve is mine, that he'll bear on his helm: Were it a casque composed by Vulcan's skill, My sword should bite it. Not the dreadful spout, Which shipmen do the hurricane call, — Constring'd in mass by the almighty sun, Shall dizzy with more changor Neptune's car In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomed.

Ther. He'll tickle it for his conceptry.

Tro. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false! Let all untruths stand by thy stained name, And they'll seem glorious.

Ulyss. O! contain yourself; Your passion draws ears hither.

Enter Æneas.

Æne. I have been seeking you this hour, my lord. Hector, by this, is arming him in Troy:

Ajux, your guard, stays to conduct you home.

Tro. Have with you, prince. — My courteous lord, Farewell, revolved fair! — and, Diomed, Salien. — Stand fast, and wear a castle on thy head! Ulyss. I'll bring you to the gates.

Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

[Exeunt.]

Enter Hector and Andromache.

And. When was my lord so much urgently temper'd, To stop his ears against admonishment? Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you in: By all the everlasting gods, I'll go. And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to-day. Hect. No more, I say.

Enter Cassandra.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector? And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent. Consort with me in loud and dear petition: Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter. Cas. O! 'tis true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound. Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother. And. I swear.

Hect. Begone, I say: the gods have heard me. Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows: They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd Than spotted livers in the sacrifice. And. O! be persuaded: do not count it holy To hurt by being just: it is as lawful. For us to give much count to violent thefts, And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that mak'st strong the vow;
But vows to every purpose must not hold.
Unarm, sweet Hector.

_Hect._ Hold you still, I say;
Mine honor keeps the weather of my fate:
Life every man holds dear; but the dear man
Holds honor far more precious-dear than life.——

_E'nter Troilus._

_How now, young man! mean'st thou to fight to-day?_
And, Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

[Exit Cassandra.]

_Hect._ No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy har-
I am to-day i' the vein of chivalry. [nay, youth;
Let grow thy sinews till their bolts be strong,
And thou shalt yet the bearmen of the war.
Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,
I'll stand to-day for thee, and me, and Troy.

_Tro._ Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
Which better fits a lion than a man.
(for it.

_Hect._ What vice is that, good Troilus! chide me
_Tro._ When many times the captive Grecians fall,
Even when the wind and your fair wind
You bid them rise, and live.

_Hect._ O! 'tis fair play.

_Tro._ Fool's play, by heaven, Hector.

_Hect._ How now! how now!

_Tro._ For the love of all the gods,
Let's leave the hermit pity with our mothers,
And when we have our armours buckled on,
The Promeld vengeance ride upon our swords;
Spur them to ruthless work, win them from ruth.

_Hect._ Fie, savage, fie!

_Tro._ Hector, then 'tis wars.

_Tro._ Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

_Tro._ Who should withholds me?
Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars
Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire;
Not Priam and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergulled with freecourse of tears;
Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,
Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way,
But by my ruin.

Re-enter Cassandra with Priam.

_Cas._ Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast:
He is thy crutch; now, if thou lose thy stay,
Thou on him leading, and all Troy on thee,
Fall all together.

_Pri._ Come, Hector, come; go back.

_Tro._ Why, y'ath wife dream'd of, thy mother had visions,
Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself
Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt,
To tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore, come back.

_Hect._ Greece is a-field;
And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valor, to appear
This morning to them.

_Pri._ Ay, but thou shalt not go.
_Hect._ I must not break my faith.
You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,
Let me not shame respect, but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice,
Which you do love forbid me, royal Priam.

_Cas._ O Priam! yield not to him.

_Pri._ Do not, dear father.
_Hect._ Androamache, I am offended with you:
Upon the love you bear me, get you in.

[Exit Andromache.]

_Tro._ This foolish, dreaming, superfluous girl
Makes all these boddements.

_Cas._ O farewell, dear Hector!
Look, how thou dost die! look, how thine eye turns pale!
Look, how thy wounds do bleed at many vents!
Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out!
How poor Andromache shrills her dolor forth!
Behold, distraction, frenzy, and amazement,
Like witless antics, one another meet,
And all cry—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!
_Tro._ Away!—Away!—

[Exeunt Cassandra, Priam, and Hector.

_Alarums._
_Tro._ They are at it; hark!—Proud Diomed, believe,

I came to lose mine arm, or win my sleeve.
[Going.

_Enter Pandarus._

_Pan._ Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?
_Tro._ What now?

_Pan._ Here's a letter come from yond poor girl.

[Giving it.

_Tro._ Let me read.

Pan. A wholesome phthisic, a whoreson rascally phthisic so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one of these days: and I have a rheum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones, that, unless a man were cursed, I cannot tell what to think on't.—What says she there?
_Tro._ Words, words, mere words, no matter from whom the letter.
'Th' effect doth operate another way.—

Go, wind to wind, there turn and change together.
My love with words and air still she feeds,
But edifies another with her deeds.

[Exit severally.

_SCENE IV.—Between Troy and the Grecian Camp._

_Alarums: Excursions._ Enter Thersites.

_Ther._ Now they are clapper-clawing one another:
I'll go look on. That dissembling abominable varlet,
Diomed, has got that some seury doing foolish young knave's sleeve, of Troy there, in his helm:
I would fain see them meet; that same young Trojan ass, that loves the whore there, might send that Greekish whoremasterly villain, with the back, back to the dissembling luxurious drab of a sleeveless errand.
Or the other side, the policy of those crafty swearing rascals,—that stale old mouse-tenant dry cheese, Nestor, and that some dog-fox, Ulysses, is not proved worth a blackberry:—they set me up in policy, that mongrel cur, Ajax, against that dog of as bad a kind, Achilles; and now is the cur Ajax prouder than the cur Achilles, and will not arm today: whereupon the Grecians begin to proclaim barbarism, and policy grows into an ill opinion.
Soft! here comes sleeve, and sleeveless.

[Stands back.

_Enter Diomedes, Troy soldiers._

_Tro._ Fly not; for shouldst thou take the river Styx,
I would swim after.

_Dio._ Thou dost miscall retire:
I do not fly, but advantageous care
SCENE VII.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

Withdrew me from the odds of multitude.
Have at thee!

Ther. Hold thy where, Grecian!—now for thy where, Trojan!—now the sleeve! now the sleeveless! [Exit TROILUS and DIOMEDES, fighting. Enter Hector. Hector. What art thou, Greek? art thou for Hector's Art thou of blood, and honor? [match? 2 [Dragging Ther. forward. Ther. No, no;—I am a rascal; a scurril raising knife, a very fily rogue. Hector. I do believe thee thive. [Exit. Ther. God-a-merry, that thou wilt believe me; but a plague break thy neck, for frightening me! What's become of the wenching rogues? I think, they have swallowed one another: I would laugh at that miracle; yet, in a sort, lechery eats itself. I'll seek them. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same.
Enter DIOMEDES and a Servant.

Dio. Go, go, my servant, take thou Troilus' horse; Present the fair steed to my lady Cressid. Fellow, commend my service to her beauty; Tell her, I have chas'd the amorous Trojan, And am her knight by proof. Serv. I go, my lord. [Exit Servant. Enter AGAMEMNON.

Agam. Renew, renew! The fierce Polydamus Hath beat down Menon: bastard Margarelon Hath Doreus prisoner, And stands colossus-wise, waving his 'beam, Upon the 'passed corses of the kings Epitropis and Cedius: Polienexes is slain; Amphimachus, and Thola, deadly hurt; Patroclus taken, or slain; and Polymedes Sore hurt and bruised: the dreadful Sagittary Appals our numbers. Haste we, Diomed, To reinforcement, or we perish all. Enter Nestor.

Nest. Go, bear Patroclus' body to Achilles, And bid the snail-pac'd Ajax arm for shame.— There is a thousand Hectors in the field: Now, here he fights on Galatea his horse, And there he lacks work; anon, he's there afoot, And there they fly, or die, like scaled 'sculls Before the belching whale: then, is he yonder, And there the stately Greeks, ripe for his edge, Fall down before him, like the mower's swath. Here, there, and every where, he leaves, and takes: Dexterity so obeying appetite, That what he will, he does; and does much; That proof is call'd impossibility. Enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. O, courage, courage, princes! great Achilles Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance. Patroclus' wounds have rous'd his drowsy blood, Together with his mangled Myrmidons, [him, That noiseless, handleless, lack'd and chipp'd, come to Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend, And foams at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it, Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to-day Mad and fantastic execution, Engaging and redeeming of himself, With such a careless force, and forceless care, As if that luck, in very spite of cunning, Bade him win all.

Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus! [Exit. Dio. Ay, there, there. Nest. So, so, we draw together. Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Where is this Hector? Come, come, thou d'boy-queller, show thy face; Know what it is to meet Achilles angry. Hector! where's Hector? I will none but Hector. [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Another Part of the Field.
Enter Ajax.

Ajax. Troilus! thou coward Troilus, show thy head! Enter DIOMEDES.

Hect. Yen, Troilus. O! well fought, my youngest brother. Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Now do I see thee. Haste!—Have at thee, Hector. Pause, if thou wilt. [Exit Hector. Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan. Be happy that my arms are out of use: My rest and negligence befriended thee now, But thou anon shalt hear of me again; Till when, go seek thy fortune. [Exit Hector.

Fare thee well. I would have been much more a fiercer man, Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother! Enter TROILUS.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Eneas: shall it be? No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven, He shall not carry him: I'll be taken too, Or bring him off.—Fate, bear me what I say! I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit Enter one in 4 goodly Armor. Hector. Stand, stand, thou Greek: thou art a goodly mark.— No! wilt thou not?—I like thy armor well; I'll 1 brush it, and unlock the rivets all, But I'll be master of it.—Wilt thou not, beast, abide? When then thy, on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—The Same.
Enter ACHILLES, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons; Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel: Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath; And when I have the bloody Hector found, Empale him with your weapons round about; In femail manner execute your aims, Follow me, sirs, and my proceeding's eye.— It is decreed—Hector the great must die. [Exit.

2 Murderer of boys.—2 Look upon, l e, be a locker-on.—2 Lying.—2 Carry him," l e, prevail over him.—2 Break; bruise.
SCENE VIII.—The Same.

Enter Menelaus and Paris, fighting: then, Thersites.

Ther. The cuckold and the cuckold-maker are at it.

Now, bull's eye, dog! 'Lo! Paris, 'lo! now, my double-henned sparrow! 'loo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game:—ware horns, ho! [Execute Paris and Menelaus.

Enter Margarelon.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.

Ther. What art thou?

Ther. I am a bastard too. I love bastards; I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard in mind, bastard in valor, in every thing illegitimate. One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard? Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment. Farewell, bastard.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Execute.

SCENE IX.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Hector.

Hect. Most putrefied core, so fair without, Thy goodly armor thus hath cost thy life.

Now is my day's work done; I'll take good breath:
Rest, sword; thou hast thy fill of blood and death!
[Put off his Helmet, and 4 leaves down his Sword.

Enter Achilles and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set;
How ugly night comes breathing at his heels:
Even with the sail and dashing of the sun,
To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd: forego this vantoge, Greek.

Achil. Strike, fellows, strike! this is the man I seek.
[HECTOR 2 is slain.

So, Illon, full thou next! now, Troy, sink down;
Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
On, Myrmidons; and cry, you all amain,
Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain.

[Hark! a retire upon our Grecian part.

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.

Achil. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the And, 4 stickler like, the armies separates, 4 earth, My half-supp'd sword, that frankly would have fed,

Thaca'd with this dainty bit, this goes to bed:
[Sheathes his Sword.

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail;
Along the field I will the Trojan trail.
[Execute.

SCENE X.—The Same.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomedes, and others, marching. Shouts without.

Agam. Hark! hark! what shout is that?

Nest. Peace, drums!

[2 Voices within.

Achilles! Hector's slain! Achilles!

Dis. The 'bruit is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet brag less let it be:
Great Hector was a man as good as he.

Agam. March patiently along.—Let one be sent
To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—

If in his death the gods have us befriended,
Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.
[Execute marching.

Scene XI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter Aenes and 4 Trojan Forces.

Aene. Stand, ho! yet are we masters of the field.

Never go home: here stand we out the night.

Enter Troilus.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector?—the gods forbid!

Tro. He's dead; and at the murderer's horse's tail,
In absent sort dragged through the shameful field.

Frown on, ye heavens, effect your rage with speed!

Sit, gods, upon your thrones, and smile at Troy!

I say, at once let your brief plagues be mercy,
And linger not our sure destructions on!

Aene. My lord, you do discomfort all the host.

Tro. You understand me not, that tell me so.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;

But dare all imminence, that gods and men Address their dangers in. Hector is gone!
Who shall tell Priam so, or Hecuba?

Let him, that will a screech-owl hie he call'd,
Go in to Troy, and say there—Hector's dead:

There is a word will Priam turn to stone,

Make wells and Niobes of the maidens and wives,
Cold statues of the youth; and, in a word,

Speak Troy out of itself. But, as I say,

Hector is dead; there is no more to say.

Stay yet.—You vile abominable tents,

Thus proudly 4 night upon our Phrygian plains,

Let Titan rise as early as he dare, 4 coward,

I'll through and through you!—And, thou great-six'd

No space of earth shall suffer our two hates:

I'll haunt thee like a wicked conscience still,

That mouldeth ghoulins swift as 4 frenzy's thoughts—

Strike a free march to Troy!—with comfort go.

Hope of revenge shall hide our inward woe.

[Execute Aenes and 4 Trojan Forces.

As Troilus is going out, enter, from the other side, Pandarus.

Pan. But hear you, hear you! Tro. Hence, Brothel-lackey! 4 ignominy and shame

Pursue thy life, and live away with thy name!

[Exit Troilus.

Pan. A goodly medicine for mine aching bones!—

[Left alone, let him say this by way of Epilogue.] O world! world! world! thus is the poor agent despised.

O, traitors and bawds, how earnestly are you set 'a work, and how ill required? why should our endeavor be so loved, and the performance so bathed? what verse for it? what instance for it?—Let me see.—

Full merily the humble-bee doth sing,

Till he hath lost his honey, and his sting;

And being once subdued in armed tail,

Sweet honey and sweet notes together fall."

Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloths.

As many as be here of Pandar's Hall,

Your eyes, half out, weep out at Pandar's fall;

Or, if you cannot weep, yet give some groans, Though not for me, yet for your aching bones.

Brethren, and sisters, of the hold-door trade,

Some two months hence my will shall here be made:

It should be now, but that my fear is this,—

Some galled goose of Winchester would kiss.

Till then I'll sweat, and seek about for ease;

And at that time bespeak your own diseases. [Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter a Company of mutinous Citizens, with Staves, Clubs, and other Weapons.

1 Cit. Before we proceed any farther, hear me speak.

All. Speak, speak.

1 Cit. You are all resolved rather to die, than to famish?

All. Resolved, resolved.

1 Cit. First you know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

All. We know't, we know't.

1 Cit. Let us kill him, and we'll have corn at our own price. Is't a verdict?

All. No more talking on't; let it be done. Away, away!

2 Cit. One word, good citizens.—

1 Cit. We are accounted poor citizens; the patri-
1 Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously, he did it to that end: though soft-concilienc'd men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and partly to be proud; which was his ruin to the altitude of his virtue.

2 Cit. What he cannot help in his nature, you account a vice in him. You must in no way say he is covetous.

1 Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations: he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these? The other side o' the city is risen: why stay we prating here? to the Capitol!

All. Come, come.

1 Cit. Soft! who comes here?

Enter Menenius Agrippa.

2 Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.

1 Cit. He's one honest enough: would, all the rest were so!

Men. What work's, my countrymen, in hand? Where go you [You.]

With bats and clubs? The matter? Speak, I pray you.

2 Cit. Our business is not unknown to the senate: there be bad *infing this fo'tnight what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say, poor suitors have strong breaths: they shall know, we have strong arms too. [neighbors.]

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest Will you undo yourselves?

2 Cit. We cannot, sir; we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care Have none the patricians of your wants. Your suffering in this death, you may as well Strike at the heaven with your sues, as lift them Against the Roman state; whose course will on The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs Of more strong-link asunder, than can everAppear in your impediment. For the death, The gods, not the patricians, make it; and Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack! You are transported by calamity Thither where more attends you; and you slander The helms o' the state, who care for you like fathers, When you curse them as enemies.

2 Cit. Care for us!—True, indeed!—They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their store-houses cramped with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious, Or be accuse'd of folly. I shall tell you A pretty tale: it may be, you have heard it; But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture To b scale 't a little more.

2 Cit. Well,

I'll hear it, sir; yet you must not think To have our 'Disgraces' with a tale;

But, an't please you, you deliver. [bers

Men. There was a time, when all the body's mem-

Rebell'd against the belly; thus accuse'd it:—

That only like a gulf it did remain

I' the midst o' the body, idle and unactive,

Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing

Like labor with the rest; * where th' other instruments

Did see, and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,

And, mutually participate, did minister
Unto the appetite, and affection common

Of the whole body. The belly answered.—

2 Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind of smile,

Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even thus,

(For, look you, I may make the belly smile,

As well as speak) it tanently replied

'T the discontented members, the mutinous parts

That envied his receipt; even so much * fifty

As you malign our senators for that

They are not such as you.

2 Cit. Your belly's answer? What! The kingly crowned head, the vigilant eye,

The counsellor, the heart, the arm our soldier,

Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpeter,

With other muniments and petty helps

In this our fabric, if that they—

Men. What then?

1 'Fore me, this fellow speaks!—what then? what then?

2 Cit. Should by the coromant belly he restrain'd, Who is the sink o' the body, —

Men. —Well, what then?

2 Cit. The former agents, if they did complain,

What could the belly answer? I will tell you,

If you'll bestow a small (of what you have little)

Patience a while, you'll hear the belly's answer.

2 Cit. Y'are long about it.

Men. Note me this, good friend, Your most grave belly was deliberate,

Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd:

"True is it, my incorporeal friends," quoth he,

"That I receive the general food at first,

While you do live upon; and so on."

Because I am the store-house, and the shop

Of the whole body; but if you do remember,

I send it through the rivers of your blood,

Even to the court, the heart, the senate, brain;

And through the ranks and offices of men:

The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,

From me receive that natural competency

Whereby they live. And though that all at once,

You, my good friends," this says the belly, mark me,—

2 Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. Though all at once cannot

See what I do deliver out to each,

Yet I can make my audit up, that all

From me do back receive the flour of all;

And leave me but the bran."— What say you to't?

2 Cit. It was an answer. How apply you this?

Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly,

And you the mutinous members: for examine

Their counsels, and their cares; digest things rightly,

Touching the wel'd o' the common, you shall find,

No public benefit which you receive,

But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you,

And no way from yourselves.—What do you think,

You, the great toe of this assembly?—

2 Cit. I the great toe? Why the great toe?

Men. For that being one o' the lowest, basest, poorest,

Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost:

Thou rash, that art worse in blood to run,

Leads first to win some vantage,

But make you ready your stiff bats and clubs,

Rome and her rats are at the point of battle;

The one side must have bale.—Hail, noble Marcus!

* A hint. — Spread it. — " Disgraces," i. e., hardships; injuries. — Whereas.
Enter Caius Marcius.

Mar. Thanks.—What’s the matter, you dissentious rogues, That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion, Make yourselves scabs?

2 Cit. We have ever your good word.

Mar. He that will give good words to ‘ye, will flatter Beneath abhorring.—What would you have, you curs, That like nor peace, nor war? the one affrights you; The other makes you proud. He that trusts to you, Where he should find you lions, finds you hares; Where foxes, geese: you are no surer, no, Than is the coal of fire upon the ice, Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is To make him worthy, whose offence subdues him, And curse that justice did it. Who deserves great- Deserves your hate; and your affections are [ness, A sick man’s appetite, who desires most that Which would increase his evil. He that depends Upon your favors swins with fins of lead, [ye? And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye? Trust With every minute you do change your mind, And call him noble, that was now your hate, Him vile, that was your garland. What’s the matter, That in these several places of the city You cry against the noble senate, who, Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else Would feed on one another!—What’s their seeking? Men. For corn at their own rates; whereas, they The city is well stord. [say, Mar. Hang ‘em! They say! They’ll sit by the fire, and presume to know What’s done i’ the Capitol; who’s like to rise, Who thrives, and who declines; side factions, and give out Conjugal marriages; making parties strong, And feeling such as stand not in their liking Below their cobbled shoes. They say, there’s grain Would the nobility lay aside their ruth, [enough? And let me use my sword, I’d make a 2 quar- With thousands of these quarter’d slaves, as high As I could 4 pick my lance.

Men. Nay, these are all most thoroughly persuaded; For though abundantly they lack discretion, Yet are they passing cowardly. But, I beseech you, What says the other troop? Mar. They are dissolved. Hang ‘em! They said, they were an-hungry; sigh’d forth prov- erbs,— That hunger broke stone walls; that dogs must eat; That meat was made for mouths; that the gods sent no Corn for the rich men only.—With these shreds They vented their complaining; which being an- swerd, And a petition granted them, a strange one, (To break the heart of generosity, And make bold power look pale) they throw their caps As they would hang them on the horns o’ the moon, Shooting their 4 exultation.

Men. What is granted them? Mar. Five tribunes, to defend their vulgar wisdoms, Of their own choice: one’s Junius Brutus, Sicinius Velutus, and I know not,—Sicath! The rabble should have first unroof’d the city, Ere so prevail’d with me: it will in time Win upon power, and throw forth greater themes For insurrection’s 4 arguing.

Men. This is strange. Mar. Go; get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where’s Caius Marcius?

Mar. Here. What’s the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, the Volscyes are in arms. Mar. I am glad out: then, we shall have means to vent Our musty superfluity.—See, our best elders.

Enter Cominius, Titus Lartius, and other Senators; Junius Brutus, and Scinius Velutus. 1 Sen. Marcius, ’tis true that you have lately told us; The Volscyes are in arms.

Mar. They have a leader, Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to’t. I sin in envying his nobility, And, were I any thing but what I am, 3 Would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together. Mar. Were half to half the world by th’ears, and he Upon my party, I’d revol, to make Only my wars with him: he is a lion That I am proud to hunt.

1 Sen. Then, worthy Marcius, Attend upon Cominius to these wars. Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir, it is; And I am "constant.—Titus Lartius, thou Shalt see me once more strike at Tullas’ face. What! art thou stiff? stand’st out? Tit. No, Caius Marcius; I’ll lean upon one crutch, and fight with the other, Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O, true bred! 1 Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, I know, Our greatest friends attend us. Tit. Lead you on: Follow, Cominius; we must follow you, Right worthy your priority.

Com. Noble Marcius! 1 Sen. Hence! To your homes! be gone. [To the Citizens. Mar. Nay, let them follow. The Volscyes have much corn: take these rats thither, To gnaw their garners. Worshipful mutineers, Your valor puts well forth: pray, follow. [Exeunt Senators, Com., Mar., Tit., and Messen. [Citizens steal away.

Sic. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcius? Bru. He has no equal.

Sic. When we were chosen tribunes for the people, Bru. Mark’d you his lip, and eyes? [ple, Sic. Nay, but his taunts. Bru. Being mov’d, he will not spare to gird the Sic. Bemock the modest moon. [gods.

Bru. The present wars devour him: he is grown Too proud to be so valiant.

Sic. Such a nature, Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow Which he trends on at noon. But I do wonder, His insolence can brook to be commanded Under Cominius.

Bru. Fame, at the which he aims, In whom already he is well gra’d, cannot Better be held, nor more attain’d, than by A place below the first: for what miscarries Shall be the general’s fault, though he perform To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure Will then cry out of Marcius, "O, if he Had borne the business!"

Sic. Besides, if things go well,
Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall
Of his *demerits rob Cominius.

Bruc. Come:

Half all Cominius' honors are to Marcius,
Though Marcius earn'd them not; and all his faults
To Marcius shall be honors, though, indeed,
In aught he merit not.

Sic. Let hence, and hear

How the despatch is made; and in what fashion,
More than his singularity, he goes

Upon his present action.

Bruc. Let's along. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Corin. The Senate-House.

Enter TULLUS AUFIUS, and Senators.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,

That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,

And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?

What ever has been thought on in this state,

That could be brought to boilily act ere Rome

Had circumvention? 'Tis not four days gone,

Since I heard thence; these are the words: I think,

I have the letter here; yes, here it is:— [Reads.

"They have press'd a power, but it is not known

Whether for east, or west. The dearth is great;

The people mutinous; and it is rumor'd,

Cominius, Marcius your old enemy,

(Who is of Rome worse hated than of you)

And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,

These three lead on this preparation

Whither 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you.

Consider of it."]

1 Sen. Our army's in the field.

We never yet made doubt but Re no was ready

To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly,

To keep your great pretences veil'd, till when

They needs must show themselves; which in the hatching,

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery,

We shall be shorter'd in our aim; which was,

To take in many towns, ere, almost, Rome

Should know we were afoot.

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius,

Take your commission; hie you to your bands.

[Giving it.]

Let us alone to guard Coriol:

If they set down before's, for the "remove

Bring up your army; but, I think, you'll find

They've not prepar'd for us.

Auf. O! doubt not that;

I speak from certainties. Nay, more;

Some parcels of their power are forth already,

And only hitherward. I leave your honors;

If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,

'Tis sworn between us, we shall ever strike

Till one can do no more.

All. The gods assist you!

Auf. And keep your honors safe!

1 Sen. Farewell.

2 Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell. [Exeunt.]

Enter VOLCUMNIA, and VIRGILIA. They sit down on two low stools, and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express yourself in a more comfortable sort. If my son were my husband, I should feelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honor, than in the embrace-ments of his bed, where he would show most love.

When yet he was but tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb; when youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way; when, for a day of king's entertainies, a mother should not sell him an hour from her beholding; I,—considering how honor would become such a person; that it was no better than picture-like to hang by the wall, if renown made it not so,—was pleased to let him seek danger where he was like to find fame. To a cruel war I sent him; from whence he returned, his brows bound with soak. I tell thee, daughter, I sprang not more in joy at first hearing he was a man-child, than now in first seeing he had proved him to be a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam? how then?

Vol. Then, his good report should have been my son;

I therein would have found issue. Hie me profess sincerely:—had I a dozen sons,—each in my love alike, and none less dear than mine and my good Marcius,—I had rather had eleven die nobly for their country, than one vapidly out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Vir. 'Beseach you, give me leave to return myself.

Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Methinks, I hear hither your husband's drum,

See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair;

As children from a bear the Volesces shunning him:

Methinks, I see him stamp thus, and call thus,—

"Come on, you cowards! You were got in fear,

Though you were born in Rome." His bloody brow

With his invid'd hand then wiping, forth he goes,

Like to a harvest-man, that's task'd to now

Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow? O, Jupiter! no blood.

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man,

Than girt his trophy: the breasts of Hecuba,

When she did suckle Hector, look'd not so lovely

Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood,

At Grecian swords contemning.—Tell Valeria,

We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit Gent.

Vir. Heansens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!

Vol. He'll beat Aufidius' head below his knee,

And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with VALERIA and her

Usher.

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifest housekeepers. What are you sewing here? A fine spot, in good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see swords, and hear a drum, than look upon his school-master.

Val. O' my word, the father's son: I'll swear, 'tis a very pity boy. O' my truth, I looked upon him o'

Wednesday half an hour together: he has such a confirmed countenance. I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again; and after it again; and over and over he thereafter.

* That is, attracted the attention of all towards him,—

The rest of the line 442:1 is of obscure sense; it gives to him the life of a citizen, and was accorded more honorably than any other.— Withdraw.— "A fine spot," i. e., a handsome spot of embroidery.
SCENE IV.

CORIOLANUS.

601

Mend, you mark who, 'Tis good I agreed. I

I O

Lart. So, I have the idle husband with me this afternoon.

Vir. No, good madam; I will not out of doors.

Vir. Not out of doors? Vir. She shall, she shall.

Vir. Indeed, no, by your patience: I will not over the threshold, till my lord return from the wars.

Vir. Fie! you confine yourself most unreasonably. Come; you must go visit the good lady that lies in. Vir. I will wish her speedy strength, and visit her with my prayers; but I cannot go thither.

Vir. Why, I pray you?

Vir. 'Tis not to save labor, nor that I want love. You would be another Penelope; yet, they say, all the yarn she spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill Ilissus full of molts. Come: I would, your car- bric were sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Come, you shall go with us.

Vir. No, good madam, pardon me; indeed, I will not.

Vir. In truth, b, go with me; and I'll tell you excellent news of your husband.

Vir. O! good madam, there can be none yet.

Vir. Verily, I do not jest with you, there came news from him last night.

Vir. Indeed, madam? Vir. In earnest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it. Thus it is:—The Volscæ have an army forth, against whom Cominius the general is gone, with one part of our Roman power; your lord, and Titus Lartius, are set down before their city Corioli; they nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. This is true on mine honor; and so, I pray, go with us.

Vir. Give me excuse, good madam; I will obey you in every thing hereafter.

Vir. Let her alone, lady: as she is now, she will but displease our better mirth.

Vir. In truth, I think she would. Fare you well then.—Come, good sweet lady.—'I'vythee, Virgin; thou thy solemnness out o' door, and go along with us.

Vir. No, at a word, madam; indeed, I must not.

Vir. I wish you much mirth.

Vir. Well then, farewell.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Before Corioli.

Enter, with Drum and Colors, MARIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Officers, and Soldiers. 1

Mar. Yonder comes news:—a wander, they have

Lart. My horse to yours, no. [met.

Mar. 'Tis done.

Lart. Agreed.

Enter a Messenger.

Mar. Say, has our general met the enemy? Mess. They lie in view, but have not spoke as yet. Lart. So, the good horse is mine. Mar. I'll buy him of you. Lart. No, I'll not sell; nor give him: lend you him I will,

For half a hundred years.—Summon the town.

Mar. How far off lie these armies?

Mess. Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their drum, and they ours. Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work, That we with smoking swords may march from hence, To help our fielded friends:—Come, blow thy blast. A Parley sounded. Enter, on the Walls, two Senators, and others.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he, That's less than a little. Hark, our drums. [Drums after off.

Are bringing forth our youth: we'll break our walls, Rather than they shall pound us up. Our gates, Which yet seem shut, we have but plan'd with rushes; They'll open of themselves. Hark you, for off: [Alarum after off. There is Aufidius: list, what work he makes Amongst your cloyen army.

Mar. O! they are at it.

Lart. Their noise be our instruction.—Ladders, ho! The Volscæ enter, and pass over the Stage.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city. Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight With hearts more proof than shields.—Advance, brave Titus: They do disjoin us much beyond our thoughts, Which makes me sweat with wraith. Come on, my He that retires, I'll take him for a Volscæ, [Follows: And he shall feel mine edge.*

Alarum, and excent Romans and Volscæ, fighting. The Romans are beaten back to their Trenches. Re-enter MARIUS enraged.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you, You shames of Rome! 2 Unheard-of boils and plagues Plaster you o'er, that you may be abhor'd Further than seen, and one infect another Against the wind a mile! You souls of greece, That bear the shapes of men, how have you run From slaves that apes would beat! Pluto and hell! All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale With flight and ague fear! Mend, and charge home, Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe, And make my wars on you. Look to't; come on; If you shall stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives, As they us to our trenches follow.

Another Alarum. The Volscæ and Romans re-enter, and the Fight is renewed. The Volscæ retire into Corioli, and MARIUS follows them to the Gates. So, now the gates are open:—now prove good seconds. 'Tis for the followers fortune widens them, Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like.

[He enters the Gates, and is shut in.

All. To the port I warrant him.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS.

Lart. What is become of Marcius?

All. Shun, sir, doubtless. 1 Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels, With them he enters; who, upon the sudden, Clapp'd to their gates: he is himself alone. To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow! Who sensibly outlaries his senseless sword,

* "Our fielded friends," i.e., our friends who are in the field of battle.—"The poet means, 'No, nor a man that fears you more than he,' i.e., having sensation, feeling.
And, when it bows, stands up. Thou art left, Mar.

A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art, Coriolanus:

Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier

Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible

Only in stroke; but, with thy grim looks, and

The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds, Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world

Were feverous, and did tremble.

The Gates open.

Re-enter Marcius, bleeding, assaulted by the Enemy.

1 Sol. Look, sir!

Lart. O, 'tis Marcius!

Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike.

[They fight, and all enter the City.]*

SCENE V.—Within the Town. A Street.

Enter certain Romans, with Spoils.

1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome.

2 Rom. And I this.

3 Rom. A murrian on't! I took this for silver.

[Alarum continues till after off.]*

Enter Marcius, and Titus Lartius, with a Trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers, that do prize their honours.

At a crack'd or shrunk! Cushions, head-spoons, trows of a dolt, doublets that hangmen would

Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,

Bre yet the fight be done, pack up.—Down with them!—

And hark, what noise the general makes.—To him!

There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius,

Piercing our Romans: then, valiant Titus, take

Convenient numbers to make good the city,

Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste

To help Cominius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st;

Thy exercise hath been too violent

For a second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not;

My work hath yet not warn'd me. Fare you well.

The blood I drop is rather physical

Than dangerous to me. To Aufidius thus

I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune,

Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms

Misguide thy oppressors' swords! Bold gentleman,

Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less

Than those she placeth highest. So, farewell.

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcius!—

[Exit Marcius.]*

Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place;

Call alliher all the officers of the town,

Where they shall know our mind. Away! [Exeunt.]*

SCENE VI.—Near the Camp of Cominius.

Enter Cominius and Forces, as in retreat.

Com. Breathe you, my friends. Well fought: we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,

Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs,

We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck,

By interims and conveying gusts we have heard

The charges of our friends:—thy Roman gods,

Lead their successes as we wish our own,

[ing

That both our powers, with smiling fronts encounter-
We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish you were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balm applied to you, yet dare I never Duty you asking. Take your choice of those
That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they
That most are willing.—If any such be here,
(As it were sin to doubt) that love this painting
Wherein you see me smeared; if any fear
Lesser his part than an ill report;
If any think brave death outweighs bad life,
And that his country's dearer than himself;
Let him, alone, or so many as minded,
Wave thus, to express his disposition,
And follow Marcus.

[They all shout, and wave their Swords; take him up in their arms, and cast up their Caps.
O me, alone! Make you a sword of me?
If those show be not outward, which of you
But is four Volsces? None of you, but is Able to bear against the great Aufidius
A shield as hard as his. A certain number,
Though thanks to all, must I select from all: the rest
Shall bear the business in some other fight,
As I shall be they'd. Please you, march before,
And I shall quickly draw out my command,
Which men be inclin'd.

Com. March on, my fellows:
Make good this ostentation, and you shall
Divide in all with us. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Gates of Corioli.

TITUS LARTIUS, having set a Guard upon Corioli, going with Drum and Trumpet toward Cominius and CAIUS MARCIUS, enters with a Lieutenant,
a party of Soldiers, and a Scout.

Lart. So; let the ports be guarded: keep your dukes,
As I leave them down. If I do send, despatch
Those centuries to our aid: the rest will serve
For a short holding: if we lose the field,
We cannot keep the town.

Luc. Fear not our care, sir.

Lart. Hence, and shut your gates upon us.—
Our guider, come; to the Roman camp conduct us.
[Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—A Field of battle between the Roman and the Volscian Camps.

Alarum. Enter MARCIUS and AUFIUS.

Mar. I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate
Worse than a promise-breaker. [Thee
Anf. We hate alike:
Not Afric owns a serpent I abhor
More than thy fame! i. e. easy. Fix thy foot.
Mar. Let the first budger die the other's slave,
And the gods doom him ufer!

Anf. If I fly, Marcus,
Hallow me like a hare.

Mar. Within these three hours, Tullus,
Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,
And made what work I pleas'd. 'Tis not my blood,
Wherein thou seest me mask'd: for thy revenge,
Wrench up thy power to the highest.

Anf. Wreath thou the Hector,
That was the whip of thy bragg'd progeny,

Mar. Thou should'st not scape me here.—

Anf. They fight, and certain Volscs come to the aid of Aufidius.

Censure, and not vainly—you have shum'd me
In your remund so seconds.
[Exeunt fighting, all driven in by MARCIUS.

SCENE IX.—The Roman Camp.

Alarum. A Retreat sounded. Flourish. Enter at one side, Cominius, and Romans; at the other side, MARCIUS, with his Arm in a Scarf, and other Romans.

Com. If I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,
Thou'lt not believe thy deeds; but I'll report it,
Where senators shall mingle tears with smiles,
Where great patricians shall attend, and shrug,
'T the end, admirable: where ladies shall be frighted,
And, gladly qu'ld, hear more; where the dull
Tribunes,
That with the lusty plebeians late shone honors,
Shall say, against their hearts,—

"We thank the gods our Rome hath such a soldier!"
Yet can'st thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully dined before.

Enter Titus Lartius with his 3 Power, from the pursuit.

Lar. O general,
Here is the steed, we the captor:
Hast thou beheld
Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. I have done,
As you have done; that's what I can; induc'd
As you have been; that's for my country:
He that has but effected his good will
Hath overt'en mine act.

Com. Thou shall not be
The grave of your deserving: Rome must know
The value of her own: 'twere a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a tradecment,
To hide your doings; and to silence that,
Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest. Therefore, I beseech you,
In sign of what you are, not to reward
What you have done, before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To bear themselves remember'd.

Com. Should they not,
Well might they foster against ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses,
(Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store) of all
The treasure, in this field achieve'd and city,
We render you the tenth; to be ta'en forth,
Before the common distribution,
At your own choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bride to pay my sword: I do refuse it;
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[Flourish. They all cry, Marcius! Marcius! Marcius! cast up their Caps and Lances: Cominius and Lartius stand bare.

Mar. May these same instruments, which you pro-fanec,
Never sound more: when drums and trumpets shall

*That is, in affording such ill-timed help. — 1 Gladly qu'ld," i. e., thrown into grateful trepidation.— 2 Power.
*— Privilege.— That is, 'T hath done as much as I have done.— 4 Censure; obloquy.— Should they not," i. e., not be remembered.
I'll the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of false-fac’d soothing;
When steel grows soft as the parasite’s silk,
"Let it be made a coverture for the wars.
No more, I say. For that I have not wash’d my nose that bled, or fill’d some 1st debile wretch,
Which without note here’s many else have done,
You shott me forth
In acclamations hyperbolical;
As if I loved my little should be dicted
In praises sac’d with lies.
Com. Too modest are you:
Mac. I creat to your good report, than grateful
To us that give you truly. By your patience,
If ‘gainst yourself you be incens’d, we’ll put you
(Like one that means his proper harm) in manacles,
Then reason safely with you.—Therefore, be it known,
As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcius
Wears this war’s garland: in token of the which
My noble steel, known to the camp, I give him,
With all his trim belonging: and, from this time,
For what he did before Corioli, call him,
With all th’ applause and honor of the host,

Caius Marcius Coriolanus.—

Bear the addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Triumphs sound, and Drums.

All. Caius Marcus Coriolanus!

Com. I will go wash;

And when my face is fair, you shall perceive
Whether I blush, or no: howbeit, I thank you.—
I mean to stride your steed; and, at all times,
To undercress your good addition
To the fairness of my power.
Com. So, to our tent;
Wherefore do we repose us, we will write
To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Labinius,
Must to Corioli buck: send us to Rome
The best, with whom we may articulately,
For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I, shall my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me, I, that now
Refus’d most princely gifts, am bound to beg
Of my lord general.

Com. Take it: t’is yours.—What is’t?
Cor. I sometime lay, here in Corioli,
At a poor man’s house; he us’d me kindly:
He cried to me; I saw him prisoner;
But then Ambus was within my view,
And wrath o’erwhelm’d my pity. I request you
To give my poor host freedom.
Com. O, well-beg’d! were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.
Lart. Marcus, his name?
Cor. By Jupiter, forgot—
I am weary; yea, my memory is tir’d.—
Have we no wine here?
Com. Go we to our tent.
The blood upon your visage dries; ’tis time
It should be look’d to. Come. [Exeunt.

SCENE X.—The Camp of the Volscers.

A Flourish. Cornets. Enter Tullus Aufidius, bloody, with two or three Soldiers.

Auf. The town is ta’en;
I Sold. ’Twill be deliver’d back on good condition.

Auf. Condition!—
I would I were a Roman; for I cannot,

—Being a Volscer, be that I am. Condition?
What good condition can a traitor find
I’ the part that is at mercy! — Five times, Marcius,
I have fought with thee: so often hast thou bent me;
And would’st do so, I think, should we encounter
As often as we eat.—By the elements.
If e’er again I meet him heard to hear,
He is mine, or I am his. Mine emulation
Hath not that honor in’t, it had; for 18 where
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword, I’ll beat him at some way,
Or work, or craft, may get him.
I Sold. He’s the devil.

Auf. Bolder, though not so subtle. My valor’s poison’d,
With only suffering stain by him: for him
’Tis fly out of itself: nor sleep, nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sick; nor fame, nor Capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Enlargements all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom against My late to Marcius. Where I find him, were it
At home, upon my brother’s guard, even there,
Against the hospitable 20 canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in his heart.—Go you to the city:
Learn, how ’tis held; and what they are, that must Be hostages for Rome.
I Sold. Will not you go?

Auf. I am attendent at the cypress grove: I pray you,
(Tis south the city mills) bring me word thither
How the world goes, that to the pace of it
I may spur on my journey.
I Sold. I shall, sir. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter Menenius, Sicinius, and Brutus.

Men. The angerer tells me, we shall have news tonight.

Bru. Good, or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcius.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, whom does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marcius.

Bru. He’s a lamb, indeed, that bares like a bear.
Men. He’s a bear, indeed, that lives like a lamb.
You two are old men: tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcius poor in, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He’s poor in no one fault, but stor’d with all.

Sic. Especially in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now. Do you two know how you are censured here in the city, I mean of us of the right hand file? Do you?

Both Trib. Why, how are we censured?

Men. Because you talk of pride now,—Will you not be angry?

Both Trib. Well, well, sir; well.
Men. Why, 'tis no great matter; for a very little chief of occasion will rob you of a great deal of patience: give your dispositions the reins, and be angry at your pleasures; at the least, if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so. You blame Marcus for being proud!

Bru. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know, you can do very little alone; for your helps are many, or else your actions would grow wondrous single: your abilities are too infant-like for doing much alone. You talk of pride: O! that you could turn your eyes toward the napes of your necks, and make but an interior survey of your good selves! O, that you could!

Bru. What then, sir?

Men. Why, then you should discover a brace of unmeriting, proud, violent, testy magistrates, (talis, fools) as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are known well enough, too.

Men. I am known to be a humorous patron, and one that loves a cup of hot wine, 'tis without a drop of allaying Tiber in't: said to be something imperfect in favoring the thirst complaint; lusty, and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion: one that converses more with the buttock of the night, than with the forehead of the morning. What I think I utter, and spend my malice in my breath. Meeting two such as you, sir, you are, (I entombed in you as cursures) if the drink you give me touch my palate adversely, I make a crooked face at it. I cannot say, your worshipes have delivered the matter well, when I find the ass in compound with the major part of your syllables; and though I must be content to hear with those that say you are reverend gentlemen, come they deadly, that left Hungarians, you have good faces. If you see this in the map of my microcosm, follow it, that I am known well enough, too! What harm can your bisson conjectures glean out of this character, if I be known well enough, too?

Bru. Come, sir, come; we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither me, yourselves, nor any thing else better, than to be suspicious for poor that venture caps and legs: you wear out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a *fossset-seller, and then adjourn the controversy of three-pence to a second day of audience.

—When you are hearing a matter between party and party, if you chance to be pinched with the cabinet, your faces like ninja, set up the bloody flag against all patience, and, in roaring for a chamber-pot, dismiss the controversy pleading, the more entangled by your hearing: all the peace you make in their cause is calling both the parties knaves. You are a pair of strange ones.

Bru. Come, come, you are well understood to be a vender of a cup of the table, than a necessary bearcher in the Capitol.

Men. Our very priests must become mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous subjects as you are. When you speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth the wagging of your beards; and your beards deserve not so honorable a grave as to stuff a butcher's cushion, or to be entombed in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you must be saying, Marcus is proud; who, in a cheap estimation, is worth all your predecessors since Decullion, though, perdventure, some of the best of 'em were hereditary hangmen. Good don to your worshipes: more of your conversation would infect my brain, being the huntsman of the beastly plebeians. I will be bold to take my leave of you.

[Brutes and Sicaniies stand back.]

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, Valeria, &c.

How now, my as fair as noble ladies, (and the moon, were she earthly, no nobler) whither do you follow your eyes so fast?

Vol. Honorable Menenius, my boy Marcus approaches: for the love of Juno, let's go.

Men. Ha! Marcus coming home?

Vol. Ay, worthy Menenius, and with most prosperous approbation.

Men. Take my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee.—Ho! Marcus coming home?

[Throwing up his Cap.

Both Ladies. Nay, 'tis true.

Vol. Look, here's a letter from him: the state hath another, his wife another; and, I think, there's one at home for you.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night.—A letter for me?

Vir. Yes, certain, there's a letter for you; I saw it. Men. A letter for me? It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but *empiric physic, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O! no, no, no.

Vol. O! he is wounded; I thank the gods for't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much.—Brings a victory in his pocket, the wounds become him.

Vol. On's brows: Menenius, he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And 'twas time for him too; I'll warrant him that: an he had stayed by him, I would not have been so indulged for all the chests in Coriolis, and the gold that's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Both Ladies. let's go.—Yes, yes, yes: the senate bas letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war. He hath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Vol. In truth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous: ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True! pow, wow.

Men. True! I'll be sworn they are true.—Where is he wounded?—God save your good worship.

[To the Tribunes, who came forward.] Marcus is coming home: he has more cause to be proud.

Vol. Where is he wounded?

Vol. 'Tis the shoulder, and i' the left arm: there will be large cinctures to show the people, when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts i' the body.

Men. One i' the neck, and two i' the thigh,—there's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now it's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave. [A Skould and Flourish.] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. Those are the ushers of Marcus: before him

*Statesmen; politicians. Microcosm, l. e. little world. Fossset, l. e. blind sight.

"Caps and legs," l. e. braw and obedience. Fossset-seller, l. e., a seller of *faucets.—Set up the bloody flag, l. e., declare war.—Scooter; blackguard.

*Informed.
Into a rapture lets her baby cry
While she 3 cheers him: the kitchen 4 milkpin
Her richest 5 knockram 6 bout her frechey neck,
Clambering the walls to eye him: stalls, bulks,
Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and rides hors'd
With variable complexities, all agreeing
In earnestness to see him: 7 sold-shown famous
Do press among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar 8 station: our veil'd dames
Commit the war of white and damask, in
Their nicely-gaunted cheeks, to the wanton spoil
Of Phœbus' burning kisses: such a pother,
As if that whatsoever god, who leads him,
Were silently crept into his human powers,
And gave him graceful posture.

Sic. 9

On the sudden
I warrant him consul.

Bru. 10

Then our office may,
During his power, go sleep.

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honors
From where he should begin, and end; but will Lose those he hath won.

Bru. In that there's comfort.

Sic. Doubt not, the commoners, for whom we stand,
But they, upon their ancient malice, will Forget with the least cause, these his new honors;
Which that he'll give them, make I as little question
As he is proud to do.

Bru. I heard him swear,
Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put
The 4 napless vesture of humility;
Nor, showing (as the manner is) his wounds
To the people, beg their sticking breaths.

Sic. Tis right.

Bru. It was his word. O! he would miss it, rather Than carry it but by the suit o' the gentry to him,
And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better,

Bru. Then have him hold that purpose, and to put it
In execution.

Sic. 'Tis most like, he will.

Sic. It shall be to him, then, 4 at our good wills,
A sure destruction.

Bru. So it must fall out
To him, or our authorities, for an end.
We must suggest the people, in what hatred
He still hath held them; that to his 5 power he would Have made them milks, silence'd their plenders, and Disproportioned their freedoms; holding them,
In human action and capacity,
Of no more soul, nor fitness for the world,
Then cameis 6 the war: who have their 4 provand
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

Sic. This, as you say, suggested
At some time when his souring insolence
Shall 2 touch the people, (which time shall not want,
If he be put upon; and that's as easy,
As to set dogs on sheep) will be his fire
To kindle their dry stubble; and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bru. What's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol. 'Tis thought,
That Marcus shall be consul. I have seen
The dumb men throng to see him, and the blind

*Flourish on cornets.— 1 Graceful.
To hear him speak: matrons flung gloves,
Ladies and maidens their scarfs and handkerchiefs,
Upon him as he pass'd; the nobles bended,
As Jove's statue, and the commons made
A shower, and thunder, with their caps, and shouts.
I never saw the like.

Bru. Let's to the Capitol;
And carry with us eyes and ears for the time,
But hearts for the event.

Sic. Have with you. [Exc.]

SCENE II.—The Same. The Capitol.

Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions.

1 Off. Come, come; they are almost here. How many stand for consulships?

2 Off. Three, they say; but 'tis thought of every one Coriolanus will carry it.

1 Off. That's a brave fellow; but he's vengeance proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. 'Tis faith, there have been many great men
That flattered the people, who ne'er loved them;
And there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that, if they love they know not why, they hate upon no better a ground. Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him manifests the true knowledge he has in his disposition; and, out of his noble carelessnes, lets them privately see.

1 Off. If he did not care whether he had their love or no, or 'wa'v'd indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good, nor harm; but he seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him, and leaves nothing undone that may fully discover him their enmity so, as to affect the malice and displeasure of the people is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatten them for their love.

2 Off. He hath deserved worthyly of his country; and his ascent is not by such easy degrees as 'those, who, having been supple and courteous to the people, bonneted, without any further deed to have them at all into their estimation and report: but he hath so planted his honors in their eyes, and his actions in their hearts, that for their tongues to be silent, and not confess so much, were a kind of ingrateful injury; to report otherwise were a malice, that, giving itself the lie, would pluck reproof and rebuke from every ear that heard it.

1 Off. No more of him: he is a worthy man.
Make way, they are coming.

A Scene. Enter, with Lictors before them, Cominius the Consul, Menenius, Coriolanus, many other Senators, Sicinius and Brutus. The Senators take their places; the Tribunes take theirs also by themselves.

Men. Having determin'd of the Volaces, and
To send for Titus Lartius, it remains,
As the main point of this our after-meeting,
To gratify his noble service that
Hath thus stood for his country. Therefore, please Most reverend and grave elders, to desire
The present consul, and last general
In our well-found successes, to report
A little of that worthy work perform'd
By Caius Marcius Coriolanus; whom
We meet here, both to thank, and to remember
With honors like himself.

1 Sen. Speak, good Cominius:
Leave nothing out for length, and make us think,

Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than we to stretch it out.—Masters o' the people,
We do request your kindest ears; and, after,
Your loving motion toward the common body,
To yield what passes here.

Sic. We are convened
Upon a pleasing treatise; and have hearts
Inclined to honor and advance
The theme of our assembly.

Bru. Which the rather
We shall be prest to do, if he remember
A kinder value of the people, than
He hath hereto priz'd them at.

Men. That's off, that's off:
I would you rather had been silent. Please you
To hear Cominius speak?

Bru. Most willingly;
But yet my caution was more pertinent,
Than the rebuke you give it.

Men. He loves your people;
But tie him not to be their bed-fellow.—
Worthy Cominius, speak.—Nay, keep your place.

[Coriolanus rises, and offers to go away.]

1 Sen. Sit, Coriolanus: never shame to hear
What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honors' pardon:
I had rather have my wounds to heal again,
Than hear say how I got them.

Sic. Sir, I hope,
My words dis-bench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir: yet off,
When blows have made me stay, I fled from words.
You soothe'd not, therefore hurt not. But, your people,
I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.
Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i' the
When the alarum were struck, than idly sit [sun]
To hear my nothings monstered.

[Exit.

Men. Masters of the people,
Your multiplying spawn how can lie flatter,
(That's thousand to one good one) when you now see,
He had rather ventче all his limbs for honor,
Than one eu's ears to hear it—Proceed, Cominius.

Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus
Should not be utter'd feebly.—It is held,
That valor is the chiepest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver: if it be,
The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterpoise'd.
At sixteen years,
When Tarquinius made a head for Rome, he fought
Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian chievo he drove
The bristled lips before him. He bestrid
An o'erpressed Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquinius's self he met,
And struck him on his knee. In that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prov'd best man i' the field; and for his need
Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age
Enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea;
And in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He hur'd all swords of the garland. For this last,
Before and in Corioli, let me say
I cannot speak him home: he stopp'd the fliers,
And by his rare example made the coward
Turn terror into sport. As weeds before
A vessel under sail, so men obey'd,
And fell below his stem: his sword, death's stamp,
Where it did mark, it took: from face to foot

* Conven'd. — "Off." i. e., nothing to the purpose.—
* Beardless.—Bearded.— "That is, caused him to fall upon his knee."—Reward.—Robbed.
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was but the sound of dying cries. Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate of the city, which he painted
With shameless destiny, sideless came off,
And with a sudden re-enforcement struck
Coriolis like a planet. Now all's his;
When he by and by the din of war gain pierced
His ready sense; then, straight his doubled spirit
Re-quick'ned what in flesh was *fatigate,
And to the battle came he; where he did
Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if
'Twere a perpetual spoil: and till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood
To ease his breast with panting.

Men. Worthy man!

1 Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honors
Which we devise him.

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at; and Look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common mark o' the world: he covets less
Than misery itself would give, rewards
His deeds with doing them, and is content
To spend the time to end it.

Men. He's right noble:

Let him be called for.

1 Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter Coriolanus.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still
My life, and services.

Men. It then remains,
That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'ercap that custom; for I cannot
Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage: please
That I may pass this doings.

Sic. Sir, the people
Must have their voices; neither will they hate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to:
Pray you, go fit you to the custom, and Take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honor with your 4 form.

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru. Mark you that? [To Scinius.
Cor. To bring unto them, — thus I did; and thus;
Show them th' unaching scars which I should hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only.—

Men. Do not stand upon't.
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose: — to them, and to our noble consul,
Wish we all joy and honor.

Scinius. To Coriolanus come all joy and honor!

Flourish. Exeunt Senators.

Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.

Sic. May they perceive's intent? He will require them,
As if he did content what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come; we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here: on the market-place,
I know they do attend us. [Exeunt.

---

SCENE III.—The Same. The Forum.

Enter several Citizens.

1 Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do: for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them; so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be grateful were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which we, being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve; for once, when we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some aurum, some bale, but that our wits are so diversely colored: and truly, I think, if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all the points of the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so! Which way, do you judge, my wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon out as another man's will: 'tis strongly wedged up in a block-head; but if it were at liberty, 'twould sure, southward.

2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where, being three parts dilated away with rotten dew's, the fourth would return, for conscience sake, to help to get then a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks: — you may, you may.

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your voices? But that's no matter; the greater part carries it. I say, if he would incline to the people, there was never a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus and Menenius.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility: mark his behavior. We are not to stay all together, but to come by him, where he stands, by ones, by twos, and by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars; wherein every one of us has a single honor, in giving him our own voices with our own tongues: therefore, follow me, and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content.

[Exeunt.

Men. O sir! you are not right: have you not known
The worthiest men have done't?

Cor. What must I say? —
I pray, sir, — Plague upon't! I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace. — Look, sir; — my wounds: —

I got them in my country's service, when
Some certain of your brethren roared, and ran
From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods! You must not speak of that: you must desire them
To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me? Hang 'em! I would they would forget me, like the virtues
Which our divines lose by 'em.

Men. You'll mar all:

---

a Wearied. — b Bequeath. — c "Misery." i. e., avarice. —

"Your form," i. e., the form which custom prescribes to you.

Once for all.— Accord; agreement.
I'll leave you. Pray you, speak to them, I pray you,
In wholesome manner.

Enter two Citizens.

Cor.  Bid them wash their faces,
And keep their teeth clean. — So, here comes a

You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.
1 Cit. We do, sir: tell us what hath brought you to't.
Cor. Mine own desert.
2 Cit. Your own desert?
Cor. Ay, not

Mine own desire.
1 Cit. How! not your own desire?
Cor. No, sir: 'twas never my desire yet,
To trouble the poor with begging.
1 Cit. You must think, if we give you anything, we hope to gain by you.
Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o' the consulship.
1 Cit. The price is, to ask it kindly.
Cor. Kindly! Sir, I pray, let me ha't: I have wounds to show you,
Which shall be yours in private. — Your good voice,
What say you?
2 Cit. You shall ha'nt, worthy sir.
Cor. A match, sir.—

There is in all two worthy voices begg'd.—
You have my alms: aideu.
1 Cit. But this is something odd.
2 Cit. An 'twere to give again,—but 'tis no matter.

[Exeunt the two Citizens.

Enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voices that I may be consul, I have here
the customary gown.
3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, and you have not deserved nobly.
Cor. Your enigma?
3 Cit. You have been a scourge to her enemies, you have been a rod to her friends: you have not,
indeed, loved the common people.
Cor. You should account me the more virtuous, that I have not been common in my love. I will not, sir, flatter my sworn brothers, the people, to which virtue and estimation of them: 'tis a condition they account gentle; and since the wisdom of their choice is rather to have my hat than my heart, I will practise the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeittly: that is, sir, I will counterfeit the flattery of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desires. Therefore, beeleeve, you may be consul.
4 Cit. We hope to find you our friend, and therefore give our voices heartily.
3 Cit. You have received many wounds for your country.
Cor. I will not  steal your knowledge with showing them. I will make much of your voices, and so trouble you no farther.

Both Cit. The gods give you joy, sir, heartily.

[Exeunt.

Cor. Most sweet voices! —
Better it is to die, better to starve,

Than crave the hire which first we do deserve.
Why in this  wordless togs should I stand here,
To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
Their needless vouches? Custom calleth me to't: —
What custom wills, in all things should we do't,
The dust on antique time would lie unswept,
And mountainous error be too highly heap'd
For truth to o'er-peer. — Rather than foule it so,
Let the high office and the honor go
To one that would do thus.— I am half through:
The one part suffer'd, the other will I do.

Enter three other Citizens.

Here come more voices.—
Your voices: for your voices I have fought;
Watch'd for your voices; for your voices bear
Of wounds two dozen odd; battles thrice six
I have, and heard off for your voices,
Have done many things, some less, some more.
Your voices: for indeed, I would be consul.
5 Cit. He has done nobly, and cannot go without any honest man's voice.
6 Cit. Therefore, let him be consul. The gods give him joy, and make him good friend to the people.
All. Amen, amen.—
God save thee, noble consul!

[Exeunt Citizens.
Cor. Worthy voices!

Re-enter MENENIUS, with BRUTUS, and SICINIUS.

Men. You have stood your limitation; and the tribunes
Endue you with the people's voice: remains
That, in th' official marks invested, you
Anon do meet the senate.
Cor. Is this done?
Sic. The custom of request you have discharg'd:
The people do admit you; and are summon'd
To meet anon upon your approbation.
Cor. Where? at the senate-house?
Sic. There, Coriolanus.
Cor. May I change these garments?
Sic. You may, sir.
[again,
Cor. That I'll straight do; and, knowing myself
Repair to the senate-house.
Men. I'll keep you company.— Will you along?
Bru. We stay here for the people.
Sic. Fare you well.

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Menenius.

He has it now; and by his looks, methinks,
'Tis warm at's heart.
Bru. With a proud heart he wore
His humble weeds. Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sic. How now, my masters! have you chose this
1 Cit. He has our voices, sir.
[man?
Bru. We pray the gods he may deserve your loves.
2 Cit. Amen, sir. To my poor unworthy notice,
He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices.
3 Cit. Certainly,
He flotation us downright.
1 Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech: he did not mock
2 Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but says,
He us'd us scornfully: he should have show'd us
His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for our country.
Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.
All.

No, no; no man saw 'em.
3 Cit. He said, he had wounds, which he could show in private;
And with his hat thus waving it in scorn,
"I would be consul," says he: "aged custom,
But by your voices, will not so permit me;
Your voices therefore." When we granted that,
Here was,—"I thank you for your voices,—thank you, —

Your voices, your most sweet voices:—now you have left your
I have no farther with you."—Was not this mockery?
Sic. Why, either, were you i' ignorant to see't,
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness
To yield your voices?
Bru. Could you not have told him,
As you were lesson'd, when he had no power,
But was a petty servant to the state,

* "Ignorant to see't," i. e., so ignorant as not to see it.
He was your enemy; ever spake against
Your liberties, and the charters that you bear
I* the body of the weal: and now, arriving
A place of potency, and away * the state,
If he should still malignantly remain
Fast toe to the *plebeii, your voices might
Be curses to yourselves. You should have said,
That, as his worthy deeds did claim no less
Than what he stood for, so his gracious nature
Would think upon you for your voices, and Translate his malice towards you into love,
Standing your friendly lord.

Sic. Thus to have said,
As you were fore-advis'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination: from him pluck'd
Either his gracious promise, which you might,
As cause had called you up, have held him to,
Or else it would have gall'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not article
Tying him to aught; so, putting him to rage,
You should have ta'en th' advantage of his choler,
And pass'd him unelected.

Bru. Did you perceive,
He did solicit you in *free contempt.
When he did need your loves, and do you think,
That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,
When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies
No heart among you? or had you tongues to cry
Against the rectorship of judgment?

Sic. Have you,
Easy ways, denied the asker; and, now again,
Of him, that did not ask, but mock, bestow
You sued-for tongues?

3 Cit. He's not confirmed; we may deny him yet.
2 Cit. And will deny him:
I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.
1 Cit. Ay, twice five hundred, and their friends to piece 'em.

Brut. Acquaint them instantly; and tell those friends,
They have chosen a consul that will from them take
Their liberties; make them of no more voice
Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking,
As therefore kept to do so.

Sic. Let them assemble;
And, on a safer judgment, all revoke
Your ignorant election. *Enforce his pride,
And bid his hate unto you; besides, forget not
With what contempt he wore the humble weed;
How in his suit he scorn'd you; but your loves,
Thinking upon his services, took from you
The apprehension of his present *portance,
Which most gibingly, ungravely, he did fashion
After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru. Lay
A fault on us, your tribunes; that we labor'd
(No impediment between) but that you must Cast your election on him.

Sic. Say, you chose him
More after our commandment, than as guided
By your own true affections; and that, your minds,
Pre-occupy'd with what you rather must do,
Than what you should, made you against the grain
To voice him consul. Lay the fault on us. *Yon, Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say, we read lectures to How youngly he began to serve his country.
How long continued, and what stock he springs of,
The noble house of the Marcus; from whence came
That Ancus Marcus, Numa's daughter's son,
Who, after great Hostilius, here was king.
Of the same house Publius and Quintus were,
That our best water brought by conduits hither;

And Censorinus, darling of the people,
And nobly nam'd so, twice being censor,
Was his great ancestor.

Sic. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought
To be set high in place, we did command
To your remembrances; but you have found,
*Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke
Your sudden approbation.

Bru. Say, you ne'er had don't,
(Harp on that still) but by our putting on;
And presently, when you have drawn your number,
Repair to the Capitol.

All. We will so: almost all
Repent in their election.

[Exeunt Citizens. Bru. Let them go on:
This mutiny were better put in hazard,
Than stay, past doubt, for greater.
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their refusal, both observe and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Sic. To the Capitol:
Come, we'll be there before the stream of the people;
And this shall seem, as partly 'tis, their own,
Which we have gouged onward.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Street.

Cornets. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius,
Titus Lartius, Senators, and Patricians.
Cor. Tullus Aufidius, then, had made new head?
Lart. He had; my lord; and that it was,
Our swifter composition. [caus'd
Cor. So then, the Volsces stand but as at first;
Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road
Upon us again.

Cor. They are worn, lord consul, so,
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?
Lart. On *safe-guard he came to me; and did curse
Against the Volsces, for they had so vilely
Yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium.
Cor. Spoke he of me?
Lart. He did, my lord.
Cor. How? what?
Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword;
That of all things upon the earth he hated
Your person most: that he would pawn his fortunes
To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he?
Lart. At Antium.
Cor. I wish, I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hatred wholly.—Welcome home.

[To Lartius.

Enter Scinibus and Brutus.
Behold! these are the tribunes of the people,
The tongues o' the common mouth. I do despise
For they do *prank them in authority, [them,
Against all noble sufferance.

Sic. Pass no farther.
Cor. Ha! what is that?
Bru. It will be dangerous to go on: no farther.

* Weighing.—* Our putting on," i. e., our importunity.—
* "On safe-guard," that is, with a guard appointed to protect him.—* "Prank them," i. e., plume themselves.
Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter.

Com. Hath he not pass'd the nobles, and the com-

Bru. Comin'us, no. [mons?

Cor. Have I had children's voices?

Sen. Tribunes, give way: he shall to the market-

Bru. The people are incensed against him.

Sic. Stop, or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your herds?—Must these have voices, that can yield them now, And straight disclaim their tongues!—What are your offices? You beat their mouths, why rule you not their teeth? Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by plot, To curb the will of the nobility: Suffer't, and live with such as cannot rule, Nor ever will be rul'd.

Call'n't a plot. The people cry, you mock'd them; and, of late, When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd; Scandal'd the suppliants for the people, call'd them Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Bru. Not to them all.

Cor. Have you inform'd them since?

Bru. How! I inform them?

Com. You are like to do such business.

Bru. Not unlike, Each way, to better yours. [clouds

Cor. Why, then, should I be consul? By yond' Let me deserve so ill as you, and make me Your fellow tribune.

Sic. You show too much of that, For which the people stir. If you will pass To where you are bound, you must inquire your way, Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit; Or never be so noble as a consul, Nor yoke with him for tribune.

Men. Let's be calm.

Com. The people are abus'd; set on.—This becomes not Rome: nor has Coriolanus [tering

Deser'd this so dishon'r'd rub, laid

faulsly

I the plain way of his merit.

Cor. Tell me of corn!

This was my speech, and I will speak't again— Men. Not now, not now.

Cor. Not in this heat, sir, now.

Cor. Now, as I live, I will.—My nobler friends, I crave their pardons:—

For the mutable, rank-scented

many, let them

Regard me as I do not flatter, and

Therein behold themselves. I say again, In soothing them we nourish against our senate The wreck of rebellion, insolence, sedition, Which we ourselves have plough'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,

By mingling them with us, the honor'd number; Who lack not virtue, no, nor power, but that

Which they have given to beggars.

Men. Well, no more.

Sen. No more words, we beseech you.

Cor. How! no more? As for my country I have shed my blood, Not fearing outward force, so shall my lungs Coin words till they decay against those menzels, Which we disdain should utter us, yet sought

The very way to catch them.

* Shuffling.— Treacherously. —* Populace. —* Lepers.

Bru. You speak o' the people, As if you were a god to punish, not

A man of their infirmity.

Sic. *Twere well, We let the people know't.

Men. What, what? his choler?

Cor. Choler!

Were I as patient as the midnight sleep, By Jove, 'twould be my mind.

Sic. It is a mind, That shall remain a poison where it is, Not poison any further.

Cor. Shall remain!—Hear you this Triton of the minnows? mark you His absolute "shall"?

Com. "Twas from the

Cor. "Shall!"

O, good but most unwise patriots! why, You grave but reckless senators, have you thus Given Hydra leave to choose an officer, That with his peremptory "shall," being but

The horn and scalp of these monarchs, were not spirit To say, he'll turn your current in a ditch, And make your channel his? If he have power, Then vain your impiety: if none, revoke Your dangerous bounty: if you are learned, Be not as common fools; if you are not, Let them have cushions by you. You are plebeians, If they be senators; and they are no less, When both your voices blended, the great'st taste Most palates theirs. They choose their magistrate; And such a one as he, who puts his shall," against a graver bench Than ever frown'd in Greece. By Jove himself, It makes the consuls base; and my soul aches, To know, when all the greater men are up, Neither supreme, how soon confusion May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take The one by the other.

His popular

Com. Well—on to the market-place.

Cor. Whoever gave that counsel, to give forth The corn o' the store-house gratis, as 'twas used Sometime in Greece.

Men. Well, well; no more of that.

Cor. Though there the people had more absolute I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed power, The ruin of the state.

Bru. Why, shall the people give One that speaks thus their voice?

Cor. I'll give my reasons, More worthier than their voices. They know the corn Was not their recompense, resting well assur'd They ne'er did service for't. Being press'd to the war, Even when the navel of the state was touch'd, They would not thread the gates: this kind of service Did not deserve corn gratis: being the war, Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd Most valor, were not for them. The accusation Which they have often made against the senate, All cause unborn, could never be the motive Of our so frank donation. Well, what then? How shall this

bisson

multitude digest The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express What's like to be their words?—We did request it; We are the greater poll, and in true fear They gave us their declamations.—Thus we debate The nature of our seats, and make the rabble Call our cares, fears; which will in time break ope The locks o' the senate, and bring in the crows To peck the eagles.

* "From the canon," i. e., according to law. — Careless. —* Pass through. —* "Bisson" i. e., blind. — Number.
Come, enough.

Men. Enough, with over-measure.

Cor. No, take more:

What may be sworn by, both divine and human,

Seal what I end with!—This double worship,—

Where one part does disdain with cause, the other

Insult without all reason; where gentry, title, wisdom,

Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no

Of general ignorance,—it must omit

Real necessities, and give way the while

To unstable slantness. Purpose so bar’d, it follows,

Nothing is done to purpose: therefore, beseech you,

You that will be less fearful than discreet,

That love the fundamental part of state,

More than you doubt the change on’t; that prefer;

A noble life before a long, and wish

To jump a body with a dangerous physic

That’s sure of death without it, at once pluck out

The multitudinous tongue: let them not lick

The sweet which is their poison. Your dishonor

Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state

Of that integrity which should become it,

Not having the power to do the good it would,

For th’ ill which doth control it.

Men. He has said enough.

Sic. He has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer

As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch! despite o’erwhelm thee!—

What should the people do with these bald tribunes?

On whom depending, their obedience fails

To the greater bench. In a rebellion,

When what’s not meet, but what must be, was law,

Then were they chosen: in a better hour,

Let what is meet be said, it must be meet,

And throw their power i’ the dust.

Men. Manifest treason.

Sic. This a consul? no.

Men. The ædiles, ho!—Let him be apprehended.

Enter an ædile.

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit ædile. in whose name, myself.

Attach thee as a traitorous innovator,

A foe to the public weal. Obey, I charge thee,

And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Sic. Sen. We’ll surety him.

Com. Aged sir, hands off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments.

Cor. Re-enter the ædile, with others, and a Rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic. Here’s he, that would Take from you all your power.

Men. Seize him, ædiles.

Sic. Down with him! down with him!

[Several speak.

2 Sen. Weapons! weapons! weapons!

[They all bundle about CORIOLANUS.

Tribunes, patricians, citizens!—what ho!—

Sicinius, Brutus, Corioli, citizens!—

Cit. Peace, peace, peace! stay, hold, peace!

Men. What is about to be?—I am out of breath;

Confusion’s near: I cannot speak.—You, tribunes

To the people,—Corioli, patience!—

Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic. Hear me! people, peace! peace!

Cit. Let’s hear our tribune:—Peace! Speak, speak, speak.

---

* Fear. — Risk.
Take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two
Com. But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetic;
And manhood is call'd foolery, when it stands
Against a falling fabric.—Will you hence,
Before the tag return, whose rage doth rend
Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear?
Men. Pray, be gone. I'll try whether my old wit be in request
With those that have but little: this must be patch'd
With cloth of any color.
Com. Nay, come away.
[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, and others.
1 Pat. This man has marri'd his fortune.
Men. His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove's power to thunder. His heart's his mouth:
What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent;
And, being angry, does forget that ever
He heard the name of death. [A noise within.
Here's goodly work! 2 Pat. I would they were a-bed!
Men. I would they were in Tyber—What, the Could he not speak them fair? [vengeance.
Re-enter Brutus and Sicinius, with the Rabble.
Sic. Where is this vicer,
That would depopulate the city, and
Be every man himself?
Men. You worthy tribunes,—
Sic. He shall he thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands: he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of the public power,
Which he so sets at naught.
1 Cit. He shall well know,
The noble tribunes are the people's mouths,
And we their hands.
Cit. He shall, sure on't.
Men. Sir, sir,—
Sic. Peace! [hunt
Men. Do not cry havoc, where you should but
With modest warrant.
Sic. Sir, how comes't, that you
Have help to make this rescue?
Men. As I do know the consul's worthiness,
So can I name his faults.—
Sic. Consult!—what consul?
Men. The consul Coriolanus.
Bru. He a consul!
Cit. No, no, no, no, no. [people,
Men. If, by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good
May I be heard, I would crave a word or two;
The which shall turn you to no further harm,
Than so much loss of time.
Sic. Speak briefly then;
For we are peremptory to despatch
This vicious traitor. To eject him hence,
Were but one danger, and to keep him here,
Our certain death: therefore, it is decreed
He dies to-night.
Men. Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Towards her! deserving children is enrol'd
In Jove's own book, like an unnatural dam
Should now eat up her own!
Sic. He's a disease, that must be cut away.
Men. O! he's a limb, that has but a disease;

Mortal, to cut it off; to cure it, easy.
What has he done to Rome that's worthy death?
Killing our enemies? The blood he hath lost,
(Which, I dare vouch, is more than that he hath,
By many an ounce) he dropp'd it for his country:
And what is left, to lose it by his country,
Were to us all, that don't and suffer it,
A brand to th' end of the world.
Sic. This is clean l Kam.
Bru. * Merely away. When he did love his country,
It honor'd him.
Men. The service of the foot,
Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
For what before it was.
Bru. We'll hear no more.—
Pursue him to his house, and pluck him thence,
Lest his infection, being of catching nature,
Spread farther.
Men. One word more, one word.
This tiger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unscann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to's heels. Proceed by process;
Lest parties (as he is belov'd) break out,
And sack great Rome with Romans.
Bru. If it were so,—
Sic. What do ye talk?
Have we not had a taste of his obedience?
Our Ediles smote? ourselves resisted?—Come!—
Men. Consider this:—he has been bred i' the wars
Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In boulted language; meal and bran together
He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
I'll go to him, and undertake to bring him in peace
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form.
In peace, to his utmost peril.
Sic. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody, and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.
Sic. Noble Menenius,
Be you, then, as the people's officer.—
Masters, lay down your weapons.
Bru. Go not home.
Sic. Meet on the market-place.—We'll attend you there:
Where, if you bring not Marcus, we'll proceed
In our first way.
Men. I'll bring him to you.—
Let me desire your company. [To the Senators.
He must come,
Or what is worst will follow.
1 Sen. Pray you, let's to him. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Coriolanus's House.

Enter Coriolanus, and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears: present me
Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock;
That the precipitation might down stretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still
Be thus to them. 2
1 Pat. You do the nobler.
Cor. I 'muse my mother
Does not approve me farther, who was wont
To call them woollen vasals; they are contented
To buy and sell with greats; to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still, and wonder,
When one but of my ordinance stood up

3 [*Clean kam," i. e., quite awry. — " Merely," i. e., absolutely. — Unseen'ml awkwitted," i. e., inconsiderate haste. — " Boulit," i. e., finely sifted.— " I mass," i. e., I wonder.—Rank.]}
To speak of peace, or war.

Enter Volumnia.

"I talk of you."

Why did you wish me milder? Would you have me false to my nature? Rather say, I play.
The man I am.

"O, son, son, son!"

I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.

Vol. You might have been enough the man you are,
With striving less to be so: lesser had been
The thwartings of your dispositions, if
You had not show'd them how you were dispos'd,
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.

Vol. Ay, and burn too.

Enter Menerius, and Senators.

Men. Come, come; you have been too rough,
Something too rough:
You must return, and mend it.

1 Sen. There's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray be counsell'd.
I have a heart as little apt as yours
'To brook control without the use of anger,
But yet a brain, that leads my use of anger
To be my vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman! Before he should thus stoop o' the heart, but that
The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic
For the whole state, I would put mine armor on, Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well, what then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them?—I cannot do it to the gods;
Must I then dote to them?

Vol. You are too absolute; Though therein you can never be too noble, But when extremities speak. I have heard you say, Humbly and policy, like uneasy friends, I'the war do grow together: grant that, and tell me, In peace what each of them by th' other lose, That they combine not there?

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honor in your wars to seem
The same you are not, (which for your best ends
You adopt your policy) how is it less, or worse, That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honor, as in war, since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people; not by your own instruction, Nor by the matter which your heart prompts you, But with such words that are but roated in
Your tongue, though but bastards, and syllables
Of no allowance to your bosom's truth.
Now, this no more dishonors you all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words
Which else would put you to your fortune and
The hazard of much blood,
I would dissemble with my nature, where
My fortunes and my friends at stake, requir'd
I should do so in honor: I am in this,
Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;

And you will rather show our general love
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon 'em,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that 'twas meant to use.

Men. Noble lady!—
Come, go with us: speak fair; you may say so.
Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, my son,
Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch'd it, (here be with them)
Thy knee bussing the stones, (for in such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears) waving thy head,
With something, thus, correcting thy young heart,
Now's humble as the ripstip mulberry
That will not hold the handling. Or say to them,
Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use as they to claim,
In asking their good loves; but those will frame
Thyself, focou's, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power, and person.

Men. This but done,
Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours;
For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.

Vol. Pr'ythee no,
Go, and be ruled: although, I know, thou hadst rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bower. Here is Cominius.

Enter Cominius.

Com. I have been i' the market-place; and, sir,
You make strong party, or defend yourself
'tis fit By calmness, or by absence: all's in anger.

Men. Only fair speech.

Com. I think, 'twill sove; if he Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will.—
Pr'ythee now, say you will, and go about it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unbarb'd scence?
Must I with my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do';
Yet were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Mercians, they to dust should grind it,
And throw't against the wind.—To the market-place!
You have put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we'll prompt you.

Vol. I pr'ythee now, sweet son: as thou hast said,
My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do't.

Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! My threat of war be turn'd,
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies lulls asleep! The smiles of knaves
Tent in my cheeks; and school-boys' tears take up
The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd knees,
Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms,—I will not do',
Lest I surcease to honor mine own truth,
And by my body's action teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice, then:

*"General lows." I. e., common clovans.—"That want," I. e., the scent of their loves.—"Not seems here to signify not only," I. e., uncovered hand.—"This single plot," I. e., this single body.—Dwell.
To beg of thee, it is my more dishonor,
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin: let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous *stoutness; for I mock at death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'dst it from me,
But be not'th thy pride thyself.

Cor.
Pray, be content:
Mother, I am going to the market-place;
Chide me no more. I'll mountebank their loves,
*Cog their hearts from them, and come home before'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going.
Commend me to your wife. I'll return consul,
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
The way of flattery farther.

Vol. Do your will. [Exit.

Com. Away! the tribunes do attend you: arm
To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd *yourself
With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is, mildly:—pray you, let us go.
Let them accuse me by *invention, I
Will answer in mine honor.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it then; mildly. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Same. The Forum.

Enter Sicinius and Brutos.

Brus. In this point charge him home: that he affects Tyrannical power: if he evade us there,
Enforce him with his *envy to the people;
And that the spoil got on the Antistes
Was ne'er distributed.—

Enter an Edile.

What! will he come?

Æd. He's coming.

Brus. How accompanied?

Æd. With old Menenius, and those senators
That always favor'd him.

Sic. Have you a catalogue
Of all the voices that we have procur'd,
Set down by the poll?

Æd. I have; 'tis ready.

Sic. Have you collected them by tribes?

Æd. I have.

Sic. Assemble presently the people hither:
And when they hear me say, "It shall be so,
I' the right and strength o' the commons," he it either
For death, for fine, or banishment, then let them,
If I say, fine, cry, "fine!" if death, cry, "death!"
Insisting on "their" old prerogative
And power 't the truth o' the cause.

Æd. I shall inform them.

Brus. And when such time they have begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a din confus'd
Enforce the present execution
Of what we chance to sentence.

Æd. Very well.

Sic. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint,
When we shall hap to give't them.

Brus. Go: about it.

[Exit Edile.

Put him to chaoler straight. He hath been us'd
Ever to conquer, and to have his mouth
Of contradiction: being once charg'd, he cannot Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart; and that is there, which looks
With us to break his neck.

* Obituary — "Cor' it," I. e., owest — "Flatter; wheedle.
* Fiction; forgery. — "Enforce him with his envy," I. e., object to him his hatred.

Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, Cominius, Senators, and Patricians.

Sic. Well, here he comes.

Men. Calmly, I do beseech you.

Cor. Ay, as an ostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the 'knave by the volume.—The honor'd gods
Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice
Supplied with worthy men! plant love among us!
Thro' our large temples with the shows of peace,
And not our streets with war!

1 Sen. Amen, amen.

Men. A noble wish.

Re-enter Edile, with Citizens.

Sic. Draw near, ye people.

Æd. List to your tribunes. Audience: peace! I
Cor. First, hear me speak.

Both Tris. Well, say.—Peace, ho!

Cor. Shall I be charg'd no farther than this present?
Must all determine here?

Sic. I do demand,
If you submit to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and are content
To suffer lawful censure for such faults
As shall be prov'd upon you?

Cor. I am content.

Men. Lo, citizens! he says, he is content.

The warlike service he has done, consider;
Think upon the wounds his body bears, which show
Like graves i' the holy churchyard.

Cor. Scratches with briars;

Sears to move laughter only.

Men. Consider farther,
That when he speaks not like a citizen,
You find him like a soldier. Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy you.

Com. Well, well; no more.

Cor. What is the matter,
That being pass'd for consul with full voice,
I am so disfavor'd, that the very hour
You take it off again?

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: 'tis true, I ought so. [take
Sic. We charge you, that you have contv'd to
From Rome all *season'd office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;
For which you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. How! Traitor!

Men. Nay, temperately; your promise.

Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold in the people!
Call me their traitor?—Thou injurious tribune,
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands cluch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say,
Thou liest, unto thee, with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?

Citi. To the rock! to the rock with him!

Sic. Peace!

We need not put new matter to his charge:
What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves;
Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even this,
So criminal, and in such capital kind,
Deserves th' extremest death.

Brus. Serv'd well for Rome,—

"Bear the knave," I. e., bear being called a knave.—

"Season'd," I. e., wisely tempered; established by time.
Cor. What do you prate of service?
Bru. I talk of that, that know it.
Cor. You?
Men. Is this
The promise that you made your mother?
Com. I pray you,—
Cor. I'll know no farther.
Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word,
Nor check my carriage for what she can give,
To have't with saying, good morrow.
Sic. For that he has
(As much as in him lies) from time to time
*Envied against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their power; as now at last
Given hostile strokes, and that *not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it in the name o' the people,
And in the power of us, the tribunes, we,
Even from this instant, banish him our city,
In peril of precipitation
From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates. I' the people's name,
I say, it shall be so.
Cut. It shall be so, it shall be so: let him away.
He's banish'd, and it shall be so.
Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends;—
Sic. He's sentence'd: no more hearing.
Com. Let me speak.
I have been consul, and can show for Rome,
Her enemies' marks; and I do love
No country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's *estimate, her womb's increase,
And treasure of my loans; then, if I would Speak that—
Sic. We know your drift. Speak what?
Bru. There's no more to be said; but he is banish'd,
An enemy to the people, and his country.
It shall be so.
Cut. It shall be so: it shall be so.
Cor. You common *cry of curs! whose breath I hate
As reck o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you;
And here remain with your uncertainty.
Let every feeble rumor shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till, at length,
Your ignorance, (which finds not, till it feels)
Making not reservation of yourselves,
(Still your own foes) deliver you as most
*Abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despising,
For you, the city, thus I turn my back.
There is a world elsewhere.
[Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, Menenius,
Senators, and Patricians.
Ed. The people's enemy is gone; is gone!
Cut. Our enemy is banish'd! he is gone! Hoo! hoo!
[The People shout, and throw up their Caps.
Sic. Go, see him out at gates; and follow him,
As he hath follow'd you, with all despite:
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city.

ACT IV.

Cit. Come, come; let us see him out at gates:
... The gods preserve our noble tribunes:—Come.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before a Gate of the City.
Enter Coriolanus, Volteria, Virgilia, Menenius,
Cominius, and several young Patricians.
Cor. Come, leave your tears: a brief farewell.
...—The beast
With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were us'd
To say, extremity was the trier of spirits:
That common chances common men could bear;
That wind the sea was calm, all boats alike
Show'd mastership in floating; fortune's bo's,
When most struck home, being gentle *minded craves
A noble cunning. You were us'd to lead me
With precepts, that would make invincible
The heart that con'd them.
Vir. O heavens! O heavens!
Cor. Nay, I pr'ythee, woman.
Vol. Now, the red pestilence strike all trades
In And occupations perish! [Rome,
Cor. What, what, what! I shall be lov'd when I am back'd.
Nay, mother,
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Herecles,
Six of his labors you'd have done, and sav'd
You'd hand so much sweat.—Cominius,
Droop not: adieu.—Farewell, my wife! my mother!
I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime general,
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld
Heart-hardening spectacles; tell these sad women,
That which to see steep streets
As 'tis to laugh at 'em.—My mother, you *wot well,
My hazards still have have been your solace; and Believe't not lightly, though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fain
Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more than seen, your son
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With *cautelous baits and practice.
Vol. My *first son,
Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee a while: determine on some course
More than a wild *exposition to each chance,
That starts i' the way before thee.
Cor. O the gods!
Com. I' ll follow thee a month: devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st hear of us,
And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man,
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I' the absence of the needer.
Cor. Fare ye well:
... Thou first years upon thee; and thou art too full
Of the wars' surfeits to go rover with one
That's yet unbruis'd: bring me but out at gate.
... Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble *touch, when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, come.
While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and bever of me aught

* "Envied against," l. c., shown hatred to. — Not for not only. — Value. — Subdued; overthrown.

SCENE III

CORIOLANUS

But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily
As any ear can hear.—Come; let's not weep.—
If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs, by the good gods,
I'd with thee every foot.

Cor. Give me thy hand.—

Come. [Exeunt]

SCENE II.—The Same. A Street near the Gate.

Enter Sicinius, Brutus, and an Aedile.

Sic. Bid them all home: he's gone, and we'll no further.—
The nobility are vex'd, who, we see, have sided
In his behalf.

Brut. Now we have shown our power,
Let us seem humber after it is done,
When than it was a doing.

Sic. Bid them home:
Say, their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Brut. Dismiss them home.

[Exit Aedile.

Enter Volumnia, Virgilia, and Menenius.

Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.

Brut. Why?

Sic. They say, she's mad.

Brut. They have ta'en note of us: keep on your way.

Vol. O! 'tis well met. The hoarded plague of Require your love!—

Men. Peace, peace! be not so loud.
Vol. If that I could for weeping, you should hear,—

Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be gone?

[To Brutus.

Vir. You shall stay too. [To Sicinius.] I would,
To say so to my husband.

[Sic. I had the power.

Sic. Are you mankind?

Vol. Ay, fool; is that a shame?—Not but this fool.

Was not a man my father? Hadst thou no boxship
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words?

Sic. O, blessed heavens!

Vol. More noble blows, than ever wise words;
And for Rome's good.—I'll tell thee what—yet go:

Nay, but thou shalt stay too.—I would my son
Were in Arabia, and thy tribe before him,
His good sword in his hand.

Sic. What then?

Vir. What then?

He'd make an end of thy posterity.

Vol. Bastards, and all,—

Good man, the wounds that he does bear for Rome!

Men. Come, come, peace:

Sic. I would he had continued to his country,
As he began; and not unknot himself
The noble knot he made.

Brut. I would he had.

Vol. I would he had. 'Twas you threw 'em the rabble:

Courts that can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries, which heaven
Will not have earth to know.

Brut. Pray, let us go.

Vol. Now, pray, sir, get you gone:

You have done a brave deed. Ere you go, hear this:—
As far as doth the Capitol exceed
The meanest house in Rome, so far my son,
This lady's husband here, this, do you see,

Whom you have banish'd, does exceed you all.

Brut. Well, well; we'll leave you.

Sic. Why stay we to be haited
With one that wants her wits?

Vol. Take my prayers with you.—

[Exeunt Tribunes.

I would the gods had nothing else to do,
But to confirm my curses. Could I meet 'em
But once a day, it would unclasp my heart
Of what lies heavy to't.

Men. You have told them home,
And, by my troth, you have cause. You'll supp with me?

Vol. And, my meat: I sup on myself,
And so shall stay with feeding.—Come, let's go.
Leave this faint pating, and lament as I do,
In anger, Juno-like.

Come, come, come.

Men. Vie, vie, vie!

SCENE III.—A Highway between Rome and Antium.

Enter a Roman and a Volscen, meeting.

Rom. I know you well, sir; and you know me.
Your name, I think, is Adrian.

Vol. It is so, sir: truly, I have forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman; and my services are, as you are, against 'em. Know you me yet?

Rom. The same, sir.

Vol. You had more heard, when I last saw you;
but your flavor is well approved by your tongue.

What's the news in Rome? I have a note from the Volscen state, to find you out there: you have well saw'd me a day's journey.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange incursions
The people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Vol. Hath been? Is it ended then? Our state thinks not so: they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again; for the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy, Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe apsence to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever. This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus banish'd?

Rom. Banish'd, sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence,
Nicanon.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Anficius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Vol. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended
my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall between this and supper tell you most strange things from this, all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Vol. A most royal one; the centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyous to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present d Countenance.—* "In the entertainment," i. e., taken into pay.

* "Mankind," i. e., a woman with the roughness of a man.
• "Mean cunning."
Enter. A goodly city is this Antium. — City, 'Tis I that made thy widows: many an heir Of these fair edifices 'fore my wars Have I heard groan, and drop: then, know me not, Least that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,

Enter a Citizen.

In puny battle slay me.—Save you, sir.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will, Where great Aufidius lies. Is he in Antium? Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, beseech you? Cit. This, here before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir. Farewell, [Exit Citizen. O world, thy slipperies turn! Friends now fast sworn, Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart, Whose house, whose bed, whose mean, and exercise, Are still together, who twin, as 'twere, in love Unseparable, shall within this hour, On a discussion of a doit, break out To bitterest enmity: so, fester items, Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep To take the one the other, by some chance, Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends, And interjoin their issues. So with me:— My birth-place hate I, and my love's upon This enemy town. I'll enter: if he slay me, He does fair justice; if he give me way, I'll do his country service. [Exit.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine! What service is here? I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit. Enter a second Servant.

2 Serv. Where's Cotos? My master calls for him.—

Cotos! [Exit.

Enter Coriolanus.

Cor. A goodly house. The feast smells well; but I Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Servant.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend? Whence are you? Here's no place for you: pray, go to the door.

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment, In being *Coriolanus.

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away! —

2 Serv. Away? Get you away.

Cor. Now, th'art troublesome. —

2 Serv. Are you so brave? I'll have you talk with amon.

a In being Coriolanus," I. e., in having derived that surname from the suck of Coriol.

b Feed.—Memory for memorial.
I would have 'voided thee; but in mere spite,
To be full quit of those my banishers,
Stand I before thee here. Then, if thou hast
A heart of *wreak in thee, that will revenge
Thine own particular wrongs, and stop those mains
Of *shame seen through thy country, speed thee straight,
And make my misery serve thy turn: so use it,
That my revengeful services may prove
As benefits to thee; for I will fight
Against my cancel'd country with the spleen
Of all the 'under fiends. But if so be
Thou dar'st not this, and that to prove more fortunes
Thou art tied; then, in a word, I also am
Lust to live most wench, and Romaunt
My throat to thee, and to thy ancient malice:
Which not to cut would show thee but a fool,
Since I have ever follow'd thee with hate,
Drown tunes of blood out of thy country's breast,
And cannot live but to thy shame, unless
It be to do thee service.

Act III. Scene 1.
O Marcius, Marcius!
Each word thou hast spoke hath weeded from my
A root of ancient envy. If Jupiter
[heart
Should from yond' cloud speak divine things,
And say, "'Tis true!'; I'd not believe them more
Than thee, all noble Marcius.—Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scar'd the moon with splinters; Here I clip
The anvil of my sword; and do contest
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitions strength I did
Contend against thy valor. Know thou first,
I lov'd the maid I married: never man
Sighed truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Though doing thing, more danc'd and all the curl,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw
Besride my threshold. Why, thou Mars, I tell thee,
We have a power on foot; and I have purpose
Once more to how thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose mine arm for't. Thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since
Dance and encounter twixt myself and heart.
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fasting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Worthy Marcius,
Had we no other quarrel else to Rome, but that Thou art thence banish'd, we must waster all
From twelve to seventy; and, pouring war
Into the bowls of angrifull Romaunt
Like a bold flood 1'other heart. O! come in,
And take our friendly senators by the hands,
Who now are here, taking their leaves of me,
Who am prepar'd against your territories,
Though not for Rome itself.
Cor.
You bless me, gods!
Asf. Therefore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have
The leading of thine own revenge, take
'Til' one half of my commission; and set down,—
As best thou art experienc'd, & since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness,—thine own ways;
Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or ruderly visit them in parts remote,
To fright them, ere destroy. But come in:
Let me command thee first to those, that shall

1. wreek, an old term for revenge.—2. shames, of shame; i. e., disgraceful diminutions of territory.—3. The under hands, i. e., the infernal hands.—4. Clip, i. e., embrace.—5. Auspicius calls Coriolanus the axel of his sword, because he had formerly in his right hand, blows on him as a smith strikes on his head.—6. Thy brawn, i. e., thy arm.—7. Beat me out, i. e., beat me fully, completely.

Say, "yea," to thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
And more a friend than e'er an enemy;
Yet, Marcius, that was much. Your hand: most welcome!

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius.

1 Serv. [Advancing.] Here's a strange alteration!
2 Serv. By my hand, I had thought to have strucken him with a cudgel; and yet my mind gave me, his clothes made a false report of him.
1 Serv. What an arm he has! He turned me about with his finger and his thumb, as one would set up a top.
2 Serv. Nay, I knew by his face that there was nothing in him: he had, sir, a kind of face, me-thought,—I cannot tell how to term it.
1 Serv. He had so; looking as it were,—Would I were hanged, but I thought there was more in him than I could think.
2 Serv. So did I, I'll be sworn. He is simply the rarest man in the world.
1 Serv. I think, he is; but a greater soldier than he, you say one.
2 Serv. Who? my master!
1 Serv. Nay, it's no matter for that.
2 Serv. Worth six 2 on him.
1 Serv. Nay, not so either; but I take him to be the greater soldier.
2 Serv. 'Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say that: for the defence of a town, our general is extcellent.
1 Serv. Ay, and for an assault too.
Re-enter Third Servant.

3 Serv. O, shoves! I can tell you news; news, you rascal.

3 Serv. I would not be a Roman, of all nations;
I had as lieve be a condemned man.
1. 2. Serv. Wherefore? wherefore?
3 Serv. Why, he's he that was wont to thwack our general,—Caecus Marcius.
1 Serv. Why do you say thwack our general?
3 Serv. I do not say, thwack our general; but he was always good enough for him.
2 Serv. Come, we are fellows, and friends: he was ever too hard for him; I have heard him say so himself.
1 Serv. He was too hard for him directly, to say the truth out: before Coriol, he scotched him and notched him like a carbouano.
2 Serv. An he had been cannibally given, he might have broiled and eaten him too.
1 Serv. But, more of thy news?
3 Serv. Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end of the table; no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bold before him. Our general makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with his hand, and turns up the white o' the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday, for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table. He'll go, he says, and 1'awl the porter of Rome gates by the ears. He will mow down all before him, and leave his passage 3'polled.
2 Serv. And he's as like to do't, as any man I can imagine.
3 Serv. Do't! he will do't; for, (look you, sir,)
he has as many friends as enemies; which friends,

1 Know,—A carbouano is most scared for cooking.—2 That is considers the touch of his hand as holy.—Pull—"Poll-ed," i. e., bared; cleared.
sir, (as it were,) durst not (look you, sir) show themselves (as we term it) his friends, whilst he's in dejectitude.

1 Serv. Dejectitude! what's that?

3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like cones after rain, and revel all with him.

1 Serv. But when goes this forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall see the drum strike up this afternoon: 'tis, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. Why, then shall we have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers. Let me have war, say I: it exceeds peace, as far as day does night; it's spirited, waking, audible, and full of sound. Peace is a very apoplexy, letargy; mulled, deaf, sleepy, insensible; a getter of more bastard children, than wars a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. 'Tis so; and as wars in some sort may be said to be a ravisher, so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason: because they then less need one another. The wars, for my money, I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volscians.—They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in.

SCENE VI.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter Scinius and Brutus.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him; His remedies are tuned by the present peace And quietness o' the people, which before Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends Bunch that the world goes well; who rather had, Though they themselves didn't, beheld Dissentious numbers pestering streets, than see Our traders singing in their shops, and going About their functions friendly.

Enter Menenius.

Bru. We stood to't in good time. Is this Menenius? Sic. 'Tis he, 'tis he. O! he is grown most kind Of late.—Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus is not much miss'd, But with his friends: the common-wealth doth stand, And so would do, were he more angry at it. Men. All's well; and might have been much He could have tempori'd. [better, if Enter three or four Citizens.

CIt. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. [Good-den, our neighbors.

Bru. [Good-den to you all, good-den to you all. 1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our part bound to pray for you both. [live.

Sic. [And thrive.

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbors. We wish'd Cor- had lov'd you as we did. [Iolanus

Cit. Now the gods keep you! Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. [Eccent Citizens.

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time,

Than when these fellows ran about the streets, Crying confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent, O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking, Self-loving;—

Sic. And affecting one sole throne, Without assistance.

Men. We should by this, to all our lamentation, If he had gone forth consul, found it so. Bru. The gods have well prevented it; and Rome Sits safe and still without him.

Enter an Edict.

Ad. Worthy tribunes, There is a slave, whom we have put in prison, Reports, the Volsces with two several powers Are enter'd in the Roman territories; And with the deepest malice of the war Destroy what lies before them.

Men. 'Tis Aufidius, Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment, Thrusts forth his horns again into the world; Which were insheller'd when Marcius stood for Rome, And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you Of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumorer whippe'd.—It cannot be, The Volsces dare break with us. Cannot be! We have record that very well it can; And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the fellow, Before you punish him, where he heard this, lest you shall chance to whip your information, And beat the messenger who bids beware Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell not me: I know, this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles in great earnestness are going All to the senate house: some news is come in, That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'Tis this slave. Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his raising; Nothing but his report.

Mess. Yes, worthy sir, The slave's report is seconded; and more, More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths, How probable I do not know, that Marcius, Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome, And vows revenge as soon as, as between The young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most likely!

Bru. Rais'd only, that the weaker sort may wish God Marcius home again.

Mess. The very trick on't.

Sic. This is unlikely:
He and Aufidius can no more 'atone, Than violent contrary.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. You are sent to the senate. A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius, Associated with Aufidius, ranges

1 That is, 'Aiming at absolute power, without the participation of the tribunes.' To . . . our lamentation, i.e., to our sorrow. 'Stood for Rome,' i.e., stood up in her defence. 'To reason with is to talk with. — Changes, 'Atone,' i.e., agree; accord.

2 There is a slave, whom we have put in prison.
SCENE VII.
CORIOLANUS.

Upon our territories; and have already O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and took What lay before them.

Enter COMINUS.

Com. O! you have made good work.
Men. What news? What news?
Com. You have help toinish your own daughters,
To melt the city leads upon your pates; [and
To see your wives diathron'd to your noses;—
Men. What's the news? What's the news?
Com. Your temples burned in their cement; and
Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an auger's bore.
Men. Pray now, your news?—
You have made fair work, I fear me.—Pray, your news?
If Marcus should be join'd with Volscians,—
Com. He is god: he leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better, and they follow him
Against us brats, with no less confidence
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,
Or butchers killing flies.
Men. You have made good work,
You, and your *apron-men; you that stood so much
Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlic-eaters!—
Com. He will shake
Your Rome about your ears.
Men. As Hercules—
Did shake down mellow fruit. You have made fair work.
Bru. But is this true, sir?
Com. Ay: and you'll look pale
Before you find it other. All the legions
Do slingingly revolt, and who resists
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools.
Who's? can blame him?
Your enemies, and his, find something in him.
Men. We are all undone, unless
The noble man have mercy.
Men. Who shall ask it?
The tribunes cannot do for shame; the people
Deserve such pity of him, as the wolf
Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, "Be good to Rome," they charg'd him, even
As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein show'd like enemies.
Men. 'Tis true:
If he were putting to my house the brand
That should consume it, I have not the face
To say, "Beseech you, cease."—You have made fair hands,
*You, and your handy crafts have crafted fair.
Com. You have brought
A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
So incapable of help.
Tri. Say not, we brought it.
Men. How? Was it we? We lov'd him; but,
like beasts
And cowardly nobles, gave way unto your clusters,
Who did boot him out o' the city.
Com. But I fear
They'll roar him in again. Talus Aufidius,
The second name of men, obeys his points
As if he were his officer. Desperation
Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troop of Citizens.

Men. Here come the clusters.—
And is Aufidius with him?—You are they
That made the air unwholesome, when you cast
Your stinking, greasy arms, in hooting at Coriolanus' exile. Now he's coming;
And not a hair upon a soldier's head,
Which will not prove a whip: as many coxcombs,
As you threw caps up, will he tumble down,
And pay you for your voices. 'Tis no matter:
If he could burn us all into one coal,
We have deserv'd it.

Cit. 'Tis faith, we hear fearful news.
1 Cit. For mine own part,
When I said, banish him, I said, 'twas pity.
2 Cit. And so did I.
3 Cit. And so did I; and, to say the truth, so did very many of us. That we did, we did for the best; and though we willingly consented to his banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. Y'are good things, you voices!
Men. You have made
Good work, you and your *cry!—Shall's to the Citoploit?

Sic. Go, masters, get you home; be not dismay'd:
These are arts that would be glad to have
This true, which they so seem to fear. Go home,
And show no sign of fear.
1 Cit. The gods be good to us! Come, masters, let's home. I ever said, we were i' the wrong, when we banish'd him.
2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home.

[Exeunt Citizens.

Sic. Nor I.
Bru. Let's to the Capitol.—Would half my wealth
Would buy this for a lie!
Sic. Pray, let us go. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—A Camp; at a small distance from Rome.

Enter AUFIDIUS, and his Lieutenant.

Auf. Do they still fly to the Roman?
Liev. I do not know what witchcraft's in him, but
Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat,
Their talk at table, and their thanks at end;
And you are darken'd in this action, sir,
Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now,
Unless, by using means, I tame the foot
Of our design. He bears himself more prouder,
Even to my person, than I thought he would
When first I did embrace him; yet his nature
In that's no changing, and I must excuse
What cannot be amended.

Liev. Yet I wish, sir,
(I mean, for your *particular) you had not
Join'd in commission with him; but either
Had borne the action of yourself, or else
To him had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and he thou sure,
When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. 'Tis almost
And so he thinks, and is no less apparent
To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly,
And shows good husbandry for the Volscian state,
Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon
As draw his sword; yet he hath left undone

Mechanics.— Smilingly revolt;* i.e., revolt with pleasure. * Roar him in again,* i.e., roar at his return.

Footnotes:
1 Your cry, i.e., your pack, alluding to a pack of hounds.
2 For your particular, i.e., for your private interest.
That, which shall break his neck, or hazard mine, Whene'er we come to our account. [Rome.

Luc. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry

Away: All places yield to him ere he sits down; And the nobility of Rome are his:

The senators and patricians love him too.
The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people
Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty
To expel him thence. I think, he'll be to Rome,
As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. First he was
A noble servant to them, but he could not Carry his honors even: whether 'twas pride,
Which out of daily fortune ever taints
The happy man; whether defect of judgment,
To fail in the disposing of those chances
Which he was lord of; or whether nature,
Not to be other than one thing, not moving
From the casque to the cushion, but commanding
Even with the same austerity and garb [Peace,
As he controll'd the war; but one of these
(As he hath spices of them all, not all,
For I dare so far free him) made him fear'd,
So hated, and so banish'd: but he has a merit,
To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues
Live in the interpretation of the time,
And power, in itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident as a cheer
To extol what it hath done.
One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;
Rights by rights suffer, strengths by strengths do fail.
Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine,
Thou art poor'est of all; then, shortly art thou mine.
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter Menenius, Cominius, Sicinius, Brutus, and others.

Men. No, I'll not go: you hear what he hath said
To one sometime his general; who lov'd him
In a most dear particular. He call'd me father,
But what o' that? Go, you that banish'd him,
A mile before his tent fall down, and kneel
The way into his mercy. Nay, if he *coy'd
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.
Com. He would not seem to know me.
Yet one time he did call me by my name.
I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops
That we have bled together. Coriolanus
He would not answer to; forbud all names:
He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name o' the fire
Of burning Rome.

Men. Why, so; you have made good work:
A pair of tribunes, that have wreck'd for Rome,
To make coals cheap, a noble memory!

Com. I minded him, how royal 'twas to pardon
When it was least expected: he replied,
It was a bare petition of a state
To whom they had punish'd;

Men. Very well: could he say less?

Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard

For his private friends: his answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of noisome, musty chaff. He said, 'twas folly,
For one poor grain or two, to leave unburnt,
And still to nose 'th offence.
Men. For one poor grain or two? I am one of those:
his mother, wife, his child,
And this brave fellow too; we are the grains:
You are the musty chaff, and you are smelt
Above the moon. We must be burnt for you.

Sic. Nay, pray, be patient: if you refuse your aid
In this so never-needed help, yet do not Unbend with our distress. But, sure, if you
Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue,
More than the instant army we can make,
 Might stop our countryman.

Men. No; I'll not meddle.

Sic. Pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?

Bra. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome towards Marcius.

Men. Well; and say that Marcius
Return me, as Cominius is return'd,
Unheard, what then?

But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness? say't be so?

Sic. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

Men. I'll undertake it:
I think, he'll hear me. Yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unharts me.
He was not taken well; he had not disd'd
The veins unfil'd, our blood is cold, and then
We pout upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of our wine
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore, I'll watch him
Till he be diert to my request,
And then I'll set him upon.

Bru. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I'll prove him,
Speed how it will. You shall ere long have knowledge Of my success. [Exit.

Com. He'll never hear him.

Sic. Not?

Com. I tell you, he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as 'twould burn Rome, and his injury
The julier to his pity. I kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said, "Rise!" dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand. What he would do,
He sent in writing after me; what he would not,
Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions:
So that all hope is vain.
Unless his noble mother, and his wife;
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's hence,
And with our fair entreaties haste them on. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—Before Rome. The Guards at their Stations.

Enter to them, Menenius.

1 G. Stay! Whence are you?
2 G. Stand, and go back.

Men. You guard like men: 'tis well; but, by your
I am an officer of state, and come
To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?

Men. From Rome.
Scene III.

Coriolanus.

1 G. You may not pass; you must return: our
Will no more hear from thee.  [General
2 G. You will see your Rome embrac'd with fire,
You'll speak with Coriolanus.  [Before
Men. Good my friends,
If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is to losses to blanks,
your name hath touch'd your ears: it is Menenius.
1 G. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your name
Is not here passable.
Men. I tell thee, fellow,
Thy general is my special lover: I have been
The book of his good acts, whereas men have read
His fame unparalleled, haply, amplified; *
For I have ever magnified my friends,
(Of whom he's chief) with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtile ground,
I have tumbled past the throw, and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the wearing. Therefore, fellow,
I must have leave to pass.
1 G. 'Faith, sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalf,
as you have uttered words in your own,
you should not pass here: no, though it were as virtuous as life itself, to live chastely. Therefore, go back.
Men. Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius, always factionary on the party of your general.
2 G. Howsoever you have been his liar, as you say you have,
I am one that, telling true under him,
must say, you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.
Men. Has he done must thou tell? for I would not speak with him till after dinner.
1 G. You are a Roman, are you?
Men. I am, as thy general is.
1 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he does.
Can you, when you have pushed out your gates the very defender of them, and, in a violent popular ignorance, given your enemy your shield, think to fringe him, to bewitch him? Thou groan'st of old women, the virginal palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decayed dotard as you seem to be? Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in with such weak breath as this? No, you are deceiv'd;
therefore, back to Rome, and prepare for your execution.
You are confounders; our general has sworn you out of reprieve and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I were here, he would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.
Men. I mean, thy general.
1 G. My general cares not for you. Back, I say: go, lest I force thy half pint of blood,—back,— that's the utmost of thy having,—back.
Men. Nay, but fellow, fellow,
Enter Coriolanus and Aufidius.

Cor. What's the matter?
Men. Now, you companion, I'll say an errand for you:
you shall know now that I am in estimation;
you shall perceive that a Jack guardant cannot office me from my son Coriolanus: guess, but by my entertainment with him, if thou stand'st not the state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectators, and crueller in suffering: he now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee.
—The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity, and love thee no worse than thy old father Menenius does! O, my son! my son! thou art preparing fire for us; look thee, here's water to quench it. I was hardly moved to come to thee; but I am assured, none but myself could move thee. I have been blown out of your gates with signs, and conjure thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary countrymen. The good gods assuage thy wrath, and turn the dregs of it upon this varlet here; this, who, like a block, hath denied my access to thee.

Cor. Away!
Men. How? away?
Cor. Wife, mother, child, I know not. My affairs are servanted to others: though I owe
My revenge properly, my remission lies
In Volscian breasts. That we have been familiar, Ingratiate forgetfulness shall poison, rather
Then pity note how much. Therefore, be gone:
Mine ears against your suits are stronger than
Your gates against my force. Yet, for I loved thee,
Take this along; I write it for thy sake,

[Give a paper.
And would have sent it. Another word, Menenius,
I will not hear thee speak. This man, Aufidius,
Was my belov'd in Rome; yet thou beholdest s—

A uf. You keep a constant temper.

[Exeunt Coriolanus and Aufidius.

1 G. Now, sir, is your name Menenius?
2 G. 'Tis a spell, you see, of much power.
You know the way home again.

1 G. Do you hear how we are shent for keeping your greatness back?
2 G. What, then, do you think, I have to swoon?
Men. I neither care for the world, nor your general:
for such things as you, I can scarce think there's any,
you are so slight. He that hath a will to die by himself, fears it not from another. Let your general do his worst.
For you, be that you are, long; and your misery increase with your age.
I say to you, I'll not be sithed, away!

[Exit.
1 G. A noble fellow, I warrant him.
2 G. The worthy fellow is our general: he is the rock, the oak not to be wind-shaken.

[Exeunt.

Scene III.—The Tent of Coriolanus.

Enter Coriolanus, Aufidius, and others.

Cor. We will before the walls of Rome to-morrow
Set down our host.—My partner in this action,
You must report to the Volscian lords, how plainly
I have borne this business.

A uf. Only their ends you have respected; stopp'd your cars against
The general suit of Rome; therefore admitted
A private whisper, no, not with such friends
That thought them sure of you.

Cor. This last old man, Whom with a crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
Loved me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godded me, indeed. Their latest refuge
Was to send him; for whose old love, I have (Though I show'd sordily to him) once more offer'd
The first conditions, which they did refuse,
And cannot now accept, to grace him only
That thought he could do more. A very little
I have yielded, too: fresh embassies, and suits,
Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter
Will I lend ear to.—Ha! what shou't is this?

[Shout within.

Men. Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow?

"Law to blanks," i. e., chances to nothing.—Friend.

Deceitful.— Almost stamp'd the learning, i.e., almost given the lie such a sanction as to render it current.—* Factionary on the party of,* i.e., partisan in the cause of—Jack guardant, i.e.,Jack in office.

In the same time 'tis made? I will not.—

Enter, in mourning Habits, Virginia, Volumnia, leading young Marcius, Valeria, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then, the honor'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand
The grand-child to her blood. But, out, affection!
All bond and privilege of nature, break!
Let it be virtuous, to be obstinate.

What is that courtly worth? or those doves' eyes,
Which can make gods forsworn!—I melt, and am not
Of stronger earth than others.—My mother bows,
As if Olympus to a molehill should
In supplication nod; and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession, which
Great nature cries, 'Deny not.'—Let the Volscos
Plough Rome, and harrow Italy; I'll never
Be such a goosling to obey instinct, but stand
As if a man were author of himself,
And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband!

Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.
Vir. The sorrow, that delivers us thus chang'd,
Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor, now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out,
Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say
For that, 'Forgive our Romans.'—O! a kiss
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd our beds. No, God! I pray,
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unslunk, Sink, my knee, i'the earth;

Of thy deep duty more impression show
Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up bless'd! With the soft cushion, I kneel before thee, and improperly Show duty, as 'tis mistaking all this while Between the child and parent. (Kneels.

Cor. What is this?

Your knees to me? to your corrected son?
Then, let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars; then, let the mutinous winds
Stoutly the proud cedars against the very sun,
Mur'dring impossibility, to make
What cannot be slight work.

Cor. [Rising and raising her.] Thou art my warrior;
I holp to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome; chaste as the turtle,
That's curdled by the frost from paviz snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple: dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which, by the interpretation of full time,
May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform
Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou may'st prove
To shame unvanquished, and stick i' her wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!

Vol. [Rising.] Your knee, sirrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy! Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself,
Are suitors to you.

* Juno.—b Sterile.—c Strike; storm.

Cor. I beseech you, peace;
Or, if you'd ask, remember this before:
The things I have forsworn to grant may never
Be hold by you denials. Do not bid me
Disme my soldiers or my capitate.

Again with Rome's mechanics: tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural: desire not
To alay my rages and revenges with
Your colder reasons.

Vol. O! no more, no more! You have said, you will not grant us any thing;
For we have nothing else to ask, but that
Which you deny already: yet we will ask:
That, if we fail in our request, the blame
May hang upon your hardness. Therefore, hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volscos, mark; for we'll Hear nothing from Rome in private. [Take his seat. ]—Your request?
Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment,
And strength of bodies, would bewray what life
We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself,
How more unfortunate than all living women
Are we come hither; since that thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,

[Row; Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow.
Making the mother, wife, and child, to see
The son, the husband, and the father, tearing
His country's bowels out; and so poor we,
Thine enemies most capital. Thou barr'st us
Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy; for how can we,
Alas! how can we, for our country pray;
Whereas we are bound, together with thy victory,
When ere we are bound? Alack! or we must lose
The country, our dear nurse; or else thy person,
Our comfort in the country. We must find
An evident calamity, though we had
Our wish, which side should win; for either thou
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles through our streets, or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's rein,
And hear the palm, for having bravely shed
Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
Purpose not to wait on fortune, till
These wars determine: if I cannot persuade thee
Rather to show a noble grace to both parts,
Then seek the end of one, thou shalt not sooner
March to assault thy country, than to tread
(Trust to't, thou shalt not) on thy mother's womb,
That brought thee to this world.

Vir. Ay, and mine,
That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name
Living to time.

Boy. He shall not tread on me;
I'll run away till I am bigger, but then I'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be, [Aside.

Vol. Requires nor child nor woman's face to see,
I have sat too long. [Rising.

Boy. Nay, go not from us thus.
If it were so, that our request did tend
To save the Romans, thereby to destroy
The Volscos whom you serve, you might condemn us,
As poisonous of your honor: no; our suit
Is, that you reconcile them: while the Volscos
May say, 'This mercy we have show'd;' the Romans,
'This we receive'd;' and each in either side
Give the all-hail to thee, and cry, 'Be bless'd
For making up this peace!' Thou know'st, great son,
The end of war's uncertain; but this certain,
That if thou conquer Rome, the benefit

* Conclude; end.
Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name, Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses, Whose chronicle thus writ,—"The man was noble, But his bad brood brought him to the ground: Destroy'd his country, and his name remains To 1 each ensuing age abhor'd." Speak to me, son! Thou hast affected the fine strains of honor, To imitate the graces of the gods; To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air, And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt That would be give an oak. Why should not speak? Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man Still to remember wrongs?—Daughter, speak you; He cares not for your weeping.—Speak thou, boy: Perhaps, thy childhood will move him more Than can our reasons. There is no man in the world More bound to his mother; yet here he lets me prate Like one of the stocks.—Thou hast never in thy life Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy? When she, (poor ben!) fond of no second brood, Has chuck'd thee to the wars, and safely home, Loaded with honor. Say, my request's unjust, And spurn me back; but, if it be not so, Thou art not honest, and the gods will plague thee, That thou restrain'st me from the duty, which To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away. Down, ladies, let us shame him with our knees. 2 [All kneel.

To his surname, Coriolanus, long more pride, Than pity to our prayers. Down: an end; This is the last:—so we will home to Rome, And die among our neighbors.—Nay, behold us: This boy, thou canst not tell what he would have, But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship, Does reason our petition with more strength Than thou hast to deny.——Come, let us go. This fellow had a Valscian to his mother; His wife is in Corioth, and his child Like him by chance,—yet give us our despatch: I am almost on the road—say we are, And then I'll speak a little. 3

[He holds Volumnia by the hand, long, and self-struggling.

Cor. O mother, mother! What have you done? Behold! the heavens do ope, The gods look down, and this unnatural scene They laugh at. O my mother! mother! O! You have won a happy victory to Rome: But, for your son,—believe it, O! believe it,— Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd, If not most mortal to him. But let it come.— Aufidius, though I cannot make true wars, I'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius, Were you in my stead, would you have heard A mother less, or granted me, Aufidius? Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn, you were: And, sir, it is no little thing to make Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir, What peace you make, advise me. For my part, I'll not to Rome, I'll back with you; and pray you, Stand to me in this cause,—O mother! Wife! Auf. [Aside.] I am glad, thou hast lost thy mercy and thy honor At difference in thee: out of that I'll work Myself a firmer fortune. 4

[The Ladies make signs to Coriolanus.

Cor. Ay, by and by; 5

[To Volumnia, etc. We will drink together; and you shall hear A better witness back than words, which we

---

On like conditions will have counter-seal'd.
Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve To have a temple built you: all the swords In July, and her confederate arms, Could not have made this peace. 6

SCENE IV.—Rome. A Public Place.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius.

Men. See you yonder' coign o' the Capitol; yond' corner-stone?

Sic. Why, what of that?

Men. If it be possible for you to displace it with your little finger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, especially his mother, may prevail with him: but I say, there is no hope in't. Our throats are sentenced, and 't stay upon execution.

Sic. It's possible, that so short a time can alter the condition of a man?

Men. There is difference between a grub, and a butterfly; yet your butterfly was a grub. This Marcus is grown from man to dragon: he has wings; he's more than a creeping thing.

Sic. He loved his mother dearly.

Men. So did he me; and he no more remembers his mother now, than a bear the name of a young wild horse. The tartness of his face sour'd ripe grapes: when he walks, he moves like an engine, and the ground shrinks before his tread. He is able to pierce a corset with his eye; talks like a knell, and his "thren: is a battery. He sits in his state, as a thing "made for Alexander. What he bids be done, is finished with his bidding: he wants noth- "ing of a god but eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly.

Men. I paint him in the character. Mark what mercy his mother shall bring from him: there is no more mercy in him, than there is milk in a male tiger; that shall our poor city find; and all this is long of you.

Sic. The gods be good unto us!

Men. No, in such a case the gods will not be good unto us. When we banished him, we respected not them; and, he returning to break our necks, they respect not us.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Sir, if you'd save your life, fly to your house. The plebeians now have got your fellow-tribune, And hate him up and down; all swearing, if The Roman ladies bring not comfort home, They'll give him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sic. What's the news? Mess. Good news, good news!—The ladies have prevail'd, The Volscians are divided, and Marcus gone. A merrier day did never yet greet Rome, No, not the expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sic. Friend, Art thou certain this is true? is it most certain?

Mess. As certain, as I know the sun is fire: Where have you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it? Ne'er through an arch so hurried the bloudy gate, As the recomforted through the gates. Why, hark you! 7 [Shouts, Trumpets and Hautboys sounded, and Drums beat, all together. 8 The trumpets, sackbutts, puerlieries, and fids, Tubors, and cyrnals, and the shouting Romans, Make the sun dance. Hark you! [Shouting again.

8 Angle.—"Stay upon," i. e. wait but for.—"State," i. e. chair of state.—"As a thing made for," i. e. as one made to resemble.—Drag.
Men. This is good news.
I will go meet the ladies. This Volumnia
Is worth of consuls, senators, patricians,
A city full; of tribunes, such as you,
A sea and land-full. You have pray’d well to-day:
This morning for ten thousand of your throats
I’d not have given a doit. Hark, how they joy!
[Shouting and Music.
Sic. First, the gods bless you for the tidings; next,
Accept my thankfulness.
Mess. Sir, we have all
Great cause to give great thanks.
Sic. They are near the city.
Mess. Almost at point to enter.
Sic. We will meet them,
And help the joy.
[Going.
Enter the Ladies, accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and People.
They pass over the Stage.
1 Sen. Behold our patroons, the life of Rome!
Call all your tribes together, praise the gods,
And make triumphant fires; stare flowers before
Unshout the noise that banish’d Marcus;
Repeal him with the welcome of his mother:
Cry,—Welcome, ladies, welcome!
All. Welcome, ladies! Welcome!
[Exeunt Attendants.

SCENE V.—Antium. A Public Place.
Enter TELLUS AFFIDIUS, with Attendants.

Auy. Go tell the lords of the city, I am here.
Deliver them this paper: having read it,
Bid them repair to the market-place; where I,
Even in theirs’ and in the commons’ ears,
Will vouch the truth of it.
Him I accuse
The city ’ports by this hath enter’d, and Intends t’ appear before the people, hoping
To purge himself with words. Despatch.
[Exeunt Attendants.

2 Enter Conspirators of AFFIDIUS’ Faction.

Most welcome!
1 Con. How is it with our general?
Auy. Even so,
As with a man by his own alms empoison’d,
And with his charity slain.
2 Con. Most noble sir,
If you do hold the same intent, wherein
You wish’d us parties, we’ll deliver you
Of your great danger.
Auy. Sir, I cannot tell;
We must proceed, as we do find the people.
3 Con. The people will remain uncertain, whilst ’Twixt you there’s difference; but the full of either
Makes the survivor heer of all.
Auy. I know it;
And my pretext to strike at him admits
A good construction. I raise’d him, and I pawn’d
Mine honor for his truth: who being so hoithen’d,
He water’d his new plants with dews of flattery,
Seducing so my friends; and to this end
He bow’d his nature, never known before
But to be rough, unswayable, and fierce.
3 Con. Sir, his stoutness,
When he did stand for consul, which he lost
By lack of stooping.—
Auy. That I would have spoke of.
Being banish’d for’t, he came unto my heart;
Presented to my knife his throat: I took him;
Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way

Recall.—"Him," I. e. he whom.— Gates.

In all his own desires; nay, let him choose
Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,
My best and freshest men; serv’d his designments
In mine own person; holp to reap the fame
Which he did ear all his; and took some pride
To do myself this wrong: till, at the last,
I seem’d his follower, not partner; and
He waged me with his 4 countenance, as if I had been mercenary.

1 Con. So did he, my lord;
The army marvell’d at it; and, in the last,
When he had carried Rome, and that we look’d
For no less spoil, than glory.—

There was it;
For which my sinews shall be stretch’d upon him.
At a few drops of women’s rhem, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labor
Of our great action: therefore shall he die,
And I’ll renew me in his fall. But, hark!
[Drums and Trumpets sound, with great Shouts of the People.

1 Con. Your native town you enter’d like a post,
And had no welcomes home; but he returns,
Splitting the air with noise.

2 Con. And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear
With giving him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage,
Er, he express himself, or move the people
With what he would say, let him feel your sword,
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounced shall bury
His reasons with his body.
Auy. Say no more.

Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home.
Auy. I have not deserv’d it.
But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus’d
What I have written to you?
Lords. We have.
1 Lord. And grieve to hear it.
What faults he made before the last, I think,
Might have found easy fines; but there to end,
Where he was to begin, and give away
The benefit of our levies, answering us
With our own charge, making a treaty where
There was a yielding; this admits no excuse.
Auy. He approaches: you shall hear him.

Enter CORIOLANUS, with Drums and Colors: a crowd of Citizens with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return’d your soldier;
No more infected with my country’s love,
Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know,
That prosperously I have attempted, and
With bloody passage led your wars, even to
The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home,
Do more than counterpoise, a full third part,
The charges of the action. We have made peace,
With no less honor to the Antilates,
Than shame to the Romans; and we here deliver,
Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal of the senate, what We have compounded on.

Read it not, noble lords; but tell the traitor in the highest degree
He hath abus’d your powers.

4 "Waged me with his countenance," i. e., rewarded me with good looks.—"Tears."—“Answering us with our own charge,” i. e., rewarding us with our own expenses; making the cost of the war its recompense.
Cor. Traitor!—How now!—

Aue. Ay, traitor, Marcius.

Cor. Marcius!—

Aue. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius. Dost thou think I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stolen name. Coriolanus in Corioli?—

You lords and heads of the state, perfidiously He has betray'd your business, and given up For certain drops of *salt your city, Rome: I say your city, to his wife and mother, Breaking his oath and resolution, like A twist of rotten silk; never admitting Counsel o' the war, but at his nurse's tears He whin'd and rear'd away your victory, That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart Look'd wondering each at other.

Cor. Hear'st thou, Mars?—

Aue. Name not the god, thou boy of tears.

Cor. No more.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my heart Too great for what contains it. Boy! O slave!—

Pardon me, lords, 'tis the first time that ever I was forc'd to speak. Your judgments, my grave lords, Must give this cur the lie: and his own notion (Who wears my stripes impress'd upon him, that Must bear my beating to his grave) shall join To thrust the lie unto him.

1 Lord. Peace both, and hear me speak. Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volscians; men and lads, Stain all your edges on me.—Boy! False bound! If you have writ your annals true, 'tis there, That like an eagle in a dove-cote, I Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli: Alone I did it.—Boy!

Aue. Why, noble lords, Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune, Which was your shame, by this unholy braggart, 'Tere your own eyes and ears?

All Con. Let him die for't.

All People. Tear him to pieces; do it presently. He killed my son;—my daughter:—he killed my Cousin Marcus:—he killed my father.—

2 Lord. Peace, ho!—no outrage:—peace!

* Tears.—b "No more," i. e., no more than a 'boy of tears.'

The man is noble, and his fame folds in This orb o' the earth;* His last offences to us Shall have *judicious hearing.—Stand, Aufidius, And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O! that I had him, With six Aufidines, or more, his tribe, To use my lawful sword!

Aue. Insolent villain!

All Con. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him!

[Aufidius and the Conspirators draw, and kill Coriolanus, who falls: Aufidius stands on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold!

Aue. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord. O Tullus!—

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereat valor will weep.

[quiet.

3 Lord. Tread not upon him.—Masters all, be Put up your swords.

[rage, Aue. My lords, when you shall know (as in this Provek'd by him, you cannot) the great danger Which this man's life did owe you, you'll rejoice That he is thus cut off. Please it your honors To call me to your senate, I'll deliver Myself your loyal servant, or endure Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord. Bear from hence his body, And mourn for him. Let him be regarded, As the most noble corse that ever herald Did follow to his urn.

2 Lord. His own impatience Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame. Let's make the best of it.

Aue. My rage is gone, And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up:— Help, three o' the chiepest soldiers; I'll be one.— Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully; Trail your steel spikes.—Though in this city he Hath widow'd and unchild'd many a one, Which to this hour bewail the injury, Yet he shall have a noble memory.—

Assist. [Exeunt, bearing the Body of Coriolanus. A dead March, while they pass round the Stage.

* "Folds in this orb o' the earth," i. e., overspreads the world.—*Judicial.

SCENE II. TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Tun,
For many good and great deserts to Rome:
A nobler man, a braver warrior,
Lives not this day within the city walls.
He by the senate is invited home,
From weary wars against the barbarous Goths;
The noble Titus, and his good foes,
Hath yok'd a nation strong, train'd up in arms.
Ten years are spent since first he undertook
This cause of Rome, and chastis'd with arms
Our enemies' pride: five times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
In coffins from the field;
And now at last, listen with honor's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms.
Let us entreat,—by honor of his name,
Whom worthily you would have now succeed,
And in the Capitol and senate's right,
Whom you pretend to honor and adore,—
That you withdraw you, and let your strength:
Display your followers, and, as suitors should,
Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.
Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts.
Bas. Marcus Andronicus, so do I affly
In thy uprightness and integrity,
And so I love and honor thee and thine,
Thy nobler Titus, and his good foes,
And her, to whom my thoughts are hallowed all,
Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
That I will here dismiss my loving friends:
And to my fortunes, and the people's favor,
Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.
[Exeunt the Followers of Bassianus.
Sat. Friends, that have been this forward in my
I thank you all, and here dismiss you all: [right,
And to the love and favor of my country
Commit myself, my person, and my cause.
[Exeunt the Followers of Saturnius.
Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
As I am confident and kind to thee.—
Open the 2 hidden gates, and let me forward.
Bas. Tribunes, and me, a poor competitor.
[Sat. and Bas. go into the Capitol; and exeunt with Senators, Marcus, &c.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter a Captain, and others.

Capt. Romans, make way! The good Andronicus,
Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
Successful in the battles that he fights,
With honor, and with fortune, is return'd,
From where he circumscribed with his sword,
And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.
Sound Drums and Trumpets, &c. Enter Martius and Mutius: after them, two Men bearing a Coffin covered with black; then Lucius and Quintus.
After them, Titus Andronicus; and then Tamora, with Alarbus, Chiron, Demetrius, Aaron, and other Goths, prisoners; Soldiers and People, following. The Bearers set down the Coffin.

Tht. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds!
Lo! as the bark that hath discharge'd her fraught
Returns with precious lading to the bay,
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage,
Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To re-salute his country with his tears;

Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.
 Thou great defender of this Capitol,
Stand gracious to the rites that we intend!
Romans, of five-and-twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that king Priam had,
Behold the poor remains, alive, and dead!
These that survive, let Rome reward with love;
These that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors:
Here Goths have given me leave to sheath my sword.
Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?
Make way to let them by their dear parents.

[The Tomb is opened.
There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars!
O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons hast thou of mine in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more?
Lyd. Give us the valiant progeny of the Goths
That we may hew his limbs, and on a pile
Ad manes fratrum sacrifice his flesh,
Before this earthly prison of their bones;
That so their shadows be not unpeace'd,
Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.
Tit. I give you him; the noblest that survives.
The eldest son of this distressed queen.
Tam. Stay, Roman brethren!—Gracious conqueror,
Victorious Titus, true the tears I shed,
A mother's tears in passion for her son:
And, if thy sons were ever dear to thee,
O! think my son to be as dear to me.
Suffest not, that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs, and return their goods
Captive to thee, and to thy Roman yoke;
But must my sons be slaughter'd in the streets,
For valiant doings in their country's cause?
O! if to fight for king and common weal
Were pitiful in thine, it is in these.
Andronicus, stain not thy tomb with blood.
Wilt thou draw near the nature of the gods?
Draw near them, then, in being merciful:
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge,
Thrice-noble Titus, spare my first-born son.

Tit. Patient yourself, madam, and pardon me.
These are their brethren, whom you Goths beheld
Alive, and dead; and for their brethren slain,
Religiously you ask:
To this your son is mark'd; and die he must,
T' appease their groaning shadows that are dust.
Luc. Away with him! and make a fire straight;
And with our swords, upon a pile of wood,
Let's hew his limbs, till they be clean consum'd.

[Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, Martius, and Titus, with Alarbus.
Tam. O cruel, irreligious, most bloody!
Chi. Was ever Scythia half so barbarous?
Dem. Oppose not Scythia to ambitious Rome.
Alarbus goes to rest; and we survive
To tremble under Titus' threatening look.
Then, madam, stand resolv'd; but hope withal,
The self-same gods, that arm'd the queen of Troy
With opportunity not to the nature of the gods;
Upon the Thracian tyrant in his tent,
May favor Tamora, the queen of Goths,
(When Goths were Goths, and Tamora was queen)
To quench the bloody woes upon her foes.

---4 Jupiter, to whom the Capitol was sacred.—[It was supposed that the ghost of unburied patriots appeared to solicit the rites of funeral.]—Lament.—"In passion," L c., in grief.
Re-enters LUCIUS, QUINTUS, MARTIUS, and MUTIUS, with their Swords bloody.

Luc. See, lord and father, how we have perform'd Our Roman rites. Albiruns' limbs are lopp'd, and entwists feed the sacrifing fire, Whose smoke, like incense, doth perfume the sky. Remaineth nought, but to inter our brethren, And with bold harums welcome them to Rome. Tit. Let it be so; and let Andronicus Make this his latest farewell to their souls. [Trumpets sounded, and the Cuffins laid in the Tomb.

In peace and honor rest you here, my sons; [Kneeling. Rome's readiest champions, repose you here in rest, Secure from worldly chances and misshaps! Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells, Here grow no daunted grudges; here no storms, No noise, but silence and eternal sleep. In peace and honor rest you here, my sons! [Rising.

Enter LAVINIA.

Lav. In peace and honor live lord Titus long; My noble lord and father, live in fame. Lo! at this tomb my tributary tears I render, for my brethren's obsequies; And at thy feet I kneel, with tears of joy Shed on the earth for thy return to Rome: O! bless me here with thy victorious hand, Whose fortunes Rome's best citizens applaud. Tit. Kind Rome, that hast thus lovingly reserv'd The cordial of mine age to glad my heart!— Lavinia, live; outline thy father's days, And fame's eternal date, for virtue's praise!

Enter Marcus Andronicus, Saturninus, Bassianus, and others.

Mar. Long live lord Titus, my beloved brother, Gracious triumphant in the eyes of Rome! Tit. Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus. Mar. And welcome, nephews, from successful wars, You that survive, and you that sleep in fame. Fair lords, your fortunes are alike in all, That in your country's service drew your swords; But safer triumph is this funeral pomp, That hath aspire'd to Solon's *happiness, And triumph's over chance in honor's bed.—— Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome, Whose friend thou hast ever been, Send thee by me, their tribune and their trust, This *palliation of white and spotless hue; And name thee in election for the empire, With these our late-deceased emperor's sons. Be candidatus then, and put it on, And help to set a head on headless Rome. Tit. A better head her glorious body fits, Than his that shakes for age and feebleness: What! should I do this robe, and trouble you? Be chose with acclamations to-day; To-morrow, yield up rule, resign my life, And set *abroach new business for you all?—— Rome, I have been thy soldier forty years, And led my country's strength successfully, And bred one-and-twenty valiant sons, Knighted in field, slain manfully in arms, In right and service of their noble country. Give me a staff of honor for mine age, But not a sceptre to control the world: Upright he held it, lords, that held it last. Mar. Titus, thou shalt 6obtain 6 the empery.

Sat. Proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?—— Tit. Patience, prince Saturninus. Sat. Romans, do me right.—— Patricians, draw your swords, and sheath them not Till Saturninus be Rome's emperor.—— Andronicus, would thou were slip'd to hell, Rather than rob me of the people's hearts. Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good That noble-minded Titus means to thee! Tit. Content thee, prince: I will restore to thee The people's hearts, and wean them from themselves. Mar. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee, But honor thee, and will do till I die: My faction if thou strengthen with thy friends, I will most thankful be; and thanks, to men Of noble minds, is honorable meed. Tit. People of Rome, and people's tribunes, here I ask your voices, and your suffrages: Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus? Trib. To gratify the good Andronicus, And gratulate his safe return to Rome, The people will accept whom he admits. Tit. Tribunes, I thank you; and this suit I make, That you create your emperor's eldest son, Lord Saturnine, whose virtues will, I hope, Reflect on Rome, as *Titus' rays on earth, And just in time will this commercial suit: Then, if you will elect by my advice, Crown him, and say,—"Long live our emperor!" Mar. With voices and applause of every sort, Patricians, and plebeians, we create Lord Saturninus, Rome's great emperor, And say,—"Long live our emperor Saturnine!" [A long Flourish. 7 Shouts.

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favors done To us in our election this day, I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts, And will with deeds requite thy gentleness: And, for an onset, Titus, to advance Thy name and honorable family, Lavinia will I make my empress, Rome's royal mistresse, mistress of my heart, And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse. Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee? Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and in this match I hold me highly honor'd of your grace: And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine, King and commander of our common-weal, The noble word of justice, do I consecrate My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners; Presently worth worthy Rome's imperial lord: Receive them, then, the tribute that I owe, Mine honor's ensigns humbled at thy feet. Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life! How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts, Rome shall record; and, when I do forget The least of these unspeakable deserts, Romans, forget your fealty to me. Tit. Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor? [To TAMORA.

To him, that for your honor and your state, Will use you nobly, and your followers. Sat. A goodly lady, trust me; of the hue [Aside. That I am the choice, were I to choose anew. [To her.] Cheer up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance: [cheer, Though chance of war hath wrought this change of Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome: Princely shall be thy usage every way. Rest on my word, and let not discontent Dunt all your hopes: madam, he comforts you,
SCENE II.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

Can you make greater than the queen of Gods.—

Luc. Not I, my lord; *sith true nobility

Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lucius—Romulus, let us go,

Runnless here we set our prisoners free:

Proclaim our honors, lords, with trump and drum.

Bas. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine.

[Seizing Lavinia.]

Tit. How, sir! Are you in earnest, then, my lord?

Bas. Ay, noble Titus; and recol'sh'd, will,

To do myself this reason and this right.

[The Emperor courts Tamora in dumb show.

Mar. Summ cuique is our Roman justice:

This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will, and shall, if Lucius live.

Tit. Traitors, avaut! Where is the emperor's

Treason, my lord! Lavinia is surpris'd. [guard.]

Sat. Surpris'd! By whom?

Bas. By him that justly may

Bear his betroth'd from all the world away.

[Exeunt Marcus and Bassianus, with Lavinia.

Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,

And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Exeunt Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.

Mut. My lord, you pass not here alone.

Tit. What, villain boy!

Barr'st me my way in Rome? [Titus kills Mutius.

Mut. Help, Lucius, help!

Re-enter Lucius.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust; and more than so,

Is wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, nor any sons of mine:

My sons would never so dishonor me.

Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Do as you will; but not to be his wife,

That is another's lawful promis'd love. [Exit.

Sat. No, Titus, no; the emperor needs her not,

Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock:

I'll trust by leisure that mocks me once;

Thee never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,

Confederates all thus to dishonor me.

Mat. Do you not see, my lord, in Rome to make a steals,

But Saturnine! Full well, Andronicus,

Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,

That said'st, I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachful words are these?

Sat. But go thy ways; go, give that changing piece
To him that flourish'd for her with his sword.

A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;

One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,

To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of Goth:

That, like the stately Phœbe 'mongst her nymphs,

Dost overshine the gallant dams of Rome,

If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,

Behold, I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,

And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Goth, dost thou applaud my choice?

And here I swear by all the Roman gods,—

2 Sith priest and holy water are so near,

And tapers burn so bright, and every thing

In readiness for Hymenæus stately,

I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,

Or climb my palace, till from forth this place

I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I swear,

If Saturnine advance the queen of Goth;

She will a handmaid be to his desires,

A loving nurse, a mother to his youth. + [company

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheum.—Lords, ac-

Your noble emperor, and his lovely bride,

Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnine,

Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquered:

There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

[Exeunt Saturninus and his Followers; Tamora,

And her Sons; Aarons and Gothas.

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride.

Titus, when art thou wont to walk alone,

Dishonor'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Mar. O, Titus, see, O, see what thou hast done! in

A bad quarter slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no; no son of mine,

Nor thou, nor these, confederates in the deed

That hath dishonor'd all our family:

Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Lnc. But let us give him burial, as becomes:

Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb.

This monument five hundred years hath stood,

Which I have sumptuously re-edified:

Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servitors,

Repose in fame; none basely slain in brawl.

Bury him where you can, he come not here.

Mar. My lord, this is impious of him.

My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for him.

He must be buried with his brethren.

Quin. Mar. And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. And shall! What villain was it spoke that word?

Quin. He that would vouesch it in any place but here.

Tit. What! would you bury him in my despite?

Mar. No, noble Titus; but entreat of thee.

To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, even thou hast struck upon my crest,

And, with these boys, mine honor thou hast wounded:

My foes I do repute you every one;

So, trouble me no more, but get you gone.

Mar. He is not himself; let us withdraw awhile.

Want Not, till Mutius' hope be buried.

[Marcus and the Sons of Titus kneel.

Mar. Brother, for in that name doth nature plead.

Quin. Father, and in that name doth nature speak.

Tit. Speak thou no more, if all the rest will speed.

Mar. Renowned Titus, more than half my soul,—

Lnc. Dear father, soul and substance of us all,—

Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to inter

His noble nephew here in virtue's nest,

That died in honor and Lavinia's cause.

Thou art a Roman, be not barbarous:

The Greeks upon advice did bury Ajax,

That slew himself, and wise Laertes' son

Did graciously plead for his funerals.

Let not young Mutius, then, that was thy joy,

Be barr'd his entrance here.

Tit. Rise, Marcus, rise.—

The dismalst day is this, that e'er I saw,

To be dishonor'd by my sons in Rome!—

Well, bury him, and bury me the next.

[Mutius is put into the Tomb.

Luc. There lies thy bones, sweeping dust, with thy

Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb! [friends,

All. No man shed tears for noble Mutius;

He lives in fame that died in virtue's cause.

Mar. My lords,—to step out of these dreary

—How comes it that the subtle queen of Goth

*Since.—+Stalking-horse.—"To ruffle," l. e., to play the bully.—Since.
That dies in tempest of thy angry frown.

Sat. Rise, Titus; rise: my empress hath prevail’d.
Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord.
These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.
Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily,
And must advise the emperor for his good.
This day all quarrels die, Andronicus;
And let it be mine honor, good my lord,
That I have reconcile’d your friends and you.
For you, prince Bassianus, I have pass’d
My word and promise to the emperor,
That you will be more mild and tractable.
And fear not, lords,—and you, Lavinia.—
By my advice, all humbled on your knees,
You shall ask pardon of his majesty.
Luc. We do; and vow to heaven, and to his highness,
That what we did was mildly, as we might,
[3 They kneel.
Tendering our sister’s honor, and our own.
Mar. That on mine honor here I do protest.
Sat. Away, and talk not: trouble us no more.
Tam. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be friends.
The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace:
I will not be denied.
Sweet heart, look back.
Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother’s here,
And at my lovely Tamora’s entreats,
I do remit these young men’s heinous faults.
Lavinia, though you left me like a chair,
I found a friend; and sure as death I swore,
I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
Come; if the emperor’s court can feast two brides,
You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends.—
This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.
Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty,
To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
With horn and bound we’ll give your grace bonjour.
Sat. Be it so, Titus, and gramiency too.
[3 Trumpets. Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter Aaron.

Aar. Now cimbeth Tamora Olympia’s top,
Safe out of fortune’s shot; and sits aloft,
Secure of thunder’s crack, or lightning flash,
Advanced above pale envy’s threatening reach.
As when the golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gift the ocean with his beams,
Galleps the zodiac in his glistering couch,
And overlooks the highest-piercing hills;
So Tamora.—
Upon her [will doth earthly honor wait,
And virtue stoops and trembles at her frown.
Then, Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy imperial mistress;
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fetter’d in amorous chains,
And faster bound to Aaron’s charming eyes,
Than [was Prometheus tied to Caucasus.
Away with slavish weeds, and servile thoughts!
I will be bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
To wait upon this new-made empress.
To wait, said I? to wanton with this queen,
This goddess, this Semiramis, this nymph,
This syren, that will charm Rome’s Saturnine,

Enter Titus Andronicus, with Hunters, &c. Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.

Tit. The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gay, The fields are fragrant, and the woods are wide. Uncease here, and let us make a boy, And wake the emperor and his lovely bride, And praise the prince, and sing a hunter's round, That all the court may echo with the sound. Sons, let it be your charge, and so will I, To attend the emperor's person carefully: I have been troubled in my sleep this night.

And see his shipwreck, and his commonwealth's. Holla! what storm is this?

Enter Demetrius and Chiron, braving.

Dem. Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge And manners, to intrude where I am grace'd, And may, for ought thou know'st, affect be. 'Tis not the difference of a year, or two, Makes me less gracious, thee more fortunate: I am as able, and as fit, as thou, To serve, and to deserve my mistress' grace; And that my sword upon thee will approve, And plead my passions for Lavinia's love. [peace.

Aar. 2 Clubs! clubs! these lovers will not keep the Dem. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvis'd, Gave you a dancing rapier by your side, Are you so desperate grown, to threaten your friends? Go to; have your blade glided within your sheath, Till you know better how to handle it.

Chi. Mean while, sir, with the little skill I have, Full well shalt thou perceive how much I dare. Dem. Ay, boy; grow ye so brave? [They draw. \[Aar. Why, how, now lords! So near the emperor's palace dare you draw, And maintain such a quarrel openly! Full well I was not the ground of all this grudge: I would not for a million of gold, The cause were known to them it most concerns; Nor would your noble mother for much more Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome. For shame! put up.

Dem. Not I; till I have sheath'd My rapier in his bosom, and, withal, Threaten those reproachful speeches down his throat, That he hath breath'd in my dishonour here.

Chi. For that I am prepar'd and full resolv'd, Fool-spoken coward, that thunder'st with thy tongue, And with thy weapon nothing dar'st perform.

Aar. Away, I say! Now by the gods that warlike Gods adore, Full worthy babble will undo us all.

Chi. Why, lords,—and think you not how dangerous It is to set upon a prince's right? What! is Lavinia then become so loose, Or Bassianus so degenerate, That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd, Without contumely, justice, or revenge? Young lords, beware!—on should the empress know That this ground's ground, the music would not please.

Chi. I care not, J know she and all the world: I love Lavinia more than all the world. [choice: Dem. Youngling, learn thou to make some manner Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aar. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not, in Rome How furious and impatient they be, And cannot brook competitors in love? I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths By this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths Would I propose, to achieve her whom I love. Aar. To achieve her!—How?

Dem. Why mak'st thou it so strange?

She is a woman, thou may'st be wold; She is a woman, therefore may'st be won; She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd. What, man! more water gildeth by the mill Than wots the miller of; and easy 'tis

Of a cut leaf to steal a shive, we know: Though Bassianus be thy emperor's brother, Better than he have worn Vulcan's badge.

Aar. Ay, and as good as Saturnius may. [Aside. Dem. Then, why should he be despair, that knows To With, words, fair looks, and liberality? [court it What! hast thou not full often struck a doe, And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose!

Aar. Why then, it seems, some certain snatch or so Would serve your turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were serv'd. Dem. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Aar. Would you had hit it too; Then should not we be tir'd with this ado. Why, hurk ye, hurk ye,—and are you such fools, To square for this? Would it offend you, then, That both should speed? Faith, not me.

Dem. Nor me, so I were one. [jar. Aar. For shame! be friends, and join for that you 'Tis policy and stratagem must do That you affect; and so must you resolve, That what you cannot as you would achieve, You must, perfuce, accomplish as you may. Take this of me: Lucrece was not more claste Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love. A speedier course than lingering languishment Must we pursue, and I have found the path. My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand; There will the lovely Roman ladies troop: The forest walks are wide and spacious, And many unrequited plotts there are, Fitted by 1 kind for rape and villainy. Single ye thither, then, this dainty doe, And strike her home by force, if not by words: This way, or not at all, stand you in hope. Come, come; our empress, with her 2 sacred wit, To villainy and vengeance conspire, Will we acquaint with all that we intend; And she shall file our engines with advice, That will not suffer you to square yourselves, But to your wishes' height advance you both. The emperor's court is like the house of fame, The palace full of tongues, of eyes, 3 and ears: The woods are ruthless, 4 dreadless, deaf, and dull; There speak, and strike, brave boys, and take your turns: There serve your lust, shadow'd from heaven's eye, And revel in Lavinia's treasury.

Chi. Thy counsel, lad, smells of no cowardice. Dem. Sit fax aut nefas, till I find the stream To cool this heat, a charm to calm these fits. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — Titus Andronicus, with Hunters, &c. Marcus, Lucius, Quintus, and Martius.
But dawning day brought comfort and delight.
[Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Bassianus, Lavinia, Demetrius, Chiron, and Attendants.]

Tit. Many good morrows to your majesty:—
Madam, to you as many and as good.—
I could make such feasts a hunter's real.
Sat. And you have rung it lustily, my lords,
Somewhat too early for new-married ladies.
Bos. Lavinia, how say you?

Lav. I say, no;
I have been broad awake two hours and more.
Sat. Come on, then: horse and chariots let us have,
And to our sport.—Madam, now shall we see
Our Roman hunting.
Mar. I have dogs, my lord,
Will rouse the proudest panther in the chase,
And climb the highest promontory's top.
Tit. And I have horse will follow where the game
Makes way, and run like swallows o'er the plain.
Dem. Chiron, we hunt not, we, with horse nor hound;
But hope to pluck a dainty doe to ground. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A desert Part of the Forest.

[Enter Aaron, with a Bag of Gold.

Aen. He, that had wit, would think that I had none,
To bury so much gold under a tree,
And never after to inherit it.
Let him that thinks of me so abjectly,
Know that this gold must coin a stragam,
Which, cunningly effect'd, will beget
A very excellent piece of villany:
And so repose, sweet gold, for their unrest.
That have their limbs out of the empress' chest.

Enter Tamora.

Tam. My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?
The birds chaunt melody on every bush;
The make lies coiled in the cheerful sun;
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground.
Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,
And, whilst the babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shirilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,
Let us sit down, and mark their yelling noise:
And—after conflict, such as was suppos'd
The wandering prince and Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave,—
We may, each wieldeth in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber;
While hounds, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,
Be unto us, as is a nurse's song
Of lullaby to bring her babe asleep.

Aen. Madam, though Venus govern your desires,
Saturn is dominator over mine.
What signifies my deadly-standing eye,
My silence, and my cloudy melancholy?
My fleece of woolly hair that now uncurls,
Even as an adder, when she doth unroll
To do some fatal execution?
No, madam, these are no venerable signs:
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head.
Hark, Tamora, the empress of my soul,
Which never hopes more heaven than rests in thee,
This is the day of doom for Bassianus;
His Philomel must lose her tongue to-day:
Thy sons make pilgrimage of her chastity,
And wash their limbs in Bassianus' blood.
Seek thou this letter? take it up, I pray thee,
And give the king this fatal plotted scroll.—
Now question me no more; we are espied:
Here comes a parcel of our hopeful booty,
Which dreads not yet their lives' destruction.
Tam. Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life!
Aen. No more, great empress. Bassianus comes:
Be cross with him; and I'll go fetch thy sons
To back thy quarrels, whatsoever they be. [Exit.

Enter Bassianus and Lavinia.

Bass. What habitation have we here? Rome's royal em-
Unfurnish'd of her well-becoming troop? [press,
Or is it Dian, habit'd like her;
Who hath abandoned her holy groves,
To see the general hunting in this forest?
Tam. Saucy controller of my private steps!
Had I the pow'r, that, some say, Dian had,
Thy temples should be plac'd presently
With hounds, as was Actæon's; and the hounds
Should dine upon thy new-transformed limbs,
Unmannerly intruder as thou art!

Lav. Under your patience, gentle empress,
'Tis thought you have a goodly gift in morning;
And to be doubted, that your Moor and you
Are singled forth to try experiments.
Jove shield your husband from his hounds to-day;
'Tis pity, they should take him for a stag.
Bass. Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian
Doth make your honor of his body's hue,
Spotted, detested, and abominable.
Why are you sequester'd from all your train,
Dismounted from your snow-white noble steed,
And wander'd lithier to an obscure plot,
Accompanied but with a barbarous Moor,
If foul desire had not conducted you?
Lav. And being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my noble lord be rated
For sauciness—I pray you, let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colored love;
This valley fits the purpose passing well.
Bass. The king, my brother, shall have note of this.
Lav. Ay, let your sibyls have made him noted long,
Good king! to be so sightly abus'd.
Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this?

[Enter Demetrius and Chiron.

Dem. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother!
Why doth your highness look so pale and wan?
Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale?
These two have 'tide me hither to this place,
A barren detested vale, you see, it is:
The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ermight with moss, and baleful misletoe.
Here never shines the sun; here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven,
And, when they show'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many *urchins,
Would give such fearful and confus'd cries,
As any mortal barely hearing it.
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told me this hellish tale,
But straight they told me, they would bind me here
Unto the body of a dismal yew,
And leave me to this miserable death:

* Possess. — Disquiet.
SCENE IV.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

And then they call'd me, foul adulteress, Lascivious Goth, and all the fourest terms That ever ear did hear to such effect; And though I was not by wonder fortunes come, This vengeance on me had they executed. Revenge it, as you love your mother's life, Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children. Dem. This is a witness that I am thy son. [Stabs Bassianus.] Chi. And this for me, struck home to show my strength. [Stabbing him likewise.] Lav. Ay, come, Semiramus!—ny, barbarous Ta! For no name fits thy nature but thy own. [mors] Tam. Give me thy paniard: thou shalt know, my boys, Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong. Dem. Stay, madam; here is more belongs to her: First, fhew the corn, then after burn the straw. This minion stood upon her chastity, Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty, And with that painted shape she braves your might: And shall she carry this unto her grave? Chi. An if she do, I would I were an eunuch. Dmg her husband to some secret hole, And make his dead trunk pillow to your love. Tam. Then let me have ye have the honey ye desire, Let not this wasp outlive us both to sting. [sure.] Chi. I warrant you, madam, we will make that Come, mistress, now we perforce we will enjoy That nice preserved honesty of yours. Lav. O Tamorn! thou hearest a woman's face,— Tam. I will not hear her speak: away with her! Yet let us not beg, as thou hast been but a word. Dem. Listen, fair madam: let it be your glory To see her tears; but be your heart to them, As unc relenting flint to drops of rain. [dam] Lav. When did the tiger's young ones teach the O! do not learn her wrath; she taught it thee. The milk, thou suck'dst from her, did turn to marble; Even thence thou hast a thyn bony arm. Yet every mother breeds not sons alike! Do thou entreat her show a woman pity. [To Chiron.] Chi. What! wouldst thou have me prove myself a bastard? Lav. Tis true; the raven doth not hatch a lark: Yet have I heard, O, could I find no help! The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure To have his princely 3 claws par'd all away. Some say that ravens foster forlorn children, The whilst their own birds famish in their nests: O! be to me, though thy hard heart say no, Nothing so kind, but something pitiful. Tam. I know not what it means. Away with her! Lav. O! let me teach thee: for, my father's sake, That gave thee life, when well he might have slain Be not obdurate. Open thy deaf ears. [thee, Tam. Hadst thou in person n'er offended me, Even for his sake am I pitiless.— Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain, To save your brother from the sacrifice; But fate had done him and yourself the like: Therefore, away, and use her as you will: The worse to her, the better lov'd of me. Lav. O Tamorn! be call'd a gentle queen, [Kneeling. And with thine own hands kill me in this place; For 'tis not life that I have begg'd so long. Poor I was slave when Bassianus did, And I am going. Tam. What begg'st thou, madam, let Lav. 'Tis present death I beg; and one thing more, That womanhood denies my tongue to tell. O! keep me from their worse than killing lust, And tumble me into some loathsome pit, Where never man's eye may behold my body: Do this, and be a charitable murderer. Tam. So should I rob my sweet sons of their fee: No; let them satisfy their lust on thee. Dem. Away! for thou hast stay'd us here too long. Lav. No grace? no womanhood? Ah, beastly creature, [Rising. The blot and enemy to our general name! Confession falls.— Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth.—Bring thou thy husband: [Dragging off LAVinia. This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him. [Exeunt. Tam. Farewell, my sons: see, that you make her Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed, [sure, Till all the Andronic be made away. Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor, And let my spleenful sons this as trull deflor. [Exit. SCENE IV.—The Same. Enter AARON, with QUINTUS AND MARTIUS. Aar. Come on, my lords, the better foot before! Straight will I bid you to the 3 loneliness, pit, Where I esp'y'd the panther fast asleep. Quin. My sight is very dull, what'er it bodes. Mart. And mine, I promise you: we't not for shame, Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile. [Martius falls into the Pit. Quin. What! art thou fallen? What subtile hole is this, Whose mouth is cover'd with rude-growing briers, Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood, As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers? A very fatal place it seems to me,— Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall? Mart. 4 Under the stage.] O, brother! with the dismalst object hurt, That ever eye with sight made heart lament. Aar. [Aside.] Now will I fetch the king to find them here; That he thereby may give a likely guess, How these were they that made away his brother. [Exit Aaron. Mart. Why dost not comfort me, and help me out From this unhollow'd and blood-stained pit? Quin. I am surprised with an uncouth fear; A chilling sweat o'er-runs my trembling joints: My heart suspects more than mine eye can see. Mart. To prove thou hast a true-divining heart, Aaron and thou look down into this den, And see a fearful sight of blood and death. Quin. Aaron is gone; and my compassionate heart Will not permit mine eyes once to behold The thing whereat it trembles by surprise. O! tell me how it is; for n'er till now Was I a child, to fear I know not what. Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embrewed here, All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb, In this detest'd, dark, blood-drinking pit. Quin. If it be dark, how dost thou know 'tis he? Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear A precious ring, that lightens all the hole, Which, like a taper in some monument, Both shine upon the dead man's earthly cheeks, And shows the ragged entrails of the pit: So pale did shine the moon on that man, When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood. O brother! help me with thy fainting hand,— [Strumpet.
If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—
Out of this fell devouring receptacle,
As hateful as Coctus' nasty mouth.

Quin. Reach me thy hand, that I may help thee out;
Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,
I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.
I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy help.
Quin. Thy hand once more: I will not lose again,
Till thou art here aloft, or I below,—
Thou canst not come to me; I come to thee.

[Exeunt.

Enter SATURNINUS and AARON.

Sat. Along with me:—I'll see what help is here,
And what he is that now is leap'd into it.
Say, who art thou, that lately didst descend
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?
Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus,
Brought hither in a most unlucky hour,
To find thy brother Bassianus dead.
Sat. My brother dead! I know, thou dost but jest:
Heard his lady been abroad?
Upon the north side of this pleasant chance;
'Tis not an hour since I left him there.
Mart. We know not where you left him all alive,
But, out alas! here have we found him dead.

Enter TAMORA, with Attendants; Titus Andronicus, and LUCIUS.

Tam. Where is my lord, the king? [grief.
Sat. Here, Tamora; though griev'd with killing
Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?
Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound:
Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.
Tam. Then, all too late I bring this fatal writ, [Giving a Letter.

The complot of this 3 timeless tragedy;
And wonder greatly, that man's face can fold
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

Sat. [Reads.] An if we miss to meet him hand-sonely—
Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 'tis, we mean,
Do thou so much as dig the grave for him.
Thou know'st our meaning: look for thy reward
Among the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overshares the mouth of that same pit,
Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.
Do this, and purchase us thy lastling friends."
O, Tamora! was ever heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the elder-tree.
Look, sirs, if you can find the huntsman out,
That should have murder'd Bassianus here.

Aur. My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.

[Showing it.

Sat. Two of thy whelps, [To Titus.] fell curs of bloody kind,
Have here bereft my brother of his life,—
Sirs, drag them from the pit unto the prison:
There let them bide, until we have devis'd
Some never-heard-of torturing pain for them.

Tam. What? are they in this pit? O wondrous
How easily murder is discovered. [thing!

Tit. High emperor, upon my fearless knee
I beg this boon with tears not lightly shed;
Thee didst fell fault of my ancestral house,
Accursed, if the fault be prov'd in them,
Sat. If it be prov'd: you see, it is apparent.
Who found this letter? Tamora, was it you?
Tam. Andronicus himself did take it up.
Tit. I did, my lord: yet let me be their ball;

* Untimely.

For by my father's revered tomb I vow,
They shall be ready at your highness' will,
To answer this suspicion with their lives.

Sat. Thou shalt not boli them: see, thou follow me.
Some bring the murderer's body, some the murderers.
Let them not speak a word, till thou command.
For, by my soul, were there worse end than death,
That end upon them should be executed.

Tam. Andronicus, I will entreat the king:
Fear not thy sons, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE V.—The Same.

Enter DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, with LAVINIA, ravished; her Hands cut off, and her Tongue cut out.

Dem. So, now go tell an if thy tongue can speak,
Who 'twas cut out thy tongue, and ravish'd thee.
Chi. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so;
And, if thy stumps will let thee, play the scribe.
Dem. See, how with signs and tokens she can scrawl.

Hands.

Chi. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy
Dem. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash;
And so let's leave her to her silent walks.
Chi. An 'twere my case, I should go hang myself.
Dem. If thou hadst hands to help thee knit the cord.

[Exeunt DEMETRIUS and CHIRON.

Wind Horns. Enter MARCUS, from hunting.

Mar. Who's this,—my niece, that flies away so fast?
Cousin, a word: where is your husband?—
If I do dream, 'would all my wealth would wake me!
If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
That I may slumber in eternal sleep!—
Speak, gentle niece, what stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd, and heap'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches; those sweet ornaments,
Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in,
And might not gain so great a happiness,
As have thy love? Why dost not speak to me —
Alas! a crimson river of warm blood
Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
Doth rise and fall between thy prostrate lips,
Coming and going with thy honey breath.
But, sure, some Tereus hath deflored thee,
And, lest thou should'st detect him out thy tongue,
Ah! how thou turn'st away thy face for shame;
And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood,—
As from a conduit with three issuing spouts,—
Yet do thy cheeks look red, as Titun's face
Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.
Shall I speak for thee? shall I say, 'tis so!
O! that I know thy heart; and knew the beast,
That might rail at him to ease my mind.
Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.
Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind;
But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee:
A crazier Tereus, cousin, thrust thou met,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
That could have better serv'd than them,

* Would all my wealth," i.e., would that the giving of all my wealth.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Senators, Tribunes, and Officers of justice, with Martius and Quintus, bound, passing on to the Place of Execution; Titus going before, pleading.

Tit. Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay!

For pity of mine age, whose youth was spent
In dangerous wars, whilst you so securely slept;

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed;

And for the fiery nights that I have watch'd;

And for these bitter tears, which now you see
Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheeks;

Be pitiful to my condemned sons,

Whose souls are not corrupted as 'tis thought
For two and twenty sons I never wept,

But which did die in honour's lofty bed;

For these, these, tribunes, in the dust I write [Throwing himself on the ground.

My heart's deep anguish in my soul's sad tears.
Let my tears stand the earth's dry appetite;

My sons' sweet blood will make it shave and blush.

[Exeunt Senators, Tribunes, &c., with the Prisoners.

O earth! I will befriended thee 2 with more rain,
That shall distil from these two ancient urns,
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:
In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still;
In winter with warm tears I'll melt the snow,
And keep eternal spring-time on thy face,
So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Luc. Enter Lucius, with his Sword drawn.

O, reverence tribunes! gentle, aged men!
Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death;
And let me say, that never wept before,
My tears were now prevailing on thy ears.

Luc. O, noble father! thou hast in vain:
The tribunes hear you not, no man is by,
And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius! for thy brothers let me plead.—
Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you.

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 'tis no matter, man: if they did hear,
They would not mark me; 3 or if they did mark,
They would not pity me, 4 yet plead I must,
And hoodwink unto them.

Therefore, I tell my sorrows to the stones;
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they are better than the tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale. 4

[Rising. When I do weep, they humbly at my feet
Receive my tears, and seem to weep with me;
And were they but attired in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like these.

A stone is soft as wax, tribunes more hard than death;
A stone is silent, and off-endeth not,
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death.

Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death;

For which attempt the judges have pronounc'd
My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. O happy man! they have befriended thee.

Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive,
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers?
Tigers must prey; and Rome affords no prey,
But me and mine: how happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banished!

But who comes with our brother Marcus here?

Enter Marcus and Livinia.

Mar. Thus, prepare thy aged eyes to weep;
Or, if so be thy noble heart to break.

I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Tit. Will it consume me? let me see it, then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ah me! this object kills me.

Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise, and look upon her.—

Speak, my Livinia, what occurred between
Hath made thee humbly bend the father's sight?

What foul hath added water to the sea,
Or brought a faggot to bright-burning Troy?

My grief was at the height before thou camest,
And now, like 6 Nillus, it disdaineth bounds.—

Give me a sword, I'll chop off my hands too,
For they have sought for Rome, and all in vain,
And they have nurs'd this woeful singing her;

In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use:
Now, all the service I require of them

Is, that the one will help to cut the other.—

'Tis well, Livinia, that thou hast no hands,
For hand's to do Rome service are but vain.

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hast betray'd thee?

Mar. O! that delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage,
Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung
6 Rich varied notes, enchanting 'old and young.

Luc. O! say thou for her, who hath done this deed?

Mar. O! thus I found her straying in the park,
Seeking to die herself, as doth the deer
That hath receiv'd some 6 unerring wound.

Tit. It was my deer; and he that wounded her
Hath hurt me more, than had he kill'd me dead:

For now I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea;

Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave,
Expecting ever when some unerring surge
Will in his briny bowels swallow him.

This way to death my wretched sons are gone,
Here stands my other son, a banish'd man,
And here my brother, weeping at my woes;

But that which gives my soul the greatest spurn,
Is dear Livinia, dearer than my soul.—

Had I but seen thy picture in this plight,
It would have mad'd me; what shall I do
Now I behold thy 6 living body so?
Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy tears,

Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:

Thy husband he is dead; and for his death,
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this.

Look, Marcus; at that tall Lucius, look on her.
When I did name her brothers, then fresh tears
Stood on her cheeks, as doth the honey dew
Upon a gather'd lil'y almost wither'd. 6 [husband;]

Mar. Perchance, she weeps because they kill'd her
Perchance, because she knows them innocent.

Tit. If they did kill thy husband, then be joyful,

Because the law hath his revenge on them.—

No, no, they would not do so foul a deed;

*The Thracian poet is Orphus.

7 The river Nile.—Irremediable.
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.—

Gentle Lavinia, let me kiss thy lips,
Or make some sign how I may do thee ease.
Shall thy good uncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou, and I, sit round about some fountain,
Looking and downwards, to behold our cheeks
How they are stain'd, as meadows yet not dry,
With miry slime left on them by a flood?
And in the fountain shall we gaze so long,
Till the fresh taste be taken from that clearness,
And made a brine-pit with our bitter tears?
Or shall we cut away our hands, like thine?
Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumb shows
Pass the remainder of our hateful days?
What shall we do? let us, that have our tongues,
Plot some device of farther misery,
To make us wonder'd at in time to come. [grief,

Luc. Sweet father, cease your tears: for at your see, how my wretched sister soba and weeps.

Mar. Patience, dear niece.—Good Titus, dry thy eyes.

Tit. Ah, Marcus, Marcus! brother, well I am at, thy napkin cannot drink a tear of mine,
For thou, poor man, hast drown'd it with thine own.

Luc. Ah, my Lavinia! I will wipe thy cheeks.

Tit. Mark, Marcus, mark! I understand her signs.
Had she a tongue to speak; now would she say
That to her brother which I said to thee:
His napkin, with his true tears all bewet,
Can do no service on her sorrowful cheeks.
O! what a sympathy of woe is this;
As far from help as limb is from bliss.

Enter Aaron.

Aar. Titus Andronicus, my lord the emperor
Sends thee this word,—that, if thou love thy sons,
Let Marcus, Lucius, or thyself, old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the king: he for the same,
Will send thee thither both thy sons alive,
And that shall be the ransom for their fault.

Tit. O, gracious emperor! O, gentle Aaron!
Did ever raven sing so like a lark
That gives sweet tidings of the sun's uprise?
With all my heart, I'll send my hand to him.
Good Aaron, wilt thou help to chop it off?

Luc. Stay, father! for that noble hand of thine,
That hath thrown down so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will take the turn.
My youth can better spare my blood than you,
And therefore mine shall save my brothers' lives.

Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended
And rear'd aloft the bloody battle-axe, [Rome,
Writing destruction on the enemy's castle?
O! none of both but are of high desert.
My hand hath been but idle; let it serve
To ransom my two nephews from their death,
Then, have I kept it to a worthy end.

Aar. Nay, come agree, whose hand shall go along,
For fear they die before their pardon come.

Mar. My hand shall go.

Luc. By heaven, it shall not go.

Tit. Sirs, strive no more: such wither'd herbs as Looking downwards, to behold these
Are meet for plucking up, and therefore mine.

Luc. Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son,
Let me redeem my brothers both from death.

Mar. And, for our father's sake, and mother's care,
Now let me show a brother's love to thee.

Tit. Agree between you; I will spare my hand.

Luc. Then I'll go fetch an axe.

Mar. But I will use it.

[Exeunt Lucius and Marcus.

Tit. Come hither, Aaron: I'll deceive them both:
Lend me thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

Aar. If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest,
And never, whilst I live, deceive men so:—

[Aside. And I'll deceive you in another sort,
And that you'll say, ere half an hour pass.

[He cuts off Titus's Hand, with his Sword.

6 Re-enter Lucius with an Axe, and Marcus.

Tit. Now, stay your stride: what shall be, is depatch'd.—

Good Aaron, give his majesty my hand:
Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers. Bid him bury it:
Move hath it merited; that let it have.
As for my sons, say, I account of them
As jewels purchas'd at an easy price;
And yet dear too, because I bought mine own.

Aar. I go, Andronicus; and for thy hand,
Look by and by to have thy sons with thee.—

[Aaside.] Their heads, I mean.—O, how this villainy
Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it!
Let fools do good, and fair men call for grace,
Aaron will have his soul black like his face. [Exit.

Tit. O! here I lift this one hand up to heaven,
And bow this feeble ruin to the earth:
If any power pityes wretched tears,
To that I call.—What! wilt thou kneel with me?

[To LAVINIA.

Do then, dear heart; for heaven shall hear our prayers,
Or with our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,
And stain the sun with fog, as sometime clouds
When they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

Mar. O! brother, speak with possibilities,
And do not break into these deep extremes.

Tit. Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom? Then, be my passions bottomless with them.

Mar. But yet let reason govern thy lament.

Tit. If there were reason for these miseries,
Then into limits could I bind my woes.
When heaven doth weep, doth not the earth overflow? If the winds rage, doth not the sea wax mad, Threat'ning the welkin with his big-swoln face? And what should have a reason for that chide?
I am the sea; hark, how her sighs do blow!
She is the weeping wilkin, I the earth:
Then, must my sea be moved with her sighs;
Then, must my earth with her continual tears
Become a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd. For why? my bowels cannot hide her woes,
But like a drunkard must I vomit them.
Then, give me leave, for losers will have leave
To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues.

Enter a Messenger, with Two Heads and a Hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid
For that good hand thou sent'st the emperor.
Here are the heads of thy two noble sons;
And here's thy hand, in scorn to thee sent back:
Thy griefs their sports, thy resolution mock'd,
That woe is me to think upon thy woes,
More than remembrance of my father's death. [Exit.

Mar. Now, let hot extra cool in Sicily,
And be my heart an ever-burning hell!
These miseries are more than may be borne.
To weep with them that weep doth ease some deal,
But sorrow flouted at is double death.
Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a
And yet detested life not shrink thereat! [wound,
That ever death should let life bear his name,
Where life hath no more interest but to breathe!

Títus. continual.—*

Wherefore wound,
Passionate," That thy poor heart! that kiss is comfortless,
As frozen water to a starred snake,

Títus. When will this fearful slumber have an end?

Thou dost not slumber: see, thy two sons' heads;
Thy warlike hand; thy mangled daughter here;
Thy other banish'd son, with this dear sight
Shake'st thou the palace and bloodless: and brother, I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb.
Ah! now no more will I control my griefs:
Rend off thy silver hair, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth; and be this dismal sight
The closing up of our most wretched eyes!
Now is a time to storm; why art thou still?

Títus. Ha, ha, ha!

Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this hour.

Títus. Why, I have not another tear to shed:
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would usurp upon my watery eyes,
And make them blind with tributary tears;
Then, which way shall I find revenge's cave?
For these two heads do seem to speak to me,
And then to let, I shall never come to bliss,
Till all these mischiefs be return'd again,
Even in their threats that have committed them.
Come, let me see what task I have to do.—
You heavy people, circle me about,
That I may turn me to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.—
The vow is made.—Come, brother, take one head;
And in this hand the other will I bear:
Lavinia, thou shalt be employed in these things;
Bear thou my hand, sweet wrench, between thy teeth.
As for thee, boy, go, get thee from my sight:
Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay.
Hie to the Gods, and raise an army there;
And, if you love me, as I think 'tis true,
Let's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[LExeunt Títus, Marcus, and Lavinia.

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father;
The woefulst man that ever liv'd in Rome.
Farewell, proud Rome; till Lucius come again,
He leaves his pledges dearer than his life.
Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister;
O, would thou wert as thou to-morrow best been!
But now nor Lucius, nor Lavinia lives,
But in oblivion, and hateful griefs.
If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs,
And make proud Saturnine, and his empress,
Beg at the gates, like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Gods, and raise a power;
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine.

SCENE II.—A Room in Títus's House. A Banquet set out.

Enter Títus, Martius, Lavinia, and young Lucius, a Boy.

Tít. So, so, now sit; and look, you eat no more
Than will preserve just so much strength in us
As will revengc these bitter woes of ours.
Marcus, unknot, that sorrow-wreathen knot:
Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands,
And cannot "passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine
Is left to tyrannize upon my breast;
And when my heart, all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then, thus I thump it down.—

Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs,

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still.
Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans;
Or get some little knife between thy teeth,
And just against thy heart make thou a hole,
That all the tears that thy poor heart doth fall,
May run into that sink, and soaking in,
Drown the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Mar. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tít. How now! has sorrow made thee so pale already?

Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I.

What violent hands can she lay on her life?
Ah! wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands?
To bid Eneas tell the tale twice o'er,
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
O! handle not the theme, to talk of hands,
Lest we remember still, that we have none.
Fie, fie! how fraudily I square my talk!
As if we should forget we had no hands,
If Marcus doth not name the word of hands.

Come, let's fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this—
Here is no drink. Hurk, Marcus, what she says;
I can interpret all her martyr'd signs:
She says, she drinks no other drink but tears,
Brew'd with her sorrow, b'mesh'd upon her cheeks—
Speechless complainier, I will learn thy thought;
In thy hands action will I be an agony.
As begging hermits in their holy prayers:
Thou shalt not sigh, nor hold thy stumps to heaven,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I of these will wrest an alphabet,
And by 'tis practice learn to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandsire, leave these bitter deep laments:
Make my son merry with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas! the tender boy, in passion mov'd,
Doth weep to see his grandsire's heaviness.

Tít. Peace, tender sapling; thou art made of tears,
And tears will quickly melt thy life away.—

[MarCus strikes the Dish with a Knife.

What dost thou strike at, Marcus, with thy knife?

Mar. At that that I have kill'd a boy.

Tít. Out on thee, murderer! thou kill'dst my heart;
Mine eyes are cloy'd with view of tyranny:
A deed of death, done on the innocent,
Becomes not Títus' brother. Get thee gone;
I see, thou art not for my company.

Mar. Alas! my lord, I have but kill'd a fly.

Tít. But how, if that fly had a father and mother
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buzz lamenting doings in the air?
Poor harmless fly!

That with his pretty buzzing melody,

[him.

 Came here to make us merry; and thou hast kill'd

Mar. Pardon me, sir: it was a black ill-favor'd fly,
Like to the empress' Moor; therefore, I kill'd him.

Tít. O, O, O! Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed.
Give me thy knife, I will insult on him;
Flattering myself, as if it were the Moor
Come hither purposely to poison me.—

[rah!—

There's for thyself, and that's for Tamora.
Ah, sir,
Yet I think we are not brought so low,

rb "Mash'd," I. e., mesh'd, an allusion to brewing; "Still," I. c., constant; continu'd.
Sirrah was formerly not a disrespectful expression.
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before Titus's House.

Enter Titus and Marcus. Then enter young Lucius. Lavinia running after him.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia follows me every where, I know not why.—

Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes.—

Alas! sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Marcus. Stand by me, Lucius: do not fear thine aunt. Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm. Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome, she did. Marcus. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs? Tit. Fear her not, Lucius: somewhat doth she mean.

See, Lucius, see, how much she makes of thee: Somewhither she would have thee go with her. Ah, boy! Cornelia never with more care Read to her sons, than she hath read to thee. Sweet poetry, and Tully's Orator.

Canst thou not guess wherefore she plies thee thus?

Boy. My lord, I know not, I, nor can I guess, unless some fit, or frenzy do possess her; For I have heard my grandsire say full oft, Extremity of griefs would make men mad; And I have read that Hecuba of Troy Ran mad through sorrow: that made me to fear; Although, my lord, I know, my noble aunt Loves me as dear as e'er my mother did, And would not, but in fury, fright my youth; Which made me down to throw my books, and fly, Causeless, perhaps. But pardon me, sweet aunt; And, madam, if my uncle Marcus go, I will most willingly attend thy ladyship.

Marcus. Lucius, I will.—[Exeunt.

LAVINIA TURNS OVER THE BOOKS WHICH LUCIUS HAD LET FALL.

Tit. How now, Lavinia!—Marcus, what means Some book there is that she desires to see.— Which is it, girl, of these?—Open them, boy. But thou art deeper read, and better skill'd; Come, and take choice of all my library, And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens Reveal the dumb'd contriver of this deed.— What book?

Why lifts she up her arms in sequence thus? [see

Mar. I think, she means, that there was more than CONFIDENT in the fact.—Ay, more there was; Or else to heaven she leave them to revenge. Tit. The hoist book is that she tosseth so? Boy. Grandsire, 'tis Ovid's Metamorphosis: My mother gave't me.

Mar. For love of her that's gone, Perhaps, she culp'd it from among the rest.

Tit. Soft! see how busily she turns the leaves! Help her: what would she find?—Lavinia, shall I This is the tragic tale of Philomel, [read it? * Tully's treatise on Eloquence, entitled Orator. — * Succes- tion. And treats of Tereus' treason, and his rape; And rape, I fear, was root of thine annoy. [leaves. Mar. See, brother, see! note, how she quotes the Tit. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris'd, sweet girl, Ravish'd and wrong'd, as Philomela was, Fore'd in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods?— See,— see!—

Ay, such a place there is, where we did hunt, (O, had we never, never, hunted there?) Pattern'd by that the poet here describes, By nature made for murders, and for rapes.

Mar. O! why should nature build so foul a den, Unless the gods delight in tragedies? [friends, Tit. Give signs, sweet girl, for here are none but What Roman lord it was durst do the deed: Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst, That left the camp to sin in Lucrece's bed? [me.— Mar. Sit down, sweet niece: another, sit down by Apollo, Pallas, Jove, or Mercury. Inspire me, that I may this treason find— My lord, look here:—look here, Lavinia: This sandy plot is plain: guide, if thou canst, This after me, where I have writ my name [He writes his Name with his Steal, and guides it with Feot and Month. Without the help of any earth in all. Cura's the heart, that forc'd us to this shift!— Write thou, good niece; and here display, at last, What God will have discover'd for revenge. Heaven guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain, That we may know the traitors, and the truth! [She takes the Steal in her mouth, and guides it with its stamps, and writes.

Tit. O! do you read, my lord, what she hath writ? STUPROREM—CHIRON—DEMOTRIUS. Mar. What, what!—the lustful sons of Tamora Performers of this heinous, bloody deed!

Tit. Magnai dominator poli, Tam lentus anus sedcera? tam lentus vides? Mar. O! calm thee, gentle lord, although, I know, There must be written upon this earth To stir a mutiny in the mildest thoughts, And arm the minds of infants to exclaims. My lord, kneel down with me; Lavinia, kneel, And kneel, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope, [They kneel. And swear with me,—as with the wound so fierce, And father, of that chase dishonor'd dame, Lord Junius Brutus, aware for Lucrece's rape,— That we will prosecute, by good advice, Mortal revenge upon these traitorous Goths, And see their blood, or die with this reproach. [They rise.

Tit. 'Tis sure enough, an you know how to do it; But if you hurt these behawshels, then beware: The dam shall wake, and if she wind you once, She's with the lion deeply still in league, And lulls him whilst she playeth on her lack; And when he sleeps she will do what she list. You're a young huntsman: Marcus, let it alone; And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass, And with a 'fag of steel will write these words, And lay it by. The angry northern wind Will blow these sands, like Sybill's leaves, abroad, And where's your lesson then?—Boy, what say you? Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man, Their mother's bed-chamber should not be safe For these bad bondmen to the yoke of Rome. Mar. Ay, that's my boy! thy father hath fell off For his ungrateful country done the like. Boy. And, uncle, so will I, as if I live. * Observes. — PhiIlers. — Husband. — Sile; grauer.
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

ScENE II.

TITUS. Come, go with me into mine armoury; Lucius, I’ll fit thee: and, within, my boy Shall carry from me to the empress’ sons Presents, that I intend to send them both. Come, come; thou’lt do thy message, wilt thou not? BOY. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grand- sire. TITUS. No, boy, not so; I’ll teach another course. Lavinia, come.—Marcus, look to my house: Lucius and I’ll go brave it at the court; Ay, marry, will we, sir; and we’ll be waited on. [Exeunt Titus, Lavinia, and Boy.]

Mar. O heavens! can you hear a good man groan, And not relent, or not compass him? Marcus, attend him in his ecstasy, That hath more tears of sorrow in his heart Than fool-men’s marks upon his batter’d shield: But yet so just, that he will not revenge.— Revenge, ye heavens, for old Andronicus! [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter AARON, DEMETRIUS, and CHIRON, at one Door: at another door, young LUCIUS, and an Attendant, with a bundle of Weapons, and Verses writ upon them.

CHI. Demetrius, here’s the son of Lucius; He hath some message to deliver us. [father.

AARON. Stand, and receive his message from his mad grand- son. Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may, I greet your honors from Andronicus:— [Aside.] And pray the Roman gods, confound you Dem. *Grammarly, lovely Lucius. What’s the news? Boy. [Aside.] That you are both decipher’d, that’s the news, [pleaseth you, For villains mad’r’d with me. [To them.] May it My grandd’r, well advanc’d, hath sent by me. The goodliest weapons of his armoury, To gratify your honorable youth, The hope of Rome; for so he bade me say, And so I do, and with his gifts present Your lordships, that whenever you have need, You may be armed and appalled well. And so I leave you both. [Aside.] Like bloody villains. [Exeunt Boy and Attendant.

Dem. What’s here? A scroll, and written round Let’s see; [about.

Integer vitae, scelerisque purus, Non eget Marii jactatus, nec avus. Chri. O! ’Tis a verse in Horace. I know it well: [read it in the grammar long ago. I have it. Aar. Ay, just!—a verse in Horace;—right, you [Aside.] Now, what a thing it is to be an ass! Here’s no sound jest! the old man hath found their guilt, And sends them weapons wrapp’d about with lines, That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick; But see our witty empress well done. She would applaud Andronicus’ consort; But let her rest in her unrest awhile. [star

[To them.] And now, young lords, was’t not a happy Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so, Captives, to be advanced to this height? It did me good, before the palace gate, To brave the tribune in his brother’s hearing. Dem. But me more good, to see so great a lord Basely insinuate, and send us gifts. Aar. *Hath he not reason, lord Demetrius? Did you not use his daughter very friendly? Dem. I would, we had a thousand Roman dames At such a bay, by turn to serve our lust.

Chri. A charitable wish, and full of love.

Aar. Here licks but your mother for to say amen. Chri. And that would she for twenty thousand more. Dem. Come, let us go, and pray to all the gods For our beloved mother in her pains. Aar. Pray to the devils; the gods have given us over. [Trumpets sound.

NUR. Good morrow, lords. O! tell me, did you see Aaron the Moor. Aar. Well, more, or less, or ne’er a whit at all, Here Aaron is; and what with Aaron now? Nur. O, gentle Aaron, we are all undone! Now help, or we be bidding thee morever. Aar. Why, what a catewauling dost thou keep. Dem. And the wind, howl’d dog, thou hast arms? Nur. O! that which I would hide from heaven’s eye, Our empress’ shame, and stately Rome’s disgrace.— She is deliver’d, lords; she is deliver’d.

Aar. To whom? "

NUR. I mean she’s brought to bed. Aar. Well, God Give her your best rest! What hath he sent her? Nur. A devil. [issue. Aar. Why, then she’s the devil’s dam: a joyful Nur. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue. Here is the babe, as leathernsome as a toad [showing it. Amongst the fairest burdens of our clime. The empress sends it thee, thy stately seal, And bids thee christen it with thy dagger’s point. Aar. *Zounds! ye whore is black as base a hue?— Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom, sure. Dem. Villainia, what hast thou done base? Aar. That which thou canst not undo. Chri. Thou hast undone our mother. Aar. Villain, I have done thy mother. Chri. Am I the father of thee? Aar. Woe to her chance, and damn’d her losted choice! Accurs’d the offspring of so foul a fiend! Chri. It shall not live. Aar. It shall not die. Nur. Aar, it must: the mother wills it so. Aar. What must it, nurse? then let no man but I, Do execution on my flesh and blood. Dem. I’ll broach the tap-dole on my rapier’s point. Nurse, give it me; my sword shall soon despatch it. Aar. Sooner this sword shall plow thy bowels up. [Takes the Child from the Nurse, and draws. Stay, murderer villains! will you kill your brother? Now, by the burning tapers of the sky, That shone so brightly when this boy was got, He dies upon my scimitar’s sharp point, That touches this my first-born son and heir. I tell you, younglings, not *Enceladus, With all his threatening band of Typhon’s brood, Nor great 4 Alcides, nor the god of war, Shall seize this prey out of his father’s hands. What, what, ye sanguine, shallow-hearted boys! Ye white-lim’d walls! ye alehouse painted signs! Coal-black is better than another hue, In that it scorches to bear another hue; For all the water in the ocean Can never turn the swan’s black legs to white, Although she have them hourly in the flood. Tell the empress from me, I am a *Triton. [To the Nurse.

* Split. — Enceladus, a giant, the son of Titan and Terra.

* Hercules.
To keep mine own; excuse it how she can.

Dem. Will thou betray thy noble mistress thus?

Aar. My mistress is my mistress; this, myself;
The vigor, and the picture of my youth:
This, before all the world, do I prefer;
This, maugre all the world, will I keep safe,
Of which use of thee shall smoke for it in Rome.

Dem. By this our mother is for ever shamed.

Chi. Rome will despise her this foul escape.

Nur. The emperor in his rage will doom her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignomy.

Aar. Why, there's the privilege your beauty bears.

Fire! treacherous hue, that will betray with blushing
The time of your death and counsels of your heart:
Here's a young lad fram'd of another 4 leer.
Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father,
As who should say, 'Old lad, I am thine own.'

He is your brother, lords, sensibly fed
Of that self-blood that first gave life to you;
And, from that womb, where you imprison'd were,
He is enfranchised and come to light:
Nay, he is your brother by the surest side,
Although my seal be stamped in his face.

Nur. Aaron, what shall I say unto the emperor?

Dem. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice:
Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aar. Then sit we down, and let us all consult.
My self will have the wind of their hearts.
Keep there; now talk at pleasure of your safety.

They sit at a distance.

Dem. How many women saw this child of his?

Aar. Why, so, brave lords: when we all join
I am a lamb; but if you brave the Moor, [league,
The chafed boar, the mountain lions,
The brazen lion, and all such as I;
But say again, how many saw the child?

Nur. Cornelia the midwife, and myself;
And no one else, but the deliver'd empress.

Aar. The empress, the midwife, and yourself:
Two may keep counsel, when the third's away.

Go to the empress; tell her, this I said.—

Stabbing her? she screams.

Weke, weke!—so cries a pig, apprised to the spit.

Dem. What mean'st thou, Aaron? Wherefore didst thou this?

Aar. O lord I sit, 'tis a deed of policy.

Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours,
A long-tong'd babbling gossip? no, lords, no.
And now be it known to you my full intent.
My son and he will live, my countryman!
His wife but yesternight was brought to bed.
His child is like to her, fair as you are;
Go pack with him, and give the mother gold,
And tell them both the circumstance of all;
And how by this their child shall be advance'd,
And be received for the emperor's heir,
And substituted in the place of mine.
To call this tempest whirling in the court,
And let the emperor dandle him for his own.
Hark ye, lords; ye see, I have given her physic,

[Pointing to the Nurse.

And you must needs bestow her funeral:
The fields are near, and you are gallant grooms.
This done, see that you make no long delays,
But send this Mult live, my countryman,
The midwife, and the nurse, well made away,
Then, let the ladies tattle what they say.
Chi. Aaron, I see, thou wilt not trust the air
With secrets.

* "Meagre," i.e., in spite of—* "This foul escape," i.e., this foul illegitimate child.—Ignominy.—Complexion.—
* "Pack," i.e., contrive; bargain.

Dem. For this care of Tamora,
Herself and hers are highly bound to thee.

[Enter Dem. and Chi. bearing off the Nurse.

Aar. Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow flies;
There to dispose this treasure in mine arms,
And come to grief the emperor's harts.
Come on, you thick-lipp'd slave; I'll bear you hence,
For it is you that puts us to our shifts:
I'll make you thrive on berries and on roots,
And feed on curds and whey, and suck the goat,
And cabin in a cave; and bring you up
To be a warrior, and command a comp.

[Exit with the Child.

SCENE III.—The Same. A public Place.

Enter Titus, bearing Arres, with Letters on the ends of them; with him Marcus, young Lucius, and other Gentlemen, with Bows.

Tit. Come, Marcus, come.—Kinsmen, this is the Sir boy, now let me see your archery:

[way.—

Look ye draw home enough, and 'tis there straight.

Terras Astra reliquis:

Be you remember'd Marcus, she's gone, she's fled.
Sirs, take you to your tools. You, cousins, shall Go sound the ocean, and cast your nets.

Happily you may catch her in the sea,
Yet there's as little justice as at land.—

No: Publius and Sempronius, you must do it;
'Tis you must dig with mattock, and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth:

Then, when you come to Pluto's region,
I pray you, deliver him this petition;
Tell him, it is for justice, and for aid,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Slacken with sorrow in ungrateful Rome.—

Ah, Rome!—Well, well; I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize o'er me.—

Go, get you gone; and pray be careful all,
And leave you not a man of war unsearched:
This wicked emperor may have ship'd her hence,
And kinsmen, then we may go pipe for justice.

Mar. O, Publius! is not this a heavy case,
To see thy noble uncle thus distressed?

Pub. Therefore, my lord, it highly us concerns,
By day and night 't attend him carefully;
And feed his humor kindly as we may,
'Till he beget some careful remedy.

Mar. Kinsmen, his sorrows are past remedy.

Join with the God; and with revengeful war
Take wreak on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the traitor Saturnine. [What?

Tit. Publius, how now! how now, my masters!

Have you met with her?

Pub. No, my good lord; but Pluto sends you word,
If you will have revenge from hell, you shall.

Marry, for Justice, she is so employ'd,
He thinks with Jove in heaven, or somewhere else,
So that perforce you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delays.
I'll dive into the burning lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by her heels.—

Publius, we are but slaves, no cedars we;
No big-lion'd men, fram'd of the Cyclops' size,
But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back; [bear:

Yet 'wring with wrongs, more than our backs can
And, since no justice is in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven, and move the gods
To send down justice for to wreak our wrongs.

* Strained. — Since. — Revenge.
Come, to this gear. You are a good archer, Marcus.

[He gives them the arrows.]

Ad Aeneas, that's for you,—here, ad Apollo! —

Ad Marten, that's for myself:

Here, boy, to Pallias:—here, to Mercury:

To Saturn, Cains, not to Saturnine;

You were as good to shoot against the wind.—

To it, boy: Marcus, loose when I bid.

Of my word, I have written to effect;

There's not a god left unsold.

Mar. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the court:

We will afflict the emperor in his pride.

Tit. Now, masters, draw. [They shoot.] O, well said, Lucius!

Good boy, in Virgo's lap: give it Pallias.

Mar. My lord, I 'mid a mile beyond the moon, Thy letter is with Jupiter by this.

Tit. Ha! Pallius, Pallius, what hast thou done? See, see! thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.

Mar. This was the sport, my lord: when Pallius shot,

The bull, being gall'd, gave Aries such a knock
That down fell both the ram's horns in the court; And, with his coat of mail on, and thy letters,

She laugh'd, and told the Moor, he should not choose
But give them to his master for a present. [Joy.

Tit. Why, there it goes: God give his lordship

Enter the Clown, with a Basket and Two Pigeons.

News! news from heaven! Marcus the post is come.

Sirrah, what tidings? have you any letters?

Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?

Clo. Ho! the gibbet-maker! he says, that he hath Taken them down again, for the man must not be Hanged till the next week.

Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee!

Clo. Alas, sir! I know not Jupiter: I never drank

With him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier?

Clo. Ay, of my pigeons, sir; nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven?

Clo. From heaven? alas, sir! I never came there.

God forbid, I should be so bold to press to heaven in My young days. Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribune; there, to take up a matter of a brawl between my uncle and one of the emperor's men.

Mar. Why, sir, that's as fit as can be, to serve for your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace?

Clo. Nay, truly, sir, I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither. Make no more ado,

But give your pigeons to the emperor:

By me thou shalt have justice at his hands.

Hold, hold; mean while, here's money for thy charges.

Give me pen and ink.—

Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication?

Clo. Ay, sir.

Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach you must kneel; then kiss his foot; then deliver up your pigeons, and then look for your reward.

I'll be at hand, sir; see you do it bravely.

Clo. I warrant you, sir; let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? Come, let me see

Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration, [It.—

For thou hast made it like a humble suppliant.—

And when thou hast given it to the emperor,

Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.

Clo. God be with you, sir: I will.

Tit. Come, Marcus, let us go.—Publius, follow me. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Same. Before the Palace.

Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Demetrius, Chiron,

Lords and others: Saturninus with the arrows in his hand, that had been shot.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these? Was

An emperor of Rome thus overborne, [ever seen

Troubled, confronted thus: and, for the extent

Of equal justice, us'd in such contempt?

My lords, you know, the mighty gods no less,

(However these disturbers of our peace

But in the people's care) there nought hath pass'd,

But even with law, against the willful sons

Of old Andronicus. And what an if

His sorrow have so overwhelm'd his wits,

Shall we be thus afflicted in his freaks,

His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness?

And now he writes to heaven for his redress:

See, here's to Jove, and this to Mercury;

This to Apollo; this to the god of war.

Sweet scrools to fly about the streets of Rome!

What's this but libelling against the state,

And blazoning our injustice everywhere?

A goodly humor, is it not, my lords?

As who would say, in Rome no justice were.

But if I live, his feigned ecstasies

Shall be no shelter to the wronged; but

He and his shall know, that justice lives

In Saturninus' health; whom, if she sleep,

He'll so awake, as she in fury shall

Cut the proud' st conspirator that lives.

Tat. Take his scot.

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine,

Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts,

Calm thee, and bear the faults of Titus' age,

Th' effects of sorrow for his valiant sons,

[heart;

Whose loss hath pierc'd him deep, and scar'd his

And rather comfort his distressed plight,

Than prosecute the meanest, or the best, [come

For these contempt.

[Aside.] Why, thus it shall be—

High-witted Tamora to all things:

But, Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick,

The life-blood on't. If Aaron now be wise,

Then is all safe, the anchor's in the port.—

[Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow! would'st thou speak with us?

Clo. Yea, farsooth, an your mistresship be imperial.

Tam. Empress I am, but younder sits the emperor.

Clo. 'Tis he,—God, and Saint Stephen.

Give you good even.

I have brought you a letter,

And a couple of pigeons for want of better.

[Saturninus reads the Letter.

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clo. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah; you must be hang'd.

Clo. Hang'd! By'r lady, then, 'friend, I have 2 brought my neck to a fair end.

[Exit, guarded.

Sat. Despiteful and intolerable wrongs!

Shall I endure this monstrous villainy?

I know from whence this same device proceeds.

May this be borne?—as if his traitorous sons

That died by law for murder of our brother,

Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully.

Go, drag the villain hither by the hair.

Nay, or honor, shall 2 have privilege.

* "Gear," i.e., business; matter. — * * The tribunal plebe," t. e., the tribune of the people. * * Flatter.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.

Enter Lucius, and an Army of Goths, with Drums and Colors.

Luc. Approved warriors, and my faithful friends, I have received letters from great Rome, Which signify what hate they bear their emperor, And how desirous of our sight they are. Therefore, great lords be, as your titles witness, Imperial, and impatient of your wrongs; And, wherein Rome hath done you any scath, Let him make treble satisfaction. [curt. 1 Goth. Bravo slip, sprung from the great Andronicus—Whose head once our terror, now our comfort; Whose high exploits, and honorable deeds, Ingratiate Rome requites with foul contempt, Be bold in us: we’ll follow where thou lead’st Like stinging bees in hottest summer’s day, Led by their master to the flower’d fields, And be aveng’d on cursed Tamora.

Goths. And, as he saith, so we all with him. Luc. I humbly thank him, and I thank you all. But who comes here, led by a lusty Goth? Enter a Goth, leading Aaron, with his Child in his Arms.

2 Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I To gaze upon a ruinous monastery; [stray’d, And as I earnestly did fix mine eye Upon the wasted building, suddenly I heard a child cry underneath a wall. I made unto the noise; when soon I heard The crying babe control’d with this discourse: — “Poor Lucius, I have bought thee half my life, and half thy dam! Did not thy hue bewray thy brutish art thou, Had nature lent thee but thy mother’s look, Villain, thou might’st have been an emperor; But where the bull and cow are both milk-white, They never do beget a coal-black calf. [babe, Peace, villain, peace!”—even thus he rates the “I for I must bear thee to a trusty Goth; Who will not know the time thou art the emperor’s babe, Will hold thee dearly for thy mother’s sake.” With this, my weapon drawn, I rush’d upon him, Surpris’d him suddenly, and brought him hither, To use as you think needful of the man. Luc. O worthy Goth! this is the incarrate devil, That robb’d Andronicus of his good hand: This is the pearl that pleas’d your empress’ eye, And here’s the base fruit of his burning lust.— Say, wall-eyed slave, whither wouldst thou convey This growing image of thy fiend-like face? Why dost not speak? What! deaf? ne, not a word? A halter, soldiers! hang him on this tree, And by his side his fruit of bastardy. Aaron, take the blood of the royal blood. Luc. Too like the sire for ever being good. First, hang the child, that he may see it sprawl; A sight to vex the father’s soul withal. Get me a ladder. [A Ladder brought. Aar. Lucius, save the child; and Bear it from me to the empress. If thou do this, I’ll show thee wondrous things, That highly may advantage thee to hear: If thou wilt not, befall what may befal, I’ll speak no more; but vengeance rot you all! Luc. Say on; and if it please me which thou speak’st, Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish’d. Aar. As if it please thee? why, assure thee, Lucius, [Speaking on the Ladder. 'Twill vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak; For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres, Acts of black night, abominable deeds, Complots of mischief, treason, villainies Ruthful to hear, indisputably perform’d: And this shall all be buried in my death, Unless thou swear to me, my child shall live. Luc. Tell on thy mind: I say, thy child shall live.

*Horn.—Alluding to the proverb, ‘A black man is a pearl in a fair woman’s eye.’
Aar. Swear that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luc. Whom should I swear by? thou believest no
That granted, how canst thou believe an oath? I God:
Aar. What if I do not, as, indeed, I do not:
Yet, for I know thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called conscience,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,
Thou therefore urge thy oath:—for in my law,
I know, an idol holds his bangle for a god,
And keeps the oath which by that god he swears,
To that I'll urge him.—Therefore, thou shalt vow
By that same god, what god see'rt it be,
That thou ador'st and hast in reverence,
To save my boy, to nourish, and bring him up,
Or else I will discover ought to thee.

Luc. Even by my god I swear to thee, I will.

Aar. First, know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. O most instatate, *luxurious woman!

Aar. Tut! Lucius, this was but a deed of charity,
To that which thou shalt hear of me anon.

Twas her two sons that murder'd Bassianus:
They know in her sister's mind, for he understands her,
But cut her hands off, and trimm'd her as thou saw'st.

Luc. O, detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming?

* [and twas

Aar. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd; Trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. O, barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!

Aar. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them.
That spirit that had they from their mother, As sure a card as ever won the set:
That bloody mind, I think, they learn'd of me,
As true a dog as ever fought at b'head.
Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay:
I kiss'd the letter that thy father's head,
And hid the gold, within the letter mentioned,
Confederate with the queen, and her two sons;
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it!
I play'd the cheatress for thy father's hand,
And, when I had it, drew myself apart,
And cut that root which broke my heart with his death:
I pray'd me through the crevice of a wall,
When for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;
Behold his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,
That both mine eyes were rainy like his:
And when I told the empress of this sport,
She swooned almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tidings gave me twenty kisses. [blush?

Goth. What canst thou say all this, and never

Aar. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Luc. Ait thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Aar. Ay, that I had not done a thousand more.
Even now I curse the day, (and yet, I think,
Few come within the compass of my curse) Wherein I did not some notorious ill:
And, if a man, or else devise his death,
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it;
Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself;
Set deadly enmity between two friends;
Make poor men's cattle oftentimes break their necks;
Set fire on barns and hay-stacks in the night,
And bid the owners seçenek them with their tears.
Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' doors,
Even when their sorrows almost were forgot;
And on their skins, as on the back of trees,

Aar. Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,
"Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead."
Tut! I have done a thousand dreadful things,
As willingly as one would kill a fly;
And nothing grieves me heartily indeed,
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.

Luc. Bring down the devil, for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging, presently.

Aar. If there be devils, would I were a devil,
To live and burn in everlasting fire,
So I might have your company in hell,
But to torment you with my bitter tongue!

Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth, and let him speak no more.

Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome,
Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Luc. Let him come near.

Enter Amilius.

Welcome, Amilius! 'tis the news from Rome!

Amil. Lord Lucius, and you princes of the Goths,
The Roman emperor greets you all by me;
And, for he understands you all by arms,
He carves a parley at your father's house,
Willing you to demand your hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

1 Goth. What says our general?

Luc. Amilius, let the emperor give his pledges
Unto my father and my uncle Marcus,
And we will come.—March! away! [Exit.

Enter Tamora, Demetrius, and Chiron, disguising
4 as Revenge, Rapine, and Murder.

Tam. Thus, in this strange and sad habiliment,
I will encounter with Andronicus,
And say, I am Revenge, sent from below,
To join with him, and right his heinous wrongs.—
Knock at his study, where, they say, he keeps,
To ruminate strange plots of dire revenge:
Tell him, Revenge is come to join with him,
And work confusion on his enemies. [They knock.

Titus opens his study door above.

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation?
Is it thy trick to make me ope the door,
That my sad decrees may fly away,
And all my study be to no effect?
You are deceiv'd! for what I mean to do,
See here, in bloody lines I have set down,
[Shewing a Paper.
And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. "Old Titus, I am come to talk with thee."

Tit. No; not a word. How can I grace my talk
Wanting a hand to give it action?
Thou hast the odds of me; therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, thou would'st talk with me.

Tit. I am not mad; I know thee well enough:
Witness this wretched stump, witness these crimson lines;
Witness these trenches made by grief and care;
Witness the tiring day, and heavy night;
Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well
For our proud empress, mighty Tamora.
Is not thy coming for my other hand?

Tam. Know, thou sad man, I am not Tamora:
She is thy enemy, and I thy friend.
I am Revenge, sent from th' infernal kingdom,
To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,
By working wreakful vengeance on thy foes.
Come down, and welcome me to this world's light;
Confer with me of murder and of death.
There's not a hollow cave, or lurking-place,
No vast obscurity, or misty vale,
Where bloody murder, or detected rape,
Can crouch for fear, but I will find them out;
And in their ears tell them their dreadful name,
Revenge, which makes the felon quaker.

Tit. Art thou Revenge? and art thou sent to me,
To be a torment to mine enemies?

Tam. I am; therefore come down, and welcome me.

Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee.

Lo! by thy side where Rape, and Murder, stand;
Now, give some signal that thou art Revenge;
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels,
And then I'll come, and be thy waggoner,
And whirl along with thee about the globes.

I provide two proper pikemen, black as jet,
To hale thy vengeful waggon swift away,
And find out murderers in their guilty caves:
And when thy car is loaded with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the waggon wheel
Trot like a servile footman all day long,
Even from Hypermion's rising in the east,
Until his very downfall in the sea:
And day by day I'll do this heavy task,
So thou dispatch Rapipe and Murder there.

Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are they thy ministers? what are they called?

Tam. Murder: they are called so,
'Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good lord! how like the empress' sons they are;
And you, the empress: but we worldly men
Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.
O sweet Revenge! now do I come to thee;
And, if one arm's embracement will content thee,
I will embrace thee in it by and by.

[Exit Titus above.

Tam. This closing with him fits his lunacy.
Whate'er I surge, to feed his brain-sick fits,
Do you uphold and maintain in your speeches,
For now he firmly takes me for Revenge;
And being credulous in this mad thought,
I'll make him send for Lucius, his son;
And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,
I'll find some curious practice out of hand,
To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths,
Or, at the least, make them his enemies.
See! here he comes, and I must ply my theme.

Enter Titus, below.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee.
Welcome, dread fury, to my woeeful house.
— Rapine, and Murder, you are welcome too.

How like the empress and her sons you are!
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moor:
Could not all hell afford you such a devil?
For, well I wot, the empress never wags,
But in her company there is a Moor;
And would you represent our queen's might,
It were convenient you had such a devil.

But welcome as you are, What shall we do?

Tam. What would'st thou have us do, Andronicus?

Dem. Show me a murderer, I'll deal with him.

Chir. Show me a villain that hath done a rape,
And I am sent to be reveng'd on him.

[wrong,

Tam. Show me a thousand that have done thee
And I will be revenged on them all.

Tit. Look round about the wicked streets of Rome,
And when thou findest a man that's like thyself,
Good Murder, stab him: he's a murderer.

Go thou with him; and when it is thy hap
To find another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine, stab him: he is a ravisher.

Go thou with them; and in the emperor's court
There is a queen, attended by a Moor:
Well may'st thou know her by thine own proportion,
For up and down she doth resemble thee.

I pray thee, do on them some violent death;
They have been violent to me and mine.

Tam. Well hast thou lesson'd us: this shall we do.
But would it please thee, good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius, thy thro' valiant son,
Who leads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths,
And bid him come and banquet at thy house,
When he is here, even at thy solemn feast,
I will bring in the empress and her sons,
The emperor himself, and all thy foes,
And at thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel,
And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart.

What says Andronicus to this device?

Tit. Marcus, my brother!—tis sad Titus calls.

Enter Marcus.

Go, gentle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius;
Thou shalt inquire him out among the Goths;
Bid him repair to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefest princes of the Goths;
Bid him encamp his soldiers where they are.

Tell him, the emperor, and the empress too,
Feast at my house, and he shall feast with them.
This do thou for my love, and so let him,
As he deserveth, who is my father's son.

Mar. This will I do, and soon return again. [Exit.

Tam. Now will I hence about thy business,
And take my ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me,
Or else I'll call my brother back again,
And cleave to no revenge but Lucius.

Tam. Aside to them. What say you, boys?
Will you abide with him,
Whiles I go tell my lord the emperor,
How I have govern'd our determin'd jest?

Yield to his humor, smooth and speak him fair,
And tarry with him, till I turn again.

Tit. [Aside] I know them all, though they suppose
I know me mad!

And will o'er-reach them in their own devices,
A pair of cursed hell-bounds, and their dam.

Dem. Madam, depart at pleasure; leave us here.

Tam. Farewell, Andronicus: Revenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy foes.

[Exit.

Tit. I know thou dost; and, sweet Revenge, farewell.

Chi. Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd?

Tit. Tut! I have work enough for you to do.—
Publius, come hither, Calus, and Valentine!

Enter Publius, and others.

Pub. What's your will?

Tit. Know you these two?

Pub. The empress' sons.

Tit. I take them: Chiron, and Demetrius.

Tam. Fie, Publius, fie! thou art too much deceiv'd; the one is Murder, Rape is the other's name:
And therefore bind them, gentle Publius;
Calus, and Valentine, lay hands on them.

Oft have you heard me wish for such an hour,
And now I find it: therefore, bind them sure,
And strip their clothes off, if they begin to cry.

[Exit Titus.—Publius, &c., seizing Chiron, and Demetrius.

Chi. Villains, forbear! we are the empress' sons.
Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.

Calus. Stop close their mouths; let them not speak a word.
Is he sure bound? look, that you bind them fast.
TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Pavilion, with Tables,

Enter LUCIUS, MARCUS, and Goths; with AARON, Prisoner.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 'tis my father's mind,
That I repair to Rome, I am content. [will.
1 Goth. And ours, with 2 thine, befall what fortune
Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous Moor,
This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil.
Let him receive no sustenance; fetter him,
Till he be brought unto the empress's face,
For testimony of her foul proceedings.
And see the ambush of our friends be strong:
I fear the emperor means no good to us.
Aar. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear,
And prompt me, that my tongue may utter forth
The venomous malice of my swelling heart!
Luc. Away, inhuman dog! unshunnable slave!
Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.
[Exeunt Goths with AARON. 2Trumpets sound.
The trumpets show the emperor is at hand.

Re-enters Titus Andronicus, with LAVINIA; she bearing a Bason, and he a Knife.

Tit. Come, come, Lavinia; look, thy foes are bound.
Sirs, stop their mouths; let them not speak to me,
But let them hear what fearful words I utter.
O villains! Chiron and Demetrius, [mud;
Here stands the spring whom you had stain'd with,
This goodly summer with your winter mix'd.
You kill'd her husband, and for that vile fault
Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry jest:
Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that more dear
Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd.
What would you say, if I should let you speak
Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.
Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
This one hand yet is left to cut your throats,
Whilst that Lavinia 'twixt her stumps doth hold
The bason, that receives your guilty blood.
You know, your mother means to feast with me,
And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad.
Hark, villains! I will grind your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, I'll make my paste;
And of the paste a coffin I will rear,
And make two pasties of your shameful heads;
And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
Like to the earth, swallow her own increase.
This is the feast that I have bid her to,
And this the banquet she shall surfeit on;
For worse than Philomel you us'd my daughter,
And worse than Progne I will be reveng'd.
And now prepare your throats.—Lavinia come,
[He eats their Throats, and she catches the Blood.
Receive the blood: and when that they are dead,
Let me go grind their bones to powder small,
And with this hateful liquor temper it;
And in that paste let their vile heads be bak'd.
—Come, come, he ever one officious
To make this banquet; which I wish may prove
More stern and bloody than the Centaurs' feast.
So, now bring them in, for I will play the cook,
And see them ready 'gainst their mother comes.
[Exeunt, bearing the dead Bodies.

Enter SATURNINIUS and TAMORA, with Tribunes,
Senators, and others.

Sat. What! hath the firmament more suns than one?
Luc. What boots it thee to call thyself a sun?
Mar. Rome's emperor, and nephew, to break the
These quarrels must be quietly debated. [parle;
The feast is ready, which the careful Titus
Hath ordain'd to an honorable end,
For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome:
Please you, therefore, dine high, and take your places.
Sat. Marcus, we will.
[Heautobys sound. The Company sit down at table.

Enter Titus, dressed like a Cook, LAVINIA, veiled, young LUCIUS, and others. Titus places the dishes on the table.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, dread queen;
Welcome, ye warlike Goth; and welcome, Lucius;
And welcome, all. Although the cheer be poor,
'Twill fill your stomachs; please you, eat it.
Sat. What hast thou thus attire'd, Andronicus?
Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,
To entertain your highness, and your empress.
Tam. We are beholding to you, good Andronicus.
Sat. An if your highness knew my heart, you were.
My lord the emperor, resolve me this:
Was it well done of rash Virginus,
To slay his daughter with his own right hand,
Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and deflower'd?
Sat. It was, Andronicus.
Tit. Your reason, mighty lord!
Sat. Because the girl should not survive her shame,
And by her presence still renew his sorrows.
Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;
A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant.
For me, most wretched, to perform the like,—
Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee;
[He kills LAVINIA.

And with thy shame thy father's sorrow
And with thy shame thy father's sorrow
Sat. What hast thou done? unnatural and unkind!
Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made me
I am as woful as Virginus was,
For I myself am blind.
And have a thousand times more cause than he
To do this outrage;—and it is now done.
Sat. What! was she ravish'd? tell who did the deed.
Tit. Will't please you eat? will't please your highness feed?
Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter thus?
Tit. Not I; 'twas Chiron, and Demetrius:
They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue,
And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.
Sat. Go, fetch them hither to us presently.
Tit. Why, there they are both, baked in that pie;
Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she herself hath brea'd.
'Tis true, 'tis true; witness my knife's sharp point.
[Killing TAMORA.

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed.
[Killing Titus.

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?
There's need for meed, death for a deadly deed.
[Killing SATURNINIUS. A great tumult.
The People in confusion disperse. MARCUS, LUCIUS, and their Partisans, ascend the Steps before
TITUS'S House.
Mar. You sad-faced men, people and sons of Rome,
By uproar seve'rd, like a flight of fowl
Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,
O! let me teach you how to knit again.
This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,

4 "Break the parle," l. c. bog or the parle.
These broken limbs again into one body.

1 Loth Rome herself be sane unto herself; And she, whom mighty kingdoms court'sy to, Like a forlorn and desperate cast-away, Do shameful execution on herself.

But if my frosty signs and chaps of age, Grave witnesses of true experience, Cannot induce you to attend my words, Speak, Rome's dear friend; 2 as erst our ancestor, When with his solemn tongue he did discourse, To love-sick Didius' sad attending car, The story of that baleful burning night, When subtle Greeks surpris'd king Titus' Troy.

Tell us, what Sismon hath bewitch'd our ears, Or who hath brought the fatal engine in, That gives us Troy, our Rome, the civil wound. My heart is not compact of flint, nor steel, Nor can I utter all my bitter grief;

But floods of tears will drown my oratory, And break my very utterance, even i' the time When it should move you to attend me most, Lending your kind commiseration.

Hasten your captain, let him tell the tale;

Your hearts will throng and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble auditors, be it known to you, That cursed Chiron and Demetrius

Were they that murdered our emperor's brother; And they it was that ravished our sister.

For their foul faults our brothers were beheaded, Our father's tears des派'd, and basely ceas'd.

Of that true trade, that fought Rome's quarrel out, And sent her enemies unto the grave.

Lastly, myself unkindly banish'd,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out, To beg relief among Rome's enemies;

Who drown'd their eminency in my true tears, And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend:

And I am the turn'd-forth, be it known to you, That have pressow'd her welfare in my blood;

And from her bosom took the enemy's point, Sheathing the steel in my adventurous body.

Aha! you know, I am no vaunter, I;

My scars can witness, dumb although they are, That my report is just, and full of truth.

But, if you think, I do digress too much, Citing my worthless praise. O! pardon me;

For when no friends are by men praise themselves.

Mar. Now is my turn to speak. Behold this child;
Of this was Tamora delivered;
The issue of an irreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes.
The villain is alive in Titus' house,
And, as he is, to witness this is true.

Now judge what cause had Titus to revenge
These wrongs, unspeakable, past patience,
Or more than any living man could bear.

Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Romans?
Have we done ought amiss? Show us wherein,
And from the place where you behold us now,
The poor remainder of Andronicus
Will, hand in hand, all headlong cast us down,
And on the rugged stones beat forth our brains,
And make a mutual closure of our house.

Speak, Romans, speak! and, if you say, we shall, Lo! hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

End. Come, come, thou reverence man of Rome,
And bring your emperor gently in thy hand, Lucius our emperor; for, well I know,
The common voice doth cry, it shall be so.

Mar. Lucius, all hail! Rome's royal emperor.

Lucius, &c., descend.

Go, go into old Titus' sorrowful house,
To an Attendant.

And hither hale that misbelieving Moor,
And be adjudg'd some direful 4lingering death,
As punishment for his most wicked life.

Luc. all hail! Rome's gracious governor.

Lnc. Thanks, gentle Romans: may I govern so,
To heal Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe!

But, gentle people, give me aim awhile
For nature puts me to a heavy 6style.

Stand all aloof;—but, uncle, draw you near,
To shed obscureous tears upon this 7bier.—

O! take this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,

These sorrowful drops upon thy blushing 8face, The last true duties of thy noble son!

Mar. Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:

Of! were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

Lnc. Come hither, boy: come, come, and learn of us
To melt in showers. Thy grand sire lov'd thee well;
Many a time he gave thee on his knee,
Sung thee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
Moot and agreeing with thine infancy:
In that respect, then, like a loving child,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender spring,
Because kind nature doth require it so:

Friends should associate friends in grief and woe.
Bid him farewell; commit him to the grave,
Do him that kindness, 7 all that he can have.

Boy. O grand sire, grand sire! even with all my heart
Would I were dead, so you did live again.—

O lord! I cannot speak to him for weeping;
My tears will choke me, if I ope my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with Aaron.

1 Rom. You and Andronicus, have done with woes:
Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and famish him;

There let him stand, and rave and cry for food;
If any one relieves, or pity's him
For the offence he dies. This is our doom:
Some stay to see him fasten'd in the earth.

Aar. O! why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb?

I am no baby, I, that with base prayers
I should repent the evils I have done.

Ten thousand worse than ever yet I did
Would I perform, if I might have my will:

If one good deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very soul.

Lnc. Some loving friends convey the emperor hence,
And give him burial in his father's grave.

My father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our household's monument.

As for that 4ravenous tiger, Tamora,
No funeral rites, nor man in mournful weeds, No mournful bell shall ring her burial;
But throw her forth to beasts, and birds of prey.
Her life was beast-like, and devoid of pity;
And, being so, shall have like want of pity.

See justice done on Aaron, that dam' d Moor,
By whom our heavy haps had their beginning:
Then, afterwards, to order well the state,
That like events may ne'er it ruinate.

[Exeunt.

ACT I.-Scene I.

PROLOGUE.

CHORUS.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.
From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-cross'd lovers take their life;
Whose misadventur'd piteous overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents' strife.
The fearful passage of their death-mark'd love,
And the continuance of their parents' rage,
Which, but their children's end, nought could remove,
is now the two hours' traffic of our stage;
The which if you with patient ears attend,
What here shall miss, our toil shall strive to mend.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A public Place.

Enter SAMSON and GREGORY, armed with Swords, and Bucklers.

SAM. Gregory, on my word, we'll not carry coals.
GRE. No, for then we should be colliers.
SAM. I mean, an we be in choler, we'll draw.
GRE. Ay, while you live, draw your neck out of the collar.
SAM. I strike quickly, being moved.
GRE. But thou art not quickly moved to strike.
SAM. A dog of the house of Montague moves me.
GRE. To move is to stir, and to be valiant is to stand; therefore, if thou art moved, thou run'st away.
Sam. A dog of that house shall move me to stand.
I will take the wall of any man or maid of Montague's.
Gre. That shows thee a weak slave; for the weakest goes to the wall.
Sam. 'Tis true; and therefore women, being the weaker vessels, are ever thrust to the wall;—therefore, I will push Montague's men from the wall, and thrust his maids to the wall.
Gre. The quarrel is between our masters, and us their men.
Sam. 'Tis all one, I will show myself a tyrant: when I have fought with the men, I will be cruel with the maids; I will cut off their heads.
Gre. The heads of the maids?
Sam. Ay, the heads of the maids, or their maidenheads; take it in what sense thou wilt.
Gre. They must take it in sense, that feel it.
Sam. Mst they shall feel, while I am able to stand; and, 'tis known, I am a pretty piece of flesh.
Gre. 'Tis well, thou art not fish; if thou hast, thou hadst been poor. John. Draw thy sword; here come two of the house of the Montagues.

Enter Abram and Balthasar.
Sam. My naked weapon is out: quarrel, I will back thee.
Gre. How! turn thy back, and run?
Sam. Fear me not.
Gre. No marrow: I fear thee!
Sam. Let us take the law of our sides; let them begin.
Gre. I will frown as I pass by, and let them take it as they list.
Sam. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my thumb at them; which is a disgrace to them, if they bear it.
Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
Sam. I do bite my thumb, sir.
Abr. Do you bite your thumb at us, sir?
Sam. Is the law of our side, if I say—ay?
Gre. No.
Sam. No, sir, I do not bite my thumb at you, sir; but I bite my thumb, sir.
Gre. Do you quarrel, sir?
Abr. Quarrel, sir; I no, sir.
Sam. If you do, sir, I am for you: I serve as good a man as you.
Abr. No better.
Sam. Well, sir.

Enter Benvolio, at a Distance.
Gre. Say—better: here comes one of my master's kinsmen.
Sam. Yes, better, sir.
Abr. You lie.
Sam. Draw, if you be men.—Gregory, remember thy swashing blow. [They fight.]
Ben. Part, fools! put up your swords; you know not what you do. [Beats down their swords with his.

Enter Tybalt.
Tyb. What! are thou drawnd among these heartless fools? [Draws.]
Turn thee, Benvolio; look upon thy death.
Ben. I do but keep the peace: put up thy sword, or manage it to part these men with me. [word, Tyb. What! drawnd, and talk of peace! I hate the *Poor John" is kake, dried and salted.—To "bite the thumb" was a common mode of insult, in order to begin a quarrel, in Shakespeare's time.—Gregory alludes to Tybalt, who enters immediately after Benvolio.—Swaggerting—dashing.

Angry.—"Fikes"—"Free-town," said to be the castle of the Capulets.
Being one too many by my weary self,
Pur’d my humor, now morning his,
And gladly shunn’d who gladly fied from me.

Romeo. Many a morning hath he there been seen,
With tears augmenting the fresh morning’s dew,
Adding to clouds more clouds with his deep sighs:
But all so soon as the all-cheering sun
Should in the farthest east begin to draw
The silver curtains from Aurora’s bed,
Away from light steals home my heavy son,
And private in his chamber pens himself;
Shuts up his windows, locks fair daylight out,
And makes himself an artificial night.

Black and portentous must this humor prove,
Unless good counsel may the cause remove.

Ben. My noble uncle, do you know the cause?
Rom. I neither know it, nor can learn of him.
Ben. Have you importune’d him by any means?
Rom. Both by myself, and many other friends;
But he, his own affections’ counsellor,
Is to himself—I will not say, how true—
But to himself so secret and so close,
So far from sounding and discovery,
As one could best sit with the worm of his worm,
 Ere he can spread his sweet leaves to the air,
Or dedicate his beauty to the sun.

Could we but learn from whence his sorrow grows,
We would as willingly give cure, as know.

Enter Romeo, at a distance.

Ben. See, where he comes: so please you, step
I’ll know his grievance, or be much denied.  [aside;
Rom. I would, thou wert so happy by thy stay,
To hear true speech.  [Come, madam, let’s away.
[Exeunt Montague and Lady.

Ben. Good morrow, cousin.
Rom. Is the day so young?
Ben. But now struck nine.
Rom. Ah me! sad hours seem long.
Was that my father that went hence so fast?

Ben. It was. What sadness lengthens Romeo’s hours?

[short.

Rom. Not having that, which, having, makes them
Ben. In love?

Ben. Out.

Rom. Of love?

Ben. Out of her favor where I am in love.

Rom. Alas, that love, so gentle in his view,
Should be so tyrannous and rough in proof!

Rom. Alas, that love, whose bow is muffled still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his will!

Where shall we dine?—O me!—What fray was here?
Yet tell me not, for I have heard it all.

Here’s much to do with hate, but more with love:—
Why then, 0 brawling love! 0 lovely hate!
O any thing, of nothing first created!
O heavy lightness! serious vanity!
Mis-shapen chaos of well-seeming forms!
Feather of lead, bright smoke, cold fire, sick health!
Still-waking sleep, that is not what it is!—

This love feel I, that feel no love in this.
Dost thou not laugh?

Ben. No, coz; I rather weep.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Ben. At thy good heart’s oppression.

Rom. Why, such, 6 Benuvio, is love’s transgres-
Griefs of mine own lie heavy in my breast;  [sion.—
Whon thou wilt propagate, to have it press’d
With more of thine: this love, that thou hast shown,
Both add more grief to too much of mine own.
Lent me a smoke, made with the fume of sighs;
Being 7 puff’d, a fire sparkling in lovers’ eyes;

Being vex’d, a sea nourish’d with lovers’ tears:
What is it else? a madness most discreet,
A choking gall, and a preserving sweet.

Farewell, my coz.  [Going.

Ben. Soft, I will go along:
An if you leave me so, you do me wrong.

Rom. Tut! I have lost myself; I am not here:
This is not Romeo; he’s some other where.

Ben. Tell me in’s sadness, who is’t that you love?

Rom. What! shall I groan, and tell thee?

Ben. Groan! why, no;
But 8 sadly tell me, who.

Rom. Bid a sick man in 9 sadness make his will;
A word ill urg’d to one that is so ill.—

In 9 sadness, cousin, I do love a woman.

Ben. I am so near, when, I suppose you lov’d.

Rom. A right good man-much!—And she’s fair I love.

Ben. A right fair mask, fair cox, is soonest hit.

Rom. Well, in that bit you miss: she’ll not be hit
With Cupid’s arrow. She hath Dian’s wit;
And in strong proof of chastity well arm’d,
From love’s weak childish bow she lives encharm’d.
She will not let him sit with the worm of his worm,
Nor hide th’ encounter of assailing eyes,
Nor ope her lap to saint-seducing gold:
O! she is rich in beauty; only poor,
That when she dies with beauty dies her store.

Ben. Then she hath sworn, that she will still live chaste,

[waite;

Rom. She hath, and in that sparing makes hugo
For beauty, starv’d with her severity,
Cuts beauty off from all posterity.
She is too fair, too wise; too wisely far,
To merit bliss by making me despair:
She hath forsworn to love, and in that vow
Do I live dead, that live to tell it now.

Ben. Be nul’d by me; forget to think of her.

Rom. O! teach me how I should forget to think.

Ben. By giving liberty unto thine eye:
Examine other beauties.

Rom. ’Tis the way
To call her’s, exquisite, in question more.
These happy masks, that kiss fair ladies’ brows,
Being blind, put us in mind they hide the fair:
He, that is sticken blind, cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eyesight lost.
Show me a mistress that is passing fair:
What doth her beauty serve, but as a note
Where I may read who pass’d that passing fair?

Farewell: thou canst not teach me to forget.

Ben. I’ll pay that doctrine, or else die in debt.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A street.

Enter Capulet, Paris, and Servant.

Cap. But Montague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike; and ’tis not hard, I think,
For such as we to keep the peace.

Par. Of honorable reckoning are you both;
And pity ’tis, you liv’d at odds so long.

But now, my lord, what say you to my suit?

Cap. But saying o’er what I have said before.
My child is yet a stranger in the world,
She hath not seen the change of fourteen years:
Let two more summers wither in their pride,
Ere we may think her ripe to be a bride.

Par. Younger than she are the happy mothers made.

6 "In sadness," i.e. seriously.
7 "In sadness," i.e. gravely.
8 "That is, "To make her exquisite beauty the subject of conversation."
9 "Estimation; account."
Cap. And too soon marri'd are those so early married.
Earth's up hath swallowed all my hopes but she,
She is the hopeful lady of my earth:
But woo her, gentle Paris, get her heart,
My will to her consent is but a part.
As she were within her scope of choice
Lies my consent and fair according voice.
This night I hold an old accustomed feast,
Whereeto I have invited many a guest,
Such as I love; and you, among the store,
One more most welcome makes my number more.
At my poor house look to behold this night
Break from the stars, that make dark heaven light:
Such comfort, as do lusty young men feel,
When well-apparel'd April on the heel
Of limping winter treads, even such delight
Among fresh female buds shall you this night
Inherit at my house: hear all, see all,
And like her most, whose merit most shall be:
Which, on more view of many, mine being one,
May agree in number, though in reckoning none:
Come, go with me.—Go, sirrah, trudge about
Through fair Verona; find those persons out,
Whose names are written there, and to them say,
[Giving a Peper.
My house and welcome on their pleasure stay.
[Exeunt Capulet and Paris.
Serv. Find them out, who, whose names are written here?
Is it written, that the shoemaker should meddle with his yard, and the tailor with his last, the fisher with his pencil, and the painter with his nets; but I am sent to find these persons, whose names are here writ, and can never find what names the writing person hath here writ. I must to the learned:—In good time.

Enter Benvolio and Romeo.
Ben. Tut, man! one fire burns out another's burn.
One pain is lessen'd by another's anguish; [Ing, Turn giddy, and be help by backward turning;
One desperate grief curing with another's languish:
Take thou some new infection to thy eye,
And the rank poison of the old will die.
Rom. Your plantain leaf is excellent for that.
Ben. For what? I pray thee?
Rom. For your broken shin.
Ben. Why, Romeo, art thou mad? Nor
Rom. Not mad, but bound more than a madman is:
Shut up in prison, kept without my food, [low.
Whipp'd, and tormented, and—Good-den, good fel-Serv. God gi' good den. [pray, sir, can you read?—Serv. Ay, mine own fortune in my misery. [Ing, But, Serv. Perhaps you have learn'd it without book;
I pray, can you read any thing you see?
Rom. Ay, if I know the letters, and the language.
Rom. Stay, fellow; I can read. [Reads.
Signior Martino, and his wife, and daughters; County Anselme, and his beauteous sisters; the lady widow of Vitruvio; Signor Placentio, and his lovely nieces; Mercutio, and his brother Valentine; mine uncle Capulet, his wife, and daughters; my fair niece Rosaline; Livio, Signior Vandelio, and his cousin Tybalt; Lucio, and the lively Helena."
A fair assembly; whither should they come?
Serv. Up.
Rom. Whither to supper?
Serv. To our house.
Rom. Whose house?
Shake, quoth the dove-house: 'twas no need, I trod,
To bid me trudge.
And since that time it is eleven years;
For then she could stand alone; nay, by the rood,
She could have run and waddled all about,
For even the day before she broke her Brow:
And then my husband—God be with his soul!
'A was a merry man,—took up the child:
"Yes," quoth he, "dost thou fall upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward, when thou hast more wit:
Wilt thou not, Julia?" and, by my holy-dam,
The pretty wretch left crying, and said—"Ay." To see now, how a jest shall come about?
I warrant, an I should live a thousand years,
I never should forget it: "Wilt thou not, Julia?" quoth he.
And, nay, fool, it *stinted, and said—"Ay."
Nurse. Yes, madam. Yet I cannot choose but laugh,
To think it should leave crying, and say—"Ay!"
And yet, I warrant, it had upon its brow
A bump as big as a young cockrel's stone,
A perilous knock: and it cried bitterly.
"Yea," quoth my husband, "fall stit upon thy face?
Thou wilt fall backward, when thou com'st to age;
Wilt thou not, Julia?" it *stinted, and said—"Ay."
Jul. And stint thou too, I pray thee, nurse, say I.
Nurse. Peace! I have done. God mark thee to his grace,
Thou wast the prettiest babe that e'er I nurs'd:
As I would live to see thee married once,
I have my wish.
La. Cap. Marry, that marry is the very theme
I came to talk of.—Tell me, daughter Juliet,
How stands your disposition to be married?
Jul. It is an honor that I dream not of.
Nurse. An honor! were not I thine only nurse,
I would say, thou hadst suck'd wisdom from thy aunt.
La. Cap. Well, think of marriage now: younger
Here in Verona, ladies of esteem, [than you,
Are made already mothers: by my count,
I was your mother, much upon these years
That you are now a maid. Thus, then, in brief:—
The valiant Paris seeks you for his love.
Nurse. Alas, my lady! such a man,
As all the world—Why, he's a man of wax.
La. Cap. Verona's summer hath not such a flower.
Nurse. Nay, he's a flower; in faith, a very flower.
La. Cap. What say you? can you love the gentle-
This night shall behold him at our feast: [man
Read o'er the volume of young Paris' face,
And find delight writ there with beauty's pen.
Examine every married lineament,
And see how one an other lends content;
And what obscure'd in this fair volume lies,
Find written in the margin of his eyes.
This precious book of love, this unbound lover,
To beautify him only lacks a cover:
The fish lives in the sea; and 'tis much pride,
For fair without the fair, is but a hide.
That book in many eyes doth share the glory,
That in gold clasps locks in the golden story;
So shall you share all that he doth possess
By having him, making yourself no less.
Nurse. No less? nay, bigger women grow by men.
La. Cap. Speak briefly, can you like of Paris' love?
I can't look to like, if look liking move;
But no more deep will I endart mine eye,
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly.

---

To "stint" is to stop.—"A man of wax," i.e., as well made as wax-work.

Enter a Servant.

Serr. Madam, the guests are come, supper served up,
You called, my young lady asked for, the Nurse, cursed in the pantry, and everything in extremity. I must hence to wait: I beseech you, follow straight.

La. Cap. We follow thee.—Juliet, the county stays.

Nurse. Go, girl, seek happy nights to happy days.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Street.

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benvolio, with five or six Maskers, Torch-Bearers, and others, preceded by a Drum.

Rom. What, shall this speech be spoke for our e.
Or shall we on without apology?

Ben. The date is out of such prolixity:
We'll have no Cupid hood-wink'd with a scarf,
Bearing a Tartar's painted bow of lath,
Searing the ladies like a crow-keeper;
Nor no without-book prologue, faintly spoke
After the prompter, for our entrance:
Let not the ghostly Hosts be, Wilt not, we will,
We'll measure them d measure, and be gone.

Rom. Give me a torch; I am not for this ambling:
Being but heavy, I will bear the light.

Mr. Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.

Rom. Not I, believe me. You have dancing shoes,
With nimble soles; I have a soul of lead,
So takes me to the ground, I cannot move.

Mr. You are a lover: borrow Cupid's wings,
And soar with them above a common bound.

Rom. I am too sore encumbered with his shaft,
To soar with his light feathers; and so bound.
I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe:
Under love's heavy burden do I sink.

Ben. And, to sink in it, should you burden love;
Too great oppression for a tender thing.
Rom. Is love a tender thing? it is too rough,
Too rude, too boisterous; and it pricks like thorn.

Mr. If love be rough with you, be rough with love;
Prick love for prickling, and you beat love down.

Give me a case to put my visage in:

Putting on a Mask.

A visor for a visor!—what care I?
What curious eye doth quote deformities?
Here are the beetle-brows shall blush for me.

Ben. Come, knock, and enter; and no sooner in,
But every man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A torch for me: let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the senseless brushes with their heels;
For I am provok'd with a grandsire phrase,—
I'll be a candel-holder, and look on:
The game was no'er so fair, and I am done.

Mr. Tut! dun's the mouse, the constable's own word.
If thou art dun, we'll draw thee from the mine
Of this save-reverence love, wherein thou stick'st
Up to the bare-head, the fair, the waste
By day-light, lo!.

Rom. Nay, that's not so.

Mr. I mean, sir, in delay
We waste our lights in vain, like lamps by day.
Take our good meaning, for our judgment
Five times in that, ere once in our five wits.

Rom. And we mean well in going to this mask,
But 'ts no wit to go.

---

Count. = Dance. — A torch-bearer was formerly on attendant to every troop of maskers. — Note: mark. — Alluding to the custom, previous to the use of carpets, of strewing rooms with rushes. — To burn day-light was a phrase applied to superficial actions.
SCENE V.—A Hall in Capulet's House.

Musicians waiting. Enter Servants.

1 Serv. Where's Potpan, that he helps not to take away! he shift a trencher! he scrape a trencher! 2 Serv. When good manners shall lie all in one or two men's hands, and they unwashed too, 'tis a foul thing.

1 Serv. Away with the joint-stools, remove the court-cupboard, look to the plate.—Good thou, save me a piece of marchpane; and, as thou lov'st me, let the porter let in Susan Grindstone, and Nell.—Antony! and Poppan! 2 Serv. Ay, boy! very.

1 Serv. You are looked for, and called for, asked for, and sought for, in the great chamber.

2 Serv. We cannot be here and there too.—Cheery, boys: be brisk awhile, and the longer liver take all.

[They retire.

Enter Capulet, &c., with the Guests, and the Maskers.

Cap. Welcome, gentlemen! ladies, that have their toes
Unplagued with corns, will have a bout with you:—
Ah, loy, my mistresses! which of you all
Will now deny to dance? she that makes daintly, she,
I'll swear, hath corns. Am I come near you now?
You are welcome, gentlemen! I have seen the day,
That I have worn a visor, and could tell
A whispering tale in a fair lady's ear,
Such none could please:—'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone.
You are welcome, gentlemen!—Come, musicians, play,
A hall! a 'hall! give room, and foot it, girls.

[Music plays, and they dance.

More light, ye knaves, and turn the tables up,
And quench the fire, the room is grown too hot.—
Ah! sirrah, this unlock'd for sport comes well.
Nay, sit, sir, sit, good cousin Capulet,
For you and I are past our dancing days:
How long is't now, since last yourself and
Were in a mask?

2 Cap. Illyr lady, thirty years.

1 Cap. What, man! 'tis not so much, 'tis not so
'Tis since the nuptial of Lucentio, [much:
Comes postcock as quickly as it will,
Some live and twenty years; and then we mask'd.

2 Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more: his son is elder, sir;
His son is thirty.

1 Cap. Will you tell me that?
His son was but a ward two years ago.

Rom. What lady is that, which doth enrich the band
Of young knight?

[Pointing to Juliet.

Sir, I know not, sir.

Rom. Of the doth teach the torches to burn bright.
It seems she hangs upon the cheek of night
Like a rich jewel in an Ethiope's ear,
Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear!
So shows a snowy dove troping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.
The measure done, I'll watch the hours of stand,
And touching hers, make blessed my rude hand.
Did my heart love till now? forswear it, sight!
I never saw true beauty till this night.

Tyb. This, by his voice, should be a Montague.—
Fetch me my rapier, boy.—[Exit Boy.] What! dares the shave

*The court-cupboard was a sideboard, or stand for plate.—
4 Marchpane was kind of sweet cake, composed of almonds,
5 Hail! an exclamation signifying make way! give place! make room!—Dance.
Scene I.

Come hither, cover'd with an antic face,
To cover and scorn at our solemnity.
Now, by the stock and honor of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin. [you so?]

1 Cap. Why, how now, kinsman? wherefore storm
Tyb. Uncle, this is a Montague, our foe;
A villain, that is hither come in spite,
To scorn at our solemnity this night.

1 Cap. Young Romeo, thou art a rogue.
Tyb. Thas he, that villain Romeo.
1 Cap. Content thee, gentle coz, let him alone,
He bears him like a portly gentleman;
And, to say truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth.
I would not for the wealth of all this town,
Here, in my house, do him dispossession;
Therefore, be patient, take no note of him:
It is my will; which if thou respect,
Show a fair presence, and put off these frows,
An ill-becoming semblance for a feast.

Tyb. It fits, when such a villain is a guest.
I'll not endure him.
He shall be endur'd:
What, goodman boy!—I say, ho shall;—go to;
1 Go to: am I the master here, or you?
You'll not endure him!—God shall mend my soul—
You'll make a mutiny among my guests.
You will set cock-a-hoop: you'll be the man.

Tyb. Why, uncle, 'tis a shame.
1 Cap. Go to, go to;
You are a saucy boy.—Is't so, indeed?—
This trick may chance to a saucy you:—I know what.
You must contrary me! marry, 'tis time—
Well said, my heart!—You are a b'princex: go:
Bo quiet, or—More light, more light!—for shame!
I'll make you quiet; What!—Cheerly, my hearts!
Tyb. Patience performe with wilful choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting.
I will withdraw: but this intrusion shall,
Now seeming sweet, convert to bitter gall. [Exit.

Rom. If I profane with my unworthiest hand
This holy shrine, the gentle fine is this—
My lips, two blushing pilgrims, ready stand
To smooth that rough touch with a tender kiss.

Jul. Good pilgrim, you do wrong your hand too much,
Which manner devotion shows in this;
For saints have hands that pilgrims' hands do touch,
And palm to palm is holy palmer's kiss.
Rom. Have not saints lips, and holy palmer's too?
Jul. Are, pilgrim, lips that they must use in prayer.
Rom. O! then, let saints, let lips do what hands do;
They pray, grant thou, lest faith turn to despair.
Jul. Saints do not move, though grant for prayers' sake.

Rom. Then move not, while my prayer's effect
Thus from my lips, by thine, my sin is purg'd.

Jul. Then have my lips the sin that they have took.

Jul. You kiss by the book. [Kissing her again.
Rom. What is her mother? [Juliet retires.
Nurse. Madam, your mother craves a word with you.
Rom. Nurse. What is her mother?

Jul. Her mother is the lady of the house,
And a good lady, and a wise, and virtuous,
I nurs'd her daughter, that you talk'd withal;
I tell you—he that can lay hold of her

Shall have the chinks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?
O. dear account! my life is my foe's debt.

Rom. Ay, so I fear; the more is my unrest.

1 Cap. Nay, gentlemen, prepare not to be gone;
We have a trilling foolish banquet towards;—
Is it c'en so? Why then, I thank you all;
I thank you, honest gentlemen; good night.

More torches here!—Come on, then let's to bed.
Ah, sirrah, by my fa, it waxes late;
I'll to my rest. [Going.

Jul. Come hither, nurse. What is yond gentleman?

Nurse. The son and heir of old Tiberio.
Jul. What's he, that now is going out of door?
Nurse. Marry, that, I think, be young Petruchio.
Jul. What's he, that follows here, that would not Nurse. I know not. [Exit.

Jul. Go, ask his name.—If he be married,
My grave is like to be my wedding bed.
Nurse. His name is Romeo, and a Montague; [Going and returning.
The only son of your great enemy.

Jul. My only love sprung from my only hate!
Too early seen unknown, and known too late!
Prodigious birth of love it is to me,
That I must love a loathèd enemy.

[Exeunt all Guests.
Nurse. What's this?—what's this?
Jul. A rhyme I learnt'd even now
Of one I dance'd withal. [One calls within, JULIET! Nurse. Aton, anon.—
Come, let's away; the strangers all are gone. [Exit.

Enter Chorus.

Now old desire doth in his death-bed lie,
And young affection gapes to be his heir:
That 'tis fair, for which love groan'd for, and would die,
With tender Juliet match'd, is now not fair.
Now Romeo is belov'd, and loves again,
Alike bewitch'd by the charm of looks;
But to his foe suppos'd he must complain,
And she stole love's sweet bait from fearful books;
Being held a foe, he may not have access
To breathe those sweeter words as lovers use to swear;
And she as much in love, her means much less
To meet her new-belov'd any where:
But passion lends them power, time means to meet
Tempering extremities with extreme sweet. [Exit.

ACT II.

Scene I.—An open Place, adjoining CAPULET's Garden.

Enter ROMEO.

Rom. Can I go forward, when my heart is here?
Turn back, dull earth, and find thy centre out.

[He climbs the Wall, and leaps down within it.

Enter BENVOLIO and MERCUTIO.

Ben. Romeo! my cousin Romeo! Romeo!
Mer. He is wise; and, on my life, hath stolen him home to bed.
Ben. He ran this way, and leapt this orchard wall.
Call, good Mercutio.
Mer. Nay, I'll conjure too.

* "Scath you," I. e. do you an injury. — * "A princex."
SCENE II.—CAPULET’S Garden.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. He jests at scars, that never felt a wound.

[Juliet appears above, at a window.]

But, soft! what light through yonder window breaks?

It is the east, and Juliet is the sun.

Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,

Who is already sick and pale with grief,

That thou, her maid, art far more fair than she:

Be not her maid, since she is envious;

Her vestal livery is but white and green,

And none but fools do wear it; cast it off.

It is my lady; O! it is my love;

O, that she knew she were so!

She speaks, yet she says nothing: what of that?

Her eye discourses, I will answer it.

I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks:

Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,

Having some business, do entreat her eyes
To twinkle in their spheres till they return.

What if her eyes were there, they in her head?

The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars,

As daylight doth a lamp: her eyes in heaven

Would through the airy region stream so bright,

That birds would sing, and think it were not night.

See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand!

O! that I were a glove upon that hand,

That I might touch that cheek.

Jul. Ah me!

Rom. She speaks:

O, speak again, bright angel! for thou art

As glorious to this night, being o’er my head,

As is a winged messenger of heaven

Unto the white-urned winding eye

Of mortals, that fall back to gaze on him,

When he bestrides the lacy-passing clouds,

And sails upon the bosom of the air.

Jul. O Romeo, Romeo! wherefore art thou Romeo?

Deny thy father, and refuse thy name;

Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,

And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Jul. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this?

Jul. 'Tis but thy name that is my enemy.

Thou art thyself, though not a Montague.

What’s Montague? it is nor hand, nor foot,

Nor arm, nor face, nor any other part

Belonging to a man. 0! be some other name.

What’s in a name? that which we call a rose,

By any other name would smell as sweet;

So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call’d,

Retain that dear perfection which he owes

Without that title.—Romeo, doff thy name;

And for thy name, which is no part of thee,

Take all myself.

Rom. I take thee at thy word.

[Starting forward.]

Call me but love, and I’ll be new baptiz’d;—

Henceforth I never will be Romeo.

[night.

Jul. What man art thou, that, thus bescreened in

So stumbllest on my counsel?

Rom. By a name

I know not now to tell thee who I am:

My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,

Because it is an enemy to thee:

Had I it to forget, I would not speak the word.

Jul. My ears have yet not drunk a hundred words

Of that tongue’s utterance, yet I know the sound.

Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?

Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee displease.

Jul. How canst thou hitter, tell me? and where—

The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb,

And the place death, considering who thou art,

If any of my kinsmen find thee here.

[walls.

Rom. With love’s light wings did I o’erperch these

For stony limits cannot hold love out:

And what love can do, that dares love attempt;

Therefore, thy kinsmen are no 4 let to me.

Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.

Rom. Alack! there lies more peril in thine eye,

Than twenty of their swords: look thou but sweet,

And I am proof against their enmity.

Jul. I would not for the world they saw thee here.

Rom. I have night’s cloak to hide me from their eyes;

And 4but thou love me, let them find me here:

My life was better ended by their hate,

Than death 5protracted, wanting of the love.

Jul. By whose direction found’st thou out this place?

Rom. By love, that first did prompt me to inquire;

He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.

I am no pilot: yet, wear thou as far

As that vast shore wash’d with the farthest sea,

I would adventure for such merchandise.

Jul. Thou know’st how the masks of night is on my face.

Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek,

For that which thou hast heard me speak to-night.

Fain would I dwell on form, fain, fain deny

What I have spoken: but farewell compliment.

4 Hinderance. — 4 But," in e. c. unles. — 5 Postponed.

5 Farewell compliment," i.e., farewell attention to forms.
SCENE III.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say—Ay; And I will take thy word; yet, if thou swearest, Thou may'st prove false: at lovers' perjuries, They say, Jove laughs. O, gentle Romeo! If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully: Or if thou think'st I am too quickly won, I'll frown, and be perverse, and say thee nay, So thou wilt win; but, else, not for the world. In truth, fare Montague, I am too fond, And therefore thou may'st think I have my honor light; But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true Than those that have more cunning to be strange. I should have been more strange, I must confess, But that thou over-heard'st, ere I was ware, My true love's passion: therefore pardon me; And not be stung thy yielding to light love, Which the dark night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I swear, That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops,— Jul. O! swear not by the moon, th' inconstant That monthly changes in her circled orb, [moon, Last that thy love prove likewise variable. Rom. What shall I swear by? Jul. Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self, Which is the god of my idolatry, And I shall believe thee.

Rom. If my heart's dear love— Jul. Well, do not swear. Although I joy in thee, I have no joy of this contract to-night: It is too rash, too unadvised, too sudden; Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be, Ere one can say it lighteneth. Sweet, good night! This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath, May prove a beauteous flower when next we meet. Good night, good night! I sweet reposes, and rest Come to my heart, as that within my breast! Rom. O! wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied? Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have to-night? Rom. Th' exchange of my love's faithfull vow for mine.

Jul. I gave thee mine before thou didst request it; And yet I would it were to give again. [pose, love? Rom. Wouldst thou withdraw it for what pur- Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again; And yet I wish but for the thing I have. My bounty is as boundless as the sea, My love as deep; the more I give to thee, The more I have, for both are infinite. [Nurse calls within. I hear some noise within: dear love, nede! Anon, good nurse!—Sweet Montague, be true. Stay but a little, I will come again.

Rom. O blessed, blessed night! I am afright, Being in night, all this is but a dream, Too fatterning-sweet to be substantial.

Re-enter JULIET above.

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and good night If that thy heat of love be honorable, [indeed, Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow, By one that I'll procure to come to thee, Where, and what time, thou wilt perform the rite; And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay, And follow thee my lord throughout the world.

Nurse. [Within.] Madam! Jul. I come, anon.—But if thou mean'st not well, I do bereave thee,—

Nurse. [Within.] Madam! Jul. By and by; I come.— To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief: To-morrow will I send.

* * * To be strange,* i. e., to be shy, distant.
Enter Romeo.

Rom. Good morrow, father.

Fri. Benedicite!

What early tongue so sweet saluteth me?—
Young son, it argues a distempered head,
So soon to bid good morrow to thy bed:
Care keeps his watch in every old man's eye,
And where care lodges, sleep will never lie:
But where a unused youth, with unstuff'd brain,
Doth cough his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign.
Therefore, thy carline doth me assure,
Thou art up-rous'd by some distemperature:
Or if not so, then here I hit it right—
Our Romeo hath not been in bed to-night.
Rom. True; the sweeter test was mine.

Fri. God pardon sin! wert thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly father; no;
I have forgot that name, and that name's woe.

Fri. That's my good son: but where hast thou been, then?

Rom. I'll tell thee, ere thou ask it me again.
I have been feasting with mine enemy;
Where on a sudden, one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded: both our remedies
Within thy help and holy physic lies:
I hear no hatred, blessed man; for, lo!
My intercession likewise steats my foe.

Fri. Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling shift. [Exit.

Rom. Then plainly know, my heart's dear love is
On the fair daughter of rich Capulet:
As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine;
And all combin'd, save what thou must combine
By holy marriage. When, and where, and how,
We met, we woo'd, and made exchange of vow,
I'll tell thee as we pass; but this I pray,
That thou consent to marry us to-day;
Fri. Holy Saint Francis! what a change is here!
Is Rosaline, whom thou didst love so dear,
So soon forsaken? young men's love, then, lies
Not truly in their hearts, but in their eyes.

Jean Maria! what a deal of brine
Hath wash'd thy sallow checks for Rosaline!
How much salt water thrown away in waste
To wash love lost, that of it doth not taste!
The sun not yet of sight from heaven clears,
Thy old groans ring yet in my ancient ears;
Lo! here upon thy cheek the stain doth sit
Of an old tear that is not wash'd off yet.
If e'er thou wast thyself, and these woes thine,
These and such woes were all for Rosaline:
And art thou chang'd? I pronounce this sentence, then—

Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.

Rom. Thou child'st me oft for loving Rosaline.

Fri. For doting, not for loving, pupil nine.

Rom. And 'bat'st me bury love.

Fri. Not in a grave,

To lay one in, another out to have.

Rom. I pray thee, chide not; she, whom I love now,

Doth grace for grace, and love for love allow:
The other did not so.

Fri. O! she knew well,
Thy love did read by rote, and could not spell.
But come, young waverer, come, go with me,
In one respect I'll thy assistant be:
For this alliance may so happy prove,
To turn your household's rancor to pure love.

Rom. O! let us hence; I stand on sudden haste.

Fri. Wisely, and slow; they stumble that run fast.

[Exeunt.]
SCENE IV.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

Rom. Good morrow to you both. What counterfeit did I give you?

Mer. The slip, sir, the *slip: can you not conceive?

Rom. Pardon, good Mercutio, my business was great; and in such a case as mine, a man may stand courteous.

Mer. That's as much as to say—such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the lams.

Rom. Meaning—to courtesy.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most courteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pink of courtesy.

Rom. Pink for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why, then is my *pump well flowered.

Mer. Well said: follow me this jest now, till thou hast worn out thy pump; that, when the single sole of it is worn, the jest may remain, after the wearing, solely singular.

Rom. O single-soled jest! solely singular for the singleness.

Mer. Come between us, good Benvolio, for my wits fail.

Rom. Switch and spurs, switch and spurs; or I'll cry a match.

Mer. Nay, if our wits run the wild-goose chase, I have done; for thou hast more of the wild-goose in one of thy wits, than, I am sure, I have in my whole five. Was I with you there for the goose?

Rom. Thou wast never with me for anything, when thou wast not there for the goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the ear for that jest.

Rom. Nay, good goose, bite not.

Mer. Why wit is a very bitter *sweeting; it is a most sharp sauce.

Rom. And is it not well served in to a sweet goose?

Mer. O! here's a wit of *cheverel, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad.

Rom. I stretch it out for that word—broad: which added to the goose, proves thee far and wide abroad—goose.

Mer. Why, is not this better now than groaning for love? now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo; now art thou what thou art, by art as well as by nature: for this driveling love is like a great natural, that runs rolling up and down to hide his bumble in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desirest me to stop in my tale against the hair.

Ben. Thou wouldst else have made thy tale large.

Mer. O! thou art deceived. I would have made it short; for I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant, indeed, to occupy the argument no longer.

Rom. Here's goodly *goer!

Enter Nurse and Peter.

Mer. A sail, a sail!

Ben. Two, two; a shirt, and a smock.

Nurse. Peter, pr'ythee give me my fan.

Mer. Pr'ythee, do, good Peter, to hide her face; for her fan's the fairer of the two.

Nurse. God ye good morrow, gentlemen.

Mer. God ye good fair gentlewoman.

Nurse. Is it good den?

Mer. *Tis no less, I tell you; for the bawdy hand of the dial is now upon the *spick of noon.

Nurse. Out upon you! what a man are you.

Rom. One, gentlemanwoman, that God hath made for himself to mar.

Nurse. But to be true, it is well said:—for himself to mar, quoth'ra?—Gentlemen, can any of you tell me where I may find the young Romeo?

Rom. I can tell you; but young Romeo will be older when you have found him, than he was when you sought him. I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nurse. You say well.

Mer. Yea! is the worst well? very well took, i'faith; wisely, wisely.

Nurse. If you be he, sir, I desire some confidence with you.

Ben. She will invite him to some supper.

Mer. A bawd, a bawd, a bawd! So ho! Mervei'

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No bawd, sir; mine is a hare, sir, in a lenten pie, that is something stale and hoar ere it be spent. An old hare b hoar, and an old hare hoar, 1 [Singing.

Is very good meat in Lent:

But a hare that is hoar, is too much for a score,

When it hoars ere it be spent.—

Romeo, will you come to your father's? we'll to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell, ancient lady;

Farewell, lady, lady, lady. 2 [Singing.

[Exeunt Mercutio and Benvolio.

Nurse. Marry, farewell!—I pray you, sir, what saucy merchant was this, that was so fell of his property?

Rom. A gentleman, nurse, that loves to hear himself talk; and will speak more in a minute, than he will stand to in a month.

Nurse. An 'a speak any thing against me, I'll take him down, an 'a were lustier than he is, and twenty such Jacks; and if I cannot, I'll find those that shall. Scoury knave! I am none of his flirt-gills; I am none of his *skimine-mates.—And thou must stand by, too, and suffer every knave to use me at his pleasure?–

Pet. I saw no man use you at his pleasure; if I had, my weapon should quickly have been out, I warrant you. I dare draw as soon as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrel, and the law on my side.

Nurse. Now, afore God, I am so vexe i., that every part about me quivers.—Scoury knave!—Pray you, sir, a word; and as I told you, my young lady bade me inquire you out: what she bid me say, I will keep to myself; but first let me tell ye, if ye should lead her in a fool's paradise, as they say, it were a very gross kind of behavior, as they say, for the gentlewoman is young; and, therefore, if you should deal double with her, truly, it were an ill thing to be offered to any gentlewoman, and very *wicked dealing.

Rom. Nurse, commend me to thy lady and mistress.

I protest unto thee,—

Nurse. Good heart! and, i' faith, I will tell her as much. Lord, lord! she will be a joyful woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her, nurse? thou dost not mark me.

Nurse. I will tell her, sir,—that you do protest; which, as I take it, is a gentlemanlike offer.

Rom. Bid her devise some means to come to it-shrift

* A pun on counterfeit money called *slips. 2 Pump well flowered. It was the custom to wear ribbons in the shoes, in the shape of flowers.—Seventing: an apple so named.—*Cherred, i.e., soft stretching leather.—Business. 4 *God ye good den, i.e., God give you a good even.

† Point.—Hoary; mouldy.—* Roguery.—* Swaggering companions.—* Confidence.
This afternoon; And there she shall at friar Laurence' cell Be shriv'd, and married. Here is for thy pains. Nurse. No, truly; sir; not a penny. Rom. Go to; I say, thou shall.

Nurse. This afternoon, sir? well, she shall be there. Rom. And stay, good nurse, behind the abbey-wall: Within this hour my man shall be with thee; And bring thee cords made like a tackled stair; Which to the high top-gallant of my joy Must be my convey in the secret night. Farewell!—Be trusty, and I'll' quite thy pains. Farewell!—Come to me thy mistress. [yon, sir. Nurse. Now, God in heaven bless thee!—Hark! What say'st thou, my dear nurse? Nurse. Is your man secret? Did you no' en' hear say, Two may keep counsel, putting one away? Rom. I warrant thee; my man is true as steel. Nurse. Well, sir; my mistress is the sweetest lady —Lord, lord!—when twas a little prating thing— O! there's a nobleman in town, one Paris, That would fain lay knife aside; but she, good soul, Had us lieve see a toad, a very toad, as see him. I anger her sometimes, and tell her that Paris is the proper man; but, I'll warrant you, when I say so, She looks as pale as any clout in the varsiar world. Doth not rosemary and Romeo begin both with a letter? Nurse. Ay, nurse; What of that? both with an R. Nurse. Ah, mock'r! that's the dog's name. R is for thee? no: I know it begins with some other letter; and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and rosemary, that it would do you good to hear it. Rom. Command me to thy lady. Nurse. Ay, a thousand times.—Peter! Pet. Anon? Nurse. Peter, take my fan, and go before. [Exit. SCENE V.—CAPELTY'S Garden. Enter JULIET. Jul. The clock struck nine, when I did send thee In half an hour she promis'd to return; [nurse; Perchance, she cannot meet him:—that's not so.— O! she is lame! love's heralds should be thoughts, Which ten times faster glide than the sun's beams Driving black shadows over lowering hills: Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love, And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings. Now is the sun upon the highest hill Of this day's journey; and from nine till twelve Is three long hours,—yet she is not come. Had she affections, and warm youthful blood, She'd be as swift in motion as a ball; My words would bandy her to my sweet love, And his to me: but old folks, seem as dead; Unwieldy, slow, heavy, and 3dull as lead. Enter Nurse and Peter. O God! she comes.—O honey nurse! what news? Hast thou met with him? Send thy man away. Nurse. Peter, stay at the gate. [Exit Peter. Jul. Now, good sweet nurse,—O lord! why look'st thou sad? Though news be sad, yet tell them merrily; If good, thou sh'mst the music of sweet news By playing it to me with so sour a face. Nurse. I am aweary, give me leave awhile.—

"Like a tackled stair," i.e., like stairs of rope in the tackle of a ship.

Fix, how my bones ache! What a jount have I had! Jul. I would, thou hadst my bones, and I thy news: Nay, come, I pray thee, speak;—good, good nurse, speak.

Nurse. Jesu, what haste! can you not stay awhile? Do you know, that I am out of breath? [Breath Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast To say to me—that thou art out of breath? The excuse that thou dost make in this delay Is longer than the tale thou dost excuse. Is thy news good, or bad? answer to that; Say either, and I'll stay the circumstance. Let me be satisfied, is't good or bad! Nurse. Well, you have made a simple choice; you know not how to choose a man: Romeo! no, no he; though his face be better than any man's, yet his leg exceeds all men's; and for a hand, and a foot, and a body,—though they be not to be talked on, yet they are past compare. He is not the flower of courtesy,—but, I'll warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.—Go thy ways, wench; serve God.—What, have you dined at home? Jul. No, no; but all this did I know before. What says he of our marriage? what of that? Nurse. Lord, how my head aches! what a head It beats as it would fall in twenty pieces. [have I: My back! o' the other side.—O, my back, my back!— Beshrew your heart for sending me about, To catch him death with jaunting up and down. Jul. I' faith, I am sorry that thou art not well, Sweet, sweet, sweet nurse, tell me, what says my love? Nurse. Your love says like an honest gentleman, And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome, And, I warrant, a virtuous.—Where is your mother? Jul. Where is my mother?—why, she is within: Where should she be! How oddly thou reply'st; "Your love says like an honest gentleman,— Where is your mother?" Nurse. O, God's lady dear! Are you so hot? Marry, come up, I trow; Is this the poultice for my aching bones? Henceforward do your messages yourself. Jul. Here's such a coil.—Come, what says Romeo? Nurse. Have you got leave to go to shift to-day? Jul. I have. Nurse. Then, lie you hence to friar Laurence' cell, There stays a husband to make you a wife: Now comes the wanton blood up in your cheeks; They'll be in scarlet straightway at my news. Hie you to church: I must another way, To fetch a ladder, by the which your love Must climb a bird's nest soon, when it is dark: I am the drudge, and toil in your delight, But you shall bear the burden soon at night. Go; I' ll to dinner: hie you to the cell. Jul. He to high fortune!—Honest nurse, fare-well. [Exit. SCENE VI.—FRIAR LAURENCE'S Cell. Enter Friar Laurence and ROMEO. Fri. So smile the heavens upon this holy act, That after-hours with sorrow chide us not! Rom. Amen, amen! but come what sorrow can, It cannot counterfeit the exchange of joy That one short minute gives me in her sight: Do thou but close our hands with holy words, Then love-devouring death do what he dare: It is enough I may but call her mine. Fri. These violent delights have violent ends, And in their triumph die: like fire and powder,
ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Public Place.

Enter Mercutio, Benvolio, Page, and Servants.

Ben. I pray thee, good Mercutio, let's retire: The day is hot, the Capulets abroad, And if we meet we shall not 'scape a brawl; For now these hot days, is the mad world stirring. Merc. Thou art like one of those fellows that, when he enters the confines of a tavern, claps me his sword upon the table, and says, "God send me need of thee!" and, by the operation of the second cup, draws him on the drawer, when, indeed, there is no need.

Ben. Am I like such a fellow?

Merc. Nay, an there were two such, we should have none shorty, for one would kill the other. Thou! why thou wilt quarrel with a man that hath a hair more, or a hair less, in his beard, than thou hast. Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking nuts, having no other reason, but because thou hast hazel eyes: what eye, but such an eye, would spy out such a quarrel? Thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egg is full of meat; and yet thy head hath been beaten as addle as an egg for quarrelling. Thou hast quarrelled with a man for coughing in the street, because he hath wakened thy dog that hath lain asleep in the sun. Didst thou not full out with a sailor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? with another, for tying his new shoes with old riband? and yet then wilt tutor me from quarrelling!

Ben. An I were so apt to quarrel as thou art, any man should buy the fee-simple of my life for an hour and a quarter.

Mer. The fee-simple? O simple!

* Conceit here means imagination.

Ben. By my head, here come the Capulets.

Enter Tybalt, and others.

Mer. By my heel, I care not.

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speak to them.— Gentlemen, good day! a word with one of you. Merr. And but one word with one of us? Come it with something; make it a word and a blow. Tyb. You will find me apt enough to that, sir, if you will give me occasion.

Mer. Could you not take some occasion without giving?

Tyb. Mercutio, thou consortst with Romeo.— Mer. * Consort! what! dost thou make us minstrels? an thou make minstrels of us, look to hear nothing but discords: here's my fiddlerstick; here's that shall make you dance. Zounds, consort!

Ben. We talk here in the public haunt of men: Either withdraw unto some private place, And reason coldly of thy grievances, Or else depart; were all eyes gaze on us. [Eaee: Mer. Men's eyes were made to look, and let them I will not budge for no man's pleasure, I.

Enter Romeo.

Tyb. Well, peace be with you, sir. Here comes my man.

Mer. But, I'll be hang'd, if, he wear your livery: Marry, go before to field, he'll be your follower; Your worship, in that sense, may call him—man. Tyb. Romeo, the hate I bear thee, can afford No better term than this—thou art a villain.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I have to love thee Doth much exceed the appertaining rage To such a greeting:—villain am I none; Therefore farewell: I see, thou know'st me not.

Tyb. Buy, this shall not excuse the injuries That thou hast done me: therefore, turn and draw. *Rom. I do protest, I never injur'd thee; But love thee better than thou canst devise, Till thou shalt know the reason of my love: And so, good Capulet,—which name I tender As dearly as mine own,—be satisfied. Mer. O calm, dishonorable, vile submission! *A la stoccata carries it away. [Dresses as Tybalt is going. Tybalt, you rat-catcher, will you walk? Tyb. What would'st thou have with me?

Mer. Good king of 4 cats, nothing, but one of you nine lives; that I mean to make bold withal, and, as you shall use me hereafter, да-heat the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your sword out of his pelter by the ears! make haste, lest mine be about your ears ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you. [Drawing. Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy rapier up.

Mer. Come, sir, your passado. [They fight. Rom. Draw, Benvolio; Beat down their weapons.—Gentlemen, for shame Forbear this outrage.—Tybalt—Mercutio— The prince expressly has bidden them desist In Verona streets.—Hold, Tybalt!—good Mercutio! [Exeunt Tybalt and his Partisans.

Mer. I am hurt—* Romeo supports Merc. A plague o' both the houses!—I am sped:— Is he gone, and hath nothing?

Ben. What! art thou hurt?

Mer. Ay, ay, a scratch, a scratch; marry, 'tis enough.
Where is my page?—go, villain, fetch a surgeon.

[Exit Page.]

Rom. Courage, man; the hurt cannot be much.

Mer. No, 'tis not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church door; but 'tis enough, 'twill serve: ask for me to morrow, and you shall find me a grave man. I am peppered, I warrant, for this world:—

a plague o' both your houses!—Zounds! a dog, a rat, a mouse, a cat, to scratch a man to death! a bragart, a rogue, a villain, that fights by the book of arithmetic!—Why, the devil, came you between us? I was hurt under your arm.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Help me into some house, Benvolio, Or I shall fall—A plague o' thy house! They have made women most of us.

I have it, and soundly too:—your houses!

[Exit Mercutio and Benvolio.]

Rom. This gentleman, the prince's near ally, My very friend, hath got his mortal hurt In my behalf; my reputation stain'd With Tybalt's slander, Tybalt, that an hour Hath been both cousin and sweet Juliet! Thy beauty hath made me effuminate, And in my temper soften'd valor's steel.

Re-enter Benvolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo! brave Mercutio's dead; That gallant spirit hath aspir'd the clouds, Which too untimely here did scorn the earth.

Rom. This day's black fate on more days doth descend: This but the woe others must end.

[Exit.]

Re-enter Tybalt.

Ben. Here comes the furious Tybalt back again.

Rom. Alive! in triumph! and Mercutio slain! Away to heaven, ² respective lenity, And fierce-ey'd fury be my conduct now!— Now, Tybalt, take the villain back again, That late thou gav'st me; for Mercutio's soul Is but a little way above our heads, Staying for thine to keep him company: Either thou, or I, or both, must go with him. [here,

Tyb. Thou, wretched boy, that dist ² consort him Shall with him hence.

Rom. This shalt determine that.

[They fight; Tybalt falls.]

Ben. Romeo, awake! begone! The citizens are up, and Tybalt slain:—

Stand not arm'd:—the prince will doom thee death, If thou art taken.—Hence!—begone!—awake!

Rom. O! I am fortune's fool.

Ben. Why dost thou stay? [Exit Romeo.]

Enter Citizens, &c.

1 Cit. Which way ran he that kill'd Mercutio? Tybalt, that murderer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

1 Cit. ² You, sir:—go with me: I charge thee in the prince's name, obey.

Enter Prince, attended; MONTAGUE, CAPULET, their Wives, and others.

Pria. Where are the vile beginners of this fray?

Ben. O noble prince! I can discover all The unucky manage of this fatal braw!— There lies the man, slain by young Romeo, That slew thy kinsman, brave Mercutio. [cubit]

La. Cap. Tybalt, my cousin!—O my brother's O prince! O cousin! husband! O, the blood is spill'd Of my dearest kinsman!—Prince, as thou art ² true, For blood of ours shed blood of Montague. O cousin, cousin!

Pria. ² Who began this bloody fray? ² say:

Beu. Tybalt, here shain, whom Romeo's hand did Romeo, that spoke him fair, bade him think How 'nice the quarrel was; and urg'd withal Your high displeasure:—all this, uttered Withambient breath, calm look, knees humbly bow'd, Could not take truce with the unruly spleen Of Tybalt, deaf to peace, but that he ilets With piercing steel at bold Mercutio's breast; Who, all as hot, turns deadly point to point, And, with a martial scorn, with one hand beats Cold death aside, and with the other sends It back to Tybalt, whose dexter arm Retorts it Thence. Romeo he cries aloud, "Hold, friends! friends, part!" and, swifter than His tongue, His agile arm beats down their fatal points, And 'twixt them rushes; underneath whose arm, An envious thrust from Tybalt hit the life Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fled; But hand by hand they come back to Romeo, Who had but newly enter'd revenge, And to't they go like lightning; for ere I Could draw to part them was stout Tybalt slain, And as he fell did Romeo turn and fly. This is the truth, or let Benvolio die.

La. Cap. He is a kinsman to the Montague; Affection makes him false, he spokes not true. Some twenty of them fought in this black strife, And all those twenty could but kill one life. I beg for justice, which thou, prince, must give: Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not live.

Pria. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio; Who now the price of his dear blood doth owe?

Mon. Not Romeo, prince, he was Mercutio's friend; His death condition but what the law should end, The life of Tybalt.

Pria. And for that offence, Immediately we do exile him hence: I have an interest in your late's proceeding, My blood for your rude braves doth lie a bleeding; But I'll ²merco you with so strong a fine, That Tybalt, and all your friends, with loss of blood, I will be deaf to pleading and excuses, Nor tears, nor prayers, shall purchase out abuses; Therefore, use none: let Romeo hence in haste, Else, when he's found, that hour is his last. Bear hence this body, and attend our will: Mercy but murders, pardoning those that kill.

[Exit.]

SCENE II.—A Room in CAPULET's House.

Enter JULIET.

Jul. Gallop apace, you fiery-footed steeds, Towards Phæbus' mansion; such a waggoner As Phæon would whip you to the west, And bring in cloudy night immediately. ² Spread thy close curtain, love-performing night, That 'enemies' eyes may wink, and Romeo Leap to these arms, untalk'd of, and unseen!—Lovers can see to do their amorous rites By their own beauties; or if love be blind, It best agrees with night.—Come, civil night, Thou sober-suited matron, all in black, And learn me how to lose a wasting match, Play'd for a pair of stainless maidenheads: ² "How nice," i. e., how trifling, unimportant.— ² "Amorous," i. e., punish by fine.— ² "Civil," i. e., grave solemn.
Hood my unnam'd blood, bating in my "check's;
With thy black mantle; till strange love, grown bold,
Think true love neted simple modesty.
Come night, come Romeo, come thou day in night;
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of white
Whiter than new snow on a raven's back.—
Come, gentle night; come, loving, black-brow'd night,
Give me my Romeo: and, when he shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little stars,
And he will make the face of heaven so fine,
That all the world will be in love with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun.—
O, I have bought the mansion of a love,
But not possess'd it; and though I am sold,
Yet set enjoy'd. So tedious is this day,
As is the night before some festival
To an impatient child that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. O! here comes my nurse.

Enter Nurse, with a Ladder of Cordes.
And she brings news; and ev'ry tongue, that speaks
But Romeo's name, speaks heavenly eloquence.—
Now, nurse, what news? What hast thou there?
That Romeo bade thee fetch?
[The cords

Nurse. Ay, ey, the cords. [Throws them down.
Jul. Ah me! what news? why dost thou bring thy hand
To disarray thy bands? [Dead!
Nurse. Ah well-a-day! he's dead, he's dead, he's
We are undone, lady, we are undone!
Ack! the day!—he's gone, he's kill'd, he's dead!
Jul. Can heaven be so envious?
Nurse. Romeo can,
Though heaven cannot.—O Romeo, Romeo!
Who ever thought that he? —Romeo!
Jul. What devil art thou, that dost torment me thus?
This torture should be rend'd in dismal hell.
Hath Romeo slain himself? say thou but 'I,
And that bare vowel, I shall poison more
Than the death-dar'ing eye of cockatrice;
I am not I, if there be such an I;
Or those eyes shut, that made thee answer, I.
If he be slain, say — I; or if not — no:
Brief sounds determine 2 or my weal or woe.
Nurse. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes,—
God save the mark!—here on his manly breast:
A piteous corse, a bloody piteous corse;
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedaub'd in blood,
All gloomy blood;— I am wound'd at the sight.
— Jul. O break, my heart!—poor bankrupt, break at
To prison eyes; ne'er look on liberty: [Unease!
Vile earth, to earth resign; end motion here,
And thou, and Romeo, press one heavy bier!
Nurse. O Tybalt, Tybalt! the best friend I had:
O courteous Tybalt! honest gentleman!
That ever I should live to see thee dead!
Jul. What storm is this that blows so contrary?
Is Romeo slaughter'd? and is Tybalt dead?
My dearest love's cousin, and my dearest lord!
Then, dreadful trumpet, sound the general doom;
For who is living, if those two are gone?
Nurse. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banish'd;
Romeo, that kill'd him, he is banish'd. [Blood!
Jul. O God!—did Romeo's hand shed Tybalt's
Nurse. It did, it did; also the day! it did.
Jul. O serpent heart, hid with a flowering face!
Did ever dragon keep so fair a cave?
Beautiful tyrant! fiend angelical!
Dove-feather'd raven! wolshif-ravening lamb!
Despised substance of divinest soul!
Just opposite to what thou justly art.

---These are terms of falconry. —
"Gaudy; showy. —
In Shakespeare's time the particle ay was written I. —
"Swomned."
Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate. Rom. Thou canst not speak of it thou dost not Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love, [feel. An hour but married, Tybalt murdered, Doting like me, and like me banished, [thy hair, Then might'st thou speak, then might'st thou tear And fall upon the ground as I do now, Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Fri. Arise; one knocks: good Romeo, hide thy self. [Knocking within. Rom. Not I; unless the breath of heart-sick gums, Mist-like, infold me from the search of eyes.

Fri. Hark, how they knock!—Who's there?— Romeo, arise; Thou wilt be taken.—Stay a while.—Stand up; [Knocking Run to my study.—By and by.—God's will! What wilfulness is this!—I come, I come. [Knocking. Who knocks so hard? whence come you? what's your will? Nurse. [Within.] Let me come in, and you shall I come from lady Juliet.

Fri. Welcome, then. Nurse. Enter Nurse. Nurse. O holy friar! O! tell me, holy friar, Where is my lady's lord? where's Romeo? [drunk. Fri. There on the ground, with his own tears made Nurse. O! he is even in my mistress' case; Just in her case.

Fri. O woeful sympathy! Piteous predicament! Nurse. Even so lies she, Bubbering and weeping, weeping and blubbering.— Stand up, stand up; stand, an you be a man: For Juliet's sake, for her sake, rise and stand; Why should you fall into so deep an O?

Rom. Nurse! [Rising suddenly. Nurse. Ah sir! ah sir!—Death is the end of all. Rom. Speak'st thou of Juliet? how is it with her? Doth she not think me an old murderer, Now I have stain'd the childhood of our joy With blood remov'd but little from her own? Where is she? and how doth she? and what says My conceit'd lady banish'd I love? [weepes. Nurse. O, she says nothing sir, but weeps and And now falls on her bed; and then starts up, And Tybalt calls; and then on Romeo cries, And then down falls again.

Rom. As if that name, Shot from the deadly level of a gun, Did murder her; as that name's cursed hand Murder'd her kinman.—O! tell me, friar, tell me, In what vile part of this anatomy Doth my name lodge? tell me, that I may sack The hateful mansion. [Drawing his sword. Fri. Hold thy desperate hand! Art thou a man? thy form cries out, thou art; Thy tears are womanish; thy wild acts denote The unreasoning fury of a beast: Unseemly woman, in a seeming man; Or ill-becoming beast, in seeming both! Thou hast amaz'd me: by my holy order, I thought thy disposition better temper'd. Hast thou slain Tybalt? wilt thou slay thyself, And slay thy lady, too, that lives in thee, 1 Dispute with thee of thy estate;" i.e., converses with thee of thy condition.—"'My conceit'd lady," i.e., 'may lady whose marriage, or relation to me, is concealed'.
I would have been a bed an hour ago.

Par. That time of woe called night to wo.

Madam, good night: commend me to your daughter.

La. Cap. I will, and know her mind early to-morrow.

To-night she's new'd up in her heaviness.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender

Of my child's love: I think, she will be ruff'd

In all respects by me; my more, I doubt it not.

Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed.

Acquaint her here of my son Paris's love,

And bid her mark you me, on Wednesday next—

But, soft! what day is this?

Par. Monday, my lord.

Cap. Monday? ha! ha! Well, Wednesday is too.

O' Thursday let it be:—o' Thursday, tell her,

She shall be married to this noble earl.

Will you be ready? do you like this haste?

We'll keep no great ado:—a friend, or two:—

For hark you, Tybalt being slain so late,

It may be thought we held him carelessly,

Being our kinsman, it we revel much.

Therefore, we must have some half our own friends,

And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?

Par. My lord, I would that Thursday were to-morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone; o' Thursday be it then.

Go you to Juliet, ere you go to bed,

Prepare her, wife, against this wedding-day.

Farewell, my lord, to my chamber, hio!

Afore now it is so very late, that we May call it early by and by.—Good night. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Juliet's Chamber.

Enter Romeo and Juliet.

Jul. Wilt thou be gone? it is not yet near day:

It was the nightingale, and not the lark,

That pierc'd the fearful hollowness of thine ear;

Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate tree.

Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.

Romeo. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,

No nightingale; look, love, what envious streaks

Do lase the heaven's face with fire abroad,

Night's candles are i'th' morn; nocturnal jades

Stand on the mast toppe on the misty mountain tops:

I must be gone and live, or stay and die.

Jul. Ye light is not day-light; I know it, I:

It is some meteor that the sun exhales,

To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,

And light thee on thy way to Mantua:

Therefore, stay yet; thou need'st not to be gone.

Romeo. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to death;

I am content, so thou wilt have it so.

I'll say, thou grey is not the morning's eye,

'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's bow;

Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat

The vaulty heaven so high above our heads:

I must be gone and live, or stay and die.

Come, death, and welcome: Juliet wills it so.

How'st, my soul? let's talk, it is not day.

Jul. It is, it is; hie hence, be gone, away!

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,

Straining harsh discord, and unpleasing sharps.

Some say, the lark makes sweet division;

This death is not so, for she divided change eyes:

O! now I would they had chang'd voices too,

Since arm from arm that voice doth us affray.

* Bold; adventurous.—4 "Reflex of Cynthia's bow," i. e., reflection of the moon.—5 Inclination.—6 A decision is music is a variations in melody.

Then, weep no more. I'll send to one in Mantua,—
Where that same banish'd runagate doth live,—
Shall give him such an unaccustomed'd dram
That he shall soon keep Tybalt company;
And then, I hope, thou wilt be satisfied.
Jul. Indeed, I never shall be satisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him—dead—
Is my poor heart so for a kinsman vex'd—
Mumad, if you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it,
That Romeo should, upon receipt thereof,
Soon sleep in quiet. O! how my heart aches
To hear him nam'd—and cannot come to him,
To wreak the love I bore my cousin Tybalt
Upon his body that hath slaughter'd him! [a man.
La. Cap. Find thou the means, and I'll find such
But now I'll tell thee joyful tidings, girl.
Jul. And joy comes well in such a needy time.
What are they? I beseech your ladyship! [child;
La. Cap. Well, well, thou hast a careful father,
One who, to put thee from thy heaviness,
Hath sorted out a sudden day of joy,
That thou expect'st not, nor I look'd not for.
Jul. Madam, in happy time, what day is that?
La. Cap. Marry, my child, early next Thursday
The gallant, young, and noble gentleman, [morn,
The county Paris, at Saint Peter's church
Shall happily make thee a joyful bride.
Jul. Now, by Saint Peter's church, and Peter too,
He shall not make me there a joyful bride.
I wonder at this haste; that I must wed
Ere he, that should be husband, comes to woo.
I pray you, tell my lord and father, madam,
I will not marry yet; and, when I do, I swear,
It shall be Romeo, whom you know I hate,
Rather than Paris.
La. Cap. These are news indeed!
Here comes your father; tell him so yourself.
And see how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse.

Cap. When the sun sets, the earth doth drizzle dew;
But for the sunset of my brother's son
It rains downright.—
How now! a conduit, girl! what! still in tears?
Evermore showering? In one little body
Thou Countess! is't a bark, a sea, a wind?
For still thy eyes, which I may call the sun,
Do ebb and flow with tears; the bark thy body is,
Sailing in this salt flood; the winds, thy sighs;
Who, raging with thy tears, and they with them,
Without a sudden calm, will overset
Thy tempest-tossed body.—How now, wife!
Have you deliver'd to her our decree? [thanks.
La. Cap. Ay, sir; but she will none, she gives you
I would, the fool were married to her grave. [wife.
Cap. Soft, take me with you, take me with you,
How! will she none? dost she not give us thanks?
Is she not proud? doth she not count her bless'd,
Unworthy as she is, that we have wrong'd
So worthy a gentleman to be her bridegroom?
Jul. Not proud you have, but thankful that you
Proudly have not been of what I hate, but have:
But thankful even for hate, that is meant love.
Cap. How now, how now, chop-logie! What is this?
Proud,—and, I thank you,—and, I thank you not—
And yet not proud?—Mistress minion, you,
Thank me no thankings, nor prou'd me no prou'ds,
But settle your fine joints against Thursday next.
To go with Paris to Saint Peter's church,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither.
Out, you green-sickness carion! out, you baggage!
You tallow face!
La. Cap. Fire, fie! what, are you mad?

Jul. Good father, I beseech you on my knees,
Hear me with patience but to speak a word.

Cap. Hang thee, young baggage! disobedient wretch!

I tell thee what,—get thee to church 'O Thursday,
Or never after look me in the face.

Speak not, reply not, do not answer me;
My fingers itch.—Wife, we scarce thought us bless'd
That God had lent us but this only child;
But now I see this one is too much,
And that we have a curse in her having.

Out on her, hiding!

Nurse. God in heaven bless her!

Jul. And why, my lady wisdom? hold your tongue,
Good prudent: smatter with your gossips; go.

Nurse. I speak no treason.

Cap. O! God ye good den.

Nurse. May not one speak?

Cap. Peace, you mummery fools!
Use your gravity o'er a gossip's bowl,
For here we need not it.

La. Cap. You are too hot.

Cap. God's bread! it makes me mad.

Day, night, hour, tide, time, having work, play,
Alone, in company, still my care hath been
To have her match'd; and having now provided
A gentleman of noble parentage
Of fair demesnes, youtiful, and noble train'd,
Stuff'd (as they say) with honorable parts,
Proportion'd as one's thought would wish a man,

And then to have a wretched pulling fool,
A whining b mummy, in her fortune's tender,
To answer—"I'll not wed,"—"I cannot love,"
"I am too young,"—"I pray you, pardon me.

But, if you will not well, I'll push you;
Grave where you will, you shall not house with me!

Look to't, think on't, I do not use to jest.

Thursday is near; lay hand on heart, advise.
And you be mine, I'll give you to my friend;
An you be not, hang, beg, starve, die the streets,
For, by my soul, I'll ne'er acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall never do thee good.

Trust to't, bethink you; I'll not be forewarned. [Exit.

Jul. Is there no pity in the clouds,
That sees into the bottom of my grief?

O, sweet my mother, cast me not away!
Delay this marriage for a month, a week;
Or, if you do not, make the bridal bed
In that dim monument where Tybalt lies.

La. Cap. Talk not to me, for I'll not speak a word.
Do as thou wilt, for I have done with thee. [Exit.

Jul. O God!—O nurse! how shall this be prevented?

My husband is on earth, my faith in heaven;
How shall that faith return again to earth,
Unless that husband send me from heaven
But, as I am bid?—Comfort me, and ease me.

1 Alack! that heaven should practice stratagems
Upon so soft a subject as myself!—

What say'st thou? hast thou not a word of joy?
Some comfort, nurse.

Nurse. Faith, here 'tis. Romeo
Is banished, and all the world to nothing,
That he dares ne'er come back to challenge you;
Or, if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then, since the case so stands as now it doth, I think it best you married with the county.
O! he's a lovely gentleman;
Romeo's a dishel'd to him: an eagle, madam,

Hath not so green, so quick, so fair an eye,
As Paris hath. Beshrew my very heart,
I think you are happy in this second match,
For it excels your first: or if it did not,
Your first is dead; or 'twere as good he were,
As living here and you no use of him.

Jul. Speaketh thou from thy heart?

Nurse. And from my soul too;
Or else beashrew them both.

Jul. Amen!—

Nurse. What?

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marvellous much.
Go in: and tell my lady I am gone,
Having disples'd my father, to Laurence' cell,
To make confession, and to be absolv'd.

Nurse. Marry, I will; and this is wisely done. [Exit.

Jul. Ancient damnation! O, most wicked fiend!
Is it more sin to wish me thus forsworn,
Or to dispose my lord with that same tongue
Which she hath praised him with above compare
So many thousand times?—God the counselor;
Thou and my bosom henceforth shall be twain.

I'll to the friar, to know his remedy;
If all else fail, myself have power to die. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Friar Laurence's Cell.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris.

Fri. On Thursday, sir! the time is very short.
Par. My father Capulet will have it so;
And I am nothing slow to shew his haste.

Fri. You say, you do not know the lady's mind:
Uneven is the course; I like it not.

Par. Immoderately she weeps for Tybalt's death,
And, therefore, have I little talk'd of love;
For Venus smiles not in a house of tears.

Now, sir, her father counts it dangerous,
That she doth give her sorrows so much 2 way,
And in his wisdom hopes our carriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears;
Which, too much minded by herself alone,
May be put by her from society.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?

Fri. I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.

[Aside. Look, sir, here comes the lady towards my cell.

Enter Juliet.

Par. Happily met, my lady, and my wife.
Jul. That may be, sir, when I may be a wife.
Par. That may be, must be, love, on Thursday next.
Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. That's a certain text.
Par. Come you to make confession to this father?
Jul. To answer that, I should confess to you.
Par. Do not deny to him that you love me.
Jul. I will confess to you that I love him.
Par. So will you, I am sure, that you love me.
Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price,
Being spoke behind your back, than to your face.

Par. Poor soul, thy face is much abus'd with tears.
Jul. The tears have got small victory by that;
For it was bad enough before their spite. [report.
Par. Thou wrong'at it, more than tears, with that
Jul. That is no slander, sir, which is a truth;
And what I spake, I spake it to my face.
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slander'd it.
Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine own.

Are you at leisure, holy father, now,
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?

Fri. My leisure serves me, pensive daughter, now.—

My lord, we must entreat the time alone.

Par. God shield I, I should disturb devotion!—

Juliet, on Thursday early will I rouse you:

Till then, adieu; and keep this holy kiss.

[Exit Paris.

Jul. O! shut the door; and when thou hast done so,

Come weep with me; past hope, past cure, past help!

Fri. O! Juliet! I already know thy grief;

It straights me past the compass of my wits;

I hear thou must, and nothing must proscribe it,

On Thursday next be married to this 2 count.

Jul. Tell me not, friar, that thou hast'st of this,

Unhappy me! For do I not perceive it?

If in thy wisdom thou canst give no help,

Do thou but call my resolution wise,

And with this knife I'll help it presently.

[Shewing it.

God join'd my heart and Romeo's, thou our hands;

And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,

Shall be the * label to another deed,

Or may true heart with treacherous revolt

Turn to another, this shall shay them both.

Therefore, out of thy long-experience'd time,

Give me some present counsel; or, behold,

Twixt my extremes and me this bloody knife

Shall play the * umpire; arbitrating that,

Which the *commission of thy years and art

Could to no issue of true honor bring.

Be not so long to speak; I long to die,

[Offers to strike.

Fri. Hold, daughter! I do spy a kind of hope,

Which craves as desperate an execution

As that is desperate which we would prevent.

If, rather than to marry thy county lord,

Thou hast the strength of will to stay thyself,

Then is it likely thou wilt undertake

A thing like death to chide away this shame,

That co'gst with death himself to scape from it;

And, if thou dar'st, I'll give thee remedy.

Jul. O! bid me keep, rather than marry Paris,

From off the battlements of yonder tower;

Or walk in thievish ways; or be a knave

Where serpents are; chain me with roaring bears;

O hide me nightly in a charnel-house,

O'er-cover'd quite with dead men's rattling bones,

With rocky slanks, and yellow chapless sculls;

Or bid me go into a new-made grave,

And hide me with a dead man in his shroud;

Things that to hear them told have made me tremble;

And I will do it without fear or doubt,

To live an unsta'nd'd wife to my sweet love.

Fri. Hold, then; go home, be merry, give consent

To marry Paris. Wednesday's to-morrow;—

To-morrow night look thou that thou lie alone,

Let not thy nurse lie with thee in thy chamber:

Take thou this phial, being then in bed,

And this distilled liquor drink me thoroughly.

When, presently, through all thy veins shall run

A cold and drowsy humor; for no pulse

Shall keep his native progress, but successe;

No warmth, no breath, shall testify thou livest;

The roses in thy lips and cheeks shall fade

To pale ashes; thy eyes' windows fall,

Like curtains when he shuts the day of life;

Each part, deprived of ample government,

Shall, stiff and stark and cold, appear like death.

And in this borrow'd likeness of shrunk death

Thou shalt continue two and forty hours,

And then awake as from a pleasant sleep.

Now, when the bridegroom in the morning comes

To rouse thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:

Then, as the manner of our country is,

In thy best robe uncover'd on the bier,

Be borne to burial in thy kindred's grave;

Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,

Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie.

In the mean time, against thou shalt awake,

Shalt Romeo by my letters know our drift;

And hither shall be come, and he and I

Will watch thy waking, and that very night

Shall Rome hear this hence to Mantua.

And this shall free thee from this present shame,

If no unconstant *toy, nor womanish fear,

Abate thy valor in the acting it.

Jul. Give me, give me! O! tell me not of fear.

Fri. Hold; get you gone: be strong and prosperous.

In this behalf. I'll send a friar with speed

To Mantua, with my letters to thy lord.

Jul. Love, give me strength, and strength shall help afford.

Farewell, dear father. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A Room in Capulet's House.

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, Nurse, and Servants.

Cap. So many guests invite as here are writ.—

[Exit Servant.

Sibrah, go hire me twenty cunning cooks.

2 Serv. You shall have none ill, sir; for I'll try if they can lick their fingers.

Cap. How can they try them so?

2 Serv. marry, sir, 'tis an ill cook that cannot lick his own fingers: therefore, he that cannot lick his fingers goes not with me.

Cap. Go, begone.—

[Exit Servant.

We shall be much unfurnished for this time.

What, is my daughter gone to Friar Laurence?

Nay, now, forsooth.

Cap. Well, he may chance to do some good on her,

A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is.

[Exit Capulet.

Enter Juliet.

Nurse. See, where she comes from *shurt with merry look.

Cap. How now, my headstrong! where have you been gadgling?

Jul. Where I have learned't to repent the sin

Of disobedient opposition

To you, and your behets, and am expou'n'd

By holy Laurence to fall prostrate here, [Kneeling.

And beg your pardon. Pardon, I beseech you:

Henceforward I am ever ruled by you.

Cap. Send for the county: go tell him of this.

I'll have this knot untied up to-morrow morning.

Jul. I met the youthful lord at Laurence's cell;

And gave him what becoming love I might,

Not stepping o'er the bounds of modesty.

Cap. Why, I am glad at' this is well,—stand up:

This is as't should be. Let me see the county:

Ay, marry, go, I say, and fetch him hither.

Now, afore God, this reverend holy friar,

All our whole city is much bound to him.

Jul. Nurse, will you go with me into my closet,

To help me sort such needful ornaments

As you think fit to furnish me to-morrow?

4 No unconstant toy, i. e., no fastidious freak; no light prices; no change of fancy.—Confession.

The seals of deeds were formerly appended on distinct clips or tabs affixed to the deed.— "Shall play the umpire," i.e., shall decide the struggle between me and my distress.— Authority; power.
Ah, black! Is it not like, that I?
So early waking,—what with balsam's smells,
And shrieks like madrigals torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, heaving them, ran mad;—
O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,
Environed with all these hideous sounds,
And madly play with my forefathers' joints,
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?
And, in this rage, with some great kinamount's bone,
As with a club, dash out my desperate brains?
O, look! methinks, I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did split his body
Upon a rapier's point.—Stay, Tybalt, stay!—
Romeo! Romeo! there's a drink—drink to thee.
[She throws herself on the bed.]

SCENE IV.—Capulet's Hall.

Enter Lady Capulet and Nurse.

La. Cap. Hold; take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse. [A l椑. Nurse. They call for dates and quinces in the Enter Capulet.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir! the second cock hath crow'd,
The curfew bell hath rung, 'tis three o'clock.—
Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica:—
Spare not for cost. Nurse. Go, go, go cot-queen, go.
Get you to-bed: 'tis night, you'll be sick to-morrow
For this night's watching. [now

Cap. No, not a whit. What! I have watch'd ere
All night for lesser cause, and ne'er been sick.
La. Cap. Ay, you have been a mouse-hunt in your time;
But I will watch you from such watching now.

[Exeunt Lady Capulet and Nurse. Cap. A jealous-head, a jealous-head!—Now, fel-
What's there? [low,
Enter Servants, with Spits, Logs, and Baskets.
1 Serv. Things for the cook, sir; but I know not want.
Cap. Make haste, make haste. [Exit 1 Serv.—
Sirrah, fetch drier logs:
Call Peter, he will show where they are.
2 Serv. I have a head, sir, that will find out logs,
And never trouble Peter for the matter. [Exit.
Cap. 'Mass, and well said; a merry whoreson, ha! Thou shalt be master-head.—Good faith! 'tis day:
The county will be here with music straight,
[Music within.
For so he said he would. I hear him near.—
Nurse!—Wife!—what, ho!—what, nurse, I say!—
Enter Nurse.
Go, waken Juliet; go, and trim her up:
I'll go and chat with Paris.—He, make haste,
Make haste; the bridgroom he is come already.
Make haste, I say. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Juliet's Chamber; Juliet on the Bed.

Enter Nurse.

Nurse. Mistress!—what, mistress!—Juliet!—fast,
I warrant:—
Why, lamb!—why, lady!—he, you snug-a-bed!—
Why, love, I say!—madam—sweet-heart!—why, bride!—
[Now:
What! not a word?—You take your pennyworths
Sleep for a week; for the next night, I warrant,
*Distracted.—"The pastry," I e, the room where the pastry was made.
Enter Lady Capulet.

La. Cap. What noise is here?

Nurse. O lamentable day!

La. Cap. What is the matter?

Nurse. Look, look! O heavy day!

La. Cap. O me! O me!—my child, my only life,
Revive, look up, or I will die with thee—
Help, help!—call help.

Enter Capulet.

Cap. For shame! bring Juliet forth; her lord is come.

[The day]

Nurse. She's dead, deceas'd; she's dead; alack
La. Cap. Alack the day! she's dead, she's dead, she's dead.

Cap. Ha! let me see her.—Out, alas, she's cold;
Her blood is settled, and her joints are stiff;
Life and these lips have long been separated;
Death lies on her, like an unfruitful fruit
Upon the sweetest flower of all the field.

Nurse. O lamentable day!

La. Cap. Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak.

Enter Friar Laurence and Paris, with Musicians.

Fri. Come, is the bride ready to go to church?

Cap. Ready to go, but never to return.

O son! the night before thy wedding day
Hath death lain with thy wife; there she lies,
Flower as she was, deflowered by him.
Death is my son-in-law, death is my heir;
And my daughter he hath wedded. I will die,
And leave him all; life, living, all is death's!

Par. Have I thought to see this morning's face,
And shall it give me such a sight as this?

La. Cap. Accursed, unhappy, wretched, hateful day!
Most miserable hour, that e'er time saw
In lasting labor of his pilgrimage!
But one, poor one, one poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight.

Nurse. O wo, O woful, woful day!
Most lamentable day! most woful day,
That ever, ever, I did yet behold!
O day! O day! O day! O hateful day!
Never was seen so black a day as this:
O woful day, O woful day!

Par. Beguil'd, divorced, wronged, spited, slain!
Most detestable death, by thee beguil'd,
By cruel death thee quite overthrown,—
O love! O life!—not love, but love in death!

Cap. Desp'la, distressed, hated, marty'd, kill'd!
Uncomfortable time, why can'st thou now
To murder, murder our solemnity?

O child! O child!—my soul, and not my child!
Dead art thou!—slack! my child is dead;
And with my child my joys are buried.

Fri. Peace, peace! for shame! confusion's cure lives In these confusions. Heaven and yourself
Had part in this fair maid, now heaven hath all;
And all the better is it for the maid:

Your part in her you could not keep from death,
But heaven keeps his part in eternal life.

The love you sought was her promotion,
For 'twas your heaven she should be advance'd;
And weep ye now, seeing she is advance'd
Above the clouds, as high as heaven itself?
O! in this love you love your child so ill,
That you run mad, seeing that she is well;
She's not well married that lives married long,
But she's best married that dies married young;
Dry up your tears, and stick your rosemary
On this fair corse: and, as the custom is,
In all her best array bear her to church;
For though fond nature bids us all lament,
Yet nature's tears are reason's merriment.

Cap. All things, that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral:
Our instruments to melancholy bells;
Our wedding cheer to a sad burial feast;
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change;
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse,
And all things change them to the contrary.

Fri. Sir, go you in,—and, madam, go with him;—
And I will, sir Paris,—every one prepare
To follow this fair corse unto her grave.
The heavens do lower upon you, for some ill;
Move them no more, by crossing their high will.

1 Mus. *Faith, we may put up our pipes, and be gone,
Nurse. Honest good fellows, ah! put up, put up; for, well you know, this is a piti"f case.

[Exeunt Nurse.

1 Mus. Ay, by my troth, the case may be amended.

Enter Peter.

Pet. Musicians, O, musicians! "Heart's ease, Heart's ease!" O! an you will have me live, play — "Heart's ease!"

1 Mus. Why "Heart's ease"?

Pet. O, musicians! because my heart itself plays "My heart is full of woe!" O! play me some merry dump, to comfort me.

2 Mus. Not a dump we: 'tis no time to play now.

Pet. You will not, then?

Mus. No.

Pet. I will, then, give it you soundly.

1 Mus. What will you give us?

Pet. No money, on my faith; but the b gleck: I will give you the minstrel.

1 Mus. Then, will I give you the serving-creature.

Pet. Then, will I lay the serving-creature's dagger on your pate. I will carry no crotches: I'll re you, I'll fa you. Do you note me?

1 Mus. An you re us, and fa us, you note us.

2 Mus. Pray you, put up your dagger, and put out your wit.

Pet. Then have at you with my wit. I will dry-beat you with my iron wit, and put up my iron dag-

—Answer me like men: .

When grieving grief the heart doth wound,
And dolceful minds the mind oppresses,
Then music, with her silver sound;
Why, "silver sound!" why, "music with her silver sound!" What say you, Simon Catling?

1 Mus. Marry, sir, because silver hath a sweet sound.

* Dumps were heavy mournful tunes.—To gleck is to scoff; and a gleckman signified a minstrel.
Of ill-shap’d fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Green earthen pots, blindlins, and musty seeds,
Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses,
Were thinly scatter’d to make up a show.
Noting this penury, to myself I said—
And if a man did need a poison now,
Whose safe is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a canthif wretch would sell it him.
Of this same thought did I forsake my need,
And this same needy man must sell it me.
As I remember, this should be the house:
Being holiday, the beggar’s shop is shut.—
What, ho! Apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?

Rom. Come hither, man.—I see, that thou art
Hold, there is forty ducats: let me have [poor;
A dram of poison; such soon-spedding *geer
As will dispurse itself through all the veins,
That the life-wearis may fly as dead
And that the trunk may be discarg’d of breath
As violently, as nasty powder fir’d
Doth hurry from the fatal cannon’s wound.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua’s law
Is death to any he that uttereth them.

Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness,
And fear’st to die? And famine is in thy cheeks,
Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes,
Contempt and beggary hang on thy back,
The world is not thy friend, nor the world’s law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then, be not poor, but break it, and take this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will,
And drink it off; and, if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.

Rom. There is thy gold; worse poison to men’s souls,
Doing more murders in this loathsom world, [sell:
Than these poor compounds that thou may’st not
I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none.
Farewell; buy food, and get thyself in flesh.—
Come, cordial, and not poison, go with me
To Juliet’s grave, for there must I use thee.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. Friar Laurence’s Cell.

Enter Friar John.

John. Holy Francisian friar! brother, ho!

Enter Friar Laurence.

Laurence. This same should be the voice of friar John.—
Welcome from Mantua! what says Romeo?
Or, if his mind be writ, give me his letter.

John. Going to find a bare-foot brother out,
One of our order, to associate me,
Here in this city visiting the sick,
And finding him, the searchers of the town,
Suspecting that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did reign,
Seal’d up the doors, and would not let us forth;
So that my speed to Mantua there was stay’d.

Laurence. Who bare my letter, then, to Rome?

John. I could not send it,—here it is again,—

[Giving it.

Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearful were they of infection.

"Geer," i. e., stuff.
Live, and be prosperous; and farewell, good fellow.

_Bat._ For all this same, I'll hide me here about:
His looks I fear, and his intents I doubt.
[Exit.

_Rom._ Thou dostestable maw, thou wond of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsel of the earth,
Thus I ene thy rotten jaws to open,

[Breaking open the Moniment.

And, in despite, I'll cram thee with more food!

_Par._ This is that banish'd haughty Montague,
That murder'd my love's cousin,—with which grief,
It is supposed, the fair creature died,—
And here is come to do some villainous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him,—

[Advancing.

Stop thy unhallow'd tol, vile Montague.
Can vengeance be purs'd farther than death?
Condemned villain, I do apprehend thee:
Obey, and go with me; for thou must die.

_Rom._ I must, indeed; and therefore came I hither.

Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man;
Fly hence and leave me,—think upon these gone;
Let them allright thee. —I beseech thee, youth,
Put not another sin upon my head,
By urging me to fury: —O! be gone.
By heaven, I love thee better than myself.
For I came hither arm'd against myself.
Stay not, be gone:—live, and hereafter say—
A madman's mercy hale thee run away.

_Par._ I do defy thee commissneration,
And apprehend thee for a felon here.

_Rom._ wilt thou provoke me? then, leave at thee,
boy.

[They fight.

_Page._ O Lord! they fight: I will go call the watch.

[Exit Page.

_Par._ O! I am slain.
_Friar._ —If thou be merciful,
Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet.

_Rom._ In faith, I will.—Let me peruse this face:—
Mercutio's kinsman noble county Paris!—

What said my man, when my betossed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think,
He told me, Paris should have married Juliet:
_Said he not so? or did I dream it so?
Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it was so?—O! give me thy hand,

[Taking it. One writ with me in sour misfortune's book!
I'll bury thee in a triumphant grave,—
A grave? O, no! a lantern, slaughter'd youth,
For here lies Juliet; and her beauty makes
This vault a feasting presence full of light.
Death, lie thou there, by a dead man inter'd.

_Leaping Paris in the Moniment._

How oft, when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry, which their keepers call
A lightning before death: O! how may I
Call this a lightning?—O, my love! my wife!
Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:
Thou art not couped' d; beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips, and in thy cheeks.
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.—
Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet?
Of what more favor can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain,
To sunder his that was thine enemy?
Forgive me, cousin!—Ah! dear Juliet,
Why art thou yet so fair? —I will believe
That unsubstantial death is amorous:
And that the lean abhorred monster keeps
Thee here in dark to be his paramour.

Presence-chamber.
For fear of that I still will stay with thee,
And never from this palace of dim night.
Depart again: here, here will I remain
With worms that are thy chambermaids; O! hero
Will I set up my everlasting rest,
And shake the yoke of imbuspicious stars.
From this world-wearied flesh.—Eyes, look your last;
Arms, take your last embrace; and lips, O you,
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death.

Come bitter | conduct, come, unsavory guide!
Thou desperate pilot, now at once run on
The dashing rocks thy sea-sick weary bark.
Here's to my love! | [Drinks.] O, true apothecary!
Thy drugs are quick.—Thus with a kiss I die.

[Dies near JULIET.]

Enter, at the other End of the Churchyard, Friar Laurence, with a Lantern, Cross, and Spade; and Balthasar following.

Fri. Saint Francis be my speed! how oft to-night Have my old feet stumbled at graves!—Who's there?
Bal. Here's one, a friend, and one that knows you well.
Fri. Bliss be upon you! Tell me, good my friend,
What torch is yond?—that thinly lends his light
To grubs and eyless souls? as I alack, It burns in the Capulets' monument.
Bal. It doth so, holy sir; and there's my master,
One that you love.
Fri. Who is it?
Bal. Romeo.
Fri. How long hath he been there?
Bal. Full half an hour.
Fri. Go with me to the vault.
Bal. I dare not, sir.
My master knows not, but I am gone hence;
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents.
Fri. Stay, then, I'll go alone.—Fear comes upon O! much I fear some ill unthriftly thing.
Bal. As I did sleep under this yew-tree here,
I dreamt my master and another fought,
And that my master slew him.

Fri. Romeo! — [Advancing.
Alack, alack! what blood is this, which stains
The stony entrance of this sepulchre? —
What mean these masterless and gory swords
To lie discolor'd by this piteous peace!
[Entering the Monument.
And steep'd in blood?—Ah! what an unkind hour Is guilty of this lamentable change! —
The lady stirs.

JULIET wakes.
Jul. O, comfortable friar! where is my lord?
I do remember well where I should be,
And there I am.—Where is my Romeo?

[Noise within.
Fri. I hear some noise.—Lady, come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep.
A greater power than we can contradict
Hath thwarted our intents: come, come away.
Thy husband in thy bosom there lies dead;
And Paris too: Come, I'll dispose of thee
Among a sisterhood of holy nuns.
Stay not to question, for the watch is coming;
Come, go, good Juliet. — [Noise again.] I dare no longer stay.

[Exit.
Jul. Go, get thee hence, for I will not away.
What's here? a cup, clos'd in my true love's hand?
Poison, I see, hath been his remorseless end. —
Oh churl! drink all, and let no friendly drop,
To help me after?—I will kiss thy lips;
Haply, some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative. — [Kisses kim.
Thy lips are warm!
1 Watch. [Within.] Leauk, boy:—where way?
Jul. Yea, noise?—[Then I'll be brief. O happy dagger!
[Snatching Romeo's Dagger.
This is thy sheath; — [Stabs herself; ] there's rest, and let me die.
[Dies.

Enter Watch, with the Page of Paris.

Page. This is the place; there, where the torch doth burn.

[churchyard.
1 Watch. The ground is bloody: search about the Go, some of you; who'er you find, attach.
2 Watch. Hold him in safety, till the Prince come.
Enter another Watchman, with Friar Laurence.
3 Watch. Here is a friar, that trembles, sighs, and weeps: We took this mattock and this spade from him,
As he was coming from this churchyard side.
1 Watch. A great suspicion: stay the friar too.

Enter the Prince and Attendants.

Prince. What misadventure is so early up,
That calls our person from our morning rest?

Enter Capulet, Lady Capulet, and others.
Cop. What should it be, that they so shriek abroad?
La. Cop. O! the people in the street cry Romeo,
Some Juliet, and some Paris; and all run
With open outcry toward our monument. — [ears
Prince. What fear is this which startles in your 1 Watch. Sovereign, here lies the county Paris And Romeo dead, and Juliet, dead before, [sine;
Warm and new kill'd. — [ner comes.
Prince. Search, seek, and know how this foul murder
1 Watch. Here is a friar, and slaughter'd Romeo's
With instruments upon them, fit to open — [man,
These dead men's tombs. — [bleeds!
Cop. O, heaven!—O, wife! look how our daughter
This dagger hath mis'ta'en,—for, lo! his —house
Is empty on the back of Montague,
And is mis-sheathed in her daughter's bosom.
La. Cop. O me! this sight of death is as a bawl,
That warns my old age to a sepulchre.

Enter Montague and others.

Prince. Come, Montague; for thou art early up,
To see thy son and heir more early down.
Mon. Alas, my liege, my wife is dead to-night.
Grief of my son's exile hath stopp'd her breath.
What further woe conspires against mine age?
Prince. Look, and thou shalt see.
Mon. O thou unnatural! what manners is in this,
To press before thy father to a grave?
Prince. Seal up the mouth of —entry for a while,
Till we can clear these ambiguities.

* Conductor.

b "His house," L. & e., its (the dagger's) scabbard. —"On the back:" the dagger was acutely worn behind the back.
And know their spring, their head, their true descent;
And then will I be general of your woes,
And lead you even to death. Mean time forbear,
And let mischance be slave to patience. —

Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Prince. Then, say at once what thou dost know in
Fri. I will be brief, for my short date of breath
Is not so long as is a tedious tale.
Romeo, there dead, was husband to that Juliet;
And she, there dead, that Romeo’s faithful wife:
I married them; and their stolen marriage-day
Was Tybalt’s dooms-day, whose untimely death
Banish’d the new-made bridegroom from this city;
For whom, and not for Tybalt, Juliet pin’d.
You, to remove that siege of grief from her,
Betroth’d, and would have married her perforce,
To county Paris: then, comes she to me,
And, with wild looks, bid me devise some means
To rid her from this second marriage,
Or in my cell there would she kill herself.
Then gave I her, (so tutor’d by my art)
A sleeping potion; which so took effect
As I intended, for it wrought on her
The form of death. Meantime, I writ to Romeo,
That he should hither come, as this dire night,
To help to take her from her borrow’d grave,
Being the time the potion’s force should cease:
But he which bore my letter, friar John,
Was stay’d by accident, and yesternight
Return’d my letter back. Then, all alone,
At the prefixed hour of her waking,
Came I to take her from her kindred’s vault,
Meaning to keep her closely at my cell,
Till I conveniently could send to Romeo:
But, when I came, (some minute ere the time
Of her awakening) here untimely lay
The noble Paris, and true Romeo, dead.
She waked; and I entreated her come forth,
And bear this work of heaven with patience:
But then a noise did scare me from the tomb,
And she, too desperate, would not go with me,
But (as it seems) did violence on herself.
All this I know, and to the marriage

Her nurse is privy; and, if ought in this Misered by my fault, let my old life
Be sacrificed some hour before the time,
Unto the rigor of severest law.

Prince. We still have known thee for a holy man. —
Where’s Rome’s man? what can he say in this?

Bail. I brought my master news of Juliet’s death,
And then in post he came from Mantua,
To this same place, to this same monument.
This letter he early bid me give his father;
And threaten’d me with death, going in the vault,
If I departed not, and left him there.
Prince. Give me the letter, I will look on it. —
Where is the county’s master, that rais’d the watch?
Sirrah, what made your master in this place?

Page. He came with flowers to strew his lady’s
And bid me stand aloof, and so I did:
[grave,
Anon, comes one with light to open the tomb,
And, by and by, my master dwelt on him;
And then I ran away to call the watch.

Prince. This letter doth make good the friar’s words,
Their course of love, the tidings of her death;
And here he writes, that he did buy a poison
Of a poor pothecary; and therewithal
Came to this vault to die, and lie with Juliet.—
Where be these enemies? Capulet! Montague!
See, what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heaven finds means to kill your joys with love;
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen: — all are punish’d.

Cop. O, brother Montague! give me thy hand:
This is my daughter’s jointure; for no more

Can I demand.

Mon. But I can give thee more;
For here I raise her statue in pure gold,
That, while Verona by that name is known,
There shall no figure at such rate be set,
As that of so fair and faithful Juliet.

Cop. As rich shall Romeo by his lady lie;
Poor sacrifices of our enmity.

Prince. A glooming peace this morning with it
The sun for sorrow will not show his head.
Go hence, to have more talk of these sad things;
Some shall be pardon’d, and some punished:
For never was a story of more woe,
Than this of Juliet and her Romeo.

Poet. Good day, sir.

Pain. I am glad you’re well.

Poet. I have not seen you long. How goes the world?

Pain. It wears; sir, as it grows.

Poet. Ay, that’s well known; But what particular rarity? what strange, Which manifold record not matches? See, Magic of bounty! all these spirits thy power Hath conjur’d to attend. I know the merchant.

Pain. I know them both; th’ other’s a Jeweller.

Mer. O! ’tis a worthy lord.

Joe. Nay, that’s most fix’d.

Mer. A most incomparable man; \(^3\) breath’d, as it To an untirable and continue goodness: \(\text{were, He }^2\) passes.

Jew. I have a jewel here— \[^5\] Showing it.

Mer. O! pray, let’s see’ed. For the lord Timon, sir?

TIMON OF ATHENS.

ACT I.

From whence 'tis nourish'd: the fire 'tis the flint
Shows not, till it be struck; our gentle flame
Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies
Each bound it chases. What have you there?

Poet. A picture, sir. When comes your book forth?

Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, sir.

Let's see your piece.

Pain. 'Tis a good piece. &1 [Showing it.

Poet. So 'tis: this comes off well, and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable! How this grace
Speaks his own standing; what a mental power
This eye shoots forth; how big imagination
Moves in this lip; to the dunnish of the gesture
One might 'tincture.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life.
Here is a touch; 'tis good!

Poet. It speaks nature: artificial strife
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators, who pass over the Stage.

Pain. How this lord is follow'd!

Poet. The senators of Athens:—happy men!

Pain. Look, more! [Visitors.

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood of
I have in this rough work shap'd out a man,
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug
With ampest entertainment: my free drift
Hails not particularly, but moves itself
In a wide sea of verse: no level'd malice
Infests one comma in the course I hold,
But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leaving no tract behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you?

Poet. I will unbolt to you.

You see how all conditions, how all minds,
(As well of glib and slippery creatures, as
Of grave and austere quality) tender down
Their services to lord Timon: his large fortune
Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,
Subdues, and properties to his love and tendance,
All sorts of hearts; ye, from the glass-fac'd flatterer
To Apemantus, that few things loves better
Than to abhor himself: even he drops down
The knee before him, and returns in peace
Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain. I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd fortune to be thron'd: the base of the mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labor on the bosom of this sphere
To propagates their states: amongst them all,
Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,
One do I personate of lord Timon's frame:—
Whom fortune with her ivory hand wafts to her,
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Pain. 'Tis convey'd to scope.

This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd

In our condition.

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on.
All those which were his fel lows but of late,
(Some better than his value) on the moment
Follow his strides; his lobbies fill with tendance,
Ruin sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him
Drink the free air.

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these?

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and change of Spurs down her late below'd, all his dependants,
Which labor'd after him to the mountain's top,
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip down,
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common:
A thousand moral paintings I can show,
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of Fortune's
More pregnant than words. Yet you do well,
To show lord Timon that: mean eyes have seen
The foot above the head.

Trumpets sound. Enter Timon, attended; the Servant of Ventidius talking with him.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?

Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord: five talents is his debt;
His means most short, his creditors most strait:
Your honorable letter he desires
To those have shut him up; which failing,
Periods his comforts.

Tim. Noble Ventidius! Well; I am not of that feather, to shake off
My friend when he most needs me. I do know him
A gentleman that well deserves a help,
Which he shall have. I'll pay the debt, and free him.

Tim. Commend me to him: I will send his ransom;
And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me.—
'Tis not enough to help the feeble up.
But to support him after.—Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honor! [Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, good father.

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant nam'd Lucilius.

Tim. I have so: what of him? [Thee.

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man before

Tim. Attend he here, or no!—Lucilius!

Enter Lucilius.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.

Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon, this thy creature,
By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclin'd to thrive,
And my estate deserves an heir, more rais'd
Than one which holds a trenched.

Tim. Well; what farther?

Old Ath. One only daughter have I; no kin else,
On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love: I pray thee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest.

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:
His honesty rewards him in itself.

— In our condition. I. e. In our art; in painting.
— Through him drink the free air. I. e. breathe freely at his will only.
Scene I.

Timon of Athens.

677

It must not hear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love him?

Old Ath. She is young, and apt;

Our own precedent passions do instruct us

What levity's in youth.

Tim. [To Lucullus.] Love you the maid?

Luc. Ay, my good lord; and she accepts of it.

Old Ath. If 'tis her marriage my consent be missing,

I'll all the gods to witness, I will choose

Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,

And dispossess her all.

Tim. How shall she be endow'd,

If she be mated with an equal husband?

Old Ath. Three talents on the present; in future all.

Tim. This gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long;

To build his fortune I will strain a Little,

For 'tis a bond in men. Give him thy daughter;

What you bestow, in him I'll counterpoise,

And make him weigh with her.

Old Ath. Most noble lord,

Paw me to this your honor, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee; mine honor on my promise.

Luc. Humily I thank your lordship. Never may

This state or fortune fall into my keeping,

Which is not 4ow'd to you?

[Exeunt Lucullus and old Athenian.

Poet. Vouchsafe my labor, and long live your lordship.

Tim. I thank you; you shall hear from me anon:

Go not away.—What have you there, my friend?

Pain. A piece of painting, which I do beseech

Your lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome. The painting is almost the natural man;

For since diabolon traffics with man's nature,

He is but outside: these pencil'd figures are

Even such as they give out. I like your work,

And you shall find, I like it: wait attendance

Tim. I hear you farther from me.

Pain. The gods preserve you!

Tim. Well fare you, gentleman: give me your hand;

We must needs dine together.—Sir, your jewel

Hath suffer'd under praise.

Jew. What, my lord, dispraise?

Tim. A mere satiety of commendations.

If I should pay you for't as 'tis extol'd,

It would 4une me quite.

Jew. My lord, 'tis rated

As those which sell would give: but you well know,

Things of like value, differing in the owners,

Are prized by their masters. Believe't, dear lord,

You mend the jewel by the wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd.

Mer. No, my good lord: he speaks the common

Which all men speak with him. [tongue,

Tim. Look, who comes here. Will you be bid?

Enter Apemantus.

Jew. We'll bear, with your lordship.

Mer. He'll spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus.

Apem. Till I be gentle, stay thou for thy good morrow; when thou art Timon's dog, and these knaves honest.

[Know'st them not.

Tim. Why dost thou call them knaves? thou

Apem. Are they not Athenians?

Tim. Yes.

Apem. Then I repeat not.

Jew. You know me, Apemantus.

Apem. Thou know'st, I do; I call'd thee by thy name.

Tim. Thou art proud, Apemantus.

Apem. Of nothing so much, as that I am not like Timon.

Tim. Whither art going?

Apem. To knock out an honest Athenian's brains.

Tim. That's a deed thou'lt die for.

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.

Tim. How likest thou this picture, Apemantus?

Apem. The best, for the innocence.

Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it?

Apem. He wrought better that made the painter; and yet he's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. Y'are a dog.

Apem. Thy mother's of my generation: what's she, if I be a dog?

Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apemantus?

Apem. No; I eat not lords.

Tim. An thou should'st, thou'dst anger ladies.

Apem. O! they eat lords; so they come by great belligies.

Tim. That's a lascivious apprehension.

Apem. So thou apprehend'st. Take it for thy labor.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?

Apem. Not so well as a plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 'tis worth?

Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet?

Poet. How now, philosopher?

Apem. Thou liest.

Poet. Art not one?

Apem. Yes.

Poet. Then, I lie not.

Apem. Art not a poet?

Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then, thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That's not feign'd; he is so.

Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labor: he that loves to be flattered is worthy of the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What would'st do then, Apemantus?

Apem. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. Wherefore?

Apem. That I had! so hungry a wish to be a lord.

—Art not thou a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.

Apem. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not.

Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.

Apem. Traffic's thy god; and thy god confound thee!

Trumpets sound. Enter a Servant.

Tim. What trumpet's that?

Serv. 'Tis Alcibiades, and some twenty horse, all of companionship.

Tim. Pray, entertain them; give them guide to us.

[Exeunt some Attendants.

You must needs dine with me.—Go not you hence,

Till I have thank'd you; and when dinner's done

Show me this piece.—I am joyful of your sights.

Enter Alcibiades, with his Company.

Most welcome, sir!

Apem. So, so, there. —

* Alluding to the proverb, 'Plain dealing is a jewel, but they who use it die beggars.'
Enter two Lords.

1 Lord. What time o’ day is’t, Apemantus?

Ape. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still.

Ape. The more accurst thou, that still omit’st it.

2 Lord. Thou art going to lord Timon’s feast.

Ape. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat

Lord. Fare thee well; fare thee well. [Fools.

Ape. Thou art a fool to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Ape. Shouldst hast kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Ape. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding: make thy requests to thy friend. [Thee hence.

2 Lord. Away, impassable dog, or I’ll spurn

Ape. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the ass.

[Exit.

1 Lord. He’s opposite to humanity. Come, shall
And taste lord Timon’s bounty? he outgoes [we in,
The very heart of kindness.

2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward: no d’mead, but he repays
Sevenfold above itself: no gift to him,
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of *quittance.

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,
That ever govern’d man.

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?

1 Lord. I’ll keep you company. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in Timon’s House.

Hautboys playing loud Music. A great banquet served in; Flavius and others attending: then, enter Timon, Alcibiades, Lucius, Lucullus, Senvronius, Senprinio, with other Athenian Senators, with Ven-tidius, whom Timon redeemed from prison, and Attendants: then comes, dropping after all, Ape-manus, discontentedly, like himself.

Ven. Most honor’d Timon, it hath pleas’d the gods to remember
My father’s age, and call him to long peace;
He is gone happy, and has left me rich:
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound
To your free heart, I do return those talents,
Dubbed with thanks and service, from whose help
I deriv’d liberty.

Tim. O! by no means,
Honour Ventidius: you mistake my love.
I gave it freely ever; and there’s none
Can truly say, he gives, if he receives.
If our betters play at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them: fowls that are rich are fair.
Ven. A noble spirit!

Tim. Nay, my lords,
Ceremony was but devil’d at first,

To set a gloss on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recounting goodness, sorry ere ’tis shown:
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray, sit: more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me.

[They sit.

1 Lord. My lord, we all have confessed it.

Ape. Ho! ho! confess’d it? hang’d it, have you

Tim. O, Apemantus! — you are welcome. [not?

Ape. No, you shall not make me welcome: I come to have thee thrust me out of doors. [there

Tim. Fie! thou’rt a churl: you have got a humor
Does not become a man; ’tis much to blame.

They say, my lords, ira flour brevis est,
But yond’ man is ever angry.

Go, let him have a table by himself;
For he does neither affect company,
Nor is he fit for, indeed.

Ape. Let me stay at thumb aperill, Timon: I come to observe; I give thee warning out.

Tim. I take no heed of thee; thou art an Athenian, therefore, welcome. I myself would have no power; pray thee, let my meat make thee silent.

Ape. I scorn thy meat; ’twould choke me, if for
I should never suffer thee. — O you gods! what a number of men eat Timon, and he sees them not! It grieves me, to see so many dip their meat in one man’s blood; and all the madness is, he cheers them up too.

I wonder, men dare trust themselves with men:
Methinks, they should invite them without knives,
Good for their meat, and safer for their lives.

There’s much example for’t; the fellow, that sitts
Next him now, parts bread with him, and pledges the breath of him in a divided draught, is the readiest man to kill him: it has been proved. If I were a huge man, I should fear to drink at meals,
Lest they should spy my windpipe’s dangerous notes:
Great men should drink with  harness on their throats.

[Round.

Tim. My lord, in heart; and let the health go
2 Lord. Let it flow this way, my good lord.

Ape. Flow this way? A brave fellow! — he keeps his tides well.
Those health will make thee and thy state look ill, Timon.
Here’s that, which is too weak to be a fire,
Honest water, which never left man i’ the mire:
This and my food are equals, there’s no odds;
Feasts are too proud to give thanks to the gods.

Apemantus’ Feast.

Immortal gods, I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man, but myself.
Grant I may never prove so fond,
To trust man on his oath or bond:
Or a harlot for her weeping;
Or a dog that seems a sleeping;
Or a keeper with my freedom;
Or my friends, If I should need ’em,
Amen. So fall to:
Rich men sin, and I eat root.

[Ents and drinks.

Much good 4 doth thy good heart, Apemantus!

Tim. Captain Alcibiades, your heart’s in the field now.

Alcib. My heart is ever at your service, my lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakfast of enemies, than a dinner of friends.

Alcib. So they were bleeding new, my lord, there’s

That is, ‘Anger is a short madness.’—Peri. For is used in this sense: ‘The allusion is to a pack of hounds trained to pursue, by being gratified with the blood of an animal which they kill; and the wonder is, that the animal, on which they are feeding, cheer them to the chase.’

Armorer.—My lord, in heart,’ t e., my lord’s health in sincerity.—Foolish.
Who lives, that's not depraved, or depraves?
Who dies, that bears not one spurn to their graves
Of their friends' gift?
I should fear, those, that dance before me now,
Would one day stamp upon me: 't has been done.
Men shut their doors against the setting sun.

The Lords rise from Table, with much adoring
Of Taxos; and, to show their loves, each singles out an Amazon, and all dance, Men with Women, a lofty Straita or two to the Hautoys, and case.

Tim. You have done our pleasures much grace,
Set a fair fashion on our entertainment, [fair ladies,
Which was not half so beautiful and kind:
You have added worth unto't, and lustre,
And entertain'd me with mine own device;
I am to thank you for it.
1 Lady. My lord, you take us ever at the best.
Apem. 'Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me.
Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet
Attends you: please you to dispose yourselves.
All Lad. Most thankfully, my lord.

Tim. Flavius! [Exit Cupid, and Ladies.
Flav. My lord.
Tim. The little casket bring me hither.
Flav. Yes, my lord. [Aside.] More jewels yet!
There is no crossing him in his humor;
Else I should tell him,—well,—'t faith, I should,
When all's spent, he'd be 'cross'd then: and he could,
'Tis pity 'hounst had eyes behind,
That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind.
[Exit, and return with the Casket.

1 Lord. Where be our men?
Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness.
2 Lord. Our horses!
I have one word to say to you. Look you, my good
I must entreat you, honor me so much,
As to advance this jewel; accept it and wear it,
Kind my lord.
1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—
All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.
Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate newly alighted, and come to visit you.
Tim. They are fairly welcome.
Flav. I beseech your honor,
Vouchsafe me a word: it does concern you near.
Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear thee:
I pray thee, let's be provided to show them entertainment.
Flav. I scarce know how. [Aside.

Enter another Servant.
2 Serv. May it please your honor, lord Lucius,
Out of his free love, hath presented to you
Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.
Tim. I shall except them fairly: let the presents
Enter a third Servant.
Be worthily entertain'd.—How now! what news? 3
Serv. Please you, my lord, that honorable gentleman, lord Lucullus, entrants your sun to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honor two brace of greyhounds.
Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be receiv'd,
Not without fair reward.

* For ever perfect." i.e., arrived at the perfection of happiness.—* That is, 'Why are you distinguished from thousands by that title of entertain'd, the title of friend, did you not,' &c.—* Much was an ironical expression of doubt, suspicion, or contempt.
Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to? He commands us to provide, and give great gifts, And all out of an empty coffer: Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this, To show him what a beggar his heart is, Being of no power to make his wishes good. His promises fly so beyond his state, That what he speaks is all in debt; he owes For every word: he is so kind, that he now Pays interest for't; his land's put to their books. Well, would I were gently put out of office, Before I were forc'd out! Happier is he that has no friend to feed Than such as do even enemies exceed. I bleed inwardly for my lord.

Tim. You do yourselves Much wrong: you bate too much of your own merits. Here, my lord, a trifle of our love. [receive it. 2 Lord. With more than common thanks I will 3 Lord. O! he's the very soul of bounty. Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave Good words the other day of a bawd conser

I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it. [that. 2 Lord. O! I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in Tim. You may take my word, my lord: I know Can justly praise, but what he does affect: [no man I weigh my friend's affection with mine own: ;

I'll call to you. All Lords. O! none so welcome. Tim. I take all, and your several visitations, So kind to heart, 'tis not enough to give: Metthinks, I could deal kingdoms to my friends, And no'er be weary.—Alcibiades, Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich: It comes in charity to thee; for all thy living Is strength of the dead, and all the lands thou hast Lie in a pitch'd field.

Alcib. Ay, defil'd land, my lord. 1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,— Tim. And so Am I to you.

2 Lord. So infinitely endear'd,— Tim. All to 'you.—Lights! more lights! 1 Lord. Sir. The best of happiness, Honor, and fortunes, keep with you, lord Timon.

Tim. Ready for his friends. [Exeunt Alcibiades, Lords, &c. Apem. What a coil here's! Serving of bceks, and jutting out of bums! I doubt whether their legs be worth the sums That they are given for 'em. Friendship's full of drags: Menthinks, false hearts should never have sound legs. Thus honest folks lay out their wealth on court'sies.

Tim. Now, Apemantus, if thou wert not sullen, I'd be good to thee. Apem. No, I'll nothing; for if I should be brib'd too, there would be none left to pull upon thee, and then thou would'st sin the faster. Thou giv'st so long, Timon; I fear me, thou wilt give away thyself in paper shortly: what need these feasts, popes, and vain glories?

Tim. Nay, an you begin to rail on society once, I am sworn not to give regard to you. Farewell; and come with better music. [Exit. Apem. So;—thou wilt not hear me now;— Thou shalt not then; I'll look thy theven from thee, O, that men's ears should be To counsel deaf, but not to flutter! [Exit.
Var. Serv. I fear it.
Cap. Here comes the lord.

Enter Timon, Alcibiades, and Lords, &c., as from hunting.

Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we forth again,
My Alcibiades.—With me! what is your will?
Cap. My lord, here is a note of certain dues.
Tim. Dues! Whence are you?
Cap. Of Athens here, my lord.
Tim. Go to my steward.
Cap. Please it your lordship, he hath put me off
To the successions of new days this month:
My master is awak'd by great occasion.
To call upon his own, and humbly prays you,
That with your other noble parts you'll suit,
In giving him his right.

Tim. Mine honest friend,
I pr'ythee, but repair to me next morning.
Cap. Nay, my good lord,
Tim. Contain thyself, good friend.
Var. Serv. One Varro's servant, good my lord,—
From Isidore:
He humbly prays your speedy payment,
Cap. If you did know, my lord, my master's wants,— [weeks,
Tim. Twas due on forfeitance, my lord, six
And past,—
Isid. Serv. Your steward puts me off, my lord;
And so some express to your lordship.
Tim. Give me breath.
I do beseech you, good my lords, keep on;
[Exeunt Alcibiades and Lords.
I'll wait upon you instantly.—Come hither: pray you.
[To Flavius.
How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd
With clamorous demands of debt, broken bonds,
And the detection of long-since-due debts,
Against my honor?
Flav. Please you, gentlemen,
The time is unagreeable to this business:
Your importunity cease till after dinner,
That I may make his lordship understand
Wherefore you are not paid.
Do so, my friends.
See them well entertain'd.
[Exit Timon.
Flav. Pray, draw near. [Exit Flavius.

Enter Apemantus and a Fool.

Cap. Stay, stay; here comes the fool with Apemantus: let's have some sport with 'em.
Var. Serv. Hang him, he'll abuse us.
Isid. Serv. A plague upon him, dog!
Var. Serv. How dost, fool?
Apem. Dost dialogue with thy shadow?
Var. Serv. I speak not to thee.
Apem. No; 'tis to thyself.—Come away.
[To the Fool.
Isid. Serv. [To Var. Serv.] There's the fool hangs on your back already.
Apem. No, thou stand'st single; thou'rt not on him yet.
Cap. Where's the fool now?
Apem. He last asked the question.—Poor rogues, and usurers' men; bawds between gold and want.
All Serv. What are we, Apemantus?
Apem. Asses.
All Serv. Why?
Apem. That you ask me what you are, and do not know yourselves. —Speak to 'em, fool.
Fool. How do you, gentlemen?

All Serv. Gruemeries, good fool. How does your mistress?
Fool. She's o'en setting on water to scold such chickens as you are. Would, we could see you at Corinth!
Apem. Good: grumercy.

[Exeunt Page.

Fool. Look you, here comes my mistress' page.
Page. [To the Fool.] Why, how now, captain? what do you in this wise company?—How dost thou, Apemantus?
Apem. Would I had a rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.
Page. Prythee, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters? I know not which is which.
Apem. Canst not read?
Page. No.
Apem. There will little learning die, then, that day thou art hanged. This is to lord Timon; this to Alcibiades. Go: thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bastard.
Page. Thou wast whelp'd a dog; and thou shalt furnish a dog's death. Answer not; I am gone.
[Exit Page.

Apem. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to lord Timon's.
Fool. Will you leave me there?
Apem. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers.
All Serv. I would they served us.
Apem. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.
Fool. Are you three usurers' men?
All Serv. Ay, fool.
Fool. I think, no usurer but has a fool to his servant: my mistresse is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away 2 merrily; but they enter my mistresse' house merrily, and go away sadly. The reason of this?
Var. Serv. I could render one.
Apem. Do it, then, that we may account thee a whoremaster, and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.
Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?
Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit: sometimes, it appears like a lord; sometimes like a lawyer; sometimes like a philosopher, with two stones more than his artificial one. He is very often like a knight; and generally in all shapes, that man goes up and down in from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.
Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.
Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much folly as I have, so much wit thou lackest.
Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.
All Serv. Aside, aside: here comes lord Timon.
Re-enter Timon and Flavius.

Apem. Come, with me, fool; come.
Fool. I do not always follow lover, elder brother, woman; sometimes, the philosopher.
[Exeunt Apemantus, and Fool after him.
Flav. Pray you, walk near: I'll speak with you anon.
[Exeunt Serv.
Tim. You make me marvel. Wherefore, ere this time,
Had you not fully laid my state before me,
That I might so have rated my expense
As I had leave of means?

Flav. You would not hear me:
TIMON OF ATHENS. ACT III.

Enter Flamininus, Servilius, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord, my lord,—

Tim. I will despatch you severally. —You, to lord Lucius; —to lord Lucullus you; I hunted with his honor to-day: —you, to Sempronius. Command me to their loves; and, I am proud, say, that my occasions have found time to use them toward a supply of money: let the request be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

Flav. Lord Lucius, and Lucullus! bumpt! —

Tim. To you, sir, [To another Serv.] to the senators,

(Of whom, even to the state’s best health, I have Deserv’d this hearing) bid ’em send o’ the instant A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold, (For that I knew it the most general way) To them to use your signet, and your name; But they do shake their heads; and I am here No richer in return.

Tim. Is’t true? can’t be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corporate voice, That now they are at ‘falt, want treasure, cannot Do what they would; are sorry—you are honorable, — But yet they could have wish’d—they know not— Sometimes they have been amiss—to noble natures May catch a wrench—would all were well—tis pity. — And so, ’ntending other serious matters, After distasteful looks, and these hard 3 fractions, With certain 2 half-caps, and cold-moving nod’s, They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward them! — Prythee, man, look cheerly; these old fellows Have not the ingratitude in them hereditary: Their blood is cak’d, ’tis cold, it seldom flows; ’Tis lack of kindly warmth they are not kind, And nature, as it grows again toward earth, Is fashion’d for the journey, dull, and heavy.—

Go to Ventidius,— [To a Serv.] Prythee, [To Flavius,] be not sad; Thou art true, and honest:  ingeniously I speak, No blame belongs to thee.— [To Serv.] Ventidius lately Buried his father; by whose death, he’s stepp’d Into a great estate: when he was poor, Imprison’d, and in scarcity of friends, I clear’d him with five talents: greet him from me; Bid him suppose some good necessity Touched his friend, which craves to be remember’d With those five talents:—that had, [To Flam.] give it these fellows To whom ’tis instant due. Ne’er speak, or think, That Timon’s fortunes ’mong his friends can sink. Flav. I would, I could not think it; that thought is bounty’s foe: Being ‘free itself, it thinks all others so. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in Lucullus’s House.

Flamininus waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you; he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Notes:
Enter Lucullus.

Serv. Here's your lord.

Lucul. [Aside.] One of lord Timon's men? a gift, I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver basin and ewer to-night.—Flaminius, honest Flaminius, you are very respectively welcome, sir.—Fill me some wine.—[Exit Servant.] And how does this honorable, complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens, thy very bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health is well, sir. And what hast thou there under thy cloak, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. 'Faith, nothing but an empty box, sir, which, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your honor to supply; who, having great and instant occasion to use fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to furnish him, nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Lucul. La, la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he? alas, good lord! a noble gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep so good a house. Many a time and often I have dined with him, and told him out; and come again to supper to him of purpose to have him spend less, and yet he would embrace no counsel, take no warning by my coming. Every man has his fault, and honesty is his: I have told him out, but I could ne'er get him from it.

Re-enter Servant with Wine.

Serv. Please your lordship, here is the wine.

Lucul. Flaminius, I have noted thee always wise. Here's to thee.

Flam. Your lordship speaks your pleasure. Indeed, I have observed thee always for a towardly prompt spirit,—give thee thy due,—and one that knows what belongs to reason; and cannot use the time well, if the time use thee well: good parts in thee. —Get you gone, sirrah.—[To the Servant, who exits.]—Draw nearer, honest Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful gentleman; but thou art wise, and thou knowest well enough, although thou comest to me, that this is no time to lend money, especially upon bare friendship, without security. Here's three solidaries for thee: good boy, wink at me, and say, thou saw'st me not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible, the world should so much differ, And we alive that 'liv'd? Fly, damned baseness, To him that worship's thee.

[They have the money away.

Lucul. Ha! now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy master. [Exit Lucullus.]

Flam. May these add to the number that may Let molten coin be thy damnation, [scald thee! Thou disease of a friend, and not hims, Has friendship such a faint and milky heart, It turns in less than two nights! O you gods! I feel my master's passion. This slave Unto 'his humor has his lord's meat in him: Why should it thrive, and turn to nutriment, When he is turn'd to poison? O may diseases only work upon it, [tire, And, when he's sick, let not that part of us Which my lord paid for, be of any power To expel sickness, but prolong his hour! [Exit.}

---

SCENE II.—The Same. A Public Place.

Enter Lucius, with three Strangers.

Luc. Who? the lord Timon? he is my very good friend, and an honorable gentleman.

1 Stram. We 'know him for no less, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing, my lord, and which I hear from common rumormors: now lord Timon's happy hours are done and past, and his estate shrinks from him.

Luc. Fie! no, do not believe it; he cannot want for money.

2 Stram. But believe you this, my lord, that not long ago one of his men was with the lord Lucullus, to borrow so many talents; nay, urged extremely for't, and showed what necessity belonged to't, and yet was denied.

Luc. How?

2 Stram. I tell you, denied, my lord.

Luc. What a strange case was that! now, before the gods, I am ashamed on't. Denied that honorable man! there was very little honor shown in't. For my own part, I must needs confess, I have received some small kindesses from him, as money, plate, jewels, and such like trifles, nothing comparing to his; yet, had he mistook him, and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied his occasions so many talents.

Enter Servilius.

Serv. See, by good hap, yonder's my lord; I have sweat to see his honor.—[To Lucius,]

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well: commend me to thy honorable-virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Serv. May it please your honor, my lord hath sent—

Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord, he's ever sending: how shall I thank him, thinkest thou? And what has he sent now?

Serv. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord; requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with five hundred talents.

Luc. I know, his lordship is but merry with me; He cannot want five hundred talents.

Serv. But in the meantime he wants less, my lord. If his occasion were not virtuous, I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius? Serv. Upon my soul, 'tis true, sir. Luc. What a wicked beast was I, to disturb myself against such a good time, when I might have shown myself honorable! how unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honor!—Servilius, now before the gods, I am not able to do; the more beast I, I say,—I was sending to use lord Timon myself; these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done it now. Command me bountifully to his good lordship; and I hope, his honor will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind—and tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot please such an honorable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you bestir me so far, as to use mine own words to him?

Serv. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I'll look you out a good turn, Servilius. [Exit Servilius.

---

*Respectfully. — Honesty here means liberality. —

*"Alive that 'liv'd," i. e., alive now that lived then. —

"Passion," i. e., suffering; grief. —"His hour," i. e., his hour of suffering.

*"Acknowledge,"—That is, 'If he did not want it for a good use.'
True, as you said, Timon is shrunk indeed;
And he that's once denied will hardly speed.

[Exit Lucius.]

1 Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius? I
2 Stran. Ay, too well.
1 Stran. Why this
Is the world's soul; and just of the same piece
Is every flatterer's port. Who can call him
His equal in that day he eats the same dish? for, in My knowing, Timon has been this lord's father,
And kept his credit with his purse,
Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money
Has paid his men their wages: he ne'er drinks,
But Timon's silver treads upon his lip;
And yet, (O, see the monstrousness of man,
When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!)
He does deny him, in respect of 's his,
What charitable men afford to beggars.

3 Stran. Religion groans at it.
1 Stran. For mine own part,
I never tasted Timon in my life,
Nor came any of his bounties over me,
To mark me for his friend; yet, I protest,
For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue,
And honorable carriage,
Had his necessity made use of me,
I would have put my wealth into donation,
And the best half should have return'd to him,
So much I love his heart. But, I perceive,
Men must learn now with pity to dispense:
For policy sits above conscience.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The Same. A Room in Sempronius’s House.

Enter Sempronius, and a Servant of Timon's.

Serv. Must he needs trouble me in't, humph!
Above all others?
He might have tried lord Lucius, or Lucullus;
And now Ventidius is wealthy too,
Whom he redeem'd from prison: all these
Owe their estates unto him.

Serv. My lord,
They have all been touch'd, and found base metal;
For or they have all denied him.

Serv. How? have they denied him?
Have Ventidius and Lucullus denied him,
And does he send to me? Three? humph? It
Shows but little love or judgment in him: [Eians,
Must I be his last refuge? his friends, like physi-
Thrice give him over; must I take the cure upon me?
He has much disgrace'd me in't: I am angry at him,
That might have known my place. I see no sense
But his occasions might have wo'd me first; [forget,
For, in my conscience, I was the first man
That ever received gift from him:
And does he think so backwardly of me now,
That I'll requite it fast? No: so it may prove
An argument of laughter to the rest,
And amongst lords I be thought a fool.
I had rather than the worth of thrice the sum,
He had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake;
I'd such a courage to do him good. But now return,
And with their faint reply this answer join;
Who bates mine honor shall not know my coin.

[Exit.
Serv. Excellent! Your lordship's a goodly villain. The devil knew not what he did, when he made man politic; he crossed himself by't; and I cannot think, but, in the end, the villains of man will set him clear. How fairly this lord strives to appear foul? takes virtuous copies to be wicked; like those that, under hot ardent zeal, would set whole realms on fire. Of such a nature is his politic love.
This was my lord's best hope; now all are fled,
Save only the gods. Now his friends are dead,
Doors, that were ne'er acquainted with their wards
Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd
Now to guard sure their master:
And this is all a liberal course allows;
Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his house.

[Exit.

SCENE IV.—The Same. A Hall in Timon’s House.

Enter two Servants of Varro, and the Servant of Lucius, meeting Titus, Hortensius, and other
Servants to Timon’s Creditors, waiting his coming out.

Var. Serv. Well met; good-morrow Titus and
Tit. The like to you, kind Varro. [Hortensius.
Luc. Hort. What, do we meet together?
Luc. Serv. Ay; and, I think,
One business does command us all, for mine
Is money.
Tit. So is theirs, and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luc. Serv. And, sir,
Philotus too!
Luc. Serv. Good day at once.
Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother.
Phil. What do you think the hour?
Luc. Serv. So much?
Phil. Is not my lord seen yet?
Luc. Serv. Not yet.
Phil. I wonder on’t: he was wont to shine at seven.
Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed shorter
with him:
You must consider, that a prodigal course
Is like the sun’s; but not, like his, recoverable.
I fear 'tis deepest winter in lord Timon's purse;
That is, one may reach deep enough, and yet
Find little.
Phil. I am of your fear for that.
Tit. I'll show you how 't observe a strange event.
Your lord sends now for money.
Hor. Most true, he does.
Tit. And he wears jewel now of Timon's gift,
For which I wait for money.
Hor. It is against my heart.
Luc. Serv. Mark, how strange it shows,
Timon in this should pay more than he owes:
And e’en us if your lord should wear rich jewels,
And send for money for 'em. [ness.
Hor. I'm weary of this charge, the gods can wit-
I know, my lord hath spent of Timon's wealth,
And now ingratitude makes it worse than stealth.
1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine's three thousand crowns;
Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine. [what's yours?
1 Var. Serv. 'Tis much deep: and it should seem by the sum,
Your master's confidence was above mine;
Else, surely, his had equal'd.

Enter Flaminius.

Tit. One of lord Timon's men.

---

Keep his house; i. e., keep within doors for fear of dame. This charge, i. e., this office or employment.
Luc. Serv. Flaminius! Sir, a word. Pray, is my lord ready to come forth?
Flam. No, indeed, he is not.
Tit. We attend not tell him that; he knows, you are too diligent.
[Exit Flaminius.

Enter Flavius in a Cloak, muffled.
Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his Steward muffled so?
He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him.
Tit. Do you hear, sir?
1 Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,—
Flam. What do you ask of me, my friend?
Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.
Flam. Ay, if money were as certain as your waiting,
'Twere sure enough. Why then profess'd you not
Your sums and bills, when your false masters ate
Of my lord's meat? Then, they could smile, and Upon his debts, and take down the interest
Like into their glutinous maws. You do yourselves but
To stir me up; let me pass quietly: [wrong,
Believe't, my lord and I have made an end:
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.
Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not serve.
Flam. 'Tis not so base as you; for you serve knaves.
[Exit.

1 Var. Serv. How! what does his cashier's worship mutter?
2 Var. Serv. No matter what: he's poor, and That's revenge enough. Who can speak beyond
Broader than he that has no house to put his head in? such
May rail against great buildings.

Enter Servilius.
Tit. O! here's Servilius; now we shall know some answer.
Ser. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, to repair some other hour, I should derive much from't; for, take't of my soul, my lord leas wondrously to discontent.
His comfortable temper has forsaken him:
he's much out of health, and keeps his chamber.
Luc. Serv. Many do keep their chambers, are not
And if he be so far beyond his health, [sick:
Methinks, he should the sooner pay his debts,
And make a clear way to the gods.
Serv. Good gods! Tit.
We cannot take this for an answer, sir.
Flam. [Within.] Servilius, help!—my lord! my lord!
[Exit.

Enter Timon, in a rage; Flaminius, following.
Tim. What! are my doors oppo'd against my pas-
Have I been ever free, and must my house
Large? Be my retenive enemy, my jail!
The place which I have fenced, does it now,
Like all mankind, show me an iron heart?
Luc. Serv. Put in now, Titus.
Tit. My lord, here is my bill.
Luc. Serv. Here's mine.
Hor. Serv. And mine, my lord.
Both Var. Serv. And ours, my lord.
Phil. All our bills. [the circle.
Tim. Knock me down with 'em: cleave me to
Luc. Serv. Alas! my lord,—
Tim. Cut my heart in sums.
Tit. Mine, fifty talents.
Tim. Tell out my blood.
Luc. Serv. Five thousand crowns, my lord.
Tim. Five thousand drops pays that.—

*"With 'em." I. c. with the bills; a quibble upon bills, which also meant battle-ace.

What yours?—and yours?—
1 Var. Serv. My lord.
2 Var. Serv. My lord,—
Tim. Tear me, take me; and the gods fall upon you! [Exit.
Hor. Faith, I perceive our masters may throw their caps at their money: these debts may well be called desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em.
[Exit.

Re-enter Timon and Flavius.
Tim. They have e'en put my breath from me, the Creditors—devils! [slaves
Flam. My dear lord,—
Tim. What if it should be so?
Flam. My lord,—
Tim. I'll have it so.—My steward!
Flam. Here, my lord.
Tim. So tidy? Go, bid all my friends again,
Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius; all:
I'll once more feast the rascals.
Flam. O my lord! You only speak from your distracted soul:
There is not so much left to furnish out
A moderate table.
Tim. Be't not in thy care: go,
I charge thee; invite them all: let in the tide
Of knives once more; my cook and I'll provide.
[Exit.

SCENE V.—The Same. The Senate-house.

The Senate sitting. Enter Alcibiades, attended.

1 Sen. My lord, you have my voice too; the fault's bloody; 'tis necessary he should die.
Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.
2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.
Alcib. Honor, health, and compassion to the senate!
1 Sen. Now, captain?
Alcib. I am an humble suitor to your virtues:
For pity is the virtue of the law,
And none but tyrants use it cruelly.
It pleases time and fortune to lie heavy
Upon a friend of mine; who, in hot blood,
And in the heat of my report, stepped into the law, which is past depth
To those that without need do plunge into't.
He is a man, setting his fault aside,
Of comely virtues;
Nay did he soil the fact with cowardice;
(An honor in him which buys out his fault)
But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit,
Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,
He did oppose his foe:
And with such sober and unmoved passion
He did 3 reprove his anger, ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but moved an argument.
1 Sen. You outraged too strict a paradox,
Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:
Your words have took such pains, as if they labor'd
To bring manslaughter into form, and set quarrelling
Upon the head of valor; which, indeed,
Is valor misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were newly born.
He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer
[wrongs
The worst that man can breathe, and make his
His outside; to wear them like his raiment, care
And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart, [leasly,
To bring it into danger.
If wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill,
What folly 'tis to hazard life for ill?
Alcib. My lord,—
1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear;
To revenge is no valor, but to bear.
Alcib. My lords, then, under favor, pardon me,
If I speak like a captain.
Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,
And not endure all threats? sleep upon,
And let the foes quietly cut their threats,
Without repugnancy? If there be Such valor in the hearing, what make we
* Abroad? why then, women are more valiant,
That stay at home, if bearing carry it,
And the ass more captain than the lion; the fellow,
Louden with irons, wiser than the judge,
In vain, if he be in sufferings. O, my lords!
As you are great, be pitifully good:
Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?
To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest  gast;
But in defence, by mercy, 'tis most just.
To be in anger, is impiety;
But who is man, that is not angry?
Weigh but the crime with this.
2 Sen. You breathe in vain.
Alcib. In vain? his service done
At Lacedaemon, and Byzantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.
1 Sen. What's that?
[vice.
Alcib. Why,' say, my lords, he has done fair ser-
And slain in high many of your enemies.
How full of valor did he bear himself
In the last conflict, and made plentiful wounds?
2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em,
He's a sworn rooter: he has a sin, that often
Drowned him, and takes his valor prisoner.
* Were there no foes, that were itself enough
To overcome him: in that bestly fury
He has been known to commit outrages,
And rash factions. 'Tis infer'd to us,
His days are foul, and his drink dangerous.
1 Sen. He dies.
Alcib. Hard fate! he might have died in war.
My lords, if not for any parts in him,
Though his right arm might purchase his own time,
And be in debt to none, yet, more to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both:
And for, I know, your reverend ages love
Security, I'll pawn my victories, all
My honor to you, upon his good returns.
If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why, let the war receiv'n in valiant gore;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more.
1 Sen. We are for law: he dies; urge it no more,
On height of our displeasure. Friend, or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.
Alcib. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.
2 Sen. How!
Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.
3 Sen. What!
Alcib. I cannot think, but your age has forgot me;
It could not else be, I should prove so  base.
To sue, and be denied such common grace.
My wounds ache at you.
1 Sen. Do you dare our anger?
'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect:
We banish thee for ever.
Alcib. Banish me!
Banish your dotage, banish sury,
That makes the senate ugly.
1 Sen. If, after two days' shine Athens contain thee,
* "What make we abroad?" i. e., 'what have we to do in the title? endure brave men means rashness." — "By mercy,
i. e., I call mercy to witness: an adjuration." — Base for dishonored.
Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell
our spirit,
He shall be executed presently. [Execut Senators.
Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough; that you may live
Only in home, that none may look on you.
I am worse than mad: I have kept back their foes,
While they have told their money, and let out
Their coin upon large interest; I myself,
Rich only in large hurts:—all those, for this?
Is this the balsam that the usurping senate
Pours into captains' wounds? Banishment!
It comes not ill; I hate not to be banish'd:
It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury.
That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up
My discontented troops, and lay for * hearts.
'Tis honor with most lands to be at odds;
Soldiers should break as little wrongs as gods.
[Exit.
SCENE VI.—A Banquet-hall in Timon's House.
Music. Tables set out: Servants attending. Enter divers Lords, at several Doors.
1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.
2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think, this honorable lord did but try us this other day.
1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts 'tiring, when we encountered. I hope, it is not so low with him, as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.
2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new ofasting.
1 Lord. I should think so. He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me behind them, and I must needs appear.
2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my inportunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.
1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I understand how all things go.
2 Lord. Every man here's so. What would he have borrowed of you?
1 Lord. A thousand pieces.
2 Lord. A thousand pieces!
1 Lord. What of you?
3 Lord. He sent to me, sir,—Here he comes.
Enter Timon, and Attendants.
Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen both:—And how fare you?
1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of your lordship.
2 Lord. The swallow follows not summer more
3 willingly, than we your lordship.
Tim. [Aside.] Nor more willingly leaves winter; such summer-birds are men. [To them.] Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompense this long stay:
 feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly o' the trumpet's sound; we shall to't presently.
1 Lord. I hope, it remains not unkindly with your lordship, that I returned you an empty messenger.
Tim. O! sir, let it not trouble you.
2 Lord. My noble lord. —
Tim. Ah! my good friend, what cheer?
[The Banquet brought in.
2 Lord. My most honorable lord, I am e'en sick of shame that, when your lordship this other day sent to me, I was so unfortunate a beggar.
* "Lay for hearts," i. e., endeavor to win the affections of the people.—"To tire on any thing meant to be fully employed on it.
Re-enter the Lords, with other Lords and Senators.

1 Lord. How now, my lords!
2 Lord. Know you the quality of lord Timon's fury?
3 Lord. Push! did you see my cap?
4 Lord. I have lost my gown.
5 Lord. He's but a mad lord, and neught but humor sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat:—did you see my jewel?
6 Lord. Did you see my cap?
7 Lord. Here 'tis.
8 Lord. Here lies my gown.
9 Lord. Let's make no stay.
10 Lord. Lord Timon's mad.
11 Lord. I feel't upon my bones.
12 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall, That girdlest in those wolves! Dive in the earth, And fence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent; Obedience flit in children! slaves, and gods; Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench, And minister in their steads! to general fihths Convert o' the instant green virginity! Do't in your parents' eyes. Bankrupts, hold fast; Rather than render back, out with your knives, And cut your Trustees' threats! bound servants, steal! Large-handed robbers your grave masters are, And pill by law. Maid, to thy master's bed; Thy mistress is o' the brothel! son of sixteen, Pluck the lin'd crust from thy old limping sire, With it beat out his brains! piety, and fear, Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth, Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighborhood, Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades, Degrees, observances, customs, and laws, Decline to your confounding contraries, And look! confusion live!—Plagues, incident to men, Your potent and infectious fevers heap On Athens, ripes for stroke! thou cold sciatias, Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt As lamely as their manners! lust and liberty Creep in the minds and murmurs of our youth, That gainst the stream of virtue they may strive, And drown themselves in riot! itch's, blusses, Sow all the Athenian bosoms, and their crop Be general leprosy! breath infect breath, That their society, as their friendship, may Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from thee, But nakedness, thou detestable town! [Casting away his Clothes] Take thou that too, with multiplying bats. Timon will to the woods; where he shall find Th' unkindest beast more kinder than mankind. The gods confound (hear me, you good gods all) The Athenians, both within and out that wall! And grant, as Timon grows, his late may grow To the whole race of mankind, high, and low! Amen. [Exit.}

* "Your better remembrance," i.e., your good memory.
  —"Toward," i.e., near at hand: in prospect. —"In all places alike:" This alludes to the mode in which guests were formerly placed at table according to rank. —"Your perfection," i.e., the highest of your excellence. —"Timon's fitch," i.e., fitch of a season. —"Minute-jacks," i.e., automaton figures appended to clocks.

‡ "General fihths," i.e., common strumpets. —Contrarieties. —Libertinism. —" Multiplying bans," i.e., accumulating curses.

Enter Flavius, with two or three Servants.

1 Serv. Hear you, master steward! where's our master?

Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?

Flav. Alack! my follows, what should I say to you?

Let me be recorded by the righteous gods, I am as poor as you.

2 Serv. Such a house broke!

So noble a master fallen! All gone, and not

One friend to take his fortune by the arm,

And go along with him!

2 Serv. As we do turn our backs

Upon our companion, thrown into his grave,

So his *familiers to his buried fortunes

Slink all away; leave their false vows with him,

Like empty purses pick'd; and his poor self,

A dedicated beggar to the air,

With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty,

Walks, like contempt, alone.—More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin'd house.

3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's liv'ry,

That see I by our faces: we are fellows still,

Serving alike in sorrow. Leak's is our back;

And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,

Hearing the surges threat: we must all part

Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all,

The latest of my wealth I'll share amongst you.

Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake,

Let's yet be fellows; let's shake our heads, and say,

As 'twere a wound unto our master's fortunes,

"We have seen better days." Let each take some;

[Giving them money.

Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more:

Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.

[They embrace, and part several ways.

O, the *fierce wretchedness that glory brings us!

Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,

Since riches point to misery and contempt?

Who'd be so mock'd with glory *as to live

But in a dream of friendship? *and revive

To have his pomp, and all state comprehends,

But only pointed, like his varnish'd friends?

Poor honest lord! brought low by his own heart;

Undone by goodness. Strange, unusual *blood,

When man's worst sin is, he does so much good!

Who, then, dares to be half so kind again?

For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar men.

My dearest lord,—bless'd, to be most accur'd,

Rich, only to be wretched, thy great fortunes

Are made thy chief affliction. Alas, kind lord!

He's flung in rage from this ingrateful seat

Of monastick friends;

Not he that with him to supply his life,

Or that which can command it.

I'll follow, and inquire him out;

I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;

Whilst I have gold I'll be his steward still. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Woods.

Enter Timon, *with a Spade.

Tim. O, blessed budding sun! draw from the earth

Rotten humility; below thy *sister's orb

Infest the air. *Twinn'd brothers of one womb,

* His familiars to his buried fortunes," i.e., those who familiarly participated in his buried fortunes.— * Fierce here means valiant.—* Blood," i.e., propensity; disposition.

* Thy sister's," i.e., the moon's.

Whose procreation, residence, and birth,

Scares *dividant, touch them with several fortunes,

The greater scorns the lesser: not nature,

(To whom all sores lay siege) can bear great fortune,

But *by contempt of nature.

Rais'd in this beggar, and *decline that lord;

The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,

The beggar native honor.

It is the pasture lards the *other's sides, *dares,

The want that makes him lean. Who dares, who

In purity of manhood stand upright,

And say, "This man's a flatterer!" If one be,

So are they all; for every *grace of fortune

Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate

Ducks to the golden fool. All is oblique;

There's nothing level in our cursed natures,

But direct villany. Therefore, be abroad:

All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!

His *semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains:

[Digging.

Who seeks for better of thee, suace his palate

With thy most operant poison—What is here?

[Finding gold.

Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold? No, gods,

I am no ?id votarist. Roots, you're clear heavens!

Thus much of this will make black, white; foul,

Fair, fair. [Sift.

Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young; coward, val-

Ha! you gods, why this? What this? You gods! why,

this

Will lug your priests and servants from your sides,

Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads.

This yellow shade

Will knit and break religions; *ideas accur'd;

Make the hoar leprosy *dear; place thieves,

And give them title, knee, and approbation,

With senators on the beach: this is it,

That makes the *wappen'd widow wed again:

She, whom the *spital-house, and vicious sores

Would cast the *gorge at, this embalms and spices

To the April's day again. Come, damned earth,

Thou common whore of mankind, that put'st odds

Among the route of nations, I will make thee

Do thy right nature.—[March after off.]

-Ha! a drum? Thou'rt quick,

But yet I'll bury thee: thou'lt go, strong thief,

When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand.—

Nay, stay thou out for earnest.

[Reserving some gold.

Enter Alcibiades, with Drum and Fife, in warlike manner; and Phrynia and Timandra.

Alcib. What art thou there?

Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hateful to

Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate mankind.

For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog,

That I might love thee something.

Alcib. I know thee well;

But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and strange.

Tim. I know thee too; and more, than I know thee.

Then what should war be? This fell whose of thine

For all her cherubin look.

Phry. Thy lips rot off!
Tim. I will not kiss thee; then, the rot returns.
A Phry. How dost thou pass the noble Timon to this change?
Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light to give:
But then, renew I could not, like the moon.
There were no suns to borrow of.

Alcib. Noble Timon,
What friendship may I do thee?

Tim. None, but to Maintain my opinion.

Alcib. What is it, Timon?

Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform none:
if thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee, for thou art a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee, for thou art a man!

Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy miseries.
Tim. Thou sawst them, when I had prosperity.
And now remove the now; then was a blessed hour.
Tim. As thine is now, held with a brance of harlots.

Timon. Yes, [thee:

Timon. Make use of thy salt hours; season the slaves
Fortunes, and baths; bring down rose-checked youth
To the tub-fast, and the diet.

Timan. Hang thee, monster!

Alcib. Pardon him, sweet Timandra, for his wits
Are drown'd and lost in his calamities.
I have 'd but little gold of it, brave Timon,
The want whereof doth daily make revolt
In my penurious band: I have heard and grieve'd,
How cursed Athens, mindless of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when neighbor states,
But for thy sword and fortune, trod upon them,—

Alcib. I am thy friend, and pity thee, dear Ti-

Alcib. Why, fare thee well:
Here is some gold for thee.

Tim. Keep it, I cannot eat it.

Alcib. When I have laid proud Athens on a heap,—
Tim. Warrst thou 'gainst Athens?

Alcib. Ay Timon, and have cause.

Tim. The gods confound them all in thy conquest;
And thee after, when thou hast conquered:

Alcib. Why me, Timon?

Tim. That, by killing of villains,
Thou wast born to conquer my country.
Put up thy gold: go on,—here's gold,—go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air: let not thy sword skip one.

Tim. That nature, being sick of man’s unkindness, Should yet be hungry!—Common mother, thou,

Dost thou thy meadow, vines, and plough-torn leas; Whereof ingrateful man, with lipperious draughts, And morsels unctuous, gawse his pure mind, That from it all consideration slips—

Enter Apemantus.

More man? Plague! plague! Plague!

Apen. I was directed hither: men report,

Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them.

Tim. Thir, then, because thou dost not keep a dog Whom I would imitate. Consumption catch thee!

Apen. This is in thee a nature but infected; A poor sannily melancholy Lyceum! From change of fortune. Why this space? this This slave-like habit, and these looks of care? Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft, Hug their discom’d perfumes, and have forgot That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods, By putting on the cunning of a carper, Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive By that which has undone thee: bring thee knee, And let his very breath, whom thou’lt observe, Blow off thy cap; praise his most vicious strain, And call it excellent. Thou wast told thus; Thou gavst thine ears, like tapsters that bade welcome, To knives, and all approachers: ’tis most just, That thou turn mascall; hast thou wound again, Rascals should have’t. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee, I’d throw away myself.

Apen. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like thyself,

A madman so long, now a fool. What! think’st That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain, Will put thy skirt on warm! Will these mastoods, That have outlived the eagle, page thy circle, And skip when thou point’st out? Will the cold brook, Caudied with ice, caudle thy morning taste, To cure thy d’er-night’s surfeit? call the creatures,— Whose known natures live in all the spite Of wreakful heaven, whose bare unhusked trunks, To the conflicting elements expos’d, Are nere more natures,—bid them flatter thee; O! thou shalt find—

Apen. I love thee better now than e’er I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apen. Why?

Tim. Thou flatt’rest misery.

Apen. I flatter not, but say thou art a caitiff.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out?

Apen. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain’s office, or a fool’s.

Dost thou see thyself in’t?

Apen. Ay.

Tim. What! a knave too?

Apen. If thou didst put this sour cold habitation To castigate thy pride, ’twere well; but thou Dost it enforcedly: thou’lt courtier be again, Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery Outlines uncertain pumps, is crown’d e’er before:
The one is filling still, never complete; The other, at high wish, best state, contentless, Hath a distracted and most wretched being, Worse than the worst content.

Thou shouldst desire to die, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable.

Thou art a slave, whom Fortune’s tender arm With never clasp’d, but leav’d to a dog.

Halst thou, like us, from our first 2 swath, proceeded The sweet degrees that this brief world affords To such as may the passive 2 dogs of it Freely command, thou wilt have plung’d thyself In general riot; melted down thy youth In different beds of lust, and never learnt The key precepts of respect, but follow’d The sugar’d game before thee. But myself, Who had the world as my confectionary; The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men At duty, more than I could frame employment; That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves Do on the oak, have with one winter’s brush Fell from their boughs, and left me open, Bare For every falling on thy blow,—I, to bear this, That never knew but better, is some burden: Thy nature did commence in 2 suffrance, time Hath made thee hard in’t. Why shouldst thou hate men?

They never flatt’red thee: what hast thou given? If thou wilt curse, thy father, that poor rag, Must be thy subject; who, in spite, put stuff To some she beggar, and compoundeth thee Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! be gone!— If thou hast not been born the worst of men, Halst thou been a knife, and flatterer.

Apen. Art thou proud yet?

Tim. Ay, that I am not thee.

Apen. I, that I was

No prodigal.

Tim. I, that I am one now:

Were all the wealth I have shut up in thee, I’d give thee leave to hang it. Get thee gone.— That the whole life of Athens were in this! Thus would I eat it.

[Emptiness."

Apen. Here; I will mend thy feast.

Offering something."

Tim. First mend my company, take away thyself. Apen. So I shall mend mine own, by the lack of thine.

Tim. ’Tis not well mended so, it is but botch’d! If not, I would it were.

Apen. What wouldst thou have to Athens?

Tim. Thee thither in a whirlwind. If thou wilt,

Apen. The serpent called the blind worm. — Curved. " Enter,* i.e., close; stop up. — " The cunning of a carper is the habiliments of a critic.
Tell them there I have gold: look, so I have.

_Apem._ Here is no use for gold.

_Tim._ The best, and truest;

For here it sleeps, and does no hired harm.

_Apem._ Where 'by'st o' nights, Timon?

_Tim._ Under that's above me.

Wherefeel'st thou o' days, Apemantus?

_Apem._ Where my stomach finds meat; or, rather, where I eat it.

_Tim._ Would poison were obedient, and knew my mind?

_Apem._ Where wouldst thou send it?

_Tim._ To souse thy dishes.

_Apem._ The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. When thou wast in thy gift, and thy perfume, they mocked thee for too much curiosity; in thy rags thou knowest none, but art despised for the contrary. There's a medlar for thee; eat it.

_Tim._ I feel not.

_Apem._ Dost hate a medlar?

_Tim._ Ay, though it look like thee.

_Apem._ An thou hadst hated meddlers sooner, thou should'st have loved thyself better now. What man diest thou ever know unthrift, that was belov'd after his means?

_Apem._ Who, without those means thou talkest of, diest thou ever know beloved?

_Apem._ Myself.

_Tim._ I understand thee: thou hadst some means to keep a dog.

_Apem._ What things in the world causeth thou nearest compare to thy flatteners?

_Tim._ Women nearest; but men, men are the things themselves. What would'st thou do with the world, Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

_Apem._ Give it the beasts, to be rid of the men.

_Tim._ Would'st thou have thyself fall in the confusion of men, and remain a beast with the beasts?

_Apem._ Ay, Timon.

_Tim._ A beastly ambition, which the gods grant the beasts to attain to. If thou wert the lion, the fox would beguile thee; if thou wert the lamb, the fox would eat thee: if thou wert the fox, the lion would suspect thee, when, peradventure, thou wert accused by the ass: if thou wert the ass, thy dullness would torment thee, and still thou livest but as a breakfast to the wolf: if thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee, and oft thou should'st hazard thy life for thy dinner: Wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine own self the conquest of thy fury: Wert thou a bear, thou would'st be killed by the horse; Wert thou a horse, thou would'st be seized by the leopard: Wert thou a leopard, thou wert germane to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were jurors on thy life; All thy safety were remotion, and thy defence, absence. What beast couldst thou be, that were not subject to a beast? And what a beast art thou already, that seest not thy loss in transformation.

_Apem._ If thou could'st please me with speaking to me, thou might'st have hit upon it here: the commonwealth of Athens is become a forest of beasts.

_Tim._ How has the ass broke the wall, that thou art out of the city?

_Apem._ Yonder comes a poet, and a painter. The plague of company light upon thee! I will fear to catch it, and give way. When I know not what else to do, I'll see thee again.

_Tim._ When there is nothing living but thee, thou shalt be welcome. I had rather be a beggar's dog, than Apemantus.

_Apem._ Thou art the cup of all the fools alive.

_Tim._ Would thou wert clean enough to spit upon.

_Apem._ A plague on thee, thou art too bad to curse.

_Tim._ All villains, that do stand thee, are pure.

_Apem._ There is no leprous but what thou speak'st.

_Tim._ If I name thee,—

1 I'd beat thee, but I should infect my hands.

_Apem._ I would, my tongue could rot them off.

_Tim._ Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!

_Gho._ does kill me, that thou art alive;

_Apem._ I swoon to see thee.

_Tim._ Would thou would'st burst!

_Apem._ Away, Thou tedious rogue! I am sorry, I shall lose

_Apem._ A stone by thee.

[ _Throws a stone at him._ ]

_Tim._ Slave!

_Apem._ Teed!

_Tim._ Rogue, rogue, rogue!

_I am sick of this false world, and will love nought But even the mere necessities upon.'

Then, Timon, presently prepare thy grave:

_Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat Thy grave-stone daily: make thine epitaph, That lies on Dian's lap! thou knowest, God, That solder's close impossibilities, _language_,

And mak'st them kiss! that speak'st with every To every purpose! O thou touch of hearts! Think, thy slave man rebels; and by thy divorce Set them into confounding odds, that beasts May have the world in empire!

Enter Banditti.

1 Band. Where should he have this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender o'er of his remainder. The mere want of gold, and the falling from him of his friends, drove him into this melancholy.

2 Band. It is noise, he hath a mass of treasure.

3 Band. Let us make the assay upon him; if he care not for it, he will supply us easily; if he covetously reserve it, how shall we get it?

2 Band. True, for he bears it not about him; 'tis hid.

1 Band. Is not this he?

All. Where is?

2 Band. 'Tis his description.

3 Band. He; I know him.

All. Save thee, Timon.

_Tim._

All. Soldiers, not thieves.

_Tim._ Both two; and women's sons.

All. We are not thieves, but men that much do want. [meat.
Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of
Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;
Within this mile break forth a hundred swards;
The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips;
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you. Want! why want?
1 Band. We cannot live on grass, nor berries, water,
As beasts, and birds, and fishes; [fishes;
Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and You within this mile, as the fox, and you yet think must you, con, That you are thieves professed, that you work not
In lieder shapes; for there is boundless theft
In limited professions. Rascal thieves,
Here's gold. Go, suck the subtle blood o' the grape,
[Throwing gold.
Till the high fever seethe your blood to froth,
And so escape hanging: trust not the physician;
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you rob: take wealth and lives together;
Do villainy, do, since you protest to do't,
Like workmen. I'll example you with thievocracy:
The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction
Rob the vast sea: the moon's an arrant thief,
And her pale fire she snatches from the sun:
The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The moon into its true tears: the earth's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen
From general excrement: each thing's a thief.
The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power
Have unchecked theft. Love not yourselves; away!
Rob one another. There's more gold; cut throats;
[Throwing it.
All that you meet are thieves. To Athens, go;
Break open shops; nothing can you steal,
But thieves do lose it. Steel no less for this
I give you; and gold confound you howsoever! Amen.
Tim. [examinavi to his Cave.
3 Band. He has almost charmed me from my profession, by persuading me to it.
1 Band. 'Tis in the malice of mankind, that he thus advises us; not to have us thrive in our mys-
2 Band. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give

1 Band. Let us first see peace in Athens: there is no time so miserable, but a man may be true.
[Enter Flavius.
Flav. O you gods!
Is yon desip'd and ruinous man my lord?
Full of decay and failing! 0 monument,
And wonder of good deeds evily bestowed!
What an alternation of honor has desperate wants made!
What viler thing upon the earth, than friends
Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends?
How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was wish'd to love his enemies:
Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo
Those that would mislead me, than those that do!
He has caught me in his eye: I will present
My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord,
Still serve him with my life.—My dearest master!
Timon comes forward from his Cave.
Tim. Away! what art thou?

1 To con thanks was used formerly for to thank.— 2 Limited for allowed.— 3 Compost; manure.— 4 That is, There is no hour in a man's life so wretched, but he always has it in his power to become true, e. honeat.— 5 An alteration of honor is an alteration of an honorable state to a state of disgrace.— 6 Rarely, i. e., admirably.
Curses, stay not: fly, whilst thou'rt bless'd and free.
Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.

[Exit Flavius; and Timon into his Cave.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Same. Before Timon's Cave.

Enter Poet and Painter.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Poet. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumor hold for true, that he is so full of gold?

Pain. Certain; Alcibiades reports it; Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity. 'Tis said, he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Pain. Nothing else; you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore, 'tis not amiss we tender our loves to him in this supposed distress of his; it will shew honestly in us, and is very likely to load our \(^1\) horses with what \(^2\) we travail for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?

Pain. Nothing; I have only brought you a fair at this time but by my visitation; only, I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too; tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best. Promising is the very air of the time: it opens the eyes of expectation: performance is ever the duller for his act; and, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people, the deed of saying is quite out of the counterfeits! To you, it is most courteously and fashionable: performance is a kind of will, or testament, which argues a great sickness in his judgment that makes it.

Enter Timon, behind, from his Cave.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint a man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking, what I shall say I have provided for him. It must be a personating of himself: a satire against the softness of prosperity, with a discovery of the infinite flatteries that follow youth and opulence.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in thine own work? Wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so; I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him:

Then do we sin against our own estate, When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Poet. True; When the day serves, before black-cover'd night, Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light. Come.

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a god's gold, That is in worshipp'd in a baser temple, Than where swine feed!

'Tis thou that rigit'st the bark, and plough'st the foam; Sotst thou admire reverence in a slave? To thee be worship; and thy saints for nay Be crown'd with plagues, that thee alone obey! Fit I meet them. [Advancing.

Poet. Hail, worthy Timon!

Pain. Our late noble master.

\(^*\) The deed of saying;" I. e., the doing of what we have said we would do.

\(^1\) Portrait—Flatter.

\(^2\) A made-up villain," I. e., a complete, finisht villain.
You have done work for me, there's payment: hence! You are an alchemist, make gold of that. Out, rascal dogs! [Exeunt, beating them out.]

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Flavius, and two Senators.

Flav. It is vain that you would speak with Timon; For he is set so only to himself, That nothing but himself, which looks like him, Is friendly with him. 1 Sen. Bring us to his cave: It is our part, and promise to the Athenians, To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike Men are not still the same. 'Twas time, and griefs, That fram'd him thus: time, with his fairer hand Offering the fortunes of his former days, The former man may make him. Bring us to him, And chance it as it may.

Flav. Here is his cave.— Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon! Look out, and speak to friends. Th' Athenians, By two of their most reverend senate, greet thee: Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter Timon.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak, and be hang'd: For each true word, a blister; and each false Be as a cauterizing to the root o' the tongue, Consuming it with speaking! 1 Sen. Worthy Timon,— Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon. 2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, Timon. Tim. I thank them; and would send them back the plague, Could I but catch it for them. 1 Sen. Of forget What we are sorry for ourselves in thee. The senators, with one consent of °love, Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought On special dignities, which vacant lie For thy best use and wearing. 2 Sen. They confess Toward thee forgetfulness, too general, gross; Which now the single body, which doth seldom Play the recantor, feeling in itself A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal Of its own °fall, restraining aid to Timon; And send forth us, to make their sorrowed °render, Together with a recompense, more fruitful Than their offence can weigh down by the dram; Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth, As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs, And write in thee the figures of their love, Ever to read them thine. Tim. You wish me in it; Surprise me to the very brink of tears; Lend me a fool's heart, and a woman's eyes, And I'll beweep these comforts, worthy senators. 1 Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with us, And own Athens, thine and ours, to take The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks, °Allow'd with absolute power, and thy good name Live with authority:—so, soon we shall drive back Of Alcibiades th' approaches wild;°

Who, like a bear too savage, doth root up His country's peace. 2 Sen. And makes his threatening sword Against the walls of Athens. 1 Sen. Therefore, Timon,— Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir;— Thus,— If Alcibiades kill my countrymen, Let Alcibiades know this of Timon, That Timon cares not. But if he sack fair Athens, And take our goodly aged men by the beards, Giving our holy virgins to the stain Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war, Then let him know,— and tell him, Timon speaks it, In pity of our aged, and our youth, I cannot choose but tell him,—that I care not. And let him take't at worst; for their knives care not, While you have threats to answer: for myself, There's not a°whistle in th' unruly camp, But I do prize it at my love, before The reverend'st threat in Athens. So I leave you To the protection of the prosperous gods, As thieves to keepers.

Flav. Stay not: all's in vain. Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph, It will be seen to-morrow. My long sickness Of health, and living, now begins to mend, And nothing brings me all things. Go; live still: Do Alcibiades your plague, you his, And last so long enough! We speak in vain. Tim. But yet I love my country; and am not One that rejoices in the common wreck, As common °britt doth put it. 1 Sen. That's well spoke. Tim. Commend me to my loving countrymen,— 1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them. 2 Sen. And enter in our ears, like great triumphers In their applauding gates. Tim. Commend me to them; And tell them, that to ease them of their griefs, Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses, Their pangs of love, and other incident throes That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do them. I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath. 2 Sen. I like this well; he will return again. Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my °close, That mine own use invites me to cut down, And shortly must I fell it: tell my friends, Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree, From high to low throughout, that whose please To stop affliction, let him take his haste, Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe, And hang himself.—I pray you, do my greeting. Flav. Trouble him no farther; thus you shall still find him.

Tim. Come not to me again; but say to Athens, Timon hath made his everlasting mansion Upon the pitched verge of the salt flood; Whom once a day with his °embossed froth The turbulent surge shall cover: thither come, And let my grave-stone be your oracle.— Lips, let sour words go by, and language end: What is amiss, plague and infection mend: Graves only be men's works, and death their gain. Sun, hide thy beams: Timon hath done his reign.

[Exeunt Timon.]

°With one consent of love," i. e., with one united voice of affection.°° Hath sense of its own fall," i. e., hath a sense of the danger of its own fall.° Reader is confession.°° Allowed," i. e., confirmed.

SCENE V.—Before the Walls of Athens.

Trumpets sound. Enter Alcibiades, and Forces.

Alcib. Sound to this coward and lascivious town Our terrible approach. [A Porley sounded.]

Enter Senators, on the Walls.

Till now you have gone on, and filled the time With all licentious measure, making your wills The scope of justice: till now myself, and such As slept within the shadow of your power; Have waver'd with our traver's arms, and breath'd Our suff'rerance vainly. Now the time is flush, When crowning hour, in the hearer strong; Cries of itself, "No more!" now breathless wrong Shall sit and pant in your great chains of ease; And purly insolence shall break his wind With fear, and horrid flight.

* Drearful. * * * With our traver's arms, i. e., with our arms crooked. —Nature; ripe.

1 Sen. His discontent's are unremovably coupled to nature.
2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead. Let us return, And strain what other means is left unto us In our dear peril.

1 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Walls of Athens.

Enter two Senators, and a Messenger.

1 Sen. Thou hast painfully discover'd: are his files As full as they report?

Mess. I have spoke the least.

Besides, his expedition promises Present approach.

2 Sen. We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mess. I met a courier, one mine ancient friend, Whom, though in general part we were oppos'd, Yet our old love made a particular force, And made us speak like friends: this man was riding From Alcibiades to Timon's cave, With letters of entreaty, which imported His fellowship & the cause against your city, In part for his sake mov'd.

Enter Senators from Timon.

1 Sen. Here come our brothers.

3 Sen. No talk of Timon; nothing of him expect.

The enemies' drum is heard, and fearful scouring Doth chock the air with dust. In, and prepare: Ours is the fall, I fear, our foes the snare. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Woods. Timon's Cave, and a Tomb-stone seen.

Enter a Soldier, seeking Timon.

Sold. By all description this should be the place. Who's here? speak, ho!—No answer?—What is this?

Timon is here, who hath outstretch't his span: Some beast roar'd this; there does not live a man. Dead, sure, and this his grave. —Wilt'st on this tomb I cannot read; the character I'll take with wax: Our captain hath in every figure skill; An ag'ld interpreter, though young in days. Before proud Athens he's set down by this, Whose full the mark of his ambition is. [Exit.

SCENE V.—Before the Walls of Athens.

Enter Senators, and a Messenger.

Sen. These walls of ours Were not erected by their hands, from whom You have receiv'd your grief: nor are they such That these great towers, trophies, and schools should fall For private faults in them.

2 Sen. Nor are they living, Who were the motives that you first went out: Shame, that they wanted cunning, in excess Hath broke their hearts. March, noble lord, Into our city with thy banners spread: By decimation, and a tithed death (If thy revenges hunger for that food Which nature hath), take them in the destin'd tenth; And by the hazard of the spotted die Let die the spotted. 1 Sen. All have not offended; For those that were, 'is not severe to take, On those that are, revenge! crimes, like lands, Are not inherited. Then, dear countryman, Bring in thy ranks, but leave without thy rage: Spare thy Athenian cradle, and those kin, Which in the cluster of thy wrath must fall With those that have offended. Like a shepherd, Approach the fold, and cull th' infected forth, But kill not all together.

2 Sen. What thou wilt, Thou rather shall enforce it with thy smile, Than hew to't with thy sword. 2 Sen. Set but thy foot Against our rampir'd gates, and they shall cpe, So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before, To say, thou'lt enter friendly. 2 Sen. Throw thy glove, Or any token of thine honor else, That thou wilt will the wars and redress, And not as our confusion, all thy powers Shall make their harbor in our town, till we Have seal'd thy full desire.

Alcib. Then, there's my glove. Descend, and open your uncharged ports. Those enemies of Timon's, and mine own, Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof, Fall and no more; and,—to stow your fears With my more noble meaning,—not a man Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream Of regular justice in your city's bounds, But shall be remedied by your public laws At heaviest answer.

Both. Theis most nobly spoken. Alcib. Descend, and keep your words. [The Senators descend, and open the Gates.

Enter a Soldier.

Sold. My noble general, Timon is dead, Enramp'd upon the very hem of the sea; And on his grave-stone this inscription, which With wax I brought away, whose soft impression Interprets for my poor ignorance.

"Their refers to griefs. — That is, "Who made the motion for your exile." —Child; wisdom. — Uncharged ports, i. e., unwatched gates. — Atoney, i.e., reconcile.
Alcib. [Reads.] “Here lies a wretched corse, of wretched soul bereft: Seek not my name. A plague consume you wicked caitiffs lost! [hate:]
Here lie I Timon; who, alive, all living men did Pass by, and corse thy fill; but pass, and stay not here thy gait.”
These well express in thee thy later spirits:
Though thou abhor’st in us our human griefs, Scorn’dst our brain’s *flow, and those our droplets, which

* "Our brain’s flow," I. e., our tears.

From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye On thy low grave on faults forgiven. Dead Is noble Timon; of whose memory Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city, And I will use the olive with my sword: Make war breed peace; make peace b stint war; make each Prescribe to other, as each other’s c leech.—
Let our drums strike. [Exeunt.

b Stop.—c Physician.

Trebonius,
Decius Brutus,
Metellus Cimber,

SCENE, during a great part of the Play, at Rome: afterwards at Sardis; and near Philippi.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter Flavius, Marullus, and a body of Citizens.

2 Cit. A trade, sir, that, I hope, I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles. Flav. What trade, thou knave? thou naughty knave, what trade? 2 Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me: yet, if you be out, sir, I can mend you. Mar. What mean’st thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow? 2 Cit. Why, sir, cobble you. Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou? 2 Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is, with the awl: I meddle with no tradesman’s matters, nor women’s matters, but with all. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes; when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neats-leather have gone upon my handwork. Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day? Why dost thou lead these men about the streets?
JULIUS CAESAR.

ACT I.

JULIUS and you let Caesar rank. Disrobe [again. For What Many Calphurnia, I
You myself And To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels? You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!
O! you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome, Knew you not Pompey? Many a time and oft Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements, To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops, Your infants in your arms, and there have sat The live-long day, with patient expectation, To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome: And when you saw his charioted but appear, Have you not made an universal shout, That Tyber trembled underneath her banks, To hear the replication of your sounds Made in her concave shores? And do you now put on your best attire? And do you now call out a holiday? And do you now swear flowers in his way, That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood? Do you not! Run to your houses, fall upon your knees, Pray to the gods to intermit the plague That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flæ. Go, go, good countrymen; and for this fault Assemble all the poor men of your sort: Draw them to Tyber banks, and weep your tears Into the channel, till the lowest stream Do kiss the most exulted shores of all. [Exeunt.

Flæ. It is no matter; let no images Be hung with Caesar's trophies. I'll about, And drive away the vulgar from the streets: So do you too, where you perceive them thick. These growing feathers pluck'd from Caesar's wing, Will make him fly an ordinary pitch, Who else would soar above the view of men, And keep us all in servile fearfulness. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. A Public Place.

Enter, in procession, 1 with Trumpets and other Music, Caesar, Antony, for the course; Calphurnia, Portia, Decius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, and Casca; a Soothsayer, and a crowd following them.

Cas. Calphurnia,—
Cas. Calphurnia,—

dd. Here, my lord.
Cas. Stand you directly in Antonius' way, When he doth run his course.—Antonius. Ant. Caesar, my lord.
Cas. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius, To touch Calphurnia; for our elders say, The barren, touched in this holy chase, Shake off their steele curse.
Ant. I shall remember: When Caesar says, "Do this," it is perform'd.
Cas. Set on; and leave no ceremony out. [Music.

2 Qcit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday, to see Caesar, and to rejoice in his triumph. Mar. Wherefore rejoice? What conquest brings What tributaries follow him to Rome, [he home? To grace in captive bonds his chariot wheels? You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things!

4 Crowd. — Flourish of instruments.—"Your passion," l. e., the nature of your feelings.—"To state is to make common.
SCENE II.

JULIUS CAESAR.

699

And after scandal them; or if you know
That I profess myself, in banqueting,
To all the rout, then hold me dangerous.

[Flourish, and Shout.

Brutus. What means this shouting? I do fear, the Choose Caesar for their king.

Cas. Ay, do you fear it?

Then, must I think you would not have it so.

Brutus. I would not, Cassius; yet I love him well.
But wherefore do you hold me here so long?
What is it that you would impart to me?
If it be aught toward the general good,
So walk one in one eye, and death the other,
And I will look on both indifferent;
For, let the gods so speed me, as I love
The name of honor more than I fear death.

Cas. I know that virtue to be in you, Brutus,
As well as I do know your outward favor.

Well, honor is the subject of my story,—
I cannot tell what you and other men
Think of this life; but for my single self
I had as lief be not, as live to be
In awe of such a thing as myself.
I was born free as Caesar, so were you;
We both have fed as well, and we can both Endure the winter's cold as well as he:
For this, upon my honor, I do say;
But mark me, Brutus. The troubled Tyber chafing with her shores,
Cesar said to me, "Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point?"—Upon the word,
Accents as I was, I plunged in,
And bade him follow: so, indeed, he did.
The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews, throwing it aside,
And stemming it, with hearts of controversy;
But ere we could arrive the point propos'd,
Cesar cried, "Help me, Cassius, or I sink."
And, as Anceas, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear, so from the waves of Tyber
Did I the tired Caesar.

Is now become a god; and Cassius is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body,
If Caesar carelessly but nod on him.
He had a fever when he was in Spain,
And, when the fit was on him, I did mark
How he did shake: 'tis true, this god did shake:
He shook his head when he did leave the earth,
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the world,
Did lose his lustre. I did hear him groan;
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,
Alas! it cried, "Give me some drink, Titinius."

As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the majestic world,
And bear the palm alone.

[Shout. Flourish.

Brutus. Another general shout! I do believe that these applause are
For some new honors that are heap'd on Caesar.

Cas. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world,
Like a Colossus; and we petty men
Walk under his huge legs, and peep about
To find ourselves dishonorable graves.
Men at some time are masters of their fates:
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

Brutus, and you, Caesar: what should be in that Caesar?

That should name be sounded more than yours!
Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

Casca. You pull'd me by the cloak: would you speak with me?

Bru. Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanc'd to-day, That Caesar looks so sad.

Casca. Why you were with him, were you not?

Bru. I should not, then, ask Casca what hath chanc'd to-day.

Casca. Why, there was a crown offered him: and, being offered him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus: and then the people fell a shouting.

Bru. What was the second noise for?

Cas. They shouted thrice: what was the last cry Casca. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Casca. Ay, marry, was't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting by mine honest neighbors shouted.

Cas. Who offer'd him the crown?

Casca. Why, Antony.

Bru. This is a master of it, gentle Casca.

Casca. I can as well be hanged, as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery, I did not mark it. I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown:—yet 'twas not a crown neither, 'twas one of these coronets;—and, as I told you, he put it by once; but, for all that, to my thinking, he would have had it. Then he offer'd it to him again; then he put it by again: to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offer'd it the third time: he put it the third time by; and still as he refused it, the raddlement I shouted, and clapped their chapped hands, and threw up their sweaty night-caps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath, because Caesar refused the crown, that it had almost choked Caesar; for he swooned, and fell down at it. And for mine own part I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips, and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, soft, I pray you. What! did Caesar swoon?

Casca. He fell down in the market-place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'Tis very like he hath the falling-sickness.

Cas. No, Caesar hath it not; but you, and I, and honest Casca, we have the falling-sickness.

Casca. I know not what you mean by that; but, I am sure, Caesar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him, and hiss him, according as he pleased, and disapproved them, as they use to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

Bru. What said he, when he came unto himself?

Casca. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceiv'd the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he pricked me ope his doublet, and offered them his threat to cut.—An I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues:—and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, if he had done or said any thing amiss, he desired their worship to think it was his infancy. Three or four wenchers, where I stood, cried, "Alas, good soul!"—and forgave him with all their hearts. But there's no need to be taken of them: if Caesar had stabbed their mothers, they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that he came thus sad away?

Casca. Ay.

* Honest. — "A man of any occupation," i. e., a mechanic.

Cas. Did Cicero say any thing?

Casca. Ay, he spoke Greek.

Cas. To what effect?

Casca. Nay, an I tell you that, I'le ne'er look i' the face again: but those that understood him smiled at one another, and shook their heads; but, for mine own part, it was Greek to me. I could tell you more news, too: Marullus and Flavius, for passing so close Caesar's images, are put to silence. Fare you well: there was more foolery yet, if I could remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Casca?

Casca. No, I am promised forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind hold, and your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good; I will expect you.

Casca. Do so. Farewell, both.

[Exit Casca.

Bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown to be.

He was quick mettled when he went to school.

Cas. So is he now, in execution

Of any bold or noble enterprise,

However he puts on this tardy form.

This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit,

Which gives men stomach to digest his words

With better appetite.

Bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave you:

To-morrow, if you please to speak with me,

I will come home to you; or, if you will,

Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so—till then, think of the world.

[Exit Brutus.

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see,

Thy honorable metal may be wrought

From that it is dispos'd: therefore, 'tis meet

That noble minds keep ever with their likes;

For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd?

Cesar doth bear me hard, but he loves Brutus:

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,

He should not 4 humor me. I will this night,

In several bands, in his windows throw,

As if they came from several citizens,

Writings, all tending to the great opinion

That Rome holds of his name; wherein obiously

Cesar's ambition shall be glanced at:

And, after this, let Caesar set him sure,

For we will shake him, or worse days endure.

[Exit."

SCENE III.—The Same. A Street.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter, from opposite sides,
Casca, with his Sword drawn, and Cicero.

Cic. Good even, Casca. Brought you Caesar * home?

Why are you breathless, and why stare you so?

Casca. Are not you mov'd, when all the sway of Shakes like a thing unfirm? O, Cicero! [earth
I have seen tempests, when the seceding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen
The ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threatening clouds;
But never till to-night, never till now,
Did I go through a tempest dropping fire.
Either there is a civil strife in heaven,
Or else the world, too saucy with the gods,
Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderful?

Casca. A common slave (you know him well by

* Doth bear me hard," i. e., hath an unfavorable opinion of me.—Cic.] — "Brought you Caesar home," i. e., did you attend Caesar home.
SCENE III.

JULIUS CAESAR.

701

Hold up his left hand, which did flame, and burn
Like twenty torches jointed: and yet his hand,
Not sensible of fire, remain'd unscorch'd.
Beside, (I have not since put up my sword)
Against the Capitol! Our yoke and subdurance
Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by,
Without annoying me: and there were drawn
Upon a heap a hundred ghastly women,
Transformed with their fear, who swore they saw Men, all in fire, walk up and down the streets.
And yesterday the bird of night did sit,
Everything, on a sudden, upon the market-place,
Hooting, and shrieking. When these prodigies
Do so conjointly meet, let not men say,
"These are their 1 seasons,—they are natural;"
For, I believe, they are portentous things
Unto the climate that they point upon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange-disposed time:
But men may construe things after their fashion,
*Clean from the purpose of the things themselves.
Comes Caesar to the Capitol to-morrow?
Casca. He doth; for he did bid Antonius
Send word to you, he would be there to-morrow.
Cic. Good night then, Casca: this disturbed sky
Is not to walk in.

Casca. Farewell, Cicero. [Exit Cicero.

Enter CASSIUS.

Cas. Who's there?

Casca. A Roman.

Cas. Casca, by your voice.

Casca. Your ear is good. Cassius, what night is
This?

Cas. A very pleasing night to honest men.

Casca. Who ever knew the heavens menace so?

Cas. Those that have known the earth so full
Of faults.

For my part, I have walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me unto the perilous night;
And, thus unbraced, Casca, as you see,
Have bar'd my bosom to the thunderstone:
And, when the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heaven, I did present myself
Even in the aim and very flash of it. [Heavens?

Casca. But wherefore did you so much tempt the
It is the part of men to fear and tremble.
When the most mighty gods by tokens send
Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

Cas. You are dull, Casca; and those sparks of life,
That should be in a Roman, you do want,
Or else you use not. You look pale, and gaze,
And put on fear, and cast yourself in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the heavens;
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why birds, and beasts, from quality and kind;
Why old men, fools, and children calculate;
Why all these things change from their ordinance,
Their natures, and pre-form'd faculties,
To monstrous quality: why, you shall find,
That heaven hath infused them with these spirits,
To make them instruments of fear, and warning,
Unto some monstrous state.

Now could I, Casca, name to thee a man
Most like this dreadful night;
That thunder-lightning, open graves, and roars
As doth the lion in the Capitol:
A man no mightier than thyself, or me,
In personal action; yet *prodigious grown,
And fearful, as these strange irritations are.

Casca. 'Tis Caesar that you mean; is it not, Cassius?

* Entirely; altogether. — 'Thunderbolt.' — "Calculate;" i. e., foretell; prophecy. — * Fortunate.
And look you lay it in the sexton’s chair,
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window; set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus’ statue: all this done,
Repair to Pompey’s porch, where you shall find us.
Is Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there?
Cic. All but Metellus Cimber, and he’s gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will lie,
And so beat out these papers as you bade me.
Cic. That done, repair to Pompey’s theatre.
[Exit Cinna.
Come, Cassius, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already; and the man entire,
Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.
Cass. Of he sit high in all the people’s hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue, and to worthiness.
Cic. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,
You have right well conceived. Let us go,
For it is after midnight; and, ere day,
We will awake him, and be sure of him.
[Exeunt.

—ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same. Brutus’s Orchard.
Enter Brutus.
Bru. What, Lucius! ho!—
I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!—
I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.
When, Lucius, when? Awake, I say: what, Lucius!
Enter Lucius.
Luc. Call’d you, my lord?
Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.
Luc. I will, my lord.
[Exit.
Bru. It must be by his death; and, for my part,
I know no personal cause to spur him at,
But for the general point. He would be crown’d;
How that might change his nature, there’s the question.
It is the bright day that brings forth the adder,
And that craves wary walking. Crown him!—that;
And then, I grant, we put a sting in him,
That at his will he may do danger with.
Tis’ abuse of greatness is, when it disjoints
Remorse from power; and, to speak truth of Caesar,
I have not known when his self-confidence saw’d
More than his reason. But ‘tis a common proof,
That lowliness is young ambition’s ladder,
Whence the climber-upward turns his face;
But when he once attains the upwardmost,
He then into the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend. So Caesar may:
Then, lest he may, prevent; and, since the quarrel
Will bear no color for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these, and these extremities;
And therefore think him as a serpent’s egg
Which, hatch’d, would, as his kind, grow mischievous
And kill him in the shell.
[Exeunt.

a Orchard and garden were formerly synonymous.—

b Pity; tenderness.—"A common proof," i.e., proved by common experience.—"As his kind," i.e., like the rest of his species.

---

Re-enter Lucius.
Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper, thus seal’d up: and, I am sure,
It did not lie there when I went to bed.
[Giving him the paper.
Bru. Get you to bed again; it is not day.
Is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March?
Luc. I know not, sir.
Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me word.
Luc. I will, sir.
Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the air,
Give so much light that I may read by them.
[Opens the paper, and reads.
"Brutus, thou sleepest: awake, and see thyself.
Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, redress!
Brutus, thou sleepest: awake!"—
Such instigations have been often dropp’d
Where I have took them up.
"Shall Rome, &c." Thus must I piece it out;
Shall Rome stand under one man’s awe? What!
Rome?
My ancestors did from the streets of Rome
The Tarquin’s drive, when he was call’d a king.
"Speak, strike, redress!"—Am I excepted
To speak, and strike! O Rome! I make thee promise,
If the redress will follow, thou receiv’st
Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Re-enter Lucius.
Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.
[Knocking within.
Bru. 'Tis good. Go to the gate; somebody knocks.
[Exit Lucius.
Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar,
I have not slept.
Between the acting of a dreadful thing,
The first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasm, or a hideous dream:
The Genius, and the mortal instruments,
Are then in council; and the state of a man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter Lucius.
Luc. Sir, 'tis your brother Cassius at the door,
Who doth desire to see you.
Bru. Is he alone?
Luc. No, sir, there are more with him.
Bru. Do you know them?
Luc. No, sir; their lats are plain’d about their
And half their faces buried in their cloaks;
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favor.
Bru. Let them enter.
[Exit Lucius.
They are the faction. O conspiracy!
Shall we show to show thy dangerous brow by night,
When evils are most fresh? O! then, by day,
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek none, confound
Him in smiles, and affability;
For if thou path, thy native semblance,
Not Erebus itself were dim enough
To hide thee from prevention.
Enter Cassius, Casca, Decius, Cinna, Metellus Cimber, and Trebonius.
Cas. I think we are too bold upon your rest:
Good morrow, Brutus; do we trouble you?
Bru. I have been up this hour; awake, all night.
Know I these men that come along with you?
[Countenance.—'Tis that, 'if thou walk in thy true form,'
Scene I.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Cas. Yes, every man of them; and no man here, but honours you: and every one doth wish, you had but that opinion of yourself, which every noble Roman bears of you. This Threbonius.

Bru. He is welcome hither.

Cas. This Decius Brutus.

Bru. He is welcome too.

Cas. This Casca; this Cinna; and this Metellus Cimber.

They are all welcome.

What watchful cares do interpose themselves betwixt your eyes and night?

Cas. Shall I entreat a word? [They whisper.]

Dec. Here lies the east: doth not the day break Casco. No. [Here?] Cin. Of pardon, sir, doth; and you'ld gray lines, that fret the clouds, are messengers of day.

And you shall find that you are both deceiv'd. Here, as I point my sword, the sun arises; Which is a great way growing on the south, Weighing the youthful season of the year. Some two months hence, up higher towards the north He first presents his fire; and the high east Stands as the Capitol, directly here.

But give your hands not out of one, by one.

Cas. And let us swear our resolution.

Bru. No, nor an oath: if not the face of men, The sufferance of our souls, the time's abuse, If these be motives weak, break off betimes, And every man hence to his idle bed; So let high-sighted tyranny range out Till each man drop by lottery. But if these, As I am sure they do, bear fire enough To kindle cowards, and to steel with valor The melting spirits of women; then, countrymen, What need we any spur, but our own cause, To prick us to redress? what other bond, Than secret Romans, that have spoke the word, And you? for that the other oath, Than honesty to honesty engag'd, That this shall be, or we will fall for it? Swear priests, and cowards, and men cautious, Old feeble carrions, and such suffering souls That welcome wrongs: unto bad causes swear Such creatures as men doubt; but do not stain That high-blooded spirit, that doth mark out Nor th' insipidative mire of our spirits, To think that, or our cause, or our performance, Did need an oath, when every drop of blood, That every Roman bears, and nobly bears, Is guilty of a several bastardy, If he do break the smallest particle Of an agreement that hath pass'd from him.

Cas. But what of Cicero? shall we sound him? I think he will stand very strong with us.

Casco. Let us not leave him out.

Cin. No, by no means.

Met. O! let us have him; for his silver hairs Will purchase us a good opinion, and buy men's voices to commend our deeds: It shall be said, his judgment led out our hands; Our youth, and wildness, shall no whit appear, But all be buried in his gravity.

Bru. O! name him not; let us not break with him, For he will never follow any thing That other men begin.

Cas. Then, leave him out.

Cas. Indeed he is not fit.

Bru. Shall no man else be touch'd, but only Cas. Decius, well urg'd. — I think it is not meet, Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Caesar, Should outline Caesar, we shali all of him A shrewd contriver; and, you know, his means, If he improve them, may well stretch so far As to annoy us all; which to prevent, Let Antony and Caesar fall together. [Siue.

Bru. Our course will seem too bloody, Caes. Cعد. To cut the head off, and then lack the limbs, Like wrath in death, and envy afterwards; For Antony is but a limb of Caesar. Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caes. We all stand up against the spirit of Caesar, And in the spirit of men there is no blood: O, that we then could come by Caesar's spirit, And not dismember Caesar! But, alas! Caesar must bleed for it. And, gentle friends, Let's kill him boldly, but not wantonly: Let's crave him as a dish fit for the gods, Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds; And let our hearts, as subtle masters do, Stir up their servants to an act of rage, And after seem to chide 'em. This shall mark Our purpose necessary; and, which so appearing to the common eyes, We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers. And for Mark Antony, think not of him, For he can do no more than Caesar's arm, When Caesar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I fear him:

For in the ingraved love he bears to Caesar.

Bru. Alas! good Cassius, do not think of him. If he love Caesar, all that he can do Is to himself; take a thought, and die for Caesar; And that were much he should; for he is given To sports, to wildness, and much company.

Treb. There is no fear in him; let him not die, For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter.

Clock strikes.

Bru. Peace! count the clock.

Cas. The clock hath stricken three.

Treb. 'Tis time to part.

Cas. But it is doubtful yet, Whether Caesar will come forth to-day, or no; For he is superstitious grown of late, Quite from the virtue of our country, and once Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. It may be, these apparent prodigies, The unaccustomed terror of this night, And the persuasion of his augurers, May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that: if he be so resolv'd, I can o'er-way him; for he loves to hear, That unicorns may be betrayed with trees, And bears with glasses, elephants with holes, Lions with toils, and men with flattering; But, when I tell him, he hates flatterers, He says, he does, being then most flattered. Let me work; For I can give his humor the true bent, And I will bring him to the Capitol.

Cas. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.

Bru. By the eighth hour: is that the uttermost?

Cas. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Caesar hard, Who ranked him for speaking well of Tomney: I wonder, none of you have thought of him.

Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him:

MALICE. — To take thought is to prick, to be troubled in mind. — Omen. — By hain, i. e., by his house.
He loves me well, and I have given him reasons; Send him but hither, and I'll fashion him. Cas. The morning comes upon 's: we'll leave you, Brutus.—And, friends, disperse yourselves; but all remember What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.

Brutus. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily. Let not our looks put * on our purposes; But bear it as our Roman actors do, With unirt'd spirits, and formal constancy: And so, good-morrow to you every one. [Exit all but Brutus. Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep! It is no matter; Enjoy the heavy honey-dew of slumber: Thou hast no figures, nor to Dianas, Which busy care draws in the brains of men; Therefore, thou sleep'st so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my lord! Brutus. Portia, what mean you? Wherefore rise you now? It is not for your health thus to commit Your weak condition to the raw cold morning. Por. Nor for yours neither. You have ungently, Brutus, Stole from my bed: and yesternight, at supper, You suddenly arose, and walk'd about, Musing and sighing, with your arms across; And when I ask'd you what the matter was, You star'd upon me with ungenteel looks. I urg'd you further; then, you scratch'd your head, And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot: Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not; But, with an angry wafure of your hand, Gave sign for me to leave you. So I did, Fearing to strengthen that indisposition, Which seem'd too much enkindled; and, withal, Hoping it was but an effect of humor, Which sometime hath his hour with every man. It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep; And, could it work so much upon your shape, As it hath much prevail'd on your condition, I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord, Mark how you are dispos'd with your cause of grief.

Brutus. I am not well in health, and that is all. Por. Brutus is wise, and were he not in health, He would embrace the means to come by it.

Brutus. Why, so I do.—Good Portia, go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sick, and is it physical To walk unbraced, and suck up the humors Of the dawn morning? What! is Brutus sick, And will he steal out of his wholesome bed, To dare the vile contagion of the night, And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus; You have some sick offence within your mind, Which, by the right and virtue of my place, I ought to know of: and upon my knee.

[Knelling.

I charm you, by my once commended beauty, By all your vows of love, and that great vow Which did incorporate and make us one, That you unfold to me, yourself, your half, Why you are heavy, and what men to-night Have had resort to you; for here have been Some six or seven, who did hide their faces Even from darkness.

* "Put on," i. e., show.—" Figures," i. e., shapes created by imagination.—Condition is temper, disposition.—Damp. —" I charm you," i. e., I entreat you.

Brutus. Kneel not, gentle Portia. [Raising her. Portia. I should not need, if you were gentle Brutus. Within the bond of marriage, tell me, Brutus, Is it excepted, I should know no secrets That appertain to you? Am I yourself But, as it were, in sort, or limitation; To keep with you at meals, comfort your bed, And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the suburbs Of your good pleasure? If it be no more, Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife. Brutus. You are my true and honorable wife; As dear to me, as are the ruddy drops That visit my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret. I grant, I am a woman; but, withal, A woman that lord Brutus took to wife: I grant, I am a woman; but, withal, A woman well-reputed, Cato's daughter. Think you, I am no stronger than my sex, Being so father'd, and so husband'd? Tell me, my lord, if I be not to blame. I have made strong proof of my constancy, Giving myself a voluntary wound Here, in the thigh: can I bear that with patience, And not my husband's secrets?

Brutus. O ye gods! Render me worthy of this noble wife. [Knocking within. Hark, hark! one knocks. Portia, go in a while; And by and by thy bosom shall partake The secrets of my heart. All my engagements I will construe to thee, All the character of my sad brows. Leave me with haste. [Exit Portia. Enter Lucius and Ligarius.

Lucius. Here is a sick man, that would speak with you.

Brutus. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.—Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius! how? Ligarius. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue. Brutus. What a time have you chose out, brave Caius, To wear a kerchief. Would you were not sick! Ligarius. I am not sick, if Brutus have in hand Any exploit worthy the name of honor. Brutus. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius, Had you a healthful ear to hear of it. Ligarius. By all the gods that Romans bow before, I here discard my sickness. Soul of Rome!

[Throwing away his bandage. Brave son, deriv'd from honorable loins, Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up My mortified spirit. Now bid me run, And I will strive with things impossible; Yet, get the better of them. What's to do? Brutus. A piece of work that will make sick men whole.

Lucius. But are not some whole that we must make sick?

Brutus. That must we also. What it is, my Caius, I shall unfold to thee, as we are going, To whom it must be done.

Ligarius. Set on your foot, And with a heart new-sid I follow you, To do I know not what; But it sufficeth, That Brutus leads me on.

Brutus. Follow me, then. [Exit.

* All the character of, 'i. e., all that is characterized on.
SCENE II.—The Same. A Room in Caesar's Palace.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter Caesar, in his Night-gown.

Caes. Nor heaven, nor earth, have been at peace to-night; thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out, "Help, ho! They murder Caesar!"—What's within? Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord.

Caes. Go bid the priests do present sacrifice, and bring me their opinions of success. Serv. I will, my lord. [Exit.

Enter Calphurnia.

Cal. What mean you, Caesar? Think you to walk forth? You shall not stir out of your house to-day, [me, Caesar shall forth: the things that threaten'd Ne'er look'd but on my back; when they shall see The face of Caesar, they are vanish'd. Caes. Caesar, I never stood on o ceremonies, yet now they fright me. There is one within, besides the things that we have heard and seen, Recounts most horrid signs seen by the watch. A lioness hath whelp'd in the streets; and graves have yaw'n'd, and yielded up their dead; fierce fiery warriors light upon the clouds In ranks, and squadrons, and right form of war, Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol: The noise of battle b'furled in the air; horses did neigh, and dying men did groan; and ghosts did shriek, and squeal about the streets. O Caesar! these things are beyond all use, and I do fear them.

Caes. What can be avoided, whose end is purpos'd by the mighty gods? Yet Caesar shall go forth; for these predictions Are to the world in general, as to Caesar. Cal. When beggars die there are no comets seen; the heavens themselves blaze forth the death of princes.

Caes. Cowards die many times before their deaths, the valiant never taste of death but once. Of all the wonders that I yet have heard, it seems to me most strange that men should fear, seeing that death, a necessary end, Will come, when it will come.

Re-enter a Servant.

Serv. What say the augurers? Serv. They would not have you to stir forth to-day. Plucking the entrails of an offering forth, They could not find a heart within the beast.

Caes. The gods do this in shame of cowardice: Caesar should be a beast without a heart, if he should stay at home to-day for fear. No, Caesar shall not: danger knows full well, That Caesar is more dangerous than he. We are two lions licker'd in one day, and I the elder and more terrible; and Caesar shall go forth.

Cal. Alas! my lord, Your wisdom is consum'd in confidence. Do not go forth to-day: call it my fear That keeps you in the house, and not your own. We'll send Mark Antony to the senate-house, and he shall say, you are not well to-day: Let me, upon my knee, prevail in this. [Kneeling.

Caes. Mark Antony shall say, I am not well; And, for thy humor, I will stay at home. [Raising her.

Enter Decius. Here's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so. Dec. Caesar, all hail! Good morrow, worthy Caesar: I come to fetch you to the senate-house. Caes. And you are come in very happy time To hear my greeting to the senators, and tell them that I will not come to-day. Cannot be false; and that I dare not, false: I will not come to-day. Tell them so, Decius. Cal. Say, he is sick.

Caes. Shall Caesar send a lie? Have I in conquest stretch'd mine arm so far, To be afraid to tell grey-beards the truth? Decius, go tell them, Caesar will not come. Dec. Most mighty Caesar, let me know some cause, lest I be laugh'd at when I tell them so. Caes. The cause is in my will; I will not come: That is enough to satisfy the senate; but, for your private satisfaction, because I love you, I will let you know. Calphurnia here, my wife, stays me at home. She dream'd to-night she saw my statue, Which, like a fountain with a hundred spouts, Did run pure blood; and many happy Romans Came smiling, and did bathe their hands in it. And these she does apply for warnings, and portents Ev'ns imminent; and on her knee hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day. Dec. This dream is all amiss interpreted: It was a vision, fair and fortunate. Your statue spouting blood in many pipes, In which so many smiling Romans bath'd, signifies that from you great Rome shall suck Reviving blood; and that great men shall press For tinctures, stains, relics, and cognizance, This by Calphurnia's dream is signified. Caes. And this way have you well expounded it. Dec. I have, when you have heard what I can say: and know it now. The wife have concluded To give this day a crown to mighty Caesar: if you shall send them word, you will not come, Their minds may change. Besides, it were a mock Ato be rendered, for some one to say, "Break up the senate till another time, When Caesar's wife shall meet with better dreams." If Caesar hide himself, shall they not whisper, "Lo! Caesar is afraid?"

Pardon me, Caesar; for my dear, dear love To your proceeding bids me tell you this, and reason to my love is ille:ible. [Calls Cal. How foolish do your fears seem now, Cal. I am ashamed I did yield to them.— Give me my robe, for I will go:—

Enter Publius, Brutos, Ligarius, Metellus, Casca, Trebonius, and Cinna. And look where Publius is come to fetch me.

Pub. Good morrow, Caesar.

Caes. Welcome, Publius.

Pub. What, Brutus, are you stir'd so early too?—

Good-morrow, Caesar.—Caius Ligarius, Caesar was ne'er so much your enemy, as that same age which hath made you lean. What is't o'clock?

Bru. Caesar, 'tis six stricken eight.

Caes. I thank you for your pains and courtesy.

Enter Antony. See! Antony, that reveals long o' nights,
SCENE III.—The Same. A Street near the Capitol.

Enter Artemidorus, reading a Paper.

Art. "Cæsar, beware of Brutus: take heed of Cassius; come not near Cassa; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Caius Ligarius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar. If thou be'st not immortal, look about thee; security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover, "Artemidorus." Here will I stand till Cæsar pass along.

My heart laments that virtue cannot live Out of the teeth of emulation. If thou read this, O Cæsar! thou may'st live; If not, the fates with traitors do contrive. [Exit."

SCENE IV.—The Same. Another Part of the same Street, before the House of Brutus.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I pr'ythee, boy, run to the senate-house: Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone. Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand, madam. Por. I would have had thee there, and here again, Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there.— O constancy! be strong upon my side: Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue! I have a man's mind, but a woman's might. How hard it is for women to keep counsel!— Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do? Run to the Capitol, and nothing else, And so return to you, and nothing else! Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look well, For he went sickly forth: and take good note, What Cæsar doth, what suitors press to him. Harsh, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam. Por. Pr'ythee, listen well: I heard a bustling rumor, like a fray, And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

Enter 2 the Smiths' Shop.

Por. Come hither, fellow.

Which way hast thou been?

Sooth. At mine own house, good lady.

Por. What is't o'clock?

Sooth. About the ninth hour, lady.

Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitol?

*Envy.

SCENE I.—The Same. The Capitol; the Senate sitting.

A crowd of People in the Street leading to the Capitol; among them Artemidorus, and the Soothsayer. Flourish. Enter Cæsar, Brutus, Cassius, Casca, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cinna, Antony, Lepidus, Popilius, Publius, and others.

Cæsar. The idees of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cæsar; but not gone.

Cæsar enters the Capitol, the rest following. All the Senators rise.

Pop. I wish, your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cæs. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well. [Advances to Cæsar. Brut. What said Popilius Lena? Cas. He wish'd, to-day our enterprise might thrive. I fear, our purpose is discovered. Brut. Look, how he makes to Cæsar: mark him. Cæs. Lena, be sudden, for we fear prevention. Brutus shall be done. If this be mov'd, Cassius or Cæsar never shall turn back. For I will stay myself. Brut. Cassius, be constant: Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes; For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change. Cæs. Trebonius knows his time: for, look you, He draws Mark Antony out of the way, [Brutus, Eext Anto myste and Trebonius. Cæsar and the Senators take their Seats. Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go,
SCENE I.

JULIUS CAESAR.

And presently prefer his suit to Caesar. [him.

Bru. He is address'd: press near, and second

Cin. Casca, you are the first that bears your hand.

Casa. Are we all ready?

Cas. What is now amiss,

That Caesar and his senate must depart? [Cæsar,

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat

An humble heart. — [Kneeling.

Cas. I must prevent thee, Cimber.

These crouchings, and these lowly courtesies,

Might fire the blood of ordinary men,

And turn pre-ordinance, and first decree,

Into the law of children. Be not fond,

To think that Caesar bears such rebel blood,

That will be thaw'd from the *true quality

With that which melts the fools; I mean, sweet words,

Low-courted courtesies, and base spaniel fawning.

Thy brother by decree is banished:

If thou dost bend, and pray, and frown for him,

I spurn thee like a car out of my way.

Know, Caesar doth not wrong; nor without cause

Will he be satisfied.

Met. Is there no voice, more worthy than my own,

To sound more sweetly in great Caesar's ear,

For the repealing of my banish'd brother?

Bru. I kiss thy hand, but not in flattery, Caesar;

Dreading thee, that Publius Cimber may

Have an immediate freedom of repeal.

Cas. What, Brutos!

Cas. Pardon, Caesar; Caesar, pardon:

As low as to thy foot doth Cassius fall,

To beg enfranchisement for Publius Cimber.

Cas. I could be well mov'd, if I were as you;

If I could pray to move, prayers would move me;

But I am constant as the northern star;

Of whose true, fix'd, and resting quality,

There is no fellow in the firmament.

The skies are painted with unnumber'd sparks,

They are all fire, and every one doth shine;

But there's but one in all doth hold his place.

So, in the world: 'tis furnish'd well with men,

And men are flesh and blood, and appreciable;

Yet in the number I do know but one

That unassailable holds on his rank,

Unshak'd of motion: and, that I am he,

Let me a little show it, even in this,

That I was constant Caesar should be banish'd, and Constant do remain to keep him so.

Cas. O Caesar—

Cas. Hence! Will thou lift up Olympus?

Dec. Great Caesar,—

Cas. Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?

Casca. Speak, hands, for me.

Casca stabs Caesar in the Neck. Caesar catches hold of his Arm. He is then stabbed by several other Conspirators, and last by Marcus Brutus.

Cas. Et tu, Brutus—Then fall, Caesar.

[Dies. The Senators and People retire in confusion.

Cin. Liberty! Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—

Run hence, proclaim, cry it about the streets.

Cas. Some to the common pulpits, and cry out,

"Let's, Freedom, and enfranchise!*

Bru. People, and senators! be not affrighted,

Fly not; stand still:—ambition's debt is paid.

Casca. Go to the pulpits, Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Bru. Where's Publius?

Cin. Here, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, lest some friend of Caesar's

Should chance—

Bru. Talk not of standing.—Publius, good cheer:

There is no harm intended to your person,

Nor to no Roman else: so tell them, Publius.

Cas. And leave us, Publius; lest that the people,

Rushing on us, should do your age some mischief.

Bru. Do so:—and let no man abide this deed,

But we, the doers.

Re-enter TERENCE.

Cas. Where's Antony?

Tre. Fled to his house amaz'd.

Men, wives, and children, stare, cry out, and run,

As it were doomyday.

Bru. Fates, we will know your pleasures.—

That we shall die, we know; 'tis but the time,

And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Casca. Why, lie that cuts off twenty years of life,

Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit:

So are we Caesar's friends, that have abridg'd

His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop,

And let us bathe our hands in Caesar's blood

Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords;

Then walk we forth, even to the market-place,

And, waving our red weapons o'er our heads,

Let's all cry, Peace! Freedom! and Liberty!

Cas. Stoop then, and wash.—How many ages hence,

Shall this our lofty scene be act'd over,

In states unborn, and accents yet unknown?

Bru. How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey's basis lies along,

No worthier than the dust?

Cas. So oft as that shall be,

So often shall the knot of us be call'd

The men that gave their country liberty.

Dec. What! shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away:

Brutus shall lead; and we will gait his heels

With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel;—

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down,

And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say:

Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;

Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving;

Say, I love Brutus, and I honor him;

Say, I fear'd Cæsar, honor'd him, and lov'd him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony

May safely come to him, and be resolve'd

How Cæsar hath deserve'd to lie in death,

Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead

So well as Brutus living; but will follow

The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus,

Thorough the hazards of this untrod state,

With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

[Of Rising.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman:

I never thought him worse.

Tell him, so please him come unto this place,

He shall be satisfied; and, by my honor,

Depart untouch'd.

Serv. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit Servant.

Bru. I know, that we shall have him well to friend.

Cas. I wish, we may; but yet have I a mind,

That fears him much, and my misgiving still

Falls shrewdly to the purpose.
Then, in a friend it is cold modesty.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Caesar so,
But what compact mean you to have with us?
Will you be prick’d in number of our friends,
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I took your hands; but was, indeed,
Sway’d from the point by looking down on Caesar.
Friends am I with you all, and love you all,
Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons,
Why, and wherein, Caesar was dangerous.

Brut. Or else were this a savage spectacle.
Our reasons are so full of good regard.
That were you, Antony, the son of Caesar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That’s all I seek:
And am moreover suitor, that I may
Produce his body to the market-place;
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral.

Brut. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.—
You know not what you do: do not consent.

Ant. That Antony speak in his funeral.

Cas. Know you how much the people may be mov’d
By that which he will utter?

Brut. By your pardon; I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Caesar’s death:
What Antony shall speak, I will protest
He speaks by leave and by permission;
And that we are contented, Caesar shall
Have all due rites, and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more, than do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall: I like it not.

Brut. Mark Antony, here, take you Caesar’s body.
You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Caesar;
And say, you do’t by our permission,
Else shall we not have any hand at all
About his funeral: and you shall speak
In the same pulpit wherein I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so;
I do desire no more.

Brut. Prepare the body, then, and follow us.

Enter Antony.

Ant. Of pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers.
Thou art the ruines of the noblest man,
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood!
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,
(Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue)
A curse shall light upon the joints of men;
Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife;
Shallumber all the parts of Italy:
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their infants quarter’d with the hands of war,
All pity chok’d with custom of fell deeds;
And Caesar’s spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Até by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines, with a monarch’s voice,
Cry “Havoc!” and let slip the dogs of war,
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men, groaning for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Caesar, do you not?
Serc. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Caesar did write for him to come to Rome.
Scene II. — The Same. The Forum.

Enter Brutus and Cassius, and a throng of Citizens.

CIT. We will be satisfied: let us be satisfied.

BRUT. Then follow me, and give me audience, Cassius, go you into that other street, [friends.—
And part the numbers.—
Those that will hear me speak, let them stay here; Those that will follow Cassius, go with him; And public reasons shall be rendered

Of Caesar’s death.

1 CIT.

2 CIT. I will hear Cassius; and compare their
When severally we heard them rendered. [reasons,

3 CIT. The noble Brutus is ascended. Silence!

BRUT. Be patient till the last.

Romans, countrymen, and lovers! hear me for my cause, and be silent that you may hear; believe me for mine honor, and have respect to mine honor, that you may believe: censure me in your wisdom, and awake your senses that you may the better judge. If there be any in this assembly, any dear friend of Caesar’s, to him I say, that Brutus’ love to Caesar was no less than his. If, then, that friend demand, why Brutus rose against Caesar? this is my answer, —not that I loved Caesar less, but that I loved Rome more. Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves, than that Caesar were dead, to live all free men? As Caesar loved me, I weep for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice at it; as he was valiant, I honor him; but, as he was ambitious, I slew him. There is tears for his love; joy for his fortune; honor for his valor; and death for his ambition. Who is here so base, that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. Who is here so rude, that would not be a Roman? If any, speak; for him have I offended. I pause for a reply.

1 ALT. None, Brutus, none.

2 ALT. None, Brutus, none.

3 ALT. None, Brutus, none.

BRUT. I have done no more to Caesar, than you shall do to Brutus. The question of his death is enrolled in the Capitol; his glory not exterminated, wherein he was worthy, nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter Antony and others, with Caesar’s Body.

Here comes his body, mourned by Mark Antony:

who, though he had no hand in his death, shall receive the benefit of his dying, a place in the commonwealth; us which of you shall not find? With this I depart; that, as I slew my best lover for the good of Rome, I have the same dagger for myself, when it shall please my country to need my death.

2 ALT. Live, Brutus! live! live!

1 CIT. Bring him with triumph home unto his house.

2 CIT. Give him a statue with his ancestors.

3 CIT. Let him be Caesar.

4 CIT. Caesar’s better parts

8. O! now be crown’d in Brutus. [and clamors.

1 CIT. We’ll bring him to his house with shouts Bru. My countrymen,—

2 CIT. Peace! silence! Brutus speaks.

1 CIT. Peace, ho!

Bru. Good countrymen, let me depart alone; And, for my sake, stay here with Antony:

Do grace to Caesar’s corpse, and grace his speech Tending to his death, when Mark Antony, By our permission, is allowed to make. I do entreat you, not a man depart, Save I alone, till Antony have spoke. [Exit.

1 CIT. Stay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3 CIT. Let him go up into the public chair: We’ll hear him.—Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus’ sake, I am willing to you.

4 CIT. What does he say of Brutus?

3 CIT. He says, for Brutus’ sake, He finds himself beholding to us all.

4 CIT. ‘Twere best he speak no harm of Brutus here.

1 CIT. This Caesar was a tyrant.

3 CIT. Nay, that’s certain.

We are bless’d, that Rome is rid of him.

2 CIT. Peace! let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans,—

CIT. Peace, ho! let us hear him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your

I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him. [ears:

The evil that men do lives after them,
The good is oft interred with their bones; So let it be with Caesar. The noble Mark Antony

Hath told you, Caesar was ambitious: If it were so, it was a grievous fault,

And grievously hath Caesar answer’d it.

Here, under leave of Brutus and the rest, (For Brutus is an honorable man,

So are they all, all honorable men)

I come to speak in Caesar’s favor.

He was my friend, faithfull and just to me: But Brutus says, he was ambitious; And Brutus is an honorable man.

He hath brought many captives home to Rome, Whose rasons did the general coiffers fill:

Did this in Caesar seem ambitious? When that the ears were gored, Caesar hath wept;

Ambition should be made of sternest stuff: Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honorable man.

You all did see, that on the Lupercal I thrice pronounced him a kingly crown, Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition? Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And, sure, he is an honorable man. I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke, But here I am to speak what I do know. You all did love him once, not without cause: What cause withholds you, then, to mourn for him? O judgment! thou art flied to brutish beasts, And men have lost their reason.—Bear with me; My heart is in the coffin there with Caesar,
And I must pause till it come back to me: [ingr.

1 Cit. Methinks, there is much reason in his say-

2 Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter,

Cæsar has had great wrong.

3 Cit. Has he, masters? I fear, there will a worse come in his place.

4 Cit. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown.

Therefore, 'tis certain, he was not ambitious.

1 Cit. If it be found so, some will dare abide it.

2 Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping. [Antony.

3 Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome than

4 Cit. Now mark him; he begins again to speak.

Ant. But yesterday, the word of Cæsar might have stood against the world; now, lies he there,

And none so poor to do him reverence.

O masters! if I were dispos'd to stir

Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,

I should do Brutus wrong, and Cæsus wrong,

Who, you all know, are honorable men.

I will not do them wrong: I rather choose

To mark the deed to wrong myself, and you,

Than I will wrong such honorable men.

But here's a parchment with the seal of Cæsar;

I found it in his closet, 'tis his will:

Let but the commons hear this testament,

(Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read,) And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's wounds, And dip their hands in his sacred blood; You, beg a hair of him for memory, And, dying, mention it within their wills,

Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,

Unto their issue.

4 Cit. We'll hear the will. Read it, Mark Antony. All. The will, the will! we will hear Cæsar's will.

Ant. Have patience, gentle friends; I must not read it:

It is not meet you know how Cæsar lov'd you.

You are not wood, you are not stones, but men,

And, being men, hearing the will of Cæsar,

It will inflame you, it will make you mad. 'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;

For if you should, O! what would come of it?

4 Cit. Read the will! we'll hear it, Antony; You, read it, Mark Antony. Will you be patient? Will you stay a while?

I have o'ershot myself to tell you of it. I fear, I wrong the honorable men, Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar: I do fear it.

4 Cit. They were traitors: honorable men! All. The will! the testament! 2 Cit. They were villains, murderers. The will! read the will.

Ant. You will compel me, then, to read the will? Then, make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar, And let me show you him that made the will.

Shall I descant? and will you give me leave?

All. Come down.

2 Cit. Descend.

3 Cit. You shall have leave.

4 Cit. A ring! stand round.

1 Cit. Stand from the hearse; stand from the body.

2 Cit. Room for Antony;—most noble Antony! Ant. Nay, press not so upon me; stand far off. All. Stand back! room! hear back! Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them now. You all do know this mantle: I remember The first time ever Cæsar put it on;

'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent,

That day he overcame the Nervii.

Look! in this place, ran Cæsus' dagger through:

See, what a rent the envious Cæsa made: Through this the well-beloved Brutus stabb'd; And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away, Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow'd it,

As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no; For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel: Judge! you gods, how dearly Cæsar lov'd him! This was the most unkindest cut of all; For when the noble Cæsar saw him stab, Ingratitude, more strong than traitors' arms, Quite vanquisht him: then burst his mighty heart; And in his mantle muffling up his face, Even at the base of Pompey's statue,

Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell. O, what a fall was there, my countrymen! Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,

Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us. O! now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel The 4 dint of pity: these are gracious drops. Kind Brutus will not weep you, when you behold Our Cæsar's vesture wound'd; Look you live, Here is himself, *marr'd, as you see, with traitors.

1 Cit. O piteous spectacle! 2 Cit. O noble Cæsar! 3 Cit. O woful day! 4 Cit. O traitors! villains! 1 Cit. O most bloody sight! All. You will be revenged. Revenge! about— seek,—burn,—swoon,—kill,—slay!—let not a traitor live.

Ant. Stay, countrymen. [They are rushing out.

1 Cit. Peace there! hear the noble Antony.

2 Cit. We'll hear him, we'll follow him, we'll die with him. [you up

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir To such a sudden flood of mutiny. They that have done this deed are honorable: What private griefs they have, alas! I know not, That made them do it: they are wise and honorable, And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you. I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts: I am no orator, as Brutus is: But, as I love you all, a plain blunt man, That love my friend; and that they know well That gave me public leave to speak of him. For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth, Action, nor utterance, nor the power of speech, To stir men's blood: I only speak right on; I tell you that, which you yourselves do know, Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor dumb moulas And bid them speak for me: but were I Brutus, And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue In every wound of Cæsar, that should move The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny. All. We'll mutiny.

1 Cit. We'll burn the house of Brutus. 3 Cit. Away then! come, seek the conspirators. Ant. Yet hear me, countrymen; yet hear me speak.

All. Peace! ho! Hear Antony; most noble An-

[what.

Ant. Why, friends, you go to do you know not Wherein hath Cæsar thus deserv'd your loves? Alas! you know not:—I must tell you, then. You have forgot the will I told you of. [will. All. Most true;—the will:—let's stay, and hear the "Cæsar's angel," i.e., his guardian angel, or the being in whom he most trusted.—Sroke. —Discalced; destroyed. —Grievances.

SCENE I.

JULIUS CAESAR.

Ant. Here is the will, and under Caesar's seal. To every Roman citizen he gives, To every several man, seventy-five drachmas. 2 Cit. Most noble Caesar!—we'll revenge his death. 3 Cit. O royal Caesar!

Ant. Hear me with patience.

Att. Peace, let!

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his walks, His private arbors, and new-plantèd orchards, On this side Tyber: he hath left them you, And to your heirs for ever; common pleasures, To walk abroad, and recreate yourselves. Here was a Caesar: when comes such another? 1 Cit. Never, never!—Come, away, away! We'll burn his body in the holy place, And with the brands fire the traitors' houses. Take up the body.

2 Cit. Go, fetch fire.

3 Cit. Pluck down benches.

4 Cit. Pluck down forms, windows, any thing.

[Exeunt Citizens, with the Body.

Ant. Now let it work. Mischief, thou art about, Take thou what course thou wilt.—How now, fellow!

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Ant. Where is he?

Serv. He and Lepidus are at Caesar's house.

Ant. And thither will I straight to visit him. He comes upon a wish: Fortune is merry, And in this mood will give us any thing.

Serv. I heard them say, Brutus and Cassius Are rid like madmen through the gates of Rome.

Ant. Believe, they had some notice of the people, How I had mov'd them. Bring me to Octavius.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Street.

Enter Cinna, the Poet.

Cin. I dreamt to-night, that I did feast with Caesar, And things unlikely charge my fantasy. I have no will to wander forth of doors, Yet something leads me forth.

Enter Citizens.

1 Cit. What is your name?

2 Cit. Whither are you going?

3 Cit. Where do you dwell?

4 Cit. Are you a married man, or a bachelor?

2 Cit. Answer every man directly.

1 Cit. Ay, and briefly.

4 Cit. Ay, and wisely.

3 Cit. Ay, and truly; you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whither am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a bachelor? Then, to answer every man directly, and briefly, wisely, and truly I say, I am a bachelor.

2 Cit. That's as much as we say, they are fools that marry:—you'll bear me a bung for that, I fear. Proceed: directly.

Cin. Directly, I am going to Caesar's funeral.

1 Cit. As a friend, or an enemy?

Cin. As a friend.

2 Cit. That matter is answered directly.

4 Cit. For your dwelling,—briefly.

Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.

3 Cit. Your name, sir, truly.

Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1 Cit. Tear him to pieces: he's a conspirator.

Cin. I am not Cinna the conspirator.

2 Cit. It is no matter; his name's Cinna: pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.

3 Cit. Tear him, tear him! Come: brands, ho! firebrands! To Brutus, to Cassius; burn all. Some to Decius' house, and some to Cassius'; some to Liguarius. Away! go!

[Exeunt, 3 forcing out Cinna.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The Same. A Room in Antony's House.

ANTONY, OCTAVIUS, and LEPIDUS, seated at a Table.

Ant. These many, then, shall die; their names are prick'd.

[Exeunt.

Lep. Lepidus?

OCT. Your brother, too, must die: consent you, Lep. I do consent.

OCT. Prick him down, Antony.

Lep. Upon condition Publius shall not live, Who is your sister's son, Mark Antony.

[him.

Ant. He shall not live! look, will the spot I damn But, Lepidus, go you to Caesar's house; Fetch the will hither, and we will determine How to cut off some charge in legacies.

Lep. What, shall I find you here?

OCT. Or here, or at the Capitol.

[Exeunt.

Ant. This is a slight unmeritable man, Meet to be sent on errands: is it fit, The threefold would divided, he should stand One of the three to share it?

OCT. So you thought him;

And took his voice who should be prick'd to die In our black sentence and proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I have seen more days than you: And though we lay these honors on this man, To ease ourselves of divers slanderous loads, He shall but bear them as the ass bears gold, To groan and sweat under the business, Either led or driven, as we point the way; And having brought our treasure where we will, Then take we down his load, and turn him off, Like to the empty ass, to shackle his cars, And graze 4 on commons.

OCT. You may do your will: But he's a tried and valiant soldier.

Ant. So is my horse, Octavius; and for that I do appoint him store of provender; It is a creature that I teach to fight, To wind, to stop, to run directly on, His corporeal motion govern'd by my spirit: And, in some taste, is Lepidus but so; He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth. A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds On objects, arts, and imitations, Which, out of use and staled by other men, Begin his fashion: do not talk of him, But as a 5 property. And now, Octavius, Listen great things; Brutus and Cassius Are levying powers: we must straight make head; Therefore, let our alliance be combin'd, [out; Our best friends made, and our best means stretch'd And let us presently go sit in council, How covert matters may be best disclos'd, And open perils surest answered.

OCT. Let us do so, for we are at the stake, And lay'd about with many enemies:

1 "Damn," i. e., condemn.—

2 "As a property," i. e., as a thing quite at our disposal.
And some, that smile, have in their hearts, I fear, Millions of mischiefs. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Before Brutus' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Lucilius, Lucius, and Soldiers: TITINIUS and PINDARUS meet them.

Bru. Stand, ho!

Luc. Give the word, ho! and stand.

Bru. What now, Lucilius? Is Cassius near?

Luc. He is at hand; and Cassius is come to do you salutation from his master. [PINDARUS gives a Letter to Brutus.

Bru. He greets me well.—Your master, Pindarus, In his own change, or by ill officers, Hath given me some worthy cause to wish Things done, undone; but, if he be at hand, I shall be satisfied.

Pit. I do not doubt, But that my noble master will appear Such as he is, full of regard and honor.

Bru. He is not doubted.—A word, Lucilius: How he receiv'd you let me be resolv'd.

Luc. With courtesy and with respect enough; But not with so familiar instances, Nor with such free and friendly conference, As he hath used of old.

Bru. Thou hast describ'd A hot friend cooling. Ever note, Lucilius, When love begins to sicken and decay, It useth an enforced ceremony. There are no tricks in plain and simple faith; But hollow men, like horses hot at hand, Make gallant show and promise of their mettle, But when they should endure the bloody spur, They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Comes his army on? [ter'd:

Luc. They mean this night in Sardis to be quar-
The greater part, the horse in general, Are come with Cassius. [March within.

Bru. Hark! he is arriv'd.—
March gently on to meet him.

Enter CASSIUS and Soldiers.

Cas. Stand, ho!

Bru. Stand, ho! Speak the word along.

Within. Stand. Within. Stand.

Within. Stand. [One after the other, and fainter.

Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.

Bru. Judge me, you gods! Wrong! I mine enemies! And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother?

Cas. Brutus, this sober form of your hildes wrongs; And when you do them—

Bru. Speak your griefs softly: I do know you well. Before the eyes of both our armies here, Which should perceive nothing but love from us, Let us not wrangle: bid them move away; Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs, And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus, Bid our commanders lead their charges off A little from this ground.

Bru. Lucilius, do you the like; and let no man Come to our tent, till we have done our conference. Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Within the Tent of Brutus.

LUCIUS and TITINIUS at some distance from it. Enter Brutus and Cassius.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me doth appear in this: You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella

For taking bribes here of the Sardians; Wherein my letters, praying on his side, Because I knew the man, were slighted off.

Bru. You wrong'd yourself to write in such a case.

Cas. In such a time as this, it is not meet That every base offence should bear his comment.

Bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm; To sell and mart your offices for gold To undeservers.

Cas. I an itching palm?

You know that you are Brutus that speak this, Or by the gods this speech were else your last.

Bru. The name of Cassius honors this corruption, And chastisement does therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement! [ber.

Bru. Remember March, the icles of March remem-

Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake? What villain touch'd his body, that did stab, And not for justice! What! shall one of us, That struck the foremost man of all this world, But for supporting robbers, shall we now Contaminate our fingers with base bribes, And show the mighty space of our large honors, For so much trash as may be grasped thus? I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon, Than such a Roman.

Cas. Brutus, bay not me, I'll not endure it: you forget yourself, To hedge me in. I am a soldier, I, Older in practice, ablter than yourself To make such conditions.

Bru. Go to; you are not, Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Bru. I say, you are not.

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself: Have mind upon your health; tempt me no farther.

Bru. Away, slight man!

Cas. Let possible?

Bru. Hear me, for I will speak.

Must I give way and room to your rash cholera? Shall I be frightened, when a madman stares?

Cas. O ye gods! ye gods! Must I endure all this? Brutus. All this? ay, more. Fret, till your proud heart break;

Go, show your slaves how choleric you are, And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge? Must I observe you? Must I stand and crouch Under your testy humor? By the gods, You shall digest the venom of your spleen, Though it do split you; for from this day forth, I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter, When you are wapish.

Cas. Is it come to this?

Bru. You say, you are a better soldier: Let it appear so; make your vaunting true, And it shall please me well. For mine own part, I shall be glad to learn of older men.

Cas. You wrong me every way: you wrong me, Brutus;

I said, an older soldier, not a better:

Did I say, better?

Cas. If you did, I care not.

Cas. When Caesar liv'd, he durst not thus have mov'd me.

Bru. Peace, peace! you durst not so have tempted

Cas. I durst not?

Bru. No.

Cas. What! durst not tempt him?

Bru. For you life you durst not.

* Nice here is simple; silly.— "To hedge me in," i. e., to limit my authority.— "To make conditions," I. e., to know how to confer offices at my disposal.
Scene III.

Julius Caesar.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love; I may do that I shall be sorry for.
Bru. You have done that you should be sorry for. There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats, For I am arm'd so strong in honesty, That they pass by me as the idle wind, Which I respect not. I did send to you For certain sums of gold, which you denied me; For I can raise no money by vile means: By heaven, I had rather coin my heart, And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring From the base hands of peasants their vile trash, By any indirection. I did send To you for gold to pay my legions, Which you denied me: was that done like Cassius? Should I have answered Caius Cassius so? When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous, To lock such rascal runters from his friends, Be really, gods, with all your thunderbolts Do him to pieces! I denied you not.
Cas. Bru. You did.
Cas. I did not: he was but a fool, That brought me this answer. — Brutus hath riv'd my heart:
A friend should bear his friend's infirmities, But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me. Cas. You love me not.
Bru. Cas. I do not like your faults.
Bru. A friendly eye could never see such faults. Bru. A flatterer's would not, though they'd did app As huge as high Olympus. [Exit Brutus. Cass. And Antony, and young Octavius, come, Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius, For Cassius is a coward of the world: Hated by one he loves; brav'd by his brother; Check'd like a bondman; all his faults observ'd, Set in a note-book, learn'd, and cou'd by rote, To cast into my teeth. O! I could weep.
My spirit from mine eyes. — There is my dagger, And here my naked breast; within, a heart Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold: If thou hast be'st a Roman, take it forth; If, that denied thee gold will give my heart. Strike, as thou didst at Caesar; for, I know, When thou didst hate him worst, thou lovest him Than ever thou lov'dst Cassius. [Better Luc. Well. Brutus, sheath your dagger.
Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;
Do what you will, dishonor shall be honor.
O Cassius! you are yoked with a hump, That carries anger as the flint bears fire, Who, much enforced, shows a hasty spark, And straight is cold again.
Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus, When grief, and blood ill-temper'd, vexeth him? Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd too. Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand. Bru. And my heart, too.
Cas. O Brutus! —
Bru. What's the matter?
Cas. Have you not love enough to bear with me, When that rash humor, which my mother gave me, Makes me forgetful?
Bru. Yes, Cassius; and, from henceforth, When you are ever-earnest with your Brutus, He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so. [Noise within.

Poet. Let me go in to see the generals. There is some grudge between them; 'tis not meet They be alone.

Luc. [Within.] You shall not come to them.
Poet. [Within.] Nothing but death shall stay me.

Enter Poet.
Cas. How now! What's the matter? [mean?
Poet. For shame, you generals! What do you Love, and be friends, as two such men should be, For I have seen more years, I am sure, than ye. Cas. Ha, hat! how vilely doth this cynic rhyme.
Bru. Get you hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence. Cass. Bear with him, Brutus; 'tis his fashion. Brutus. I'll know his humor, when he knows his time. What should the wars do with these juggling fools? *Companion, hence.
Cas. Away, away! be gone. [Exit Poet.

Enter Lucilius and Titinius.
Bru. Lucilius and Titinius, bid the commanders Prepare to lodge their companies to-night. [you, Come, Cassius, and come yourselves, and bring Messala with Immediately to us. [Exit Lucilius and Titinius. Luc. Lucius, a bowl of wine. Cas. I did not think you could have been so angry. Bru. O Cassius! I am sick of many griefs. Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use, If you give place to accidental evils. Bru. No man bears sorrow better. — Portia is dead. Cas. Ha! Portia! Bru. She is dead.
Cas. How scap'd I killing, when I cross'd you so? — O, insupportable and touching loss! Upon what sickness?
Bru. Impatient of my absence, And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony, Have made thou them too strong; — for with her death That taking came. — With this she fell distast, And, her attendants absent, swallowed'd fire.
Cas. And died so?
Bru. Even so.
Cas. O, ye immortal gods!

Enter Lucius, with Wine and Topers.
Bru. Speak no more of her. — Give me a bowl of wine.
In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. [Drinks. Cass. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge. Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'er-swell the cup; I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. [Drinks

Re-enter Titinius, with Messala.
Bru. Come in, Titinius, — Welcome, good Messala. Now sit we close about this taper here, —
And call in question our necessities.
Cas. Portia, art thou gone?
Bru. No more, I pray you.
Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?
Bru. No, Messala.

*Companion was formerly a term of contempt; as we say at present fellow!
Luc. Here in the tent.

Bru. What! thou speak'st drowsily! Poor knave, I blame thee not; thou art o'er-watch'd. Call Claudius, and some other of my men; I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Luc. Varro, and Claudius!

Enter Varro and Claudius.

Var. Calls my lord!

Bru. I pray you, sirs, lie in my tent, and sleep: it may be, I shall raise you by and by on business to my brother Cassius. [pleasure.

Var. So please you, we will stand, and watch your Bru. I will not have it so; lie down, good sirs: it may be, I shall otherwise bethink me. Look, Lucius, here is the book I sought for so; I put it in the pocket of my gown.

[Servants lie down.

Luc. I was sure, your lordship did not give it me. Bru. Bear with me, good boy, I am much forget- canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile, [ful. And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

Luc. Ay, my lord, an't please you.

Bru. It does, my boy.

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty, sir. Bru. I should not urge thy duty past thy might: I know, young bloods look for a time of rest.

Luc. I have slept, my lord, already.

Bru. It was well done, and thou shalt sleep again; I will not hold thee long: if I do live, I will be good to thee.

[Music, and a Song. This is a sleepy tune. — O murderous slumber!

Lucius falls asleep.

Luc. Lay'st thou thy head? [mace upon my boy. That plays thee music? — Gentle knave, good night; I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee. If thou dost nod, thou break'st thy instrument; I'll take it from thee; and, good boy, good night.

Let me see, let me see: is not the leaf turn'd down, Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

[He sits down to read.

Enter the Ghost of Caesar.

How ill this paper bears — what! who comes here? I think, it is the weakness of mine eyes That shapes this monstrous apparition. It comes upon me. — Art thou any thing? Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil, That mak'st my blood cold, and my hair to stare? Speak to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

Bru. Why com'st thou?

Ghost. To tell thee, thou shalt see me at Philippi.

Bru. Well; then I shall see thee again?

Ghost. Ay, at Philippi.

[Ghost vanishes.

Bru. Why, I will see thee at Philippi then.

Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest; Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee. — Boy! Lucius — Varro! Claudius! Sirs, awake! — Claudius!

Luc. The strings, my lord, are false.

Bru. He thinks, he still is at his instrument. —

Lucius, awake!

Luc. My lord.

[End.

Bru. Didst thou dream, Lucius, that thee so criedst —

Luc. My lord, I do not know that I did cry.

Bru. Yes, that thou didst. Didst thou see any thing?

Luc. Nothing, my lord.

Bru. Sleep again, Lucius. —Sirrah, Claudius!
Fellow thou: awake!
Var. My lord.
Cass. My lord.
Brut. Why did you so cry out, sirs, in your sleep?
Var. Clau. Did we, my lord?
Brut. Ay: saw you any thing?
Var. No, my lord, I saw nothing.
Clau. Nor I, my lord.
Brut. Go, and commend me to my brother Cassius:
Bid him set on his powers betimes—before,
And we will follow.
Var. Clau. It shall be done, my lord.
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The Plains of Philippi.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.

Oct. Now, Antony, our hopes are answered. You said, the enemy would not come down,
But keep the hills and upper regions;
It proves not so: their battles are at hand;
They mean to warn us at Philippi here,
Answering before we do demand of them.
Ant. Tut! I am in their bosoms, and I know
Wherefore they do it: they could be content
To visit other places; and come down
With fearful bravery, thinking by this face
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Prepare you, generals;
The enemy comes on in Gallant show:
Their bloody sign of battle is hung out,
And something to be done immediately.
Ant. Octavius, lead your battle softly on,
Upon the left hand of the even field.
Oct. Upon the right hand I; keep thou the left.
Ant. Why do you cross me in this exigent?
Oct. I do not cross you; but I will do so.
[March.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Cassius, and their Army;
Lucilius, Titiarius, Messala, and others.

Brut. They stand, and would have parley.
Cass. Stand fast, Titiarius: we must out and talk.
Oct. Mark Antony, shall we give sign of battle?
Ant. No, Cassar, we will answer on their charge.
Make forth: the generals would have some words.
Oct. Stir not until the signal.
Brut. Words before blows; is it so, countrypeople?
Oct. Not that we love words better, as you do.
Brut. Good words are better than bad strokes,
Octavius.
[Octavius.

Octavius:
Ant. In your bad strokes, Brutus, you give good
Witness the hole you made in Caesar's heart,
Crying, "Long live! hail, Caesar!"

Cas.
Antony,
The posture of your blows is yet unknown;
But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless.
Ant. Not stingless, too.
Brut. O! yes, and soundless too;
For you have stole their buzzing, Antony,
And very wisely threat before you sting.
Ant. Villains! you did not so when your vile
Daggers Hack'd one another in the sides of Caesar:

"To warn," i. e., to summon.

And bow'd like bondmen, kissing Caesar's foot;
While dammed Cassar, like a cur, behind
Struck Caesar on the neck. O, you flattlers!
Cas. Flatters!—Now, Brutus, thank yourself:
This tongue had not offended so to-day,
If Cassius might have rul'd.
[Swear.
Oct. Come, come, the cause! if arguing make us
The proof of it will turn to rider drops.
Look; I draw sword against conspirators:—
When think you that the sword goes up again?—
Never, till Caesar's three and thirty wounds
Be well aveng'd; or till another Caesar
Have added slaughter to the 9 word of traitor.
Brut. Cassar, thou canst not die by traitors' hands,
Unless thou bring'st them with thee.
Oct. So I hope:
I was not born to die on Brutus' sword.
Brut. O! if thou wert the noblest of thy kind,
Young man, thou could'st not die more honorable.
Cas. A peevish schoolboy, worthless of such honor,
Joind with a masker and a reveller.
Ant. Old Cassar still.
Oct. Come, Antony: away!—
Defiance, traitors, hurl we in your teeth.
If you dare fight to-day, come to the field;
If not, when you have stomachs.
[Exeunt Octavius, Antony, and their Army.
Cas. Why now, blow wind, swell bilow, and Swim back!
The storm is up, and all is on the hazard.
Brut. Ho, Lucilius! hark, a word with you.
Luc. My lord.
[Cassar, Lucilius talk apart.
Cas. Messala!
Mess. What says my general?
Cas. Messala,
This is my birth-day; as this very day
Was Cassar born. Give me thy hand, Messala:
Be thou my witness, that against my will,
As Pompey was, am I compell'd to set
Upon one battle all our liberties.
You know, that I held Epicurus strong,
And his opinion: now, I change my mind,
And partly credit things that do presage.
Coming from my Sardis, from my Propontis sign
Two mighty eagles fell; and there they perch'd,
Gorging and feeding from our soldiers' hands;
Who to Philippi here consort us:
This morning are they fled away, and gone,
And in their steads do ravens, crows, and kites,
Fly o'er our heads, and downward look on us,
As we were sickly prey; their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies ready to give up the ghost.
Mess. Believe not so.
Cas.
I but believe it partly,
For I am fresh of spirit, and resolv'd
To meet all perils very constantly.
Brut. Even so, Lucilius.
[Lucilius stands back.
Cas. Now, most noble Brutus,
The gods to-day stand friendly! that we may Lovers in peace, lead on our days to age;
But since the affairs of men rest still uncertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may befal.
If we do lose this battle, then is this
The very last time we shall speak together:
What are you then determined to do?
Brut. Even by the rule of that philosophy,
By which I did blame Cato for the death

― "Strain," i. e., race; family.— Friends.
Which he did give himself. I know not how,
But I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The term of life,—arming myself with patience,
To stay the providence of those high powers,
That govern us below.
Cas.
Then, if we lose this battle,
You are contented to be led in triumph
Throughout the streets of Rome?
[man,
Bru. No, Cassius; no: think not, thou noble Ro.
That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind: but this same day
Must end that work the ides of March began,
And whether we shall meet again, I know not.
Therefore, our everlasting farewell take:
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius.
If we do meet again, why we shall smile;
If not, why, then, this parting was well made.
Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus.
If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed;
If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.
Bru.: Why then, lead on,—O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business, ere it come!
But it sufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is known.—Come, ho! away!
[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Same. The Field of Battle.
Alarum. Enter Brutus and Messala.
Bru. Ride, ride, Messal(a, ride, and give these bills
Unto the legions on the other side. [Loud Alarum.
Let them set on at once; for I perceive
But cold demeanor in Octavius' wing,
And sudden push gives them the overthrow.
Ride, ride, Messal(a: let them all come down.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. Another Part of the Field.
Alarum. Enter Cassius and Titinius.
Cas. O, look, Titinius, look! the villains fly.
Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy:
This ensign here of mine was turning back;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.
Tit. O Cassius! Brutus gave the word too early;
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly: his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclos'd.
[Enter Pindarus.
Pin. Fly farther off, my lord, fly farther off;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord:
Fly, therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.
Cas. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius;
Are those my tents where I perceive the fire?
Tit. They are, my lord.
Cas.
Titinius, if thou lov'st me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,
And here again; that I may rest assur'd,
Whether yond'rs troops are friend or enemy.
Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought.
[Exit.
Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill!
My sight was ever thick; regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.—
[Exit Pindarus.
This day I breathed first; time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end:
*To prevent here means to anticipate.—bThrough.

My life is run his compass.—Sirrah, what news?
Pin. [Above.] O my lords!
Cas. What news?
Pin. Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen, that make to him on the spur;—
Yet he is not;—now they are almost on him.
Now, Titinius!—now some light!—O! he 'lights too:—
He's ta'en: and, hark! [Shout.] they shout for joy.
Cas. Come down; behold no more.—
O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face!
[Enter Pindarus.
Come hither, sirrah.
In Furtin did I take thee prisoner;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I bid thee do,
[cloth: Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine
Now be a freeman: and with this good sword,
That ran through Caesar's bowels, search this bosom.
Stand not to answer: here, take thou the hilts;
And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword.—Cassius, thou art reveng'd,
Even with the sword that kill'd thee.
[Dies Pindarus. So, I am free; yet would not so have been,
Durst I have done my will. O Cassius!
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him. [Exit.
Re-enter Titinius, with Messal(a.
Mes. It is but change, Titinius; for Octavius
Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.
Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.
Mes. Where did you leave him?
Tit.
Mes. All disconsolate,
With Titinius, his bondman, on this hill.
Mes. Is not that he, that lies upon the ground?
Tit. He lies not like the living.—O my heart!
Mes. Is not that he?
Tit.
Mes. No, this was he, Messal(a,
But Cassius is no more.—O setting sun!
As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night,
So in his red blood Cassius' day is set:
The sun of Rome is set. Our day is gone;
Clouds, dews, and dangers come; our deeds are done,
Mistrust of my success hath done this deed.
Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this deed.
O hateful error! melancholy's child,
Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O error! soon conceiv'd,
Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,
But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.
Tit. What, Pindarus! Where art thou, Pindarus?
Mes. Seek him, Titinius, whilst I go to meet
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears: I may say, thrusting it;
For piercing steel, and darts evanenom'd,
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus,
As tidings of this sight.
Tit.
Mes. He, you, Messal(a,
And I will seek for Pindarus the while.
[Exit Messal(a.
Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius?
Did I not meet thy friends? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give it thee? Didst not thou hear their shouts?
Alas! thou hast misconstrued every thing.
But hold thee; take this garland on thy brow:
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
*Sirrah was the usual address in speaking to servants and children.
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come apace, And see how I regarded Caius Cassius.— By your leave, gods:—This is a Roman's part: Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart. —[Die.]
Alarum. Re-enter Messala, with Brutus, young Cato, Strato, Volumnius, and Lucilius.
Brutus. Where, where, Messalla, doth his body lie? Mess. Lo! yonder; and Titinius mourning it. Brutus. Titinius' face is upward. Cato. He is slain. Brutus. O Julius Caesar! thou art mighty yet: Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords In our own proper entrails. [Low Alarums. Cato. Brave Titinius! Look, where he have not crown'd dead Cassius! Brutus. Are yet two Romans living such as these? The last of all the Romans, fare thee well! It is impossible that ever Rome Should breed thy fellow.—Friends, I owe more tears To this dead man, than you shall see me pay.— I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.— Come, therefore, and to Thessalon send his body: His funerals shall not be in our camp, lest It discomfort us.—Lucilius, come:— And come, young Cato; let us to the field. Labeo, and Flavius, set our battles on!— 'Tis three o'clock; and, Romans, yet ere night We shall try fortune in a second fight. [Exeunt.]
SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.
Alarum. Enter, fighting, Soldiers of both Armies; then Brutus, Cato, Lucilius, and others.
Brutus. Yet, countrymen, O! yet hold up your heads. [Exeunt, charging the Enemy. Cato. What bastard doth not? Who will go with me? I will proclaim my name about the field.— I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho! A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend. I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho! [Charges the Enemy. Brutus. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I; Brutus, my country's friend: know me for Brutus. [Exit, charging the Enemy. Cato is overpowered, and falls. Luc. O, young and noble Cato! art thou down? Why, now thou diest as bravely as Brutus, And may'st be honor'd being Cato's son. 1 Sold. Yield, or thou diest. Luc. Only I yield to die: There is so much that thou wilt kill me straight. [Offering Money. Kill Brutus, and be honor'd in his death. 1 Sold. We meet not.—A noble prisoner! 2 Sold. Room, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en. 1 Sold. I'll tell the news:—Here comes the general.— Enter Antony. Brutus is ta'en, Brutus is ta'en, my lord. Ant. Where is he? Luc. Safe, Antony; Brutus is safe enough. I dare assure thee, that no enemy Shall ever take alive the noble Brutus: The gods defend him from so great a shame! When you do find him, or alive, or dead, He will be found like Brutus, like himself. Ant. This is not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you, A prize no less in worth. Keep this man safe, Give him all kindness: I had rather have Such men my friends, than enemies. Go on, And see whe're Brutus be alive, or dead; And bring us word, unto Octavius' tent, How every thing is chanc'd. [Exeunt.
SCENE V.—Another Part of the Field.
Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Strato and Volumnius.
Brutus. Come, poor remains of friends, rest on this rock. Clitus. Statilius show'd the torch-light; but, my lord, He came not back: he is or ta'en, or slain. Brutus. Sit thee down, Clitus: saying is the word; It is a deed in fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.— [Whispering. Clitus. What! I, my lord? No, not for all the world. Brutus. Peace then: no words. Clitus. Hark thee, Dardanius! [Whispers him. Dard. Shall I do such a deed? Clitus. O, Dardanius! Dard. O, Clitus! Clitus. What ill request did Brutus make to thee? Dard. To kill him, Clitus. Look, he meditates. Clitus. Now is that noble vessel full of grief, That it runs over even at his eyes. Brutus. Come hither, good Volumnius: list a word. Vol. What says my lord? Brutus. Why, this, Volumnius. The ghost of Caesar hath appear'd to me Two several times by night: at Sardis once; And, this last night, here in Philippi fields. I know my hour is come. Vol. Not so, my lord. Brutus. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius. Thou seest the world, Volumnius, how it goes; Our enemies have beat us to the pit: [Low Alarums. It is more worthy to leap in ourselves, Than tarry till they push us. Good Volumnius, Thou know'st that we two went to school together: Even for that our love of old, I pray thee, Hold thou my sword-hilts whilst I run on it. Vol. That's no an office for a friend, my lord. [Shaking hands severely. Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep; Farewell to thee too, Strato.—Countrymen, My heart doth joy, that yet in all my life I found no man, but he was true to me. I shall have glory by this losing day, More than Octavius, and Mark Antony, By this vile conquest shall attain unto. So, fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue Hath almost ended his life's history. Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest, That have but labor'd to attain this hour. [Alarums. Cry within! Fly, fly, fly! Clitus. Fly, my lord! there is no tarrying here. Brutus. Farewell to you:—and you;—and you, Volumnius.— [Shaking hands severely. Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep; Farewell to thee too, Strato.—Countrymen, My heart doth joy, that yet in all my life I found no man, but he was true to me. I shall have glory by this losing day, More than Octavius, and Mark Antony, By this vile conquest shall attain unto. So, fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue Hath almost ended his life's history. Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest, That have but labor'd to attain this hour. Strato. Give me your hand first: fare you well, my lord. Brutus. Farewell, good Strato.—Cæsar, now he still: I kill'd not thee with half so good a will. [He runs on his Sword, and Dies.

Oct. What man is that?
Mess. My master's man.—Strato, where is thy master?

Strato. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala: The conquerers can but make a fire of him; For Brutus only overcame himself, And no man else hath honor by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee, Brutus,
That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.

Oct. All that serv'd Brutus I will entertain * them. Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Strato. Ay, if Messala will b prefer me to you.

---

* "Will entertain them," i.e., will receive them into my service.—b "Prefer," i.e., recommend.

Oct. Do so, good Messala.
Mess. How died my master, Strato?
Strato. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

Mess. Octavius, then take him to follow thee, That did the latest service to my master.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all: All the conspirators, save only he, Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar; He, only, in a generous honest thought Of common good to all, made one of them.

His life was gentle; and the elements So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up, And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Oct. According to his virtue let us use him, With all respect, and rites of burial, Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie, Most like a soldier, order'd honorably.—
So, call the field to rest; and let's away, To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.

SCENE I.—An open Place.

Thunder and lightning. Enter three Witches.

1 Witch. When shall we three meet again, In thunder, lightning, or in rain? 2 Witch. When the hurlyburly's done, When the battle's lost and won. 3 Witch. That will be ere the set of sun. 1 Witch. Where the place? 2 Witch. Upon the heath: 3 Witch. There to meet with Macbeth. 1 Witch. I come, Graymalkin! All. *Paddock calls:—Anon. Fair is foul, and foul is fair:

* Paddock was the name for a toad or a frog.

Hover through the fog and filthy air. [Witches vanish.

SCENE II.—A Camp near Fores.

1 Sennet within. Enter King Duncan, Malcolm, Donaldain, Lenox, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Soldier.

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report, As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt The newest state.

Mal. This is the sergeant, Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought 'Gainst my captivity.—Hail, brave friend! Say to the king thy knowledge of the broil, As thou didst leave it.

Sold. Doubtful it stood; As two spent swimmers, that do cling together
(And chose their art. The merciless Maccowald
Worthy to be a rebel, for to that
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon him) from the western isles
*Of Kernes and Gallowglasses is supplied; And fortune, on his damned quarrel smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's scourge; but all's too weak; For brave Macbeth (well he deserves that name) Diadaining fortune, with his brandished steed, Which smok'd with bloody execution, Like valour's minion, carr'd out his passage, Till he face'd the slave;
Which ne'er shook hands, nor hate farewell to him, Till he passe'd him from the wave to the chaps, And fix'd his head upon our battlements.

Dun. Q, valiant cousin! worthy gentleman!
Sold. As whence the sun 'gins his reflection
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunder break,
So from that spring, whence comfort seem'd to come, Discomfort swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark: No sooner justice had, with valor arm'd,
Curnell'd these slipping Kernes to trust their heels, But the Norwegian lord, surveying vantage,
With furbish'd arms, and new supplies of men,
Began a fresh assault.

Dun. Dismay'd not this
Our captains, Maccbeth and Banquo?
Sold. Yes; As sparrows eagles, or the hare the lion.
If I say 4 scooth, I must report they were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks; So they doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe: Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds, Or memorize another 4 Golgotha,
I cannot tell:—
But I am faint, my gashes cry for help. [wounds: Dun. So well thy words become thee, as thy Thy smack of honor both.—Go, get him surgeons.
[Exit Soldier, attended.

Enter Rosse and Angus.
Who comes here?
Mal.
Len. The worthy thane of Rosse.
Len. What haste looks through his eyes! So should he look, that 2 comes to speak things strange.
Rosse. God save the king!
Dun. Whence came'st thou, worthy thane?
Rosse. From Fife, great king;
Where the Norwegian banners 3bout the sky And fan our people cold.
Norway himself, with terrible numbers, Assisted by that most disloyal traitor,
The thane of Cawdor, began a dismal conflict;
Till that Bellona's tridegrem, lapp'd in 2proof,
Confronted him with self-comparisons,
Point against point, rebellious arm against arm,
Curbing his lavish spirit: and, to conclude,
The victory fell on us:—
Dun. Great happiness!
Rosse. That now
Sweno, the Norway's king, craves 3 composition; Nor would we deign him burial of his men, Till he disbarred at St. Colines' Inch Ten thousand dollars to our general use.
Dun. No more that thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Of is used here for wed. — Kernes and Gallowglasses were light and heavy armed infantry. — show'd like a rebel's where, i.e., deceived him. — Truth. — That is, make another Golgotha as memorable as the first. — to. I.e., wrote. — defy. — Bellona's bridgemen, i.e., Macbeth. — Lapp'd in proof, i.e., defended by armor of proof. — Confronted him with self-comparisons, i.e., gave him as good as he brought. — Composition, i.e., a treaty of peace. — Saint Colines' Inch was a small island in the Firth of Forth near Edinburgh.

Our bosom interest.—Go, pronounce his present And with his former title greet Macbeth. [Death,
Rosse, I'll see it done.
Dun. What he hath lost noble Macbeth hath won. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A Heath.
Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?
3 Witch. Sister, where thou?
1 Witch. A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap, And mouch'd, and mouch'd, and mouch'd:—
"Give me," quoth I:—
"A rosein thee, witch!" the rump-fed ronyon cries. Her husband's to Allepo gone, master o' the Tiger: But in a sieve I'll thither sail, And, like a rat without a tail, I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do.
2 Witch. I'll give thee a wind.
1 Witch. Thou art kind.
3 Witch. And I another.
1 Witch. I myself have all the other; And the very ports they blow, All the quarters that they know I the shipman's card 2 to show. I'll drain him dry as day:
Sleep shall, neither night nor day, Hang upon his pest-house lid;
He shall live a man forbid.
Weary sev'n-nights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine:\ Though his bark cannot be lost, Yet it shall be tempest-toss'd:—
Look what I have,
2 Witch. Show me, show me.
1 Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb, Wreck'd as homeward he did come. [Drum within.
3 Witch. A drum! a drum!
Macbeth doth come.
All. The 4 weird sisters, hand in hand,
Postel of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again, to make up nine.
Peace! — the charm's wound up.

Enter Maccbeth and Banquo.
Macc. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.
Ban. How far is't call'd to Forres? — What are these So wither'd, and so wild in their attire, That look not like th' inhabitants o' the earth, And yet are not? Live you? or are you aught That man may question? You seem to understand me By each at once her choppy finger laying Upon her skinny lips. You should be women, And yet your heads forbid me to interpret That you are so.

Macc. Speak, if you can.—What are you?
1 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Glamis! — [of Cawdor! 2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane
3 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! that shalt be king hereafter.
Ban. Good sir, why do you start, and seem to fear Things that do sound so fair? — I mean the truth, Are ye fantastics, or that indeed Which outwardly ye show? — My noble partner

——— "Acrisium," i.e., Avant.— "Rump-fed ronyon," i.e., scurry woman, fed on offal.— "The shipman's card" is the seaman's book.— "Forsbid," i.e., bewitched; charmed.
"A Weird," i.e., prophetic.— "Fantastic," i.e., creatures of fantasy.
SCENE IV.

MACBETH.

You greet with present grace, and great prediction
Of noble having, and of royal hope,
That he seems rapt withal: to me you speak not.
If you can look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow, and which will not,
Speak then to me, who neither beg, nor fear,
Your favors, nor your hate.

1 Witch. Hail!
2 Witch. Hail!
3 Witch. Hail!
1 Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.
2 Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.
3 Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none.
So, all hail, Macbeth, and Banquo!
1 Witch. Banquo, and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more.
By Sinel's death, I know, I am thane of Glamis;
But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,
A prosperous gentleman; and to be king
Stands not within the prospect of belief,
No more than to be Cawdor. Say, from whence
You owe this strange intelligence? or why
Upon this blasted heath you stop our way?
With such prophetic greeting?—Speak, I charge you.

[Witches vanish.

Ban. The earth hath bubbled, as the water has,
And these are of them.—Whither are they vanished?
Macb. Into the air; and what seemed corporal, melted
As breath into the wind.—Would they had stay'd!
Was there such things here?—no, we do speak about,
Or have we eaten on the insane root,
That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings.

Ban. You shall be king.

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too: wont it not so?

Ban. To the self-same tune, and words. Who's here?

Enter Ross, and Angus.

Ross. The king hath happily receiv'd, Macbeth,
The news of thy success; and when he reads
Thy personal venture in the rebels' flight,
His wonders and his praises do contend,
Which should be thine, or his. Silenc'd with that,
In viewing 'tis the rest of the self-same day,
He finds thee in the stout Norwegan ranks,
Nothing afeard of what thyself didst make,
Strange images of death. As thick as 'tis
Came post with post; and every one did bear
The praises in his kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent,
To give thee from our royal master thanks;
Only to herald thee into his sight,
Not pay thee.

Ross. And, for an earnest of a greater honor,
He bade me from him call thee thane of Cawdor:
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane,
For it is thine.

Ban. What! can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives: why do you
In borrow'd robes?—[dress me

Ang. Who was the thane, lives yet; but Under heavy judgment bears that life
Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was
With those of Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage, or that with both
He labored in his country's wreck, I know not; but treasons capital, confess'd and prov'd,

Have overthrown him.

Macb. Glownia, and thane of Cawdor:
The greatest is behind. [Aside.] Thanks for your pains—
Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no less to them?

Ban. That, trusted home,
Might yet entangle you unto the crown.
Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange:
And oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trible, to betray us
In deepest consequence.—
Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme. [Aside.] I thank you, gentlemen.

This supernatural soliciting
Cannot be ill; cannot be good:—if ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success,
Commencing in truth? I am thane of Cawdor:
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my beatéd heart knout at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings.
My thought, where murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is sooner dier in reverse, and nothing is,
But what is not.

Ban. Look, how our partner's rant.

Macb. If chance will have me king, why, chance
May crown me,
Without my stir.

Ban. New honors come upon him,
Like our strange garments, cleave not to their mould,
But with the aid of use.

Macb. Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

Macb. Give your favor: my dull brain was wrought
With things forgotten.—Kind gentlemen, your pains
Are registred, when every day I turn
The leaf to read them.—Let us toward the king.—

[To Banquo.] Think upon what hath chanc'd; and,
At more time,
The interim having weigh'd it, let us speak
Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Macb. Tell then, enough.—Come, friends.

SCENE IV.—Fore's. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Lenox, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor; or not
Those in commission yet return'd?

Mal. My liege, they are not yet come back; but I have spoke
With one that saw him die, who did report,
That very frankly he confess'd his treasons,
Implied his highness' pardon, and set forth
A deep repentance. Nothing in his life
Became him like the leaving it: he died
As one that had been studi'd in his death.

4 "Having," i.e., fortune; estates.—"the insane root" was probably hawk's.—"As thick as tale," i.e., as fast as they could be counted.

4 Temptation.—"Seated," i.e., firmly fixed.

4 "Function is smother'd in suspense," i.e., the powers of action are oppressed by conjecture. —"The interim having weigh'd it," i.e., you having weigh'd it in the interim.

4 "studied in his death," i.e., well instructed in the art of dying.
To throw away the dearest thing he *ow'd,
As 'were a careless trifle.

Dan. There's no art
To find the mind's construction in the face;
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.—

Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Rosse, and Angus.
O worthiest cousin! [Embrace.

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me. Thou art so far before,
That swiftest wind of recompense is slow
To overtake thee; would thou hast less deserv'd,
That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been more! only I have left to say,
More is the due than more than all can pay.

Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it pays itself. Your highness' part
Is to receive our duties: and our duties
Are to your throne and state, children, and servants;
Which do but what they should, by doing every thing
Safe toward your love and honor.

Dan. Welcome hither:
I have begun to plant thee, and will labor
To make thee full of growing.—Noble Banquo,
That hast less no less deserv'd, nor must be known
No less to have done so; let me infold thee,
And hold thee to my heart.

Dan. There if I grow,
The harvest is your own.

Dan. My plenteous joys,
With thee in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow.—Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest, Malcolm; whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland: which honor must
Not, unaccompanied, invest him only,
But this aymonization, like stars, shall shine
On all our daughters.—From hence to Inverness,
And bind us further to you.

Macb. The rest is labor, which is not us'd for you:
I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach;
So, humbly take my leave.

Dan. My worthy Cawdor!

Macb. The prince of Cumberland!—That is a step,
On which I must fall down, or else o'ercleap. [Aside.
For in my way it lies.

Stars, hide your fires:
Let not light see my black and deep desires;
The eye wink at the hand; and yet let that be,
Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see.

Exit.

Dan. True, worthy Banquo: he is full so valiant,
And in his commendations I am fed;
It is a banquet to me.

Let us after him.

Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peerless kinsman. [Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Inverness. A Room in Macbeth's Castle.

Enter Lady Macbeth, with a letter.

Lady M. [Reads.] "They met me in the day of success;
And I have learned by the perfectest report,
They have more in them than mortal knowledge.
When I burn'd in desire to question them farther,
They made themselves air, into which they vanished.
With that I stood rapt in the wonder of it,
Some mis-sives from the king, who all-lau'd me, 'Thane of Cawdor:'
by which title, before, these weird sisters soluted me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with, 'Hail, king that shalt be!'

This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness, that thou mightest not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee.
Lay it to thy heart, and fanwelk.

Glamis thou art, and Cawdor; and shalt be
What thou art promisd.—Yet do I fear thy nature:
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness,
To catch the nearest way.
Thou wouldst be great;
Art not without ambition; but without
The illness should attend it: what thou wouldst highly,
That wouldst thou holily; wouldst not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win: thou'dst have, great Glamis,
[It]:
That which cries, 'Thus thou must do, if thou have
And that which rather thou dost fear to do,
Than wishest should be undone.'
Hee the hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise with the valor of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which hate and metaphysical aid doth seem
To have thee crown'd withal.—

Enter an Attendant.

What is your tidings?

Attent. The king comes here to-night.

Lady M. Thou'rt mad to say it.
Is not thy master with him?
Who, want'st not,
Would have inform'd for preparation.

Ing. Attent. So please you, it is true:
our thame is one
Of my fellows had the speed of him;
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending:
He brings great news. [Exit Attendant.]
The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements.
Come, you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me, from the crown to the toe,
Top-full of direst cruelty:
Make thick my blood,
Stop up th' access and passage to remorse;
That no compunction visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
Th' effect and it.
Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers,
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief.
Come, thick night,
And h' all thee in the dunest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes,
Nor heaven peep through the blindness of the dark,
To cry, 'Hold, hold!'——

Enter Macbeth.

Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor!
Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter!

They letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love,
Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence?

Macb. To-morrow, as he purposes.

Lady M. Q! never Shall sun that morrow see.

Your face, my thane, is as a book, where men
May read strange matters: to beguile the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,

"The golden round," i. e. the diadem.—"Metaphysical," i. e. supernatural.—"To have thee crown'd," i. e.
to desire to have thee crown'd.—"Mortal," i. e. deadly.—
"Full thee," i. e. wrap thee.—"This ignorant present,"
i. e. the present time, which is ignorant of the future.

* Owned; possessed. — * The perfectest report," i. e., the best intelligence.— * Miseree," i. e., messengers.
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under it. He that's coming
Must be provided for; and you shall put
This night's great business into my dispatch,
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Macb. We will speak farther.

Lady M. Only look up clear:
To alter favor ever is to fear.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The Same. Before the Castle.

Enter Duncan, Malcolm, Donalbain, Banquo,
Lenox, Macduff, Rosse, Angus, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat: the air
Nimbly and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that the heaven's breath
Smells woefully here: no juyfe, frieze,
Buttress, nor colgne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendent bed, and procreant cradle:
Where they much breed and haunt, I have observ'd,
Where is the delicate.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Dun. See, see! our honor'd hostess.—
The love that follows us sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love: herein I teach you,
How you shall bid God "yield us" for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service,
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business to contend
Against those honors deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house. For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits.

Dun. Where's the thame of Cawdor? We cou'd's him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor; but he rides well,
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath holp him
To his home before us. Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever
Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs,
in & compt,
To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand;
Conduct me to mine host: we love him highly,
And shall continue our graces towards him.
By your leave, hostess. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The Same. A Room in the Castle.

Hautboys and torches. Enter and pass over the stage, a Sever, and divers Servants with dishes and service. Then, enter Macbeth.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then twere well
It were done quickly: if the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With his surcease success; but that this blow

Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,
We'd jump the life to come.—But in these cases,
We still have judgment here: that we but teach
Biody instructions, which, being taught, return
To plague th' inventor: 'tis thus even-handed justice
Commends th' ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. He's here in double trust:
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject;
Strong both against the deed: then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan
Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead, like angels trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off;
And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubim, hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'er-leaps itself,
And falls on the other.—

Enter Lady Macbeth.

How now! what news?
Lady M. He has almost supp'd. Why have you left the chamber?
Macb. Hath he ask'd for me?
Lady M. Know you not, he has?
Macb. We will proceed no farther in this business:
He hath honor'd me of late; and I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.
Lady M. Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd yourself? hath it slept since,
And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely! From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou afraid
To be the same in thine own act and valor,
As thou art in desire? Would'st thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem,
Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage?

Macb. Pr'ythee, peace. I dare do all that may become a man;
Who dares do more is none.
Lady M. What boast was't, then,
That made you break this enterprise to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man;
And, to be more than what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor place,
Did then mislike, and yet you would make both:
They have made themselves, and that their fitness
now
Does unmake you. I have given suck, and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me:
I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his senseless gums,
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn as you
Have done to this.

Macb. If we should fail?

Lady M. We fail! But screw your courage to the sticking-place,
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep,
(Whereto the rather shall his day's hard journey Soundsly invite him) his two chamberlains

*Favor is countenance.—"Seat," i. e., situation.—"Coigne of vantage," i. e., convenient corner.—"To bid, here, means to press," i. e., God reward us.—"Hermits," i. e., chambermen.—"To compt," i. e., subject to account.—A Sever was a servant whose office it was to place dishes on the table.—Surcease is cessation.

"Sightless couriers of the air," i. e., the invisible winds.

"The adage was; "The cat would eat fish, and would not wet her foot."—"Adhere," i. e., adhere.
ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Same. Court within the Castle.

Enter Banquo, and Fleance, with a torch before him.

Ban. How goes the night, boy?

Fle. The moon is down; I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take’t, ’tis later, sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword.—There’s a husbandman in heaven;

Their candles are all out.—Take thee that too.

A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,

And yet I would not sleep: merciful powers!

Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature

Gives way to in repose!—Give me my sword.

Enter Macbeth, and a Servant with a torch.

Who’s there?

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The king’s a-bed:

He hath been in unusual pleasure, and

Sent forth great largesses to your offices.

This diamond he gives to your wife withal,

By the name of most kind hostess, and shut up

In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepar’d,

Our will became the servant to defect,

Which else should free have wrought.

Ban. All’s well.

I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters:

To you they have show’d some truth.

Macb. I think not of them:

Yet, when we can entertain an hour to serve,

We would spend it in some words upon that business,

If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind’st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent, when

It shall make honor for you. [Tis,

Ban. So I lose none

In seeking to augment it, but still keep

My bosom fruiclis’d, and allegiance clear,

I shall be counsel’d.

Macb. Good repose, the while.

Ban. Thanks, sir: the like to you.

[Exeunt Banquo and Fleance.

Macb. Go; bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,

She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.—

[Exit Servant.

Is this a dagger which I see before me, [thee:—

The handle toward my hand? I come, let me clutch

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible

To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but

A dagger of the mind, a false creation,

Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

I see thee yet, in form as palpable

As this which now I draw.

Thou marshall’st me the way that I was going;

And such an instrument I was to use.—

Mine eyes are made the fools of the other senses,

Or else worth all the rest: I see thee still:

And on thy blate, and dudgeon, gouts of blood,

Which was not so before.—There’s no such thing:

It is the bloody business, which informs

Thus to mine eyes.—Now of the one half world

Nature seems mark’d; and wicked dreams abuse

The curtain’d 1 sleeper: witchcraft celebrates

Palo Hecate’s offerings: and with’rd murder,

Alarum’d by his sentinel the wolf,

Whose howl’s his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,

With Tarquin’s ravishing strides, towards his design

Moves like a ghost.—Thou sure and firm-set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear

Thy nameless fear to hear me, and to mock

The present horror from the time,

Which now suits with.—Whilest I threat, he lives:

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.

[Alarum.

I go, and it is done: the bell invites me.

Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell,

That summons thee to heaven or to hell. [Exit.

SCENE II.—The Same.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk hath

Made me bold:

What though she be mad, the mad have given me fire,—

Hark! Peace!—

It was the owl that shriek’d, the fatal bellman,

Which gives the sternest good-night. He is about it.

The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms

Do mock their charge with snores: I have drugg’d their possetts,

That death and nature do contend about them,

Whether they live, or die.

Macb. [Within.] Who’s there?—what, ho?

Lady M. Alack! I am afraid they have awak’d,

And ’tis not done:—the attempt, and not the deed,

Confounds us.—Hark!—I laid their daggers ready,

He could not miss them.—Had he not resembled

My father as he slept, I had done’t.—My husband?

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. I have done the deed.—Didst thou not hear a noise?—[cry.

Lady M. I heard the owl scream, and the crickets

Did not you speak?
Macb. When 1
Lady M. Now.
Macb. As I descended?
Lady M. Ay.
Macb. Hark!— Who lies in the second chamber?
Lady M. Donalbain.
Macb. This is a sorry sight.
Lady M. A foolish thought to say a sorry sight.
Macb. There's one did laugh in's sleep, and one cried, "murder!"
[them: That they did wake each other: I stood and heard But they did say their prayers, and addres'd them Again to sleep.
Lady M. There are two lodg'd together.
Macb. One cried "God bless us!" and "Amen," the other.
*As they had seen me with these hangman's hands. Listening up my fear, I could not say amen, When they did say God bless us.
Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.
Macb. But wherefore could I not pronounce amen? I had most need of blessing, and amen
Stuck in my throat.
Lady M. These deeds must not be thought
After this ways: so, it will make us mad.
Macb. Methought, I heard a voice cry, "Sleep no more!"
Macbeth does murder sleep,"—the innocent sleep;
Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast.
Lady M. What do you mean?
Macb. Still it cried, "Sleep no more!" to all the house:
"Glimhis hath murder'd sleep, and therefore Cawdor Shall sleep no more; Macbeth shall sleep no more!"
Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, "worthy thane,
You do seem a noble strength, to think
So brainlessly of things. Go, get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.—
Why did you bring these daggers from the place? They must lie there: go, carry them, and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood.
Macb. I'll go no more:
I am afraid to think what I have done;
Look on't again, I dare not.
Lady M. Inform of purpose!
Give me the daggers. The sleeping, and the dead,
Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood
That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed, I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal,
For it must seem their guilt.
Macb. [Exit.—Knocking within.]
Whence is that knocking?— How is't with me, when every noise appals me? What hands are here! Ha! they pluck out mine eyes.
Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No; this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas *incarnadine,
Making the green one red.
*Re-enter Lady Macbeth.
Lady M. My hands are of your color; but I shame
To wear a heart so white. [Knock.] I hear a knocking
At the south entry: retire we to our chamber.
A little water clears us of this deed:
As for as if—That is, listening to their fear. —Sleeve is unwrought silk, sometimes floss silk. —To incarnadine is to stain of a red color.

How easy is it, then? Your constancy
Hath left you unattended.—[Knock.] Hark! more knocking.
Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers.—Be not lost
So poorly in your thoughts.
Macb. To know my deed, twere best not know myself.
[Knock.
Wake Duncan with thy knocking; I would thou couldst!]

SCENE III.—The Same.

Enter a Porter. [Knocking within.]

Porter. Here's a knocking, indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have *old turning the key. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock. Who's there? — the name of Beelzebub?—Here's a farmer, that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty: come in time; have 'mimpkins enough about you; here you'll sweat for't. [Knocking.] Knock, knock. Who's there, in the other devil's name?—
'Faith, here's an equivocator, that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven: O! come in, equivocator. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock. Who's there?—
'Faith, here's an English tailor come hither for stealing out of a French hose: come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose. [Knocking.] Knock, knock. Never at quiet! What are you?—But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no farther: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that the world might lose way to the everlasting bonfire. [Knocking.] Amen, amen: I pray you, remember the porter.

[Open the gate.]

Enter Macduff and Lenox.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed,
That you do lie so late?
Por. 'Faith, sir, we were enrousing till the second cock; and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does drink especially provoke?

Por. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine.

Lechery, sir, it provokes, and unprockes: it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance.

Therefore, much drink may be said to be an equivoc-ator with lechery: it makes him, and it mars him:
it sets him on, and it takes him off; it persuades him, and disinherits him; makes him stand to, and not stand to in conclusion, equivocates him a-sleep, and,
giving him the lie, leaves him.

Macd. I believe, drink gave thee the lie last night.

Por. That it did, sir; I the very throat on me:
but I required him for his lie; and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Macd. Is thy master stirring?

Enter Macbeth, *in his night-gown.

Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes.

Len. Good-morrow, noble sir.

Macd. Good-morrow, both.

Macd. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?

Macb. Not yet.

Macd. He did command me to call timely on him:
I have almost slip'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him.

Macd. I know, this is a joyful trouble to you;

* * Old," 1. e., frequent.— [Handlerchefs.— "Till the second cock," 1. e., till three o'clock.
MACBETH.

[Scene II. Enter Macduff.

Macb. The labor we delight in * physicks pain.

This is the door.

Macb. I'll make so bold to call,
For 'tis my * limited service. [Exit Macduff.

Len. Does the king hence to-day?

Macb. He does:—he did appoint so.

Len. The night has been unruly: where we lay,
Our chimneys were blown down; and, as they say,
Lamentings heard 't the air; strange screams of
And prophesying with accents terrible [death,
Of dire combustion, and confus'd events,
New hatch'd to the woeful time. The obscure bird
Clamor'd the livelong night: some say, the earth
Was feverous, and did shake.

Macb. 'Twas a rough night.

Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it.

Enter Macduff. Macb. O horror! horror! horror! Tongue, nor Cannot conceive, nor name thee. [heart.

Macb. Len. What's the matter?

Macb. Confusion now hath made his master-piece.
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life of the building.

Macb. What is't you say? the life?

Len. Mean you his Majesty? [sight

Macb. Approach the chamber, and destroy your
With a new Gorgon. —Do not bid me speak:
See, and then speak yourselves. —Awake! awake!—

[Exeunt Macbeth and Lenox.

Ring the alarm-bell! —Murther, and treason!
Banquo, and Donalbain! Malcolm, awake!
Shake off this doowy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself:—up, up, and see
The great doom's image! —Malcolm! Banquo!
As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprites
To countenance this horror.
Ring the bell! [Bell rings.

Enter Lady Macbeth.

Lady M. What's the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? speak, speak!

Macb. O, gentile lady!
'Tis not for you to hear what I can speak:
The repetition, in a woman's ear,

Enter Banquo, 'tis unready.

Would murder as it fell.—O Banquo! Banquo!
Our royal master's murder'd!

Lady M. What! in our house?

Ban. Too cruel, any where.

Dear Duff, I pr'ythee, contradict thyself,
And say, it is not so.

Enter Macbeth and Lenox.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time, for from this instant
There's nothing serious in mortality;
All is but toys: renown and grace * are dead;
The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter Malcolm and Donalbain.

Don. What is amiss?

Macb. You are, and do not know:
The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd.

Macb. Your royal father's murder'd.

Macb. O! by whom?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had done't.
Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood;
So were their daggers, which, unwip'd, we found
Upon their pillows: they star'd, and were distracted.
No man's life was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O! yet I do repent me of my fury,
That I did kill them.

Macb. Wherefore did you so?

Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate and furious,
Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man;
The expedition of my violent love
Out-run the pauser reason. —Here lay Duncan,
His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood;
And his gash'd stabs look'd like a breach in nature
For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers,
Steep'd in the colors of their trade, their daggers
Unmannerly breach'd with gore. Who could refrain,
That had a heart to love, and in that heart
Courage to make 's love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho!

Macb. Look to the lady. [Lady Macbeth swoons.

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues,
That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. What should be spoken
Here, where our fate, hid in an auger-hole,
May rush, and seize us? Let's away: our tears
Are not yet brev'd.

Mal. Nor our strong sorrow
Upon the foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady. —

[Lady Macbeth is borne out.

And when we have our naked frailties * hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet,
And question this most bloody piece of work,
To know it further. Fears and scruples shake us:
In the great hand of God I stand; and, thence,
Against the undivulg'd * pretence I fight
Of treasonous malice.

Macb. And so do I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet i' the hall together.

All. Well contented.

[Exeunt all but Mal. and Don.

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with
To show an unfelt sorrow is an office
[them: Which the false man does easy. I'll to England.

Don. To Ireland, l: our separated fortune
Shall keep us both the safer; where we are,
There's daggers in men's smiles: the near in blood,
The nearer bloody.

This murderous shaft that's shot
Hath not yet lighted, and our safest way
Is to avoid the aim: therefore, to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leaving-taking,
But shift away. There's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Without the Castle.

Enter Rossie and an Old Man.

Old M. Threescore and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I have seen
Hours dreadful, and things strange, but this sore night

* "Breech'd with gore," i.e., covered with blood to the knees. — That is, "When we have clothed our half-dressed bodies."— " Pretence," i.e., design; intention. — Macbeth was nearest in blood to the two princes, being the couns-german of Duncan.

SCENE I.  MACBETH.  727

Hath trifled former knowings.
Rosse.  Ah! good father,
Thou seest, the heavens, as troubled with man's act,
Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock 'tis day,
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp.
Let night's predominance, or the day's slumber,
That darkness does the face of earth contam,
When living light should kiss it?

Old M.  'Tis unnatural,
Even like the deed that's done.  On Tuesday last,
A falcon, towering in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing hawk'd at, and kill'd.
Rosse.  And Duncan's horses (a thing more strange and certain)
Beautious and swift, the minions of their race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with mankind.

Old M.  'Tis said, they ate each other.
Rosse.  They did so; to this monument of mine eyes,
That look'd upon't.  Here comes the good Macduff.—

Enter Macduff.

How goes the world, sir, now?
Macb.  Why, see you not?
Rosse.  Isn't known who did this more than bloody Macb.  Those that Macbeth hath slain.
[Deed]
Rosse.  Alas, the day!
What good could they pretend?
Macb.  They were subdued.
Malcolm, and Donalbain, the king's two sons,
Are still away and fle'd; which put up on them
Suspicion of the deed.
Rosse.  'Gainst nature still:
Thriftless ambition, that will ravin up
Thine own life's means!—Then, 'tis most like,
The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth.
Macb.  He is already nam'd, and gone to Scone
To be invested.
Rosse.  Where is Duncan's body?
Macb.  Carried to Culme-hill;
The sacred store-house of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones.
Rosse.  Will you to Scone?
Macb.  No cousin; I'll to Fife.
Rosse.  Will I, will thither.
Macb.  Well, may you see things well done there—
Rosse.  Farewell, father.

Old M.  God's benison go with you; and with those,
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes:
[Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Forees.  A Room in the Palace.

Enter Banquo.

Ban.  Thou hast it now, king, Cawdor; Glamis, all,
As the weird women promis'd; and, I fear,
Thou play'st most foully for't: yet it was said,
It should not stand in thy posterity;
But that myself should be the root, and father
Of many kings.  If there come truth from them,
(As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches show)
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
Why not they be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope?  But,lush! no more.

"Towering in her pride of place," i.e., soaring to the highest pitch.—Intend; design.
And champion me to the utterance!—Who's there?

Macb. I.e., We., Things we always how and though, may, might, Banquo, As the shoughs, 2 and charm-dogs, 2 called. The raised file is the descriptive list. 3 Addition, I.e., description. 4 "Bloodly distemper" is moral calamity.

Was it not yesterday we spoke together? 1 Mfr. It was, so please your highness. Macb. Well then, now, Have you consider'd of my speeches? Know, That it was he, in the times past, which held you So under fortune; which, you thought, had been Our innocent self. This I made good to you In our conference; pass'd in contention with you, How you were borne in hand; how cross'd; the instruments; 2 might, Who wrought with them; and all things else, That to half a soul, and to a notion craz'd, Say, "Thus did Banquo." 1 Mfr. You made it known to us. Macb. I did so; and went farther, which is now Our point of second meeting. Do you find Your patience so predominant in your nature, That you can let this go? Are you so gospell'd To pray for this good man, and for his issue, Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave, And beggar'd yours for ever? 1 Mfr. We are men, my liege. Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men, As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs, 2 Shoughs, water-rugs, and demi-wolves, are cleped All by the name of dogs: the valued file Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle, The house-keeper, the hunter, every one According to the gift which bounteous nature Hath in him clos'd, wherein he does receive Particular addition, from the 1 quill That writes them all alike; and so of men. Now, if you have a station in the file Not i the worst rank of mankind, say it, And I will put that business in your bosoms, Whose execution takes your enemy off, Grapples you to the heart and love of us, Who wear our health but sickly in his life, Which in his death were perfect. 2 Mfr. I am one, my liege, Whom the vile blows and buffetts of the world Have so incend'd, that I am reekless what I do to spoile the world. 1 Mfr. And I another, So insulted with disasters, tugg'd with fortune, That I would set my life on any chance, To mend it, or be rid on. Macb. Both of you Know Banquo was your enemy. 2 Mfr. True, my lord. Macb. So is he mine; and in such bloody distance, That every minute of his being throst 2 in every jot of life. And though I could With bare face'd power sweep him from my sight, And bid my will avouch it, yet I must not, For certain friends that are both his and mine, Whose love I may not drop, but wait his fall Whom I myself struck down: and thence is, That to your assistance do make love, Must from the business from the common eye For sundry weighty reasons. 2 Mfr. We shall, my lord, Perform what you command us. 1 Mfr. Though our lives—Macb. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour, at most, I will advise you where to plant yourselves, Acquaint you, with a perfect spy, 3 o' the time, The moment on't; for'st must be done to-night, And something from the palame; always thought, That I require a clearerness: and with him, (To leave no rubs, nor botches, in the work) Furnace his son, that keeps him company, Whose absence is no less material to me Than is his father's, must embrace the fate Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart: I'll come to you anon. 2 Mfr. We are resolv'd, my lord. Macb. I'll call upon you straight: abide within. 3 [Exeunt Murderers.] It is concluded: Banquo, thy soul's flight, If it find heaven, must find it out to-night. [Exit. SCENE II.—The Same. Another Room. Enter Lady Macbeth and a Servant. Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court? Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night. Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his pleasure For a few words. Serv. Madam, I will. [Exit. Lady M. Now's his'ead, all's spent, When our desire is got without content: 'Tis safer to be that which we destroy, Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Enter Macbeth. How now, my lord! Why do you keep alone, Of 1 sorriest fancies your companions making, Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died With them they think on? Things without remedy, Should be without regard: what's done, is done. Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it: She'll close, and be herself, whilst our poor malice Remains in danger of her former tooth. But let the eternal frame of things disjoint, Both the world suffer, Ere we will eat our meat in fear, and sleep In the affliction of these terrible dreams, That shake us nightly, Better be with the dead, Whom we to gain our peace have sent to peace, Than on the torture of the mind to lie In restless ecstasy. Duncan is in his grave; After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well; Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison, Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing Can touch him farther! Lady M. Come on: Gentle my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks; Be bright and jovial o' th' home of your guests to-night. Macb. So shall I, love; and so, I pray, be you. Let your remembrance apply to Banquo: Present him 4 eminence, both with eye and tongue: Unsafe the while, that we must lave our honors In these flattering streams, and make our faces Vizards to our hearts, disguising what they are. Lady M. You must leave this. Macb. O! full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife. Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance live. Lady M. But in them nature's 5 copy's not eternal. Macb. There's comfort yet; they are assailable: 2 "That I require a clearness," i.e., that I must stand clear of suspicion. 6 "Sorriest," i.e., most melancholy. 7 "Agony," 2 "Present him eminence," i.e., do him the highest honor. 2 "Nature's copy's not eternal," i.e., the lease by which they hold their lives is not eternal.
SCENE IV.

MACBETH.

Then, be thou jocund. Ere the bat hath flown His clatter'd flight; ere to black Hecate’s summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drossy bunns,
Hath rung night’s yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.

Lady M. What’s to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest ch拙.
Till thou applaud the deed. Come, basking night,
Scarce up the tender eye of piffling day,
And with thy bloody and invisible hand,
Cowl’d and tear to pieces, that great bond [crom
Which keeps me pale.—Light thickens; and the Makes wing to the rooky wood:
Good things of day begin to drop and drowse,
Whilest night’s black agents to their prey’s do rouse.
Thou marvell’st at my words; but hold thee still:
Things, bad begun, make strong themselves by ill.
So, p’rythee, go with me. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Same. A Park, with a road leading to the Palace.

Enter three Murderers.

1 Murr. But who did bid thee join with us?
3 Murr. Macbeth.
2 Murr. He needs not our mistrust; since he delivers our offices, and what we have to do,
To thy direction just.

1 Murr. Then stand with us.
The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn; and here approaches
The subject of our watch.

2 Murr. Hark! I hear horses.
Ban. [Within.] Give us a light there, ho!
2 Murr. Then, ’tis he: the rest,
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are ’t the court.

3 Murr. His horses go about.
3 Murr. Almost a mile; but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace gate
Make it their walk.

Enter Banquo and Fleance, with a torch.

2 Murr. A light, a light!
3 Murr. Tis he.

1 Murr. Stand to’t.
Ban. It will be rain to-night.

1 Murr. Let it come down. [Strikes Banquo.
Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly! Thou may’st revenge.—O slave!

3 Murr. Who did strike out the light?
1 Murr. Was’t not the way?
3 Murr. There’s but one down: the son is fled.
2 Murr. We have lost best half of our affiar.
1 Murr. Well, let’s away, and say how much is done.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A Room of State in the Palace.

A Banquet prepared. Enter Macbeth, Lady Macbeth, Ross, Lenox, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees; sit down:
And lost the hearty welcome. [at first
Lords. Thanks to your majesty.
Macb. Ourself will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.

Our hostess keeps her state; but in best time
We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our friends;
For my heart speaks, they are welcome.3

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts’ thanks.
Both sides are even: here I’ll sit i’ the midst.
Be large in mirth; anon, we’ll drink a measure

*Enter first Murderer, to the door.
The table round.—There’s blood upon thy face.

Murr. ‘Tis Banquo’s then.

Macb. ‘Tis better thee without, than I him within.
Is he dispatch’d?

Murr. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best of the cut throats;
Yet he is good that did the like for Fleance:
If thou didst it, thou art the nonpareil.

Murr. Most royal sir, Fleance is ‘scap’d.

Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect.
Whole as the marble, founded as the rock,
As broad and general as the curst air;
But now, I am cabin’d, cribb’d, confin’d, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears.—But Banquo’s safe?

Murr. Ay, my good lord, safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trench’d gashes on his head,
The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that.—
There the grown serpent lies: the worm, that’s fed,
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone: to-morrow
We’ll hear ourselves again.

Lady M. My royal lord,
You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold,
That is not often vouch’d the while ’tis making;
Tis given with welcome; To feed were best at home;
From thence the sauce to meat is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet rememberer!—
Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both.

Len. May it please your highness sit? 4

[The Ghost of Banquo enters, and sits in Macbeth’s place.

Macb. Here had we now our country’s honor roof’d,
Were the grace’d person of our Banquo present;
Who may I rather challenge for unkindness,
Than pity for mischance?

Ross. His absence, sir, Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your highness To grace us with your royal company?

Macb. The table’s full.

Len. Here is a place reserv’d, sir.

[Pointing to the Ghost.

Macb. Where?

Len. Here, my good lord. What is’t that moves your highness?

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Lords. What, my good lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say, I did it: never shake Thy gory locks at me.

Ross. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well.

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends. My lord is often thus
And hath been from his youth: pray you, keep seat.
The fit is momentary: upon a thought He will again be well. If much you note him, You shall offend him, and extend his passion;
Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?

[Coming to Macbeth: aside to him.

"The shard-born beetle," i. e., the beetle born in the air by its shards or scaly wings.—"Scouring," i. e., blinding.—"Light thickens," i. e., it is growing dark.—"That are within the note of expectation," i. e., who are set down in the list of guests expected to supper.

"Her state," i. e., her chair of state.—"Extend his passion," i. e., prolong his fit.
Macbeth. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.
Lady M. O, proper stuff! This is the very painting of your fear:
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O! these flaws, and starts,
(Impostors to true fear) would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire.

Author'd by her grandam. Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? When all's done,
You look but on a stool. [say you? —

Macb. Pr'ythee, see there! behold! look! lo! how Why, what care I? If thou coust nod, speak too.—
If charnel-houses, and our graves, must send
Those that we bury back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. [Exit Ghost.

Lady M. What! quite unnerved in folly?
Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. Fie! for shame!

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, 'tis old
Ere human statute parged the gentle weal;
[tine,

Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd
Too terrible for the ear: the times have been,
That when the brains were out the man would die,
And there an end; but now, they rise again
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools. This is more strange
Than such a murder is.

Lady M. My worthy lord,
[Going back to her state.

Your noble friends do lack you. Macb.
I do forget.

Do not 'muse at me, my most worthy friends;
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
[all; To those that know me. Come, love and health to Then, I'll sit down.—Give me some wine: fill full. —
I drink to the general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss:

[Re-enter Ghost.

Would be were here! to all, and him, we thirst,
And all to all.

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Macb. Avant! and quit my sight. Let the earth hide thee!
Thy bones are narrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with.

Lady M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: it is no other;
Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the 4 Hyraen tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: or, be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I 'exhibit, then protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow!

[Exit Ghost.

Unreal mockery, hence! — Why, so; — being gone,
I am a man again.—Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have displeas'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admir'd disorder.

A Macb. Can such things be,
And ever come us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? You make me strange,
Even to the disposition that I owe,
When now I think you can behold such sights,

And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine are blanch'd with fear.

Rosse. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not: he grows worse and worse;

Question enranges him. At once, good night:
Stand not upon the order of your going,
but go at once.

Len. Good night; and better health

Attend his majesty.

Lady M. A kind good night to all! [Exeunt Lords and Attendants.

Macb. It will have blood, they say; blood will have blood;

Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak;

Augurs, and understood 2 relations, have forth
By 2 magot-pies, and ehangs, and rooks, brought
The secret'st man of blood.—What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

[person

Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff denies his
At our great bidding?

Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?

Macb. I bear it by the way; but I will send.

There's not one of them, but in his house
I'll keep a servant fee'd. I will to-morrow,
(And betimes I will) to the weird sisters:
More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know,
By the worst means, the worst. For mine own good,
All causes shall give way: I am in blood
Stooped in so far, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er.
Strange things I have in head, that will to hand,
Which must be act'd ere they may be 3ca'md.

Lady M. You lack the season of all natures, sleep.

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep. My strange and self-
Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use: [labes
We are yet but young in deed.

[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—The Heath.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches, meeting

Hecate.

1 Witch. Why, how now, Hecate! you look an-gerly.

Hec. Have I not reason, beldams as you are,
Stuffy, and over-bold? How did you dare
To trade and traffic with Macbeth,
In riddles, and affairs of death;

And, I, the mistress of your charms,
The close contriver of all harms,
Was never call'd to bear my part,
Or show the glory of our art?
And, which is worse, all you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son.
Spiteful, and wanton; who, as others do,
Loves for his own ends, not for you.
But make amends now: get you gone,
And at the pit of Acheron
Meet me 1 morning; thither he
Will come to know his destiny.
Your vessels, and your spells, provide,
Your charms, and every thing beside.
I am for the air; this night I'll spend
Unto a dismal and a fatal end:
Great business must be wrought ere noon.
Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vaporous drop 2 profound;

Augurs for auguries.—1 Understood relations, i. e., connected circumstances relating to the crime.—Auguries. —
2 How say'st thou, i. e., What say'st thou to this circumstance? — 1st Scorn'd, i. e., nicely examined.— 2 A vaporous drop profound, i. e., a drop that has deep or hid-en qualities.
SCENE I.-MACBETH.

"I'll catch it ere it come to ground; And that, distill'd by magic sleights, Shall raise such artificial sprites, As by the strength of their illusion, Shall draw him on to his confusion, He shall spin fate, soon death, and hear His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear; And, you all know, security Is mortals' chiefest enemy.

Song. [Within.] Come away, come away, &c.

Hark! I am call'd: my little spirit, see, Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for none. [Exit HECATE."

1 Witch. Come, let's make haste; she'll soon be back again. [Exit 2 Witches.

SCENE VI.-Fore's. A Room in the Palace.

Enter LENOX and another LORD.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts, Which can interpret farther: only, I say, Duncan Things have been strangely borne. The gracious Was pitted of Macbeth:—mourn, he was dead; And the right-vailant Banquo walk'd too late; Whom, you may say, if't please you, Fleance kill'd, For Fleance fled. Men must not walk too late. Whom cannot want the thought, the monstrous It was for Malcolm, and for Donalbain, To kill their gracious father! damned fact! How it did grieve Macbeth! did he not straight, In pious rage the two delinquent's tear, That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep? Was not that nobly done! Ay, and wisely, too; For 'twould have anger'd my heart alive, To hear the men deny 't. So that, I say, He has borne all things well; and I do think, That had he Duncan's sons under his key, (As, an't please heaven, he shall not) they should find What 'twere to kill a father; so should Fleance. But, peace!—for from broad words, and 'cause he His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear, [Said Macduff lives in disgrace. Sir, can you tell Where he bestows himself?

Lord. The son of Duncan, From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth, Lives in the English court; and is receiv'd Of the most pious Edward with such grace, That the malevolence of fortune nothing Takes from his high respect. Thus Macduff Is gone, to pray the holy king upon his aid To wake Northumberland, and warlike Siward; That by the help of these, (with Him above To ratify the work) we may again Give to our tables meat, to sleep to our nights, Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives, Do faithful homage, and receive free honors, All which we pise for now. And this report Hath so excasperate the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute, "Sir, not I;" The cloudy messenger turns me his back, And hums, as who should say, "You'll rue the time That clogs me with this answer." [Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel Fly to the court of England, and unfold His message ere he come, that a swift blessing May soon return to this our suffering country Under a hand occurs'd!

Lord. I'll send my prayers with him! [Exeunt.

All. Double, double toil and trouble; Fire burn, and cauldron bubble.

3 Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood; Then the charm is firm and good. Enter HECATE, and other Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains, And every one shall share 't the gains. And now about the cauldron sing, Like elves and fairies in a ring, Enchanting all that you put in. [Music. All. Black spirits, &c. Exeunt HECATE.

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs, Something wicked this way comes. [Knocking. Open, locks, whoever knocks.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight What is't you do? [hags! All. A deed without a name. Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess, (Howe'er you come to know it) answer me: Though you unto the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the petty waves..."
MACBETH.

ACT IV.

All. Come high, or low; Thyself, and office, defly show.

2 Witch. He knows thy thought.

Macb. What' er thou art, for thy good pleasure thanks: [Descends.
